I do want to say what I take to be the principle function of our foreign policy. I take that to be defending our own nation and its democratic institutions against external attack or subversion; defending our allies against external attack or subversion, and preserving our civilization, the kind of world in which we can live and thrive and enjoy our lives; a world of independent nations with whom we can trade, among whom we can travel; nations which will not pursue aggressive expansionist policies and destroy the peace of their neighbors.

I take it to be a purpose of our foreign policy to promote democratic institutions and human rights and economic development everywhere. I take it to be a function of our foreign policy as well to manage our foreign relations in such a way that they do not consume too large a share of our resources, time, effort, and money. I think those are the things that President Reagan has, in fact, been trying to do and I think it's the thing that Cap and a great many of us who are here, in the Congress as well as the Administration have tried to do.

I think no place have we tried to work towards these goals more persistently than in Central America. Now, it's never useful to over simplify and we need to recognize that there are various kinds of obstacles to the achievement of our goals. There are stubborn problems of climate and culture and politics, history, mutual insecurity and animosities, and deep set rivalries, and they often stand in the way of achieving our goals. The fact is that we also need to recognize that the principal obstacle to our security and also to our helping preserving and enjoying our civilization and our world is unfortunately, the expansionist policies of the Soviet Union.

I believe that there were two principal dimensions to the so-called "Changed Correlation of World Forces" that we heard so much about in the period before 1981. The "Changed Correlation of World Forces", I think consisted of two parts; the growth of Soviet military power, and the concomitant decline in the military strength of the West, and the dramatic expansion of Soviet influence outside Europe and North America.

We all know the development of Soviet military power is important. It permitted an extraordinary buildup in the Pacific, created new vulnerabilities in Europe, created new vulnerabilities here at home. We also know in principle that we can deal with that by restoring our own military establishment, and also by trying to get a handle on the Arms Race through verifiable agreements arrived at in Arms Control Negotiations.

The fact is that we don't even have an adequate theory of how to deal with Soviet expansion outside Europe and North America. In just 20 years the Soviet Union progressed from being a continental power in Europe to becoming a global power, acquiring bases and surrogates you all know, in Cuba, Vietnam, Ethiopia, Angola, South Yemen, Nicaragua, Afghanistan, expanding its military reach to the vicinity of such strategic checkpoints as the Panama Canal, Straits of Gibraltar, the Suez Canal, Straits of Hormus, the entrance to the Red Sea, and the Indian Ocean, the sea lanes of East Asia, and so forth, Cam Rahn Bay.

In the same period, the number of Soviet and block troops in non-Soviet non-Warsaw Pact countries increased more than 500 percent. From that point of view, that period between 1975 and 1980 was a period of great success.

We need to be clear about what they mean by "success" in thinking about the Third World and in thinking about the countries outside North America and Europe. What they mean is the incorporation of a country into the world socialist system, or at least a reliable beginning in the process of incorporating a country into the world socialist system.

Their view of success is very different than our view. Our view of success is, in fact, to help a country preserve its independence. We have succeeded when a country avoids incorporation and maintains its independence.

It's an interesting difference in what happens to countries where they succeed and where we succeed. Where they succeed, the country is incorporated into a global military mutual-aid society, in which armaments and services from all the member states of the Soviet empire are drawn and brought to bear on unfortunate targeted countries.

From out point of view, when we succeed, the country that is successful may not make any contribution at all to collective enterprise. It may not extend any basing rights, for example, for collective purposes. It may not help its neighbors maintain their independence. So be it. That's our kind of success. We are not seeking to build an empire. We are not seeking client states. We do seek a world of independent nations.

The only problem is that this expansion of Soviet power and the incorporation of ever larger numbers of nations into the world socialist system is dangerous for us and for other independent nations.

I might note that this incorporation usually takes place incrementally; one slice at a time, like salami tactics applied to international politics.

The process of incorporation into the world socialist system was described in the Granada Documents, which I'm sure many here have read. The stages in this process are not complete until full military integration of a country into the world socialist system has been achieved. It had not yet been achieved in Granada. It has been achieved in Cuba. Cuban integration into the Soviet Military System is symbolized by the presence in Cuba of some Soviet personnel. For example, some seven thousand civilian advisors; some 2,800 in that famous combat brigade; some seven—I'm sorry. Some 2,800 military advisors, plus about 2,000 special Soviet personnel who are manning an electronic intelligence facility that monitors our electronic communications here in the United States.

Cuba, of course, provides bases that extend the reach of Soviet naval and air power and electronic surveillance over our coastal waters and our coast. Cuba provides advisors and troops for Nicaragua, Angola, Ethiopia, Mocambique, Conga, South Yemen. Cuba provides manpower and planning for the drug and terror network that reaps chaos in Latin America and mightily affects our own country.

Nicaragua has been partially, but not wholly incorporated into the Soviet military world system. Nicaragua provides training, arms for guerillas from a dozen countries. Nicaragua provides a home, refuge, sanctuary, for the international terrorist network. Indeed, its capital has become Manigua where one finds Bader Manhof remnants, Red Brigades, Basque, ETA Members, Argentine Monteros and ERP, Peruvian Sendero-Luminoso, and Marta El Salvadoran FMLN, of course. Guerillas from all over the world meet there with their PLO mentors and exchange notes and train one another. Of course, with a little help from the Libyans.

One of the consequences of this steady flow of services and manpower to the—to Nicaragua, and from Nicaragua to other countries in Central America and South America is the kind of tragedy I visited in El Salvador last weekend, when I visited the hamlet—it's not even, really a village, where the massacre of the previous days had taken place. Where some 19 Salvadorans had been dragged from their beds and killed in cold blood. I saw the style in which seven men had been shot, and one had his head crushed. I was with our Ambassador who picked up a shell casing which bears on it a Number "10", which I am told is a definitive marking of such casings of Bulgarian make.

Where do the bullets in El Salvador's hamlets come from? They come from Bulgaria. Where do the bullets used against Nicaragua's own democrats and Freedom Fighters come from? Well, they come from Bulgaria too, and of course from Vietnam, and from East Germany and Czechoslovakia, and from the Soviet Union. The struggle that is underway today in Central America has very special significance for us, and I presume everyone here understands that.

True, we live in a big inter-dependent world, and events in very remote places can have a large impact on us. A coup in Sudan, a civil war in Angola, a Vietnamese offensive in Cambodia, a conversation between Chinese and Soviets, a struggle in New Cala-donia, a Presidential election in Greece, a massacre in El Salvador, may have all of them important effects on our well being and our national security, but not all situations in all places are equally important to us. Not all deserve the same attention from our Government, and not all decisions of our Government deserve the same attention from American citizens.

● This "bullet" symbol identifies statements or insertions which are not spoken by the Member on the floor.

In thinking about foreign policy and national security, one must begin with geography, because in foreign affairs, geography is destiny. In thinking about foreign policy, one must end with ideals of one's civilization, because they provide the—literally, the spiritual food and intellectual food off which we live.

Developments in Nicaragua matter more to us than developments in many other countries, because Nicaragua is at the center of the isthmus that stretches south to Panama, north to Mexico. Those countries constitute our fourth border, and that gives Central America and the Caribbean an irreducible strategic importance for us.

Now, we're not accustomed to thinking strategically and we're not accustomed to thinking about any potential vulnerabilities that we may have. The Soviets are. They began thinking as early as 1967 about the strategic vulnerabilities for the United States that could be created if they could threaten our security on our southern border.

Nicaragua can constitute a security problem for the United States of major proportions. Not because they establish a socialist economic system, though we regret that and we know it will fail; not because they create a repressive new military dictatorship under which the people of Nicaragua suffer, though we regret that very deeply, and we think the people of Nicaragua deserve better; not because they espouse ideas we find obnoxious and untrue, though we regret that too. Nicaragua constitutes a security problem actual and potential, especially for the United States because it is being very rapidly integrated into the socialist military world system. It is advanced into the process of incorporation into that Soviet world system.

Today, everyone who cares to know, knows that Nicaragua, whose Government began as a broad based coalition with important democratic presence, is today wholly controlled by communist leaders and that situation came into being because the Marxist guerrillas had a monopoly of weapons.

Everyone who cares to know, knows that the Nicaraguan Junta Representatives went soon after they achieved power to Moscow, where they were greeted by General Secretary Chunyeko and Foreign Minister Gromeyko (phonetic), where they signed a party to party agreement, among other things, approving the Soviet invasion of Afghanistan.

Everyone who cares to know, knows today that the Government of Nicaragua is sustained by Cuba, whose advisers started arriving in days after the victory, and it is sustained by the famous Internationalistas from all over the Soviet block.

Everyone who cares to know, knows that today in Nicaragua the Government is repressive, the economy is in shambles, and hope flies with the democratic resistance forces.

You know, sometimes we like to console ourselves with believing that things are not as bad as some people say and that after all, the Sandinistas might turn out to have a falling out with Cuba and the Soviet Union, and Cuba might turn out to have a falling out with the Soviet Union, and that if only we were more obliging or understanding than we are, there would be nothing to worry about, and we could all live happily together in this hemisphere forever after.

I think of that perspective because just before I came here tonight I missed the reception because I was appearing on McNeil-Lehrer where I encountered some people who seemed to have that view. Just before that, I was testifying before the House Sub-Committee on Foreign Affairs on this subject where I met some people who seemed to have that view. You know, the kind of people that tell us that we drove Fidel Castro into the hands of the Soviet Union even though Fidel Castro himself tells us that he had been an apprentice Marxist-Leninist for years before he came to power and he disguised his true beliefs.

What can the United States do in this situation? I think we can help Nicaragua's Freedom Fighters, that's what we can do. We should assist Nicaragua's Freedom Fighters because it helps Nicaraguans and it helps the Nicaraguan Freedom Fighters themselves, who are not only decent and upright, but a very impressive group of democrats working now for democracy in their country as each of them has worked for democracy for Nicaragua for years in the past.

We can help them because they are good men whom we should be proud to help. We can help them because it helps the region, and we can help them because it helps us.

Will Congress permit the President to provide the 14 Million Dollars of assistance to the Nicaraguan Forces fighting against the consolidation of a communist government in their own country? That is the question which is confronting the Congress and this country today. I believe that the answer to that question, given by the Congress, will effect the fate of Nicaragua; effect the stability of Nicaragua's democratic neighbors; Costa Rice, El Salvador, Honduras. It will effect the evolution of other countries in the region, including Guatemala, Panama, Mexico. It will effect the security of the United States, the cost of our defenses, the strength of our alliances for many years to come.

Above all, I believe the decision to be made by the Congress will seriously effect the possibilities for peace in the next decade.

You know, very often in human affairs, peoples intentions lead them to actions which defeat their intentions. The problem with the kind of self-defeating appeassment that is, in my opinion, involved in a refusal to support Nicaragua's resistance forces is that it doesn't work.

I was reading recently an old book of Walter Lippmann, when he was talking about the period before World War II, and he said in that book, and I quote, "The surrender of the Rhineland in 1936; of Austria and Czechoslovakia in 1938, were the strategic preliminaries to the neutralization of Russia and the conquest of Poland in 1939; that is, what was surrendered by our allies in the name of peace became the strategic foundation upon which Hitler prosecuted his war." Thus do the best intentions of flawed policy makers sometimes go astray.

You know, mistakes when individuals make them are always regrettable and sometimes they are serious, but the mistakes of Government are more serious than the mistakes of individuals. If I make a mistake it involves only me and my family, probably, and maybe a friend or two. When Governments make mistakes, whole societies suffer. Often those mistakes are honest, but the costs are no less high because of the honesty and good intentions of those who make the mistakes.

Some people say we should not support Nicaragua's Freedom Fighters because we should leave the problems of Central America to the Central Americans and the problems of Nicaragua to the Nicaraguans. My response to that is that we would like nothing better than to leave the problems of Nicaragua to the Nicaraguans. Exactly the point is that Nicaragua's fate is not being left to the Nicaraguans. It is being determined by people and guns from very remote places, by heavy armanents, major weapons system from Eastern Europe and by Guerrillas and Internationalistas from every terrorist nation in the world.

Colonel Cadaffy has mentioned that he would send his troops to fight in Nicaragua. As I understand it, he's been helping the Nicaraguans for quite a long time, so there will be nothing new about that.

I would like to say in closing that today the United States Congress authorizes more than—and appropriates and provides, more than 15 Billion Dollars of economic and military assistance to nations and groups in the world. That's a lot of money, 15 Billion Dollars.

We provide some millions of dollars to freedom fighers fighting in remote parts of the world. Now, I support most of that foreign economic and military assistance and I support certainly all that assistance to freedom fighters in remote places, but I should like to say that it makes no sense at all, to refuse to provide help for the Nicaraguan Freedom Fighters today.

Let me just say that the most terrible mistake that we could make would be to conclude that the struggle in Nicaragua does not concern us, or that the Nicaraguans are in some sense not ready for democracy. The fact is that their struggle is our struggle, and their freedom and our freedom are indivisible, and if we do not understand that now in time to help Nicaraguans to help themselves and stand with those who stand for freedom in that country, we will, I am afraid, learn that lesson under much more painful circumstances not too far in the future.

Thank you.●

POLYGRAPH TESTS

HON. DOUG BARNARD, JR.

OF GEORGIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, April 29, 1985

● Mr. BARNARD. Mr. Speaker, I would like to draw the attention of my colleagues to a problem facing workers in all States. More than 1 million workers will be subjected to polygraph testing this year. And the Office of Technology Assessment estimates that at least 50,000 of those people will be wrongfully denied employment either because they refuse to take the tests or because of the inherent inaccuracies of the tests.

In addition to the Office of Technology Assessment, the House Government Operations Committee and the Privacy Protection Study Commission have raised serious doubts about the validity of the polygraph machine in determining the trustworthiness of potential employees. Courts will not allow polygraph results as evidence in trials because of the documented evidence of the uncertainty of the machines.

There is no simple way to discover when a person is lying because there is no known physiological response that is unique to deception. The polygraph tests do not rely solely on the machine but on the interpretation of a subjective examiner of the breathing patterns, blood pressure, and galvanic skin response.

Several of my colleagues have introduced legislation to curb or otherwise control the use of polygraph testing. As Members begin deliberation of these bills, I would like to submit the following article written by Atlanta attorney, Mr. Irving K. Kaler, which appeared in the March 11 issue of Newsweek for their serious consideration.

A MOLE AMONG THE GERBILS?

(By Irving K. Koler)

It wasn't until my son Michael applied for a job as a stockboy in the pet department of a local discount store that I learned that I was the father of a potentially hardened criminal.

As a condition of his employment, Michael was subjected to a lie-detector test. After all, the pet department must be protected from unwittingly giving employment to a possible guppy snatcher or a goldfish filcher. But Michael, who is only 16 and who has never had any altercation with the law, became understandably agitated when asked questions such as how many times he had been marrried (none), and how many time he had been arrested (again, none).

Apparently, the machine and the operator made no distinction between one type of agitation and another, so Michael, whose nature is open and guileless, was declared to have flunked the test. Michael's only transgressions are an excessive volubility in class and perhaps an affinity to a father whose humor inclines more toward Milton Berle than to Russell Baker.

Now, thanks to this incident, I almost feel as if I have joined the company of Ma Barker in the pantheon of wicked parents. I avert my eyes when passing our neighborhood post office, apprehensive that there is displayed an unflattering picture of my son.

This episode jarred me into investigating the current use of the lie-detector device, also known as the polygraph. Why, for instance, are we Americans increasingly willing to consign to some person or machine our right to think and make determinations for ourselves? It is bad enough that we entrust this authority to politicians, but it is absolutely incomprehensible that we rely upon some goofy, Rube Goldberg-type contraption to make sensitive decisions.

FEELINGS

It so happens that Michael has an unusual aptitude for caring for small animals. As a matter of fact, he has a regular job with a neighbor feeding and watering chickens, rabbits and even ponies. The machine that disqualified him is not capable of discerning this special feeling and regard.

This box which measures pulse rate, blood pressure, respiration and perspiration, is being used, I learned, by a great many businessmen and retailers to screen employees; at least a million tests are performed each year. In the store where Michael works carrying customers' bags to their cars, only a few departments administer a polygraph test. Under this idiosyncratic policy, he has been disqualified from stocking birdseed, but not from becoming a manager.

I am not alone in registering my apprehension about this matter. There is increasing opposition to the expanded use of the polygraph, based on concerns that the machine represents an invasion of privacy and that its findings are often unfounded and imprecise. Twenty-two states and the District of Columbia prohibit employers from requiring an employee to take a lie-detector examination. Congress is considering a bill that would restrict its use by federal agencies, except the CIA and National Security Agency, and require the consent of the person being examined. A federal judge in Macon, Ga., Judge Wilbur D. Owens Jr., has also noted that "because of the lack of scientific evidence in support of polygraph validity, polygraph results are inadmissible as evidence in criminal prosecutions, both in the United States courts, and in Georgia courts."

In his potentially landmark decision, Judge Owens recently ruled that it is unconstitutional for certain Georgia municipalities to compel their employees to take lie-detector examinations even during departmental investigations into suspected drug use. "No device known to man can 'read' an individual's mind and indicate whether that person is lying," he said. The test, he found, is "nothing more than the polygraph examiner's personal opinion of the truthful or deceptive manner in which the questioned person responded." The examiner formulates the questions; the employee is not allowed to present any evidence or otherwise dispute a suggestion of wrongdoing. "The polygraph examiner in reality becomes both judge and jury."

Moreover, the polygraph report may become a permanent part of an employee's records, and he can never compel a correction. Thus, like the mark of Cain, detrimental results can pursue him forever and mar his chances for any job. As Judge Owens points out, this may violate his rights under the Fourteenth Amendment.

GUARDS

I recently went to the pet department of the store I mentioned earlier and was appalled by the indifferent care accorded the rabbits, guppies, hamsters, goldfish, canaries, gerbils, parakeets and puppies being sold there. I also noticed that no money is exchanged in that department since all purchases are concluded at a battery of cash registers at the front of the store. Only pets, or their supplies, can be pilfered. And I can't imagine any commodity less capable of being smuggled through the maze of detectors, sonic beams, sound alarms, turnstiles, guards, clerks and cashiers than a squirming rabbit, or more difficult to camouflage than a bulbous goldfish bowl.

Men and women of America, it is time we rise in indignation against this untrammeled invasion of our humanity! After all, we should possess a greater power to reason than some cold and merciless machine which, in all likelihood, hates rabbits, puppies and even those limpid-eyed guppies.●

A MESSAGE TO THE HOUSE, FROM INDIANA

HON. JOHN T. MYERS

OF INDIANA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, April 29, 1985

● Mr. MYERS of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, today's edition of the Washington Post contains a letter to the editor from a voter from the Eighth District of Indiana about the activities of the House of Representatives Task Force and its conduct in the recount of that district's votes. This letter reflects the sentiments of a large majority of the people of Indiana. This is the letter:

A MESSAGE TO THE HOUSE, FROM INDIANA

I am a resident of the long-suffering 8th Congressional District of Indiana. Because of a close election in November and the refusal of the House of Representatives to seat either candidate, the district has been without a congressman.

To determine who won, Congress sent a task force, led by three congressmen, to the district for a recount. That task force refused to count some ballots and agreed to count others, some of which were illegal or irregular. Then the task force declared Frank McCloskey the winner by four votes out of 234,000 cast.

Since we now have been given a congressman we may or may not have elected, I would like to offer some suggestions to the U.S. House of Representatives:

(1) In an extremely close election with numerous irregularities, please give us the right to a speedy new election. We would like to be represented in Congress and would rather choose our own representative that have Congress choose him for us.

(2) If we must be invaded by a task force from Washington, please do not send us current members of Congress. Send people known for their integrity and impartiality whose primary concern is not in protecting party interests or pleasing party leaders but in ensuring the legality and fairness of the electoral process.

(3) If members of Congress are traveling in this area and approaching the 8th District, please keep going. Do not stop. We have seen and had enough of you.

FRANCES BROWN,
Newburgh, Ind.●

THE SECRETARY OF STATE TALKS ABOUT THE LESSONS OF VIETNAM

HON. WM. S. BROOMFIELD

OF MICHIGAN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, April 29, 1985

● Mr. BROOMFIELD. Mr. Speaker, last Thursday, Secretary of State George Shultz honored those Americans who had served in Vietnam. His speech was both moving and prophetic, and I strongly recommend it to all of my colleagues in the Congress.

In the past few days, the question of aid to the Contras was widely debated here in the Congress. Unfortunately, the House failed to provide additional funding for those struggling freedom fighters. As I watched the debate unfold and the final vote appear, I began to think that the Congress was making a tragic mistake that future generations of Americans will have to pay for.

I agree with Secretary Shultz' assessment of why America fought in Vietnam. For those very same reasons, our country is supporting the Nicaraguan freedom fighters. In spite of the predictions of the critics of our policy in Vietnam who said that peace would come to that distant land when our troops finally left, it didn't. Our worst expectations of Communist intentions were confirmed. The Vietnamese Communists are still trying to dominate all of Southeast Asia.

In Central America, I fear that a similar disaster will overtake the forces of democracy and freedom in that nearby region. Promises will be broken, commitments will be forgotten, and the export of the Marxist-Leninist revolution will slowly, but surely, extend to the Rio Grande River.

I call upon my colleagues to remember that America cannot afford to again be naive about the intentions of Communist revolutionaries. As the champion of freedom, America cannot afford to back down from its commitments to liberty in the world. While all of us were deeply touched by the legacy of Vietnam, we cannot let that experience paralyze this Nation into inaction and timidity.

With these concerns in mind, I recommend the following excerpts from the Secretary of State's speech on Vietnam to all of my colleagues in the House.

THE MEANING OF VIETNAM

(Address by Hon. George P. Shultz, Secretary of State, at the Department of State, Washington, DC, Thursday, April 25, 1985)

Just a few hundred yards from here stands the Vietnam Veterans Memorial. Its stark beauty is a reminder of the searing experience our country went through in its longest war. From a window of my office I can see the crowds of people—veterans, families, old and young—coming to search for names on the black granite slabs, or to search their souls in meditation. It is more than a memorial; it is a living human tribute taking place day after day. This is not surprising. That war left its mark on all the American people.

There are three dozen names that do not appear on that memorial. Instead they are here in this Diplomatic Entrance, on our own roll of honor. Many civilians served in Southeast Asia—from the State Department, AID USIA, and other agencies. Many of you here today were among them. While the war raged, you were trying to build peace—working for land reform, for public health and economic progress, for constitutional development, for public information, for a negotiated end to the war. I am here to pay tribute to you.

* * * * *

Our understanding of the past affects our conduct in the present, and thus, in part, determines our future.

Let me discuss what has happened in Southeast Asia, and the world, since 1975; what light those postwar events shed on the war itself; and what relevance all this has to our foreign policy today.

INDOCHINA SINCE 1975

The first point—and it stands out for all to see—is that the Communist subjection of Indochina has fulfilled the worst predictions of the time. The bloodshed and misery that Communist rule wrought in South Vietnam, and in Cambodia and Laos, add yet another grim chapter to the catalogue of agony of the twentieth century.

Since 1975, over one million refugees have fled South Vietnam to escape the new tyranny. In 1978, Hanoi decided to encourage the flight of refugees by boat. At its height in the spring of 1979, the exodus of these "boat people" reached over 40,000 a month. Tens, perhaps hundreds of thousands never made it to safety and today lie beneath the South China Sea. Others managed to survive pirate attacks and other hardships at sea in their journey to freedom. We have welcomed more than 730,000 Indochinese refugees to our shores.

The work of people in this Department has saved countless lives. Your dedication to the refugees of Indochina marks one of the shining moments of the Foreign Service.

In addition to "boat people," Hanoi has given the world its own version of the "re-education camp." When the North Vietnamese Army conquered the South, it rounded up officials and supporters of the South Vietnamese government as well as other suspected opponents. Many were executed, or disappeared forever. Hundreds of thousands were sent to these camps, suffering hard labor, indoctrination, and violent mistreatment. To this day, upwards of 10,000 remain imprisoned. They include Buddhist and Christian clergy, and intellectuals, as well as former political figures. According to refugee reports, they face indeterminate sentences, receive food rations below subsistence levels, are denied basic medical care, and are punished severely for even minor infractions of camp rules—punishment often resulting in permanent injury, or death.

Hanoi has asserted for years that it will let these prisoners go if only we would take them all. Last fall, President Reagan offered to bring all genuine political prisoners to freedom in the United States. Now, Hanoi no longer adheres to its original proposal.

Another Communist practice has been to relocate people in so-called "new economic zones." In the years after the fall of Saigon, hundreds of thousands were uprooted and forced into these isolated and barren rural areas to expand agricultural production and reduce "unproductive" urban populations. Many have fled the zones, returning to the cities to live in hiding, without the ration or neighborhood registration cards needed to get food or jobs. Indeed, no one in Vietnam may change residence or place of work without permission, and unauthorized absences open whole families to arrest.

The 24 million people of South Vietnam are now victims of a totalitarian state, before which they stand naked without the protection of a single human right. As Winston Churchill said of another Communist state, they have been "frozen in an indefinite winter of subhuman doctrine and superhuman tyranny."

* * * * * *

The neutralist government in neighboring Laos was swiftly taken over in 1975 by local Communists loyal to Hanoi. As in Vietnam, thousands of former officials were sent to "reeducation camps." Fifty thousand Vietnamese troops remain in Laos to ensure the "irreversibility" of Communist control—in Hanoi's version of the Brezhnev Doctrine—and thousands of Vietnamese advisers are in place to monitor Laos' own "socialist transformation."

Hmong villagers in Laos who resisted Communist control were suppressed by a military juggernaut that relied on chemical weapons produced and supplied by the Soviet Union in violation of international treaties. Six decades of international restraints on chemical warfare have been dangerously eroding in recent years—and "yellow rain" in Indochina was the first major breach. Yellow rain. Another addition to our vocabulary from post-1975 Indochina.

Finally, in Cambodia, the worst horror of all: the genocide of at least one million Cambodians by the Khmer Rouge, who also took power ten years ago this month. The Khmer Rouge emptied the cities and murdered the educated; they set out to destroy traditional Cambodian society and to construct a wholly new and "pure" society on the ruins of the old. A French Jesuit who witnessed the early phases of Communist rule called it "a perfect example of the application of an ideology pushed to the furthest limit of its internal logic." We say at least one million dead. Maybe it was two million. The suffering and misery represented by such numbers are beyond our ability to comprehend. Our imaginations are confined by the limits of the civilized life we know.

In 1979, Cambodia was ravaged by widespread famine that killed tens if not hundreds of thousands. Vietnam bears much responsibility for this famine. Its invasion prevented the planting of the 1979 rice crop; its army adopted scorched-earth tactics in pursuing the retreating Khmer Rouge.

Many will recall how the Vietnamese obstructed international relief programs and refused to cooperate with the efforts of the Red Cross and others to establish a "land bridge" of trucks to bring relief into the country from Thailand.

RETROSPECTIVE: THE MORAL ISSUE

What does all this mean? Events since 1975 shed light on the past: This horror was precisely what we were trying to prevent.

The President has called our effort a noble cause, and he was right. Whatever mistakes in how the war was fought, whatever one's view of the strategic rationale for our intervention, the morality of our effort must now be clear. Those Americans who served, or who grieve for their loved ones lost or missing, can hold their heads high: Our sacrifice was in the service of noble ideals—to save innocent peoples from brutal tyranny. Ellsworth Bunker used to say: No one who dies for freedom ever dies in vain.

We owe all our Vietnam veterans a special debt. They fought with courage and skill under more difficult conditions than Americans in any war before them. They fought with a vague and uncertain mission against a tenacious enemy. They fought knowing that part of the nation opposed their efforts. They suffered abuse when they came home. But like their fathers before them, they fought for what Americans have always fought for: freedom, human dignity, and justice. They are heroes. They honored their country and we should show them our gratitude.

RETROSPECTIVE: THE STRATEGIC PRICE

We left Indochina in 1975, but the cost of failure was high. The price was paid, in the first instance, by the more than 30 million people we left behind to fall under Communist rule. But America, and the world, also paid a price.

For a time, the United States retreated into introspection, self-doubt, and hesitancy. Some Americans tended to think that American power was the source of the world's problems, and that the key to peace was to limit our actions in the world. So we imposed all sorts of restrictions on ourselves. Vietnam—and Watergate—left a legacy of Congressional restrictions on Presidential flexibility, now embedded in our legislation. Not only the War Powers Resolution but a host of constraints on foreign aid, arms exports, intelligence activities, and other aspects of policy—these weakened the ability of the President to act and to conduct foreign policy, and they weakened our country. Thus we pulled back from global leadership.

Our retreat created a vacuum that was exploited by our adversaries. The Soviets concluded that the global "correlation of forces" was shifting in their favor. They took advantage of our inhibitions and projected their power to unprecedented lengths: intervening in Angola, in Ethiopia, in South Yemen, and in Afghanistan. The Iranian hostage crisis deepened our humiliation.

American weakness turned out to be the most destabilizing factor on the global scene. The folly of isolationism was again revealed. Once again it was demonstrated—the hard way—that American engagement, American strength, and American leadership are indispensable to peace. A strong America makes the world a safer place.

VIETNAM AND CENTRAL AMERICA

Vietnam and Central America—I want to tackle this analogy head-on.

Our goals in Central America are like those we had in Vietnam: democracy, economic progress, and security against aggression. In Central America, our policy of nurturing the forces of democracy with economic and military aid and social reform has been working—without American combat troops. And by virtue of simple geography, there can be no conceivable doubt that Central America is vital to our own security.

With the recent legislation and municipal elections, El Salvador has now held four free elections in the past three years. When the assembly takes office shortly, El Salvador will have completed an extraordinary exercise in democracy—drafting a new constitution and electing a new government, all in the midst of a guerrilla war.

The state of human rights is greatly improved, the rule of law is strengthened, and the performance of the armed forces markedly better. Americans can be proud of the progress of democracy in El Salvador and in Central America as a whole.

The key exception is Nicaragua. Just as the Vietnamese Communists used progressive and nationalist slogans to conceal their intentions, the Nicaraguan Communists employ slogans of social reform, nationalism, and democracy to obscure their totalitarian goals. The 1960 platform of the Communists in South Vietnam promised:

"Freedom of expression, press, assembly, and association, travel, religion, and other democratic liberties will be promulgated. Religious, political, and patriotic organizations will be permitted freedom of activity regardless of belief and tendencies. There will be a general amnesty for all political detainees [and] the concentration camps dissolved. . . . [I]llegal arrests, illegal imprisonment, torture, and corporal punishment shall be forbidden."

These promises were repeated time after time. We find similar promises in the letter the Nicaraugan revolutionary junta sent to the Organization of American States in July 1979.

The junta, which included the Communist leader Daniel Ortega, declared its "firm intention to establish full observance of human rights" and to "call . . . free elections." The Nicaraguan Communists made the same commitment when they agreed to the Contadora Document of Objectives in September 1983, and when they said they accepted the Contadora draft treaty of September 1984.

What the Communists, in fact, have tried to do since they took power in Nicaragua is the opposite: to suppress or drive out non-Communist democratic political forces; to install an apparatus of state control down to the neighborhood level; to build a huge war machine; to repress the Roman Catholic church; to persecute Indians and other ethnic groups, including forcible relocations of population; and to welcome thousands of Cuban, Soviet, East European, PLO, and Libyan military and civilian personnel. They have formed links with PLO, Iranian, and Libyan terrorists, and are testing their skills as drug traffickers. Like the Vietnamese Communists, they have become a threat to their neighbors.

Broken promises. Communist dictatorship. Refugees. Widened Soviet influence, this time near our very borders. Here is your parallel between Vietnam and Central America.

Brave Nicaraguans—perhaps up to 15,000—are fighting to recover the promise of the 1979 revolution from the Communists who betrayed it. They deserve our support. They are struggling to prevent the consolidation and expansion of Communist power on our doorstep, and to save the people of Nicaragua from the fate of the people of Cuba, of South Vietnam, Cambodia, and Laos. Those who assure us that these dire consequences are not in prospect are some of those who assured us of the same in Indochina before 1975.

The ordeal of Indochina in the past decade—as well as the oppressions endured by the people of Cuba, and every other country where Communists have seized power—should teach us something. The experience of Iran since the fall of the Shah is also instructive. Do we want another Cuba in this hemisphere? How many times must we learn the same lesson?

AMERICA'S RESPONSIBILITY

Today we remember a setback, but the noble cause of defending freedom is still our cause. Our friends and allies still rely on us. Our responsibility remains.

The larger lesson of the past decade is that when America lost faith in herself, world stability suffered and freedom lost ground.

This must never happen again. We carry the banner of liberty, democracy, the dignity of the individual, tolerance, the rule of law. Throughout our history, including the period of Vietnam, we have been the champion of freedom, a haven of opportunity, and a beacon of hope to oppressed peoples everywhere.

Let us be true to the hopes invested in us. Let us live up to our ideals, and be their strong and faithful champion around the world.●

SUMMARY OF AGRICULTURE SITUATION

HON. HAL DAUB

OF NEBRASKA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, April 29, 1985

● Mr. DAUB. Mr. Speaker, I recently received the following letter from Mr. Curtis Burgess, president of the Nebraska Soybean Association. It is an excellent summary of the agriculture situation which I want to share with my colleagues.

NEBRASKA SOYBEAN PROGRAM,
Lincoln, NE, March 12, 1985.

Hon. HAL DAUB,
House of Representatives,
Washington, DC.

DEAR CONGRESSMAN DAUB: On behalf of Nebraska soybean farmers, I'd like to thank you and your staff for your time when we were in Washington, March 6, 1985. We really appreciated your taking the time to visit with us.

All of us in agriculture know we are in a crucial period. The decisions made this year will affect our nation's food and fiber industry well into the next century. The choices we face are not easy ones, and we know your task in the coming months will be a difficult one. The future course of agriculture hangs in the balance.

Today, American agriculture is in a financial crisis. The reasons for it can be argued at length, but the crisis itself is real and immediate. Yet the need for quick action on farm credit—and that need is more pressing—should not blind us to the longer term needs of U.S. farmers.

Soybean farmers support a pro-trade agricultural policy that will make the United States the world's preferred supplier of food and fiber. We believe that if the 1985 Agricultural Act does not concern itself with the vital task of selling more of what we produce, it will prove unable to improve farm income. And income, after all, is what farmers want and need.

Some farmers—including some in Nebraska—believe we should retreat from foreign markets and produce only for domestic consumption. They believe that, through mandatory production controls that would essentially make it against the law not to accept federal subsidies, we can shrink our production enough to boost prices to a desired level.

The advocates of this viewpoint are quite sincere. They are also, in my opinion, tragically wrong. Consider, for example, the case of wheat. In 1983, farmers marketed 8.1 billion dollars worth of wheat for both dometic and foreign use, at an average price of $3.52 per bushel. If they had marketed only their domestic production, and received 90% of parity ($6.55 per bushel), then their total receipts would have been only 5.2 billion dollars.

In fact, American farmers are inextricably part of the international marketplace. The question is not whether we are part of the world market, but whether we will compete in it.

What is the role of government in agriculture? Is it to guarantee farmers' incomes? Soybean farmers have traditionally answered "no" to that question. We do not claim that there is no role for government—after all, farmers must deal with foreign export subsidies, unfair trade barriers, and an overvalued dollar, all factors over which they have no control. Government's proper role in this environment is to stand shoulder to shoulder with producers and try to see to it that they have the opportunity to compete fairly.

Soybean farmers do not seek to influence policies for other commodities, unless they adversely affect soybeans. We do, however, feel strongly that it is in all farmers' interest to make the 1985 Agricultural Act a trade centered law. We believe export promotion should be Title I of the bill, so that available resources can be channeled into selling commodities, not storing them.

Surely it makes more sense to base our agricultural policies on opportunity than on coercion. An agricultural policy based on rigid, coercive supply controls would be, in my view, unsustainable for any great period of time. We simply cannot pretend that we still live in the 1930's: the world has changed, and agriculture has changed, too.

All farmers want higher prices. Many of us do not believe, however, that higher price supports are the only way to get higher prices, or that the harsh supply controls that traditionally go along with high supports could succeed over the long term. Instead, I believe most farmers want to expand demand: to sell more overseas and at home, to develop new uses and new markets for what they grow, to challenge the government created barriers that keep us from selling our abundance to the world.

As I have said, if the government wants to help farmers, perhaps trade policy is a good place to start. Our farmers compete with subsidized Brazilian and Argentine soy meal and soy oil; they face trade barriers in any markets; they face trade distortions created by the irrational agricultural policies of the European Community and other competitors. Our government has done a lot of talking about how bad all of this is. Action, however, has been scant. It sometimes seems that the United States turns Teddy Roosevelt's wisdom on its head when it comes to trade policy: walk loudly, but carry a very small stick.

The answer to the challenges we face in the international arena is not to withdraw from world markets, but to compete aggressively in them. That means action to allow the dollar to depreciate, so our goods can once again be competitively priced. It means demonstrating by word and deed that the United States intends to maintain and expand its export share, and that it will no longer stand idly by while other countries take its markets away through predatory subsidies.

As I said at the beginning of this letter, you are in a position of awesome responsibility. There has never in my memory been a more critical time for U.S. agriculture than right now. The actions Congress and the Administration take in the coming months will determine whether our farmers can look forward to profits, or only continued stagnation. I feel confident you will do your very best to achieve an agriculture that allows profits, opportunity and growth, and I thank you for your attention to this letter.

With best wishes, I am

Sincerely yours,

CURTIS BURGESS,

President, Nebraska Soybean Association.●

SAN MARCOS RIVER

HON. J.J. PICKLE

OF TEXAS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, April 29, 1985

● Mr. PICKLE. Mr. Speaker, in the March 1985 issue of the Endangered Species Technical Bulletin, published by the Department of the Interior, there was an article on the San Marcos River. This article is worthy of note because it describes the efforts made by the city of San Marcos and Southwest Texas State University in preserving four species of life that exist only in central Texas and, in most cases, only in the San Marcos River.

The San Marcos gambusia, the fountain darter, the San Marcos salamander, and Texas wildrice all depend on the springfed San Marcos River for their life support. If this river is polluted or allowed to dry up because of overly excessive discharge from the Edwards aquifer, the river's source of spring water, then these endangered species will vanish.

I submit this article for the RECORD and congratulate the city of San Marcos, under the leadership of Mayor Emmie Craddock, for its efforts to control pollution of the river. I also want to congratulate Southwest Texas State University, under the leadership of President Robert L. Hardesty, for the work that the Edwards Aquifer Research and Data Center [EARDC] is doing to study the effects of various stimuli on these rare species.

The article follows:

[From Endangered Species Technical Bulletin (Vol. X No. 3—1985)]

FOUR SAN MARCOS RIVER SPECIES

The San Marcos River begins at a series of springs along a fault zone in the City of San Marcos, Texas. Although their flows have varied over the years with fluctuations in their source, the Edwards Aquifer, the San Marcos Springs have never been known to go dry. Their uninterrupted flows, high water quality, and constant water temperature may account, at least in part, for the fact that the San Marcos Springs and River ecosystem has a greater known diversity of aquatic organisms than any such ecosystem in the region. Many of these species are found nowhere else, and now are restricted to the first few kilometers or less of the spring run.

Due to a variety of factors, including depletion of the aquifer for human uses, pollution, and alterations in the river corridor for recreation and other purposes, the San Marcos River is in danger of losing its unique biological resources. Currently, three animals and one plant native to the San Marcos ecosystem are listed by the Fish and Wildlife Service as Endangered or Threatened:

San Marcos gambusia (Gambusia georgei)—Due to its rarity, little is known about the small (25 to 40 millimeter standard length) fish, the most imperiled of the four listed San Marcos species. Currently, the San Marcos gambusia is thought to occur in very small numbers only within an approximately one-kilometer stretch of the upper river. Its habitat needs apparently are quite specific: thermally constant flows; quiet shallow, open waters adjacent to sections moving more rapidly; a muddy, but generally not silted, substrate; partial shading from the sun; and high water quality. Any significant changes in these natural ecological conditions could result in the extinction of this species, which is classified as Endangered.

Fountain darter (Etheostoma fonticola)—This small (25 millimeter standard length), mostly reddish brown fish has a distinctive dorsal fin with black, red, and clear bands. Like the San Marcos gambusia, the fountain darter needs clean, clear water of consistent temperature; however, it also requires vegetated stream bottoms, preferably with mats of filamentous green algae (Rhizoclonium sp.) that it uses for cover.

The fountain darter is known from the San Marcos River and another Edwards Aquifer spring discharge, the Comal River. It was extirpated from the latter during the 1950s, due primarily to temporarily reduced flows, but a small population has been reestablished by reintroduction. Since the Comal River is only 5 kilometers in total length and has been known to periodically cease flowing, it does not comprise much of a "safety valve" for the species, and the San Marcos River ecosystem must be conserved if the fountain darter is to survive and recover. Since there are two small populations, however, this fish is listed as Threatened rather than Endangered.

San Marcos salamander (Eurycea nana)—This short (up to 59.6 mm total length), slender amphibian is colored light tan on its back, but it can alter its dorsal coloration to dark brown, and back again, in accord with the darkness or lightness of its substrate. A lungless species, the San Marcos salamander retains its gills and does not leave the water to metamorphose into a terrestrial form.

Data on the salamander's historical range are unclear. Currently, this Threatened species is known to occur only in Spring Lake, an unusual 40-acre impoundment formed when flows from the San Marcos Springs were dammed in the late 1800s. Most individuals are located in the northernmost section of the lake, on a limestone shelf immediately in front of the lakeside Aquarena Springs Hotel. There, concrete banks in front of the hotel and limestone boulders in adjacent shallow waters support a lush growth of the aquatic moss Leptodictyium riparium and mats of a coarse, filamentous blue-green alga (Lyngbya sp.). In view of the abundance of predators (primarily fish, but also crayfish, turtles, and aquatic birds) in Spring Lake, such protective cover is essential to the survival of the salamander. A plentiful food supply for the salamander also is harbored by the aquatic vegetation.

Texas wildrice (Zizania texana)—Texas wildrice is an aquatic grass that forms large clones or masses firmly rooted in the river's gravel bottom. The culms and leaves usually are immersed and long-streaming in the swift current. (The species is not found in slow moving or stagnant water.) In former times, when Texas wildrice was more abundant and less subject to human disturbance, the flowering tops of the plants projected as much as a meter above the water. Today, however, flowering plants are rarely seen, and when present, do not extend very far above the surface. Since no seedlings have been observed in the native San Marcos River habitat, it is unknown whether or not the Texas wildrice can any longer reseed itself, given its low numbers and the continuing threats to its ecosystem. Accordingly, it is classified as Endangered.

Dr. W. H. Emery of Southwest Texas State University in San Marcos has worked with the Texas wildrice since at least 1975, and has had success in seed collection, seed storage and germination, seedling survival, and development of survival clones to the F_2 generation through pollenization under controlled conditions. His attempts to transplant clones of nursery-grown plants into the wild met with some temporary success. Unfortunately, however, long-term survival was prevented by factors including flooding, predation by an exotic rodent (nutria), and some recreational users of the San Marcos River who damaged the plant's fruiting heads.

THREATS TO THE ECOSYSTEM

Aside from their specific microhabitat needs, all four of the listed species in the San Marcos River ecosystem require an uninterrupted water supply that is clean, clear, free-flowing, and thermally constant. Any significant changes in these conditions will make the recovery effort difficult, if not impossible, and could even result in extinction. Therefore, the San Marcos River Recovery Plan is being treated by the Service as a habitat recovery plan. If the stream is conserved, it is likely that the species will survive.

Because the San Marcos Springs and River ecosystem is inextricably tied to the condition of the Edwards Aquifer, increased use of the groundwater is cause for concern. A steady growth in the human population is expected for the foreseeable future, and the Texas Department of Water Resources predicts that groundwater pumping will increase well into the 21st century. Data from the U.S. Bureau of Reclamation suggest that future demands on the aquifer will far exceed its ability to recharge. The recovery plan cites numerous predictions that, unless steps are taken to conserve the aquifer's water supply, "the flow from the San Marcos Springs will cease around the year 2000." The implications for all aquatic life in the San Marcos ecosystem, not just for the listed species, are obvious.

The quality of the remaining water faces the same threats posed by rapid urbanization in many other areas, including the problems of occasional pollution from overloaded sewage treatment facilities, erosion and siltation, and flooding caused by uncontrolled runoff. Locally applied herbicides and pesticides also may be having unanticipated effects. For example, the Texas Highway Department has used the herbicide "Roundup" for grounds maintenance around a bridge that crosses the San Marcos River. Rainfall could easily wash this chemical into the type locality of the San Marcos gambusia. Although the effects of this substance on the four listed species are not known, it may be more than coincidental that no San Marcos gambusia have been detected at its type locality since the spraying program was initiated.

At least 10 species of introduced fishes have been detected in the San Marcos River, and some are particularly abundant. These exotics may be preying on the native fishes, out-competing them for food and territory, and spreading introduced parasites.

The Texas wildrice, which occurs within the city limits of San Marcos, faces some special problems. In 1967, Emery discussed the damage being caused by the following activities: the mowing of aquatic plants at Spring Lake to make the water more attractive to tourists, which sent masses of cut vegetation downstream and damaged the emergent wildrice inflorescences; the periodic harrowing of the river bottom to remove vegetation; the introduction and commercial harvesting of aquatic plants; the collection of native aquatic plants; and the raw sewage discharged into the water whenever the city's sewage treatment capacity was exceeded. Ten years later, Emery noted that the impacts of these factors had abated significantly but the wildrice had not been able to recover by producing new plants. The population declined even further during a 1980 flood, which swept away many of the clones and physically altered the river channel. Since the Texas wildrice seems to be particularly sensitive to chemical changes in the water, application of herbicides (such as the "Roundup" mentioned earlier) could be taking a toll.

PLANNED RECOVERY EFFORTS

The overall objective of the San Marcos Recovery Plan (approved 12/3/84) is to ensure the long-term conservation of the San Marcos Springs and River ecosystem, which should enable the four listed species to eventually regain a secure status. Concurrently, some specific research and management activities will be necessary, particularly for the gambusia and the wildrice.

In order to assess population trends and the effectiveness of recovery actions, each of the four species must be monitored on a regular basis. For the San Marcos gambusia and the Texas wildrice, which are in the greatest danger, surveys should be conducted at least quarterly during the initial phases of the recovery program. Populations of the fountain darter and San Marcos salamander, species in a relatively more stable condition, should be monitored twice or more per year. As recovery activities progress, these schedules could be modified.

A better knowledge of the biological and ecological factors influencing the protected species is important for developing the most effective management approaches. For example, the Service believes that the relatively large number of potential predators and competitors artifically introduced into the San Marcos ecosystem is having an effect on the native species, but the severity of this threat is not clear. Research into the impacts of exotic species could provide guidance as to whether control procedures should be initiated or whether the avaliable resources should first be concentrated on more critical problems. Basic information is needed in a number of other areas, including diseases and parasites, conditions for reproductive success, survivorship patterns, and aquatic habitat characteristics.

Maintaining a healthy San Marcos ecosystem will be possible only as long as the Edwards Aquifer is not depleted. Numerous State and Federal agencies, including the Edwards Underground Water District, Edwards Aquifer Research and Data Center (EARDC), Texas Department of Water Resources, U.S. Geological Survey, U.S. Army Corps of Engineers, Bureau of Reclamation, Soil Conservation Service, and the Fish and Wildlife Service, have conducted and are continuing to conduct studies on the characteristics and functioning of the aquifer. More data are needed, however, on factors that are likely to affect the uninterrupted flow of the San Marcos Springs. Dr. Albert Ogden, of the EARDC, with support from Region 2 of the Fish and Wildlife Service, has collected preliminary data indicating that flows from the San Marcos Springs could be maintained by local natural recharge, augmented by construction of artificial recharge structures.

Without the cooperation of all agencies involved with managing use of the aquifer, recovery of the San Marcos species is remote. Any controls on groundwater pumping or requirements for water conservation would be imposed only with the concurrence of the involved local, State, and Federal agencies. The Fish and Wildlife Service and the City of San Marcos believe that conserving the San Marcos River ecosystem can, and must be, compatible with carefully managed human uses of the water. San Marcos has taken a strong initiative in protecting the river. Since the Edwards Aquifer is the main water supply for the cities of San Marcos, San Antonio, and several other cities in southcentral Texas, it obviously is in the interests of area citizens to ensure that the aquifer does not run dry or become contaminated.

Although the San Marcos ecosystem is primarily a springrun, surface run-off from the surrounding watershed strongly influences the aquatic habitat. As urbanization increases, greater water quality problems can be expected unless measures are taken to handle stormwater and street run-off, occasional spills from the sewage treatment plant, and other sources of wastewater. Pollution from herbicides and pesticides, if found to be a threat, also will have to be addressed.

Because their numbers are so low and their habitat so restricted, the San Marcos species could be extirpated by a single catastrophic event, such as a chemical spill. As a precaution, the recovery plan advocates establishing captive populations for future use in restocking. Such a program would begin with the gambusia, which is in the greatest peril.

"Tubing," canoeing, swimming, and other forms of recreation are becoming increasingly popular along the San Marcos River. The combined impacts of these activities on the ecosystem are unknown; however, at least part of the reproductive difficulties suffered by the Texas wildrice can be traced directly to people knocking over and damaging the plant's emergent seed heads. Recreational use patterns should be documented, particularly as they relate to the wildrice flowering season, so potential management alternatives may be drawn to accommodate both recreation and conservation.

Once conservation of the San Marcos Springs and River ecosystem is ensured, and studies show that the rare animals and plants are responding favorably, reclassifications or delistings can be considered.●

COMMUNIST INTERNATIONALISM IN CENTRAL AMERICA

HON. JIM COURTER

OF NEW JERSEY

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, April 29, 1985

● Mr. COURTER. Mr. Speaker, powerful and excellent speeches my colleagues made before this House during the last week emphasized something not all of us have been willing to face, and something Sandinista officials have been saying openly for years: The Nicaraguan revolutionary regime has never served, and is not to serve, Nicaraguans alone.

We have refused to believe it, as the recent votes have shown. It was thus with bitter irony that I read in this morning's newspapers two more reproofs to our illusions.

First, Daniel Ortega, who some insist has been driven into Soviet arms by U.S. belligerence, announced the very moment after this House voted against aiding the Contras that we would be making yet another trip to Moscow.

Second, newly captured Salvadoran guerrilla documents which reemphasize Communist internationalism in Central America were summarized and published by Roger Fontaine, former senior staff member of the U.S. National Security Council. I submit this brief document summary be published in the RECORD, and particularly commend to my colleagues' attention its first, and its final dozen, paragraphs:

[From the Washington Times, Apr. 25, 1985]

CAPTURED RECORDS REVEAL SALVADORAN REBELS' STRATEGY

(By Roger Fontaine)

El Salvador's Marxist guerrilla leaders believe a Sandinista success in crushing the Nicaraguan resistance would be devisive in their plans to bring down the Salvadoran democratic government, according to documents captured last week.

In a letter addressed to the Sandinista national directorate dated Nov. 24, 1983, the four top Salvadoran guerrilla commanders also expressed support for Managua's diplomatic initiatives because they help President Reagan's opposition in the United States. The letter and other documents seized by the Salvadoran army were obtained by The Washington Times.

Rebel leaders stressed "the internal consolidation of the Sandinista Popular Revolution is the "determining factor for our liberation process."

"At this time, the highest priority for the FSLN [Sandinistas] is to continue and aggravate the wearing away of the enemy forces"—the Nicaragua resistance—"which in turn will allow us to enter that situation with our political and military forces better developed and consolidated, and with a larger capacity to bog down the aggression if it were to happen."

The guerrilla commanders' statement refers to a pledge by the Farabundo Marti National Liberation Front, or FMNL, to respond to the introduction of U.S. combat troops in Central America, according to one State Department official.

The guerrillas hail Sandinista diplomatic efforts because they "gain time to help opposition in the United States and to internationally isolate [President Reagan's] aggressive plan towards Nicaragua and El Salvador."

No other reason for their support of diplomacy was listed.

The guerrilla commanders dismiss the importance of their negotiating with the Salvadoran government because "dialogue does not play an important role in our diplomatic battles."

Important diplomatic "battles" listed in the letter included mustering "international pressure" to stop "U.S. intervention."

Rebel commanders also asked the Sandinista directorate for "a much higher level of logistical assistance" since "coordination and cooperation" between the Salvadoran guerrillas and the Sandinistas "is of the highest priority."

"We believe that present circumstances are favorable to take daring steps in this direction," they added.

The documents, according to State Department officials, constitute the richest haul of material detailing the inside workings of the Salvadoran rebels and their relationship with the Nicaraguan government since the capture of a diary belonging to the chairman of the El Salvadoran Communist Party five years ago.

More documents are expected to be released shortly.

They were seized by the Savladoran army in a raid on a guerrilla base camp last week in El Salvador's San Vicente province in which seven guerrillas were killed and a high-ranking political-military section chief Nidia Diaz, was captured.

The camp, according to officials, belonged to the Central American Revolutionary Workers' Party (PRTC), one of five military fractions that belong to the FMLN guerrilla coalition.

The commanders' letter was in reply to a Sandinista foreign commission report given them for comment. The report outlines Managua's diplomatic strategy.

The closeness of their working relationship, according to State Department officials, is demonstrated in the military commanders' letter.

The FMLN commanders who signed the letter included Shafik Jorge Handal, chairman of the El Salvadoran Communist Party, Joaquin Villalobos, head of the Popular Revolutionary Army, Roberto Roca of the Central American Revolutionary Workers' Party, and Leonel Gonzalez of the Popular Liberation Forces.

The guerrilla leaders, all headquartered in Nicaragua, stated their agreement with the Sandinista foreign affairs commission's report and its conclusion that the U.S. election period was "the appropriate moment to influence the American electorate."

"The Sandinista Popular Revolution and the Salvadoran Revolutionary Movement are the most sensitive points in Central America and they could bog down the present Reagan Administration," the letter said.

The military commanders underlined the importance of defeating "the aggressive policy of Reagan" through "the joint efforts of the Socialist Camp, the National Liberation Movements and all the Progressive Forces . . ."

Officials did not explain why the documents, available since last week, were only distributed Tuesday night during the House debate on funding for the Nicaraguan resistance forces. The rebel camp was captured on April 18.

Salvadoran rebel cooperation and assistance to the Sandinistas shows up in another captured document, the hand-written notes of an undated meeting between FMLN and Sandinista officials in which joint efforts were outlined, including contingency planning.

The minutes state that U.S. "aggression" against Nicaragua was inevitable and to be launched "within a few days." They affirm that the common interest of the Sandinistas and the Salvadoran rebels was the "defense of the Nicaraguan revolution."

According to the minutes, cooperation was more than rhetorical. Officals agreed that an FMLN military unit was to receive one month of intensive military training and then be deployed to a border area closest to Nicaragua.

The minutes disclosed that "at the first shots" indicating a U.S. attack on Nicaragua, FMLN propaganda materials and funds are to be shipped from Nicaragua to El Salvador.

The documents also indicated that this would be joint decision of the Sandinistas and the FMLN.

Other captured documents show the Salvadoran rebels are dependent on other Soviet bloc states for training and instruction.

On a page of a captured guerrilla calendar for May 1984 are found names of guerrillas destined for instruction in Bulgaria, the Soviet Union and Vietnam.

Other foreign training was indicated in captured guerrilla personnel files. The cards list names, pseudonyms, sex, civil state, number of children, professsion, schooling, military experience and physical problems.

The last line of each card indicates political and military training. In the file cards made available to the Washington Times, five showed instruction in Cuba, and another said simply "a military course in the exterior."

Another captured document—two pages of hand-written excerpts from a FMLN foreign affairs commission political analysis—reveals a preoccupation with the possibility of U.S. combat troops being deployed in the region.

In paragraph 17, the report says if aggression against Nicaragua begins, "the frontiers disappear."

It characterized the Reagan administration as the most aggressive in recent years and stated that its inverventionism was aimed at Central America and Grenada.

Although the report is undated, it refers to "Our tragic defeat in Grenada"—which one State Department official said indicates the FMLN's "full identification with the Marxists-Leninists in Grenada" and "reaffirms a common thread thrughout the documents, which is the importance placed in communication and cooperation with other communist groups."●

RETIRING W-H BUREAU CHIEF TAKES NOSTALGIC LOOK AT PAST

HON. DOUG BEREUTER

OF NEBRASKA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, April 29, 1985

● Mr. BEREUTER. Mr. Speaker, this week the readers of the Omaha World-Herald will say goodbye to an excellent reporter and a very fine gentleman. Darwin Olofson, chief of the World-Herald's Washington Bureau, will retire.

Darwin Olofson has reported to Nebraskans and Iowans on actions of the Federal Government and on the Iowa and Nebraska congressional delegations for 35 years. In a sense, he has represented his Nebraska and Iowa readers in Washington longer than any Member of the present congressional delegations. His readers trust him. All of us who know him respect him, and we will most assuredly miss him.

His final weekly column takes a nostalgic look at the Washington he came to 35 years ago and the changes that have transpired since then. I commend it to my colleagues.

[From the Omaha World-Herald Apr. 29, 1985]

RETIRING W-H BUREAU CHIEF TAKES NOSTALGIC LOOK AT PAST

(By Darwin Olofson)

WASHINGTON.—It was diffferent in 1950. Not better, necessarily. Just different.

Members of Congress got $12,500 a year, plus a $2,500 expense account, and were accused of being overpaid. There were some, from the magnola country, who still wore frock coats and their hair at shoulder length.

President Truman was being attacked as a big spender for proposing a $12 billion budget that—horror of horrors—involved a $3 billion deficit.

A previously obscure Republican senator from Wisconsin, Joseph McCarthy, went into political orbit, briefly and fatefully, after charging that 57 Communist Party members were working for the State Department.

It was a time to save your Confederate money, because Southern Democrats controlled the then far more powerful committee structure in Congress. Democrats in the South didn't lose seats to Republicans in those days; they lost them when they died or decided they wanted to go home.

There were 96 senators, because Hawaii and Alaska had not yet achieved statehood, and Nebraska had four instead of three House members.

Congress somehow was able to save the country legislatively by July or August each year, and then quit, rather than staying in session until the holiday season was at hand.

The United States was at war in Korea, while helping to rebuild nations devastated by the world war that had ended only five years earlier.

Washington was a much slower paced, essentially Southern city, a segregated city where the "Whites Only" signs jolted a newcomer from the Midwest.

The only excuse for recalling such ancient history is that there comes a time each week when a column has to be written about something. For this reporter, it is the last column.

There are various ways to measure 35 years in The World-Herald's Washington Bureau. In that period, for example, eight presidents have held office.

Only two of the 100 senators and four of the 435 House members now serving were here in 1950.

Instead of President Truman's $12 billion budget, it is now President Reagan's $974 billion budget, a spending progression that in large part is a reflection of how the government's role has changed.

But the best measurement, a strictly personal one, is the satisfaction that comes from having had one of the best seats in the house from which to watch one national political drama after another unfold over some three decades. Washington never is without a crisis for very long.

Politicians are fascinating creatures, and equally fascinating are the twists and the turns, the intricate maneuvers and the unexpected developments in politics. A Washington reporter who doesn't find that to be so, probably would be better off elsewhere.

This isn't to say that politicians are the brainiest people around, or that they are the most entertaining, responsible, consistent or hard-working. They certainly are not the most modest.

They can be devious and they can be petty. But there also are times, when the chips are down and the stakes are high, that they deliver even which it involves political sacrifices.

They can impress, surprise, amuse and disappoint. Almost always, however, they are interesting as individuals and as the cast on the free world's biggest political stage.

For the most part, members of Congress did not get on Washington's last track by accident. They had something going for them in the talent or personality departments, or both.

By and large, if you had to sit up all night in a bus station with someone, you could do worse than having a person who has made the political big time as company.

If that should happen to you, however, it would be safest to be a bit skeptical about what you're told.

One more thing.

If the several millions of words that have been filed by this reporter in the last 35 years occasionally have made the wonderful and sometimes wacky world of Washington a little more understandable, it has been strictly a pleasure.●

IF THE ECONOMIC OUTLOOK IS THAT GOOD, WHY AM I STILL FEELING SO DEPRESSED?

HON. DON BONKER

OF WASHINGTON

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, April 29, 1985

● Mr. BONKER. Mr. Speaker, the economic recovery that President Reagan is fond of talking about and the Government's statistical reports appear to confirm is not benefiting everyone.

Unemployment in my congressional district averages 16 percent and is as high as 25 percent in one county alone. Recently, I sponsored an economic summit and expected 250 people to attend. But actually there were over 800 in attendance. These people know that the area's economy is going downhill despite this administration's grand rehetoric about the recovery.

The most eloquent testimony I have seen of this truth is an article penned by Vicki Williams, a former factory worker, part-time bartender and waitress. It appeared in the Seattle Post-Intelligencer on March 27, 1985, and I believe it should be required reading for all my colleagues.

The article follows:

IF THE ECONOMIC OUTLOOK IS THAT GOOD, WHY AM I STILL FEELING SO DEPRESSED?

(By Vicki Williams)

Isn't it wonderful about the economy? My president tells me that the recession is long since over and the country faces nothing but boom times ahead. My favorite news anchorman says that inflation has been licked and unemployment figures are down again. My local newspaper reports that the government's leading economic indicators are up again—and the stock market continues to rise.

Why does all this blatantly cheerful news have such a depressing effect on me? Because, like so many others, I didn't make it to the station on time when the recovery train pulled out.

FRIEND A GOOD EXAMPLE

And those of us who missed that train—single women, minorities, farmers, steel workers and lower-class working people generally—almost seem to be forming a new subclass of working poor. Our government and our fellow countrymen, who are prospering, seem content to consider us the dispensable Americans—the price that unfortunately had to be paid.

What has happened in my friend's life is a perfect example of what I'm talking about. Before the recession, she worked in a rubber products plant and made approximately $7 an hour. With incentive pay, she could bring home $300 a week or so. Not an abundant living perhaps, according to some standards, but her family could eat well and she could easily make her $300 a month house payment. Further, she had company-paid health insurance, dental insurance, vision insurance and a prescription card, which added security to her life and those of her three children. She belonged to a strong union, the Rubberworkers, which guaranteed that she would remain a part of America's middle-class.

In 1981, she was laid off—a lay-off which turned out to be permanent. Now she is one of those statistics the government uses to prove its point. She is working again full-time and life is back to normal—right? Not hardly. As a bartender, she makes $3.50 hourly. She has no health insurance, no vacation, no retirement plan. She is almost 40 and terrified at the prospect of an accident or an illness in any of her family members. She wonders what she will do when the old car finally gives out, and that $300 a month house payment now seems almost impossible to come up with, though so far she has managed to hang on to the house for the kids' sakes.

Her bills are either the same or more than when she made $300 a week. Even assuming her outgo had remained exactly the same, her income has decreased by 50 percent, and much more if benefits are included. How much stock do you think she puts in the official inflation rate?

The plant where she previously worked recently wrested concessions from its workers by means of threats to move elsewhere. Because of their two-tier wage system, new American Airlines employees now make between 30 percent and 50 percent less than older workers. Greyhound workers accepted concessions.

Multiply these few examples by millions and the inflation rate can be seen for the farce it really is, applicable to only a select group of Americans. Little is ever said on the news or by the politicians about "reverse inflation" but make no mistake, the effects are just as deadly whether they are the result of steady income and rising prices or steady prices and lower income.

The unemployment rate, which had shown a generally steady decline, likewise paints an inaccurate picture of what is really happening as more Americans go back to work. Can it really decrease by one full job when the newly employed statistic makes only half or less than what he or she previously made? Wouldn't lowering the rate by one half a job result in a more honest, if much higher figure?

When industry employs the kind of number-jockeying the government is now using to convince us of the nation's prosperity, it is called creative bookkeeping. On paper, the balance sheet looks great but the figures disguise a sickness at the core for people like me and my friend do not exist in a vacuum. Our continued unfulfilled desire for a living wage means that we will not be buying houses or new cars or home computers and that affects other Americans whose jobs depend on selling those items.

CAN'T STOP CYNICISM

Even those of us who have so far resisted turning to government aid may yet become a drain on the public if accident or illness strikes a life already teetering on the edge of financial catastrophe.

So despite all the optimistic reports, I remain cynical, for I know that a nation's economy is far from healthy when a large part of its population reads about recovery but lives with recession.●

A VICTORY FOR THE HOUSE LEADERSHIP: A DEFEAT FOR FAIRNESS

HON. JACK FIELDS

OF TEXAS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, April 29, 1985

● Mr. FIELDS. Mr. Speaker, the House soon will consider the matter of the contested election in Indiana's Eighth Congressional District—and likely will vote to seat Democrat Frank McCloskey.

If the House leadership votes to seat Mr. McCloskey, rather than Rick McIntyre, whom the Indiana secretary of state has certified as the winner, the House leadership will demonstrate, as it has so often in the past, that when its own partisan interests collide with fairness, fairness will lose every time. The men and women of Indiana's Eighth District should have the right to be represented by the Congressman of their choice—but it appears that the House leadership will insist that they be stuck with your choice, Mr. Speaker.

For the last several weeks, but especially in recent days, the House task force has managed to revise the "new math."

That revised "new math" has magically turned a 418-vote McIntyre victory into a four-vote McCloskey victory. Time and time again, the House leadership has promised to "count all the ballots." In conducting the just-completed recount, the task force overrode Indiana State election law, selectively and in a partisan manner counted unnotarized absentee ballots, and stopped the counting process as soon as the Speaker's hand-picked candidate pulled ahead in the balloting.

Mr. Speaker, it is obvious that the recount commission, dominated 2-1 by Democrats, did everything it possibly could to ensure the victory of the Democrat candidate.

The task force has not fulfilled the promise it made to those of us in this Chamber that all ballots would be counted. Instead, it has determined that all ballots are equal—but that those ballots cast for Mr. McCloskey are more equal than those cast for Mr. McIntyre.

Mr. Speaker, fairness has suffered severely in the months since November 1984. And that fact has not been lost on the American people or the news media.

I would challenge you, Mr. Speaker, to visit high schools throughout the Eighth District of Indiana and explain "democracy" such as we have witnessed in this matter to high school students—explaining why it is that their parents can be denied any representation in the House for 3½ months and how it is that their parents' election day decisions can be overturned and ignored by the same men and women in this Chamber who profess to support and strengthen our democratic system.

Mr. Speaker, throughout history, the House always has strengthened and supported democracy. And that is why I never have been ashamed to be a Member of this body, and I never have been ashamed of a vote I have cast in this Chamber. But you and your Democrat colleagues seem determined to stab a dagger into the very heart of democracy: The idea that votes matter, and that men and women have a right to be represented by the person of their choice. I have every confidence that the American people in general, and the people of Indiana's Eighth District in particular, soon will remember that for a long time to come.

To help that process along, I wish to bring to the attention of you and my colleagues the following editorial which appeared in the April 24 Dallas Morning News.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

[From the Dallas Morning News, Apr. 24, 1985]

CONTESTED SEAT: IN THE POISONED WELL

A House task force, composed of two Democrats and one Republican asserts that Frank McCloskey, not Rick McIntyre, won the election for the House seat from Indiana's Eighth District.

It shouldn't shock you to hear that McCloskey is a Democrat, McIntyre a Republican, and that the Republicans are steamed.

Not without reason. Back in November, the election-night count gave the victory to McCloskey, but a recount gave McIntyre a 400-vote margin. McCloskey, the defeated incumbent, was not pleased with the way the recount had been conducted, nor were his allies in the Democratic-controlled House, chief among them Speaker O'Neill and Rep. Tony Coelho.

The Democrats thus refused to seat McIntyre, for the first time in 24 years refusing to accept a state's official recount. Instead they created the three-man task force to supervise yet another recount, which awarded the race to McCloskey—by four votes.

The common-sense wisdom had been that, if things hinged on just a few disputed votes, it should be resolved by a new election. But to O'Neill and Co. McCloskey's four-vote win supersedes McIntyre's 400-vote win, and the case is closed.

Minority whip Trent Lott says that Democrats have "poisoned the well" so much as to make cooperation impossible over the next two years.

However, that may be, the Democrats' behavior is intolerable. There are more tactful ways of stealing elections than convening a congressional task force. A new election is clearly warranted in the Eighth District. Lott and his colleagues should hound the Democrats until just such an election is called.●

RICHARD MEDLEY ON FEDERAL RESERVE REFORM

HON. JIM COURTER

OF NEW JERSEY

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, April 29, 1985

● Mr. COURTER. Mr. Speaker, Richard Medley, a pathbreaking economist who until recently was the top staff assistant for the House Banking Committee, has outlined a provocative and, I believe, important proposal to reform the Federal Reserve Board.

I urge my colleagues to consider this bipartisan approach to "democratize" the Fed, and to back the reform efforts of Representatives HAMILTON and KEMP.

The article follows.

[From the Wall Street Journal, Apr. 25, 1985]

CALLING THE FED TO ACCOUNT

(By Richard Medley)

The first quarter's surprisingly low growth rate of 1.3% prompted Preston Martin, the vice chairman of the Federal Reserve Board, to warn on Tuesday that the U.S. is on the verge of a mild "growth recession." If a recession, whether mild or serious, appears, it is likely to renew congressional interest in curbing the Federal Reserve's extraordinary ability to shield minutes of its meetings from the public and escape effective legislative oversight of its budget and expenditures. Support for "Fed reform" increasingly cuts across party lines.

By the time any recession begins to have an effect on unemployment, Congress and the administration will have worked themselves into a fiscal-policy gridlock even if their current deficit-reduction efforts succeed. Further budget cuts would be counterproductive and unpopular in the midst of a recession. On the other hand, increased deficit spending—the traditional way out of downturns—is an unlikely option in the face of continued $200 billion annual budget shortfalls.

BIPARTISAN REFORM EFFORT

That leaves monetary policy. And there, both parties will find not only room to move, but an effective plan of action already laid out. While most politicians, and the public at large, have focused on deficits, a bipartisan group of legislators has been at work on a Federal Reserve reform effort that is both politically attractive and economically responsible.

In the past, reform efforts have broken apart as the Fed skillfully played its congressional critics against each other. But with progressive legislators like Byron Dorgan (D., N.D.) joining forces with conservatives like Jack Kemp (R., N.Y.) in legislative efforts to "democratize" the Federal Reserve, there may not be a way out for the Fed this time.

This effort avoids the traditional legislative penchant for dictating targets, money growth rates and interest levels to the Fed. Instead, it concentrates on making structural changes designed to provide investors, the general public and Congress with more reliable and more timely information about Federal Reserve policy decisions. This isn't congressional "management" of the money supply, but an attempt to force the Fed into accountability.

The decision to dump dogma and consider such institutional changes did not come easily or swiftly. It arose from more than 70 years of attempted Federal Reserve oversight by Congress. In that time, members of Congress have learned some important truths about dealing with, and trying to change, the Fed.

In the past, a combination of intellectual insecurity and a lack of expertise kept Congress foolishly focused on grappling with the arcane processes of Fed policies. With the exception of Sen. William Proxmire and the late Rep. Wright Patman, Congress all but ignored questions about their macroeconomic effects. A lot was learned about the limits of congressional attention spans, but little about what the Fed did, and how it did it.

Congress reached an all-time low in 1975, when it followed the monetarists into the thicket of prescriptive monetary targets by passing Joint Resolution 133. Supporters contended that this would force the Federal Reserve to produce explicit annual monetary targets and help Congress keep tabs on monetary policy.

But the targets proved to be worse than useless to the Congress, which includes few, if any, experts in monetary policy. The Fed used its congressional mandate to erect a confusion of monetary aggregates, which it created and destroyed at will. Congress tried to make sense of these moving targets, as two recessions and a bout of record interest rates staggered the Nation's economy.

Congress eventually learns from its mistakes—appearances aside. And in this case it learned that asking Paul Volcker about "base drift" or M-1 measurement problems is like throwing Br'er Rabbit into the bramble. He seems to go in reluctantly. But once he's in there, you always lose him.

Recently, that lesson has started to change the way oversight hearings are conducted. The 1978 Humphrey-Hawkins full-employment bill required semiannual congressional hearings into the conduct of monetary policy. These hearings have recently shown an encouraging trend away from questions about monetary aggregates, and toward questions about macroeconomic results that both the public and Congress can understand and use in policy or business planning.

Changing the type of questions asked was the first step toward changing the type of legislation directed at the Federal Reserve. Bills currently introduced by a diverse group of lawmakers, including a proposal by Rep. Kemp and Sen. Mack Mattingly (R. Ga.), all show the effect of Congress's new wisdom about the politics of the Federal Reserve Board.

Two provisions stand out in most of these bills. First, a requirement that the Fed promptly announce the policy decisions made in Federal Open Market Committee meetings. This is designed to end the uncertainty and inefficient market churning that now follow important FOMC votes, and to bring more accurate and current monetary-policy information to businesses and investors.

As Rep. Kemp puts it: "Regardless of the particular policy, we need to open up the decision-making process of the Federal Reserve System. There is simply no reason for the Federal Open Market Committee to keep its policy decisions secret for weeks or months after they are made."

The second provision was first embodied late in 1983 by a House Banking Committee monetary-policy report that recommended bringing the Federal Reserve Board's expenditures into the formal appropriations process for the first time. A recent Congressional Budget Office report uncovered an unusual and widely ignored $3.5 billion loan by the Fed to help bail out Continental Illinois. The CBO report was widely interpreted as supporting increased oversight of Fed spending by Congress.

Currently, Congress has no ability to control Federal Reserve outlays and only limited oversight powers. Every year it is given a report that describes general expenditures by the Fed, but only after the fact. In short, a Fed fait accompli.

The former co-chairman of the Joint Economic Committee, Rep. Lee Hamilton (D., Ind.) has introduced legislation that takes a small step in opening up the process. Mr. Hamilton's bill amends the Budget Act to require the president to "submit a budget prepared by the board of governors of the Federal Reserve System for itself and for all Reserve Banks." Rep. Hamilton's bill would not give Congress the power to control Fed expenditures, but it would for the first time bring the Fed budget into public view before the money is spent. While there may always be unexpected demands on Fed spending (as with Continental Illinois), there is still every reason to have normal Fed outlays subject to public scrutiny before they are made.

The most serious objection to these and other Federal Reserve reform efforts is the fear that the Fed will become mired in petty politics, erasing the one check we now have on our macroeconomic policy. Less politely it is said that congressmen have made a mess of fiscal policy, and there is no sense in letting them politicize and destroy our monetary policy as well.

This is not the place to conduct a defense of Congress's economic prowess, although (incredibly) a good case can be made. But it has long been an open secret that the Federal Reserve operates in a thoroughly political manner already.

Every Federal Reserve chairman has also been a part-time politician working hard to maintain the formal structure of Fed independence while bowing to administration pressure on policy directions. From the oft-cited capitulation of the Fed to pressure from President Nixon for looser monetary policy to its quick change in course during mid-1982, the Fed has shown a keen sense of political timing. Nowhere has that been expressed more graphically than during Chairman Volcker's meeting at the Fed last month with state legislators from 15 farm states. According to three legislators present at that closed-door session, the chairman said bluntly, "Look, the fact is your constituents are unhappy and mine aren't."

A SMALL FIRST STEP

The current reform efforts are explicitly designed not to repeat previous congressional attempts to gain control or influence over technical, day-to-day issues of monetary policy. Their intent is to provide better and more complete information about Fed policy and expenditures to Congress and the American people. That is a lower threshold of budget control than exists for other agencies, but the Fed's defenders already are digging in to preserve total Fed independence from oversight.

Those members of Congress trying to "open up" the Fed have recognized their limits as non-economists, and have designed a program that does nothing more than take a small first step toward imposing traditional democratic values on the Federal Reserve. While none of their proposals would directly constrain the Fed's ability to tighten or loosen the money supply, such "sunshine" rules would force the Fed to more fully explain its policies and their predicted economic effects.

It is an effort that should be applauded by the business community, and when the budget fights have abated, enthusiastically passed by Congress.●

OLDER AMERICANS ACT 20TH ANNIVERSARY RESOLUTION INTRODUCED

HON. MARIO BIAGGI

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, April 29, 1985

● Mr. BIAGGI. Mr. Speaker, today it gives me great pleasure to introduce together with 73 of my colleagues on a bipartisan basis, a concurrent resolution recognizing the 20th anniversary of the Older Americans Act which occurs this year.

As an original member of the House Select Committee on Aging as well as a member of the authorizing committee which first developed and later amended the Older Americans Act, it is an honor to pay tribute to the act and the success story it has been over these past two decades.

A central feature of this resolution is its recognition of the critical work performed on a daily basis by the aging network established by the act more than a decade ago. The network consists of the Administration on Aging, State Agencies on Aging, Area Agencies on Aging, congregate and home delivered meals program providers, and other supportive service providers. In addition, those individuals, and organizations including colleges and universities who participate in the title IV, Research, Training, and Demonstration Programs. All of these individuals and organizations as well as those working part-time under title V of the program and their sponsors are responsible for the success the act has achieved thus far in its history.

An important tribute to the 20th anniversary of the Older Americans Act is scheduled for May 15 sponsored by the Federal Council on Aging. It would be fitting for both the House and Senate to adopt this resolution. I urge those of my colleagues who have yet to cosponsor to do so.

At this point in the RECORD, I wish to insert the text of the resolution for the review of my colleagues. In addition I would also like to place into the RECORD a summary of the history and objectives of the Older Americans Act as printed in a recent report issued by my Subcommittee on Human Services entitled Older Americans Act, a staff summary.

Whereas 1985 marks the 20th anniversary of the enactment of the Older Americans Act of 1965;

Whereas over its 20-year history, the Older Americans Act of 1965 has provided important social and human services to tens of millions of older individuals in their communities, helping to promote greater independence for them and maintaining their dignity;

Whereas one of the key elements contributing to the successful implementation of the Older Americans Act of 1965 during this 20-year period was the establishment of the "aging network" which consists of State and area agencies on aging, as well as congregate and home delivered nutrition providers and other supportive service providers;

Whereas the Administration on Aging, created by the Act, has served as a purposeful advocate for the concerns and needs of older individuals;

Whereas the Act has provided important funds for research, training, and demonstration programs to improve, expand, and enhance services to older individuals;

Whereas the Act has provided important part-time community service employment opportunities for low-income older individuals, many of whom work in providing services to other older individuals;

Whereas the Act has sought to address the special needs of older American Indians through grants to Indian tribes;

Whereas the programs and services provided under the Act have been more successful because of the contributing role of volunteers;

Whereas the Act has periodically been amended by Congress in recognition of the changing needs of our rapidly aging society; and

Whereas the Older Americans Act of 1965 serves as a model for the development of community-based services which provide alternatives to institutionalization of older individuals: Now, therfore, be it

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That the Congress—

(1) recognizes the 20th anniversary of the enactment of the Older Americans Act of 1965 and the successful implementation of such Act;

(2) acknowledges the many and varied contributions by all levels of the aging network and recognizes that the Act has achieved its mandate to the extent that it has because of the day to day work performed by the aging network; and

(3) reaffirms its support for the Older Americans Act of 1965 and its primary goal of providing services to maintain the dignity and promote the independence of older individuals in the United States.

THE OLDER AMERICANS ACT OF 1965, AS AMENDED: A SUMMARY

OVERVIEW

Congress established the Older Americans Act of 1965 in response to the lack of community social services for older persons. Several subsequent amendments to the Act, the latest of which were enacted in October of 1984, expanded programs created in 1965, and created new programs, including methods for coordinating the numerous social and health care services that have been developed incrementally over the past 17 years.

The Federal dollars appropriated under the Older Americans Act have grown from $6.5 million in fiscal year 1966 to $1,027.6 million in fiscal year 1985. Today, the Act authorizes grants for social services, nutrition services, multipurpose senior center facilities, training, research and demonstration activities, public service employment projects, and health education and training programs.

LEGISLATIVE DEVELOPMENT

Prior to the enactment of the Older Americans Act of 1965, older persons were eligible for federally funded social services under general purpose legislation serving all persons meeting the specified eligibility criteria. With the recognition that limited resources could not help all those who were vulnerable, and that older people were being served disproportionately less than younger persons, many groups started advocating on behalf of the elderly. Their actions led President Truman in 1950 to initiate the first National Conference on Aging. Conferees called for all Government and voluntary agencies to accept greater responsibility for the problems and welfare of older people. Further interest in the field of aging led President Eisenhower in 1956 to create the Federal Council on Aging and take steps toward the development of the White House Conference on Aging.

The beginning of a major thrust toward legislation along the lines of the later-enacted Older Americans Act was made at the 1961 White House Conference on Aging. Conferees called for a Federal coordinating agency in the field of aging to be set up on a statutory basis, with adequate funds for coordinating Federal efforts in aging and a Federal program of grants for social services specifically for the elderly.[1]

In response to the White House Conference on Aging, Representative John Fogarty of Rhode Island and Senator Pay McNamara of Michigan introduced legislation in 1962 for the establishment of an independent U.S. Commission on Aging to "cut across the responsibilities of many departments and agencies, and a program of grants for social services, research and training."[2] Since the Administration basically objected to an independent agency on aging, separate and apart from any other agency, the legislation was not passed. Legislation introduced the following year would have modified the 1962 proposal by creating within the Department of Health, Education, and Welfare an agency equal in stature to the Department's other major agencies. Due to unrelated reasons, the 1963 proposal was not passed.

The Older Americans Act proposal introduced in 1965, however, basically paralleled the proposed Older Americans Act of 1963. Sponsors emphasized how it would provide resources necessary for public and private social service providers to meet the social service needs of the elderly. After virtually no debate, the Act was passed by Congress and signed into law on July 14, 1965 by President Johnson. The President hailed it as landmark legislation and expressed that the Older Americans Act "clearly affirms our Nation's high sense of responsibility toward the well-being of older citizens." He further confirmed that under the Act, ". . . every State and every community can move toward a coordinated program of both services and opportunities for older citizens."[3]

The Older Americans Act of 1965 provided services and programs for older persons through programs of grants for: (1) social services, (2) research and demonstration projects, and (3) personnel training in the field of aging. It also established the Administration on Aging in the Department of Health, Education, and Welfare to administer these grant programs and serve as a Federal focal point for matters concerning older people.

The Older Americans Act Amendments of 1967 and 1969 extended each of the 1965 provisions. Amendments in 1969 also mandated statewide planning for services, and added a program of grants for areawide model demonstration projects as well as the foster grandparent and retired senior volunteer programs.[4]

The 1972 amendments authorized a national nutrition program for the elderly for developing primarily congregate meal projects but also, when possible, home-delivered meal programs.

With the enactment of the 1973 amendments the program of grants for social services was revised to strengthen statewide planning as well as initiate local planning efforts through area agencies on aging. The 1973 amendments also created a National Information and Resource Clearinghouse, and a new Federal Council on Aging. In addition, the 1973 amendments authorized grants for multipurpose senior center facilities, and created a program of grants for community service employment for persons age 55 and older to be administered by the Department of Labor.

Amendments in 1974 basically extended the national nutrition program for the elderly while the 1975 amendments extended existing programs and established four priority social services. Amendments in 1977 required changes in the nutrition program primarily relating to surplus commodities.

---

[1] U.S. Department of Health, Education, and Welfare. The Nation and Its People. Report of the White House Conference on Aging. Jan. 9–12, 1961: 278–280.

[2] U.S. Congressional Record. House of Representatives, Jan. 29, 1962; 1371; U.S. Senate, May 17, 1962; 3324.

[3] Remarks by President Johnson upon signing the Older Americans Act, July 14, 1965.

[4] Statutory authority for volunteer programs was repealed in 1973 and reauthorized under the Domestic Service Volunteer Act of 1973. These programs currently are administered by ACTION.

The 1978 amendments again significantly revised the structure of the social services titles under the act with the intention of improving coordination and efficiency at the local level. They placed the grant programs for social services, multipurpose senior center facilities, and nutrition projects under the State and area agency on aging administrative structure, but retained a separate funding authorization for social services and the nutrition program. Grants for multipurpose senior center facilities were funded through the State's social services allotment.

The 1981 amendments clearly reaffirmed the status of the Older Americans Act as a categorical grant program. It expanded flexibility for both State and area agencies on aging in administering programs. Despite efforts to consolidate the funding of title III, separate funding was maintained for "Senior centers and supportive services," (Part B), "Congregate Nutrition Services" (Part C(1)) and "Home-Delivered Nutrition Services" (Part C(2)) respectively. Grants for multipurpose senior center facilities continue to be funded through the State's social services allotment under title III B.

The 1984 amendments clarified the roles of State and area agencies on aging in coordinating community-based services and in maintaining accountability for the funding of national priority services (legal, access and in-home services). They provided for greater flexibility in administering programs by providing for increased transfer authority between Parts B and C of Title III. Also, a new Title VII was added providing for an Older Americans Personal Health Education and Training Program for funding grants to institutions of higher education to develop standardized programs of health education and training for older persons to be operated in multipurpose senior center facilities.

The statutes establishing and amending the Older Americans Act are listed below:

The Older Americans Act of 1965—signed into law July 14, 1965 as Public Law 89-73.

The Older Americans Act of 1967—enacted July 1, 1967 as Public Law 90-42.

The Older Americans Act of 1969—enacted September 17, 1969 as Public Law 92-258.

The Older Americans Comprehensive Services Amendments of 1973—enacted May 3, 1973 as Public Law 93-29.

Amendments to the Nutrition Program for the Elderly Act—enacted July 12, 1974 as Public Law 93-351.

The Older Americans Act of 1975—enacted November 28, 1975 as Public Law 94-135.

The Older Americans Act of 1977—enacted July 11, 1977 as Public Law 95-65.

The Comprehensive Older Americans Act Amendments of 1978—enacted October 18, 1978 as Public Law 95-478.

The Older Americans Act Amendments of 1981—enacted December 29, 1981 as Public Law 97-115.

The Older Americans Act Amendments of 1984—enacted October 9, 1984 as Public Law 98-459.

The Older Americans Act contains seven titles:

Title I sets out ten policy goals aimed at improving the lives of older Americans across a number of areas including income, health, housing, employment, retirement, and community services.

Title II provides the legislative basis for the creation of the Administration on Aging within the Office of the Secretary of the Department of Health and Human Services and established the Federal Council on Aging.

Title III, the largest program under the Act, establishes authority for development of programs to assist older persons (especially those with the greatest social or economic needs) through grants to States, which in turn award funds to area agencies on aging for community planning, supportive, and senior center services, and nutrition services.

Title IV provides authority for development and support of training, research and demonstration programs in the field of aging.

Title V established authority for development of community service employment programs for unemployed low income persons 55 years and over.

Title VI established authority for grants to Indian tribal organizations for the development of social and nutritional services for elderly Indians.

Title VII provides authority for development of health education training programs for older individuals to be implemented through multipurpose senior center facilities.[5] ●

CLIFF GONZALEZ HONORED

HON. ROBERT GARCIA

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, April 29, 1985

● Mr. GARCIA. Mr. Speaker, today we acknowledge the extensive talents of Cliff Gonzalez, a young man whose ability, determination and willpower provides inspiration to his generation and ours.

Cliff is a senior student-athlete at St. Raymond High School in the Bronx. Cliff's physical talents are displayed most vividly on the baseball field, where his accomplishments earned him distinction as the New York Post's High School Athlete of the Week. However, Cliff's accomplishments are not limited to the ballfield. Cliff Gonzalez has close to a 90 average and also has a strong desire to attain a college education before fulfilling his dream of a professional baseball career. In these ways, Cliff Gonzalez has earned our respect and our admiration.

I would like to extend my best wishes to Cliff Gonzalez in his future endeavors. For as the following article accurately denotes, Cliff's enormous talents will not end with high school.

[From the New York Post, Apr. 10,1985]

POST HS ATHLETE OF WEEK

(By Steve Barenfeld)

Cliff Gonzalez can do it all—and last week he did.

Gonzalez, a senior centerfielder for St. Raymond HS in The Bronx, went 10-for-16 with two home runs, three doubles and seven RBIs to lead the Ravens to five victories.

For his outstanding performance, Gonzalez, is The Post's High School Athlete of the Week.

Gonzalez, 5-10, 155 pounds, started poorly last week, Batting third, he went 0-for-2 in a 3-2 win over Lehman on Tuesday. On Wednesday, the lefthanded-hitter, who throws righty, went 2-for-3 and drove in a run in St. Ray's 14-0 rout of St. Francis Prep. The next day he again was 2-for-3 with a double and an RBI in a 3-2 victory over George Washington.

But it was Saturday when Gonzalez really started banging the ball. He went 3-for-3 with a homer, two doubles and an RBI in the morning when St. Ray's beat McClancy. Later in the day, in the Monroe Tournament, he went 3-for-5 with another home run and stole his 100th career base in a 27-0 stroll past Norman Thomas.

He doesn't plan on letting up, either.

"I think I can keep up this pace," said Gonzalez, who will be 18 next Thursday. "This is my last year and I want to leave with a bang."

There's no reason why he can't. Gonzalez, who hit .454 last season, is a marvelous athlete who already was considered major league material. But he has gotten better.

"I know I've improved tremendously," Gonzalez said. "This past winter I worked on Nautilus and improved my strength. I'm also smarter and more selective at the plate."

"He's the best player I've ever had," said Raven coach Ron Patnosh, who is in his 18th year. "He does everything. He can run—he goes from home to first in 3.8. He hits for power and average. He has a major league arm."

"I think he has a good shot to get drafted."

So does Gonzalez, but that doesn't mean he"ll go right for a pro career.

"If the money's right—over $40,000—I would sign," he said.

"But if not, I'll go to college,"

Seton Hall, St. John's, Oklahoma State and Old Dominion have offered him full scholarships. But Gonzalez, who has close to a 90 average, would like to go to Yale.

"I'd like to be a business person," he said. "I know they have an average baseball program, but I don't think where you play in college makes that much of a difference. You really develop in summer leagues.

"I've always loved baseball, and my friends get mad at me because I'm always either playing or watching on TV, I'd love to play major league ball and I feel I have a very good shot."●

CAROLYNE DAVIS AND THE HEALTH CARE FINANCING ADMINISTRATION

HON. ROBERT H. MICHEL

OF ILLINOIS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, April 29, 1985

● Mr. MICHEL. Mr. Speaker, how many Americans know the name of the Administrator who manages 9.3 percent of the Federal budget and whose agency buys $90 billion worth of goods and services annually, more than any other agency except the Pentagon? Her name is Carolyne Davis, head of the Health Care Financing

[5] The Older Americans Act of 1965, as amended (42 United States Code 3001 et seq.).

Administration. I think more Americans should know what an excellent administrator she is in one of the toughest jobs in Washington.

At this point, I wish to include in the RECORD, "Carolyne Who?" from Barron's, March 11, 1985.

[From Barron's, Mar. 11, 1985]

CAROLYNE WHO?

CAROLYNE K. DAVIS TALKS SOFTLY, CONTROLS BIG PURSE

(By Thomas G. Donlan)

WASHINGTON.—If the status of government officials were measured solely by the power of the purse at their command, then Carolyne K. Davis would rate a personal table at Maison Blanche. Davis manages 9.3% of the federal budget, and her agency buys $90 billion worth of goods and services annually, more than any agency, save the Pentagon.

By another yardstick—activity—Carolyne Davis also ought to be making headlines. Her agency is in the throes of a nearly thorough overhaul, revamping a major American industry, health care financing, in the process. What's more, the agency's biggest program is limping toward bankruptcy.

Davis heads the Health Care Financing Administration, an arm of the Department of Health and Human Services. HCFA (derisively pronounced "Hic-fa" by some) manages Medicare, the government-financed program of medical insurance for the elderly, and Medicaid, which grants federal aid to state medical programs for the poor. Both have become household words, and their administration has acquired far-reaching ramifications.

Yet, Davis labors in relative obscurity, enjoying scant respect from physicians, who have been known to dismiss her as "the nurse from Syracuse," or politicians, who've labeled her the "handmaiden" of the federal Office of Management and Budget. Both remarks offer further proof, in part, that Washington still is largely a man's town.

A lot Carolyne Davis should care, however. While her husband has run a construction business near Seneca Falls, N.Y., Davis, now 53, has sailed through several careers. Originally a nurse, she earned a Ph.D. in higher-education administration, and went on to run nursing departments at Syracuse University and the University of Michigan, where she ultimately served as associate vice president for academic affairs before joining HCFA in February 1981.

Under her leadership, Medicare and Medicaid have undergone the most sweeping changes since their founding, in the Sixties, as part of Lyndon Johnson's Great Society. Most publicized has been the "prospective payment" program enacted by Congress in 1982, which replaced the well-established hospital cost reimbursement system with a flat payments parceled out according to "Diagnostic Related Groups" (DRGs).

HCFA also reworked the service review system, and now has the power to fine hospitals that waste money or provide poor treatment. And the agency recently approved the use of health maintenance organizations for Medicare recipients, a move which ought to chop 5% off current payout rates for patients who join HMOs.

In her unembellished office on the third floor of the Hubert H. Humphrey Building, which is appropriately located at the foot of Capitol Hill, Davis recently discussed these, and a host of other HCFA and health care issues. The only off-limits subject, she insisted, was her relationship with the Office of Management and Budget.

When Davis arrived at HCFA back in '81, Medicare's trustees foresaw bankruptcy for the Medicare trust fund by 1986. Now, that evil day's been forestalled, potentially until 1994. Davis largely credits the prospective payment program with improving the fund's financial outlook.

"We're buying time," she observes. "We're putting [hospitals] on a budgeted system," in which they know the dollars available to them. There's no more "open checkbook" from Uncle Sam, she adds.

Furthermore, in the federal budget proposal for fiscal 1986 (beginning next Oct. 1), currently under congressional consideration, the Reagan Administration has proposed freezing hospitals' payment levels without adjusting for inflation. (Last summer Congress imposed a 15-month freeze on physician reimbursements, which the Administration wants to extend another year.)

Some analysts, such as Peter Ferrara of the Heritage Foundation, a conservative, Washington-based think tank, believe the proposed freeze is an early sign of "the classic pattern of socialized medicine." First, he says, "the government offers to pay for everything. Then, it tries to regulate to hold down expenses. Then, quality deteriorates."

Davis, on the other hand, offers some economic justifications for a one-year payment level freeze. HCFA, she says, believes some hospitals are "upcoding," or placing patients in the most lucrative diagnostic related groups. The result may be "not sicker patients, but better coding, [and] it's inappropriate for us to pay for that."

Computers may bear the blame for some of this problem. There's been a profusion of computer software written to help hospitals cope with cost control, and some of these programs apparently do questionable upcoding automatically. HCFA's policing the situation, according to Davis, by "very vigorously buying up the same computer programs [as the hospitals], in order to stay ahead of them."

Another reason for freezing payment rates, she notes, is that hospital costs for goods and services have risen less rapidly than HCFA anticipated. "The horror stores that [hospitals] predicted have not arisen," she says. Rather, "they've learned to live within these systems, and are actually showing some profit."

Moreover, she adds, hospital admissions last year were below the agency's initial forecasts, in part because the government encourages the use of freestanding ambulatory surgical centers, rather than hospitals, for minor surgery. Patients treated in this fashion recuperate at home, rather than in hospitals.

Davis also is counting on the revitalized peer review organizations (PROs); government-appointed boards of doctors and nurses who review Medicare claims, to check the system's costs. Cataract surgery, for instance, repeatedly has been identified by the 54 peer review organizations as one of the leading "candidates" for transfer to outpatient surgery. And yet, Davis observes with dismay, "I can tell you that, in tracking such procedures last year, cataract surgery was our leading DRG in terms of volume of in-patient surgery."

She hopes PROs will be able to "educate" hospitals to HCFA's viewpoint. Ultimately, however, although it doesn't flaunt such power, the agency can refuse to pay for more expensive care when cheaper, equally effective alternatives are available.

Davis is even tougher on patients than she is on hospitals. She'd like to see everyone, not just Medicare patients, personally pay more of their own medical costs. The intended result: "If you begin to pay some first-dollar coverage for your care, you begin to think about how you can keep yourself healthier," she believes.

Another complaint: "If people think something costs nothing, they'll use it more." For example, she says, some people go to hospital emergency rooms for acute care because federal programs provide that service free of charge, whereas a visit to a doctor's office costs something. Yet, emergency room overhead expenses actually are two-to-three times greater than the cost of an office visit, and Davis thinks patient charges should reflect that difference.

Another way to make people choose more efficient health care is to herd them into HMOs, which do the choosing for them. Last fall HCFA established new rules for organizing Medicare patients into HMOs; the agency now pays HMOs 95% of existing Medicare costs per patient.

There are more battles, possibly harder ones, ahead for Carolyne Davis and HCFA. High on the agency's agenda is some form of prospective payment for physicians, a notion bitterly opposed by the American Medical Association. HCFA's supposed to make recommendations on this score to Congress next summer, but Davis previewed the agency's thinking in a recent speech.

To cut costs effectively, she told Catholic Church health-care coordinators, "you have to control the volume of physician services." Paying fees for services, however, works the opposite way, encouraging maximum service. Bundling, or making a payment cover a package of services or even an entire siege of illness, is one option being considered.

Another issue awaiting HCFA's recommendation to Congress is the reimbursement of hospitals' capital costs. Critics of the current system claim hospitals still enjoy too much freedom to build new facilities, and Davis clearly is on their side. The subject is fast becoming even more political than prospective payment, owing to the diversity of viewpoints and competing interests among hospitals themselves.

Carolyne Davis, however, no longer is a stranger to politics in the health care field, or on Capitol Hill. Considering what her agency accomplished when she was a new kid in town, it will be worth watching what she can do with four solid years behind her.●

THREE IDAHOANS COMMENDED

HON. RICHARD STALLINGS

OF IDAHO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, April 29, 1985

● Mr. STALLINGS. Mr. Speaker, I would like to take this opportunity to pay tribute to Tammy Rigby of Pocatello, ID, who represented Idaho in the national journalism contest for high school juniors and seniors sponsored by the President's Committee on Employment of the Handicapped.

Miss Rigby, 17, a senior at Highland High School in Pocatello, finished first in competition in Idaho. She was given a $150 cash award and a trip to Washington, DC. Miss Rigby finished fifth in national competition and earned $1,000.

I am proud of Miss Rigby and her concern that disabled people have the option to reach their potential.

I would also like to honor Kelly Boyle, a junior at Bonneville High School in Idaho Falls, ID, who was named the first-place winner in Idaho for his poster design in this competition. Mr. Boyle was given a $100 cash award and a trip to Washington, DC, to attend the annual meeting of the President's Committee on Employment of the Handicapped. His poster was commended and displayed by the President's committee.

Rick Juebler, 23, a sophomore at North Idaho College, was named first-place winner in the college poster design contest. He also received honorable mention on a national level.

I would like to commend each of these winners for their efforts in this worthwhile competition. I am inserting a copy of Miss Rigby's excellent speech in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD to share with my colleagues.

PROFILES OF INDEPENDENCE

Milton Carlsen was injured in an automobile accident and received such severe knee damage that for the last two decades he has walked with pain and a pronounced limp.

Ninety-one year-old Zina Hatch lost her eyesight a year ago following a traumatic accident in her home.

Jay Eskelsen, a prosperous businessman, was trimming trees in his yard, when he fell from a limb and was never to walk again.

Sharon Thomas, thirty-two, was born with a serious birth defect which resulted in the amputation of her right leg.

What do these four people have in common? Obviously, all are handicapped, but also all are independent, productive workers. For disabled people as well as for non-disabled people, meaningful employment results in a sense of independence and well-being. Roland C. Grazee, chairman and chief executive officer of the Royal Bank of Canada understood this when he said, "I think we can all agree that when disabled persons are prevented from making their full contribution to society by unnecessary physical and mental barriers, this constitutes a tragic waste of human potential and productivity."

Carlsen, a high school social studies teacher, stepped over his physical barrier to become the head golf coach and, more recently, the assistant girls basketball coach at his school. He also serves his school as chairman of the social studies department and is a leader in the local Education Association. This teacher has maximized his abilities and minimized his disabilities.

"I feel useful in the world when I work. It makes me feel good," said Zina Hatch about working. Mrs. Hatch cares for her one and one-half year-old great-grandson and she is thankful for this opportunity. Although her eyesight is dim, her mind is keen. She has an incredible ability to remember poems, songs and stories learned long ago and uses that ability to teach the little boy. Not only is she a great teacher, but she continues to cook for her family and makes crocheted gifts for them. She cannot see the work, but her fingers remember the patterns. Mrs. Hatch uses her human potential to continue being a useful, functioning individual.

Jay Eskelsen spent several miserable years confined to this home following his accident. Today, although he is still in a wheelchair, he is a manager at Deseret Industries, a business which employs other handicapped people. His employment allows him to support his family and to maintain his independence.

"I get paraded by the executives at A.M.I. because my handicap is so visible and because I'm not afraid of exposure. It annoys me a little—all the picture taking—but I don't really care if it will help other disabled people," said Sharon Thomas, who is an inspector for American Microsystems, Inc. Sharon has not always been this outgoing. In high school she was so shy that she tried to disappear. "It's hard to be invisible on crutches," she said. Idaho State University's Special Services helped Sharon to overcome her fear and to start her on the road to independence. "The people at Special Services insisted that I learn to drive. They also got me my first job as a secretary," said Sharon. She took advantage of the Center of Resources for Independent People (C.R.I.P.) and Cooperative Wilderness Handicapped Outdoor Group. C.W. Hog involvement led her to unlikely activities such as dogsledding, backpacking, horseback riding and her favorite, skiing.

Although she is enthusiastic about life and says she "likes what she has become," all has not been easy for Sharon. She said that she obtained her job at A.M.I by pointing out tax breaks and other benefits the company would receive if they hired her. "They hired me to get the benefits, but they keep me because I can do the work," she said.

Sharon did not receive any special concessions because of her handicap. The nature of the product at A.M.I. requires that all food be kept in the basement to prevent product contamination. To eat lunch Sharon must go down two flights of stairs. "I have fallen down those stairs several times," she said. Her job requires that she sit on a high chair with casters. Before she learned to balance herself, Sharon said she kept falling off the chair. "The company officials asked what they could do to keep me on the chair. I suggested a seatbelt, but I didn't need it," said Sharon.

Three years ago, Sharon married a college friend. At that time she was paying for her own home and buying her own car. Because of her independence, Sharon said that she felt an equal partner in her marriage.

What does Sharon have in common with Mrs. Hatch, Carlsen and Eskelsen? Through participation in the world of work these four people have liberated their human potential and become independent, functioning and contributing members of their community.●

ELIE WEISEL INTERPRETS WORLD WAR II ERA

HON. HENRY A. WAXMAN

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, April 29, 1985

● Mr. WAXMAN. Mr. Speaker, this month people of good will all around the world are celebrating the anniversary of the victory of America and our allies over Nazi barbarism.

No one so eloquently captured the eternal moral significance of that triumph as well as the poet and writer, Elie Weisel.

Mr. Weisel, a survivor of the infamous Buchenwald concentration camp, made the following remarks in an impassioned appeal to President Reagan that the President cancel his scheduled visit to the German military cemetery at Bitburg. Ironically, Mr. Weisel made his remarks at a White House ceremony at which the President had awarded him the Congressional Gold Medal of Achievement.

I wish to share with every Member of Congress and the American people Mr. Weisel's true assessment of World War II and the ultimate debt each of us owes to the more than 300,000 American soldiers who laid down their lives—not merely for their own Nation, but that civilization might not be overcome by the utter depravity of the Nazis.

Mr. Weisel's remarks follow:

ELIE WEISEL INTERPRETS WORLD WAR II ERA

Mr. President, speaking of the conciliation, I was very pleased that we met before, so a stage of the conciliation has been set in motion between us. But then, we were never on two sides. We were on the same side. We were always on the side of justice, always on the side of memory, against the SS and against what they represent.

It was good talking to you, and I am grateful to you for the medal. But this medal is not mine alone. It belongs to all those who remember what SS killers have done to their victims.

It was given to me by the American people for my writings, teaching and for my testimony. When I write, I feel my invisible teachers standing over my shoulders, reading my words and judging their veracity. And while I feel responsible for the living, I feel equally responsible to the dead. Their memory dwells in my memory.

Forty years ago, a young man awoke and he found himself an orphan in an orphaned world. What have I learned in the last 40 years? Small things. I learned the perils of language and those of silence. I learned that in extreme situations when human lives and dignity are at stake, neutrality is a sin. It helps the killers, not the victims. I learned the meaning of solitude, Mr. President. We were alone, desperately alone.

IMPOSSIBLE TO COUNT ALL THE NAMES

Today is April 19, and April 19, 1943, the Warsaw Ghetto rose in arms against the onslaught of the Nazis. They were so few and so young and so helpless. And nobody came to their help. And they had to fight what was then the mightiest legion in Europe. Every underground received help except the Jewish underground. And yet they managed to fight and resist and push back those Nazis and their accomplices for six weeks. And yet the leaders of the free world, Mr. President, knew everything and did so little, or nothing, or at least nothing specifically to save Jewish children from death. You spoke of Jewish children, Mr. President. One million Jewish children perished. If I spent my entire life reciting their names, I would die before finishing the task.

Mr. President, I have seen children, I have seen them being thrown in the flames alive. Words, they die on my lips. So I have learned, I have learned, I have learned the fragility of the human condition.

And I am reminded of a great moral essayist. The gentle and forceful Abe Rosenthal, having visited Auschwitz, once wrote an extraordinary reportage about the persecution of Jews, and he called it, "Forgive them not, Father, for they knew what they did."

OPPOSITE OF LOVE IS INDIFFERENCE

I have learned that the Holocaust was a unique and uniquely Jewish event, albeit with universal implications. Not all victims were Jews. But all Jews were victims. I have learned the danger of indifference, the crime of indifference. For the opposite of love, I have learned, is not hate, but indifference. Jews were killed by the enemy but betrayed by their so-called allies, who found political reasons to justify their indifference or passivity.

But I have also learned that suffering confers no privileges. It all depends what one does with it. And this is why survivors, of whom you spoke, Mr. President, have tried to teach their contemporaries how to build on ruins, how to invent hope in a world that offers none, how to proclaim faith to a generation that has seen it shamed and mutilated. And I believe, we believe, that memory is the answer, perhaps the only answer.

TRIED TO CARRY THEM IN TRIUMPH

A few days ago, on the anniversary of the liberation of Buchenwald, all of us, Americans, watched with dismay and anger as the Soviet Union and East Germany distorted both past and present history.

Mr. President, I was there. I was there when American liberators arrived. And they gave us back our lives. And what I felt for them then nourishes me to the end of my days and will do so. If you only knew what we tried to do with them then. We who were so weak that we couldn't carry our own lives, we tried to carry them in triumph.

Mr. President, we are grateful to the American Army for liberating us. We are grateful to this country, the greatest democracy in the world, the freest nation in the world, the moral nation, the authority in the world. And we are grateful, especially, to this country for having offered haven and refuge, and grateful to its leadership for being so friendly to Israel.

And, Mr. President, do you know that the Ambassador of Israel, who sits next to you, who is my friend, and has been for so many years, is himself a survivor? And if you knew all the causes we fought together for the last 30 years, you should be prouder of him. And we are proud of him.

And we are grateful, of course, to Israel. We are eternally grateful to Israel for existing. We needed Israel in 1948 as we need it now. And we are grateful to Congress for its continuous philosophy of humanism and compassion for the underprivileged.

And as for yourself, Mr. President, we are so grateful to you for being a friend of the Jewish people, for trying to help the oppressed Jews in the Soviet Union. And to do whatever we can to save Shcharansky and Abe Stolar and Iosif Begun and Sakharov and all the dissidents who need freedom. And of course, we thank you for your support of the Jewish state of Israel.

But, Mr. President, I wouldn't be the person I am, and you wouldn't respect me for what I am, if I were not to tell you also of the sadness that is in my heart for what happened during the last week. And I am sure that you, too, are sad for the same reasons.

SPEAK TRUTH TO POWER

What can I do? I belong to a traumatized generation. And to us, as to you, symbols are important. And furthermore, following our ancient tradition, and we are speaking about Jewish heritage, our tradition commands us "to speak truth to power."

So may I speak to you, Mr. President, with respect and admiration, of the events that happened?

We have met four or five times. And each time I came away enriched, for I know of your commitment to humanity.

And therefore I am convinced, as you have told us earlier when we spoke, that you were not aware of the presence of SS graves in the Bitburg cemetery. Of course you didn't know. But now we all are aware.

May I, Mr. President, if it's possible at all, implore you to do something else, to find a way, to do something else, to find a way, to find another way, another site? That place, Mr. President, is not your place. Your place is with the victims of the SS.

Oh, we know there are political and strategic reasons, but this issue, as all issues related to that awesome event, transcends politics and diplomacy.

The issue here is not politics, but good and evil. And we must never confuse them.

For I have seen the SS at work. And I have seen their victims. They were my friends. They were my parents.

Mr. President, there was a degree of suffering and loneliness in the concentration camps that defies imagination. Cut off from the world with no refuge anywhere, sons watched helplessly their fathers being beaten to death. Mothers watched their children die of hunger. And then there was Mengele and his selections. Terror, fear, isolation, torture, gas chambers, flames, flames rising to the heavens.

ONLY THE KILLERS ARE GUILTY

But, Mr. President, I know and I understand, we all do, that you seek reconciliation. and so do I, so do we. And I too wish to attain true reconciliation with the German people. I do not believe in collective guilt, nor in collective responsibility. Only the killers were guilty. Their sons and daughters are not.

And I believe, Mr. President, that we can and we must work together with them and with all people. And we must work to bring peace and understanding to a tormented world that, as you know, is still awaiting redemption.

I thank you, Mr. President.●

TRADE FAIRNESS WITH JAPAN

HON. MARCY KAPTUR

OF OHIO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, April 29, 1985

● Ms. KAPTUR. Mr. Speaker, on March 30 of this year the Reagan administration allowed the voluntary auto import restraint agreement with Japan to expire. I have consistently voiced my opposition to that decision and would like to take this opportunity to insert an article I wrote for the Kansas City Star on April 7, 1985, entitled "Fighting for Trade Fairness With Japan, Not Protection."

FIGHTING FOR TRADE FAIRNESS WITH JAPAN, NOT PROTECTION

(By Marcy Kaptur)

During the 1950s in America's heartland, the big debate among kids being hauled to school in yellow buses was whether your family drove a Ford or a Chevy. Folk culture. Midwestern boys are born with innate mechanical abilities; girls get temporary drivers' licenses at 16.

In Toledo, where I was born, the old Kaiser Jeep Corporation manufactured the Jeep that helped win World War II. Jeep was synonymous with America. In 1985, Jeep—now renamed American Motors—is a 49 percent French-owned firm in partnership with Renault.

When I travel from Toledo to Washington, I pass through Toledo Express Airport where a Chevy is on display. On its nameplate are the words "Made in Japan." When I arrive in Washington and stroll through the D.C. airport parking lot reserved for members of Congress, or the parking lot where I live in the nation's capital, I read the nameplates of Toyota, Nissan, Honda, Peugeot, Volvo, Volkswagen. These nameplates have begun to transform America's industrial heartland.

Though Chysler, Ford and General Motors have component plants in my district, they are downsized to meet the obvious "new market realities." For example, the Saturn project GM plans to build in America is a modest scale plant of about 200,000 compacts per year, costing $450 million. This, however, is a minimal amount as compared with GM's 1984 profits of $4.5 billion.

In fact, GM, Ford, and Chrysler intend to invest capital abroad again this year to meet the competition. The big three auto firms have adopted an invest international posture, as well as the "Korean connection strategy" to import low-priced sub-compacts from Korea rather than tool up their own production in the U.S. As a result the America of the 1980's is drastically changing.

Voluntary restraints, imposed in 1981, were meant to limit the number of Japanese imported cars allowed in the U.S. to give the U.S. auto industry the needed time to bounce back. In 1984, Japanese auto imports were restricted to 1.85 million cars (it actually totalled 2.2 million), a $19 billion share of the U.S. market.

In 1984, therefore, about 20 percent of the 8 million cars sold in the U.S. were of Japanese origin. The VRA, although an imperfect mechanism because it was not specifically linked to U.S. investment and wage agreements, was imposed.

The Reagan administration has determined that higher after-tax profits of $10 billion earned by U.S. auto companies in 1984 are reason enough to lift the voluntary restraints. Will lifting the VRA contribute to the long-term health of the U.S. auto industry, or to America? I think not. The lifting of the restraints, absent any alternative, will serve only to exacerbate the decline of the U.S. auto industry.

The removal of the VRA will serve only to further open U.S. markets to world competition at a time when the fragile U.S. auto industry is still in a struggle to remain on American soil. The industry has made steady progress regaining competitiveness, but has a long way to go.

First, U.S. production volume is down. In 1978, 9.1 million U.S.-made cars were sold in America; in 1984, 7.9 million U.S.-made cars were sold in America. For some time, the U.S. production trend has been down and that means an erosion of the U.S. auto-producing base.

Second, recent higher U.S. corporate profits in autos were the result of the mix of sales as the market moved in the short term to larger models since gas prices have temporarily moved down. Accordingly, profits are less the result of increased sales volume than of changes in product mix.

Third, the U.S. auto industry is making strides to become more competitive. Productivity is up 35 percent. The number of things wrong per 100 vehicles has decreased by 55 percent. And, since 1980, nearly $60 billion has been invested in capital improvement and research and development. This despite the fact that the recession of 1982 cost the industry $20 billion in cash flow. Finally, over the last four years, U.S. car price increases have consistently trailed inflation.

Lifting of the VRA will force U.S. corporate investment abroad, and cost us jobs in America. Since 1974, $110 billion was invested by all U.S. companies abroad, including auto companies; by 1984, that amount doubled to a level of $221 billion. International companies do not need America anymore. In truth, they only need to sell in America.

Because of market uncertainty, U.S. manufacturers have had to put recent profits into the "cash-in-hand category" or to acquire new-cash holdings, rather than make the type of massive investment in America that would spell fundamental change in the industry.

The U.S. trade negotiators should not give up on autos and the VRA as a powerful lever to get trade fairness with Japan. The fact is that the U.S. trade deficit in 1984 with Japan is over $36 billion, of which $19 billion is autos. Outside GATT, Japan has erected trade barriers (over 2,500 of them) to U.S. products and services.

Though the voluntary quota idea may not have been the wisest course to pursue to achieve auto trade equity with Japan, it was the only lever this country had. It resulted in predictable import penetration levels, as well as spurred over $2 billion of Japanese investment in America (a strong indication of the willingness of Japan to take steps to keep their part of the American market). Any change in the current auto agreement should be predicated on opening Japanese markets to American products and services where barriers have been erected over two decades.

Fighting for trade fairness is not protection. It is common sense. Because the Japanese auto industry has an excess capacity of more than 2 million units, there will be tremendous competitive pressures within Japan not to exercise self-restraint in its exports to America. The U.S. sub-compact market—3.5 million cars last year—is the largest in the world. Why give it away? Let's get something for that valuable commodity.●

THE IMMIGRATION REFORM ACT

HON. EDWARD R. ROYBAL

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, April 29, 1985

● Mr. ROYBAL. Mr. Speaker, this week I reintroduced the Immigration Reform Act that I sponsored in the last Congress as H.R. 4909. It is now H.R. 2180. Like its predecessor, it addresses the major issues requiring reform. Like its predecessor, which enjoyed the support of a great many Hispanic, civil rights, and immigration reform advocacy groups, it deserves full consideration by Congress.

This bill contains proposals developed over months of consultations. Its drafters were familiar with the problems presented by the present situation, but also were aware of the potential that even greater problems would flow from some so-called solutions then under consideration. Unlike other proposals, it does not compromise the best interests of Hispanics, the civil liberties of all Americans, or our Nation's democratic ideals that mandata that we treat immigrants and all those within our borders with fairness and humanity.

I think it is important to note the major premises on which this legislation rests. First, is that immigration is in the best interests of this country—a major finding of the Select Commission on Immigration and Refugee Policy. Alarmists have tried to make the case that immigrants, both those here legally and those here illegally, are a drain on the economy and seriously displace American workers. From this shakey premise, they would justify draconian restrictions on legal immigration that would prevent residents of the United States from being reunited with their families legally, in some cases, for decades. As the law now stands, a woman lawfully admitted as a permanent resident from Mexico 8 years ago would only now be able to anticipate her husband's joining her in the immediate future, and a permanent resident from England has to wait about a year before being reunited with a spouse.

As for the economic impact of immigrants, various studies, including several recent surveys specific to my State of California—one by the Urban Institute and one by the Southern California Association of Governments—have concluded that there is little evidence of job displacement by immigrants, but substantial evidence that the economic effects are overwhelmingly positive.

A second major premise of my bill is that the number of individuals immigrating to this country does not amount to a crisis situation, nor is it unprecedented. All the rhetoric about the phantom hordes is just that—rhetoric. In fact, a demographic analysis of the decade of the 1970's revealed that the flow of non-U.S. citizen emigrants—(former U.S. immigrants leaving the United States who did not become naturalized citizens)—was roughly equivalent to the flow of undocumented immigrants counted in the 1980 census—1.2 million emigrants compared to 1.5 million undocumented immigrants. Moreover, more than 100,000 U.S. citizens are counted as immigrants to other countries each year.

I do not mean to minimize the extent of the problem of illegal immigration or to say that we ought not to be concerned that immigration restrictions are not being strictly adhered to. I strongly support efforts to tighten up enforcement of existing laws and increase the efficiency of the Immigration and Naturalization Service.

Yet, I must oppose legislative overreactions that would adversely impact law-abiding Americans without actually improving the situation. Employer sanctions is such a proposal. It calls for a dramatic change in our immigration laws, yes, but drama is not what is needed. What is needed is not change for its own sake, but realistic approaches that will have a good chance of being effective. Employer sanctions are simply not such an approach. You are all familiar with the GAO report on the failure of similar laws in other countries. More recently, a law review article put out by Stanford Law School this year agrees that sanctions will not work.

An additional factor that cannot be ignored is the united Hispanic opposition to such proposals. That fact was brought home to me very clearly by the response to my earlier immigration bill, H.R. 30. By including a modified form of sanctions in that bill, I hoped to test public opinion to see whether it might be acceptable to the Hispanic community, so long as it included a serious attempt to deal with their legitimate concerns about resultant employment discrimination and employee identification and screening procedures. It is now apparent to me that the answer to that inquiry is a resounding "no." An attempt to deal with those problems is clearly not enough. Unless and until a form of employer sanctions can be devised that guarantees effective protections against and remedies for employment discrimination—if such are possible—the Hispanic community stands united against them.

The extent of illegal immigration that I previously referred to also has implications for the legalization proposal contained in my bill. I do not believe in the accuracy of estimates that up to 12 million applicants would come forward to be legalized. Not only have estimates of the total number of undocumented immigrants been grossly inflated, in my view, but also estimates of the number who will apply and the number who will meet the criteria for eligibility have been exaggerated. One aim of H.R. 2180 is to protect those who do come forward and should be considered eligible for adjustment to legal status from arbitrary denials and from undue risks and hardships while their applications are pending. Certainly they should be allowed to work to support their families.

A comprehensive legalization program would also allow more Immigration Service resources to be allocated directly to preventing future unlawful immigration, and provide useful intelligence based on those who apply that can be used to develop more effective law enforcement strategies. My bill would also authorize increased enforcement resources, especially at the border. It also calls for internal reforms that have long been needed to improve INS, including better training of personnel and more attention to its service activities.

A third premise of the new bill is that this country does not need a new temporary foreign worker program, particularly within the agricultural industry. The history of protective labor laws within that industry—most recently the notorious rejection by this administration of the need for field sanitation standards—is rife with examples showing how difficult it is to put such laws in place. More important, the history of the Bracero Program shows also that it is virtually impossible to ensure widespread compliance with those laws that are enacted.

I am including a summary of the bill at the conclusion of my remarks. I urge all Members to review this legislation, which I consider a responsible proposal for immigration reform.

SUMMARY OF H.R. 2180—IMMIGRATION REFORM ACT OF 1985

[Introduced by Mr. Roybal on Apr. 23, 1985]

TITLE I—CONTROL OF ILLEGAL IMMIGRATION

PART A—PREVENTING DISPLACEMENT OF DOMESTIC WORKERS BY UNAUTHORIZED ALIENS

SEC. 101. Supplemental authorization of appropriations for enforcement of labor laws.

Provides for a supplemental authorization to the Department of Labor for increased enforcement of certain labor laws, as they relate to violations involving undocumented workers under the Fair Labor Standards Act, and the Occupational Safety and Health Act, with a particular emphasis on areas with a concentration of such unlawful activities; and to the National Labor Relations Board for increased enforcement of labor-management laws:

$25 million for fiscal year 1986.

$30 million for fiscal year 1987.

Directs the Secretary to develop a plan within two months for supplemental personnel and resources for fiscal year 1986 and to develop a revised plan for fiscal 1987.

SEC. 102. Enhanced enforcement of labor laws.

Establishes a civil penalty not to exceed $10,000 for willful violations of existing recordkeeping requirements of the Fair Labor Standards Act, or knowing violations of such requirements after receipt of a notice of a violation. This provision shall apply to violations occurring after the date of enactment.

Adopts an administrative mechanism for determination of a penalty, taking into consideration the size of the business and the gravity of the violation.

PART B—IMPROVEMENT OF ENFORCEMENT AND SERVICES

SEC. 111. Supplemental authorization of appropriations for enforcement and service activities of the Immigration and Naturalization Service.

States that two essential elements of the program of immigration reform and control established by the Act are (1) an increase in the border patrol and other INS enforcement activities, and (2) an increase in the service activities of the INS.

Provides for a supplemental authorization for enhanced INS services and enforcement activities; and for start-up costs associated with the legalization program: $80 million for fiscal year 1985.

Provides overall authorization levels for INS activities, including sufficient funds for the expansion of the enhanced service and enforcement program begun in fiscal year 1985:

$710 million for fiscal year 1986, and

$725 million for fiscal year 1987.

Provides that a significant portion of any additional appropriations will be available to improve INS delivery of services, including timely processing of petitions and applications.

Provides that any increase for enforcement activities should be used predominantly for border area patrol staff.

Directs the Attorney General to develop a plan within two months for supplemental personnel and resources for fiscal year 1985; and to develop revised plans for fiscal year 1986 and fiscal year 1987 for enhanced enforcement and services.

Sec. 112. Unlawful transportation of aliens to the United States.

Establishes criminal penalties for knowing smuggling of aliens to the U.S. for commercial advantage or private profit.

Sec. 113. Report on establishment of anti-smuggling program.

The Attorney General, jointly with the Secretary of State, shall initiate discussions with Mexico and Canada to establish formal bilateral anti-smuggling programs, and report to Congress within one year on the progress made in establishing such programs.

Sec. 114. Treatment of immigration emergencies.

Directs the Attorney General to provide for a contingency plan on the allocation and management on INS resources in the event of an immigration emergency and on providing assistance to affected States and localities.

Authorizes the Attorney General to request necessary urgent appropriations provided that the President has determined that an immigration emergency exists and has certified that fact to the Congress.

Sec. 115. Program of in-service training.

Directs the Attorney General to provide for in-service training programs to familiarize INS personnel in contract with the public with the rights and varied cultural backgrounds of aliens and citizens in order to safeguard the constitutional and civil rights, personal safety, and human dignity of all individuals with whom they have contact in their work.

Sec. 116. Enhancement of community outreach within the Immigration and Naturalization Service.

Provides for enhanced responsibilities for the INS community outreach program at the district level to provide outreach to the district population, to: improve services, including naturalization, address community problems, and investigate complaints of INS abuse of authority. Allow INS to secure the assistance and services of community and voluntary organizations in furthering the improvement of services, particularly those related to naturalization.

Sec. 117. Liability of owners and operators of international bridges and toll roads to prevent the unauthorized landing of aliens.

Limits the liability of owners and operators of international bridges, under current law, for failing to prevent the unauthorized landing of aliens, by exempting persons who act diligently and reasonably to comply with the law.

PART C—ADJUDICATION AND ENFORCEMENT POWERS AND PROCEDURES

Sec. 121. United States Immigration Board and establishment of administrative law judge system.

Creates an independent agency within the Department of Justice, a 7-member United States Immigration Board (USIB) to hear and determine appeals from nearly all final decisions of administrative law judges, as well as review of certain exercises of discretionary authority, imposition of administrative fines and penalties, and determinations respecting bond, parole and detention.

Authorizes the Chair of the Board to appoint administrative law judges to hear cases of exclusion, deportation and suspension of deportation, adjustment of status (including legalization under Title III of this Act), rescission of adjustment of status, asylum, and such other immigration cases as the Attorney General may designate.

Sec. 122. Arrest, search, and detention authority of Service officers and employees.

Revises the Immigration and Nationality Act (INA) to clarify the authority of INS personnel to conduct detentions, arrests, searches and interrogations, to set the standards for the proper exercise of that authority, and to provide various procedural safeguards for persons detained and arrested and subjected to deportation proceedings.

Major provisions require speedy bail determinations, advisement of rights in English and in the person's native language, open hearings, and a prompt administrative or judicial determination after an arrest of the sufficiency of the evidence to initiate deportation proceedings.

Sec. 123. Effective dates and transition.

Provides the general rule that changes made by Part C of Title I take effect upon enactment, and exceptions for proceedings initiated before implementation of the administrative law judge system. Requires the President to nominate the members of the United States Immigration Board within 45 days of enactment.

Sec. 124. Technical and conforming amendments.

Changes the INA to reflect the change in title of special inquiry officers to administrative law judges.

TITLE II—REFORM OF LEGAL IMMIGRATION AND NATURALIZATION

PART A—IMMIGRANTS

Sec. 201. Providing additional immigrant visa numbers of natives of contiguous countries.

Provides 40,000 visas each for Mexico and Canada with the unused portion available to the other country.

Sec. 202. Change in colonial quota.

Increases the colonial quota from 600 to 3,000.

Sec. 203. Report on admissions and numerical limitations.

Requires a comprehensive Presidential report to Congress every three years on the impact on the U.S. of immigration.

Sec. 204. Miscellaneous changes.

Permits natural fathers to petition for entry of their children, without the need for legitimation or adoption.

Extends to certain self-supporting retirees the waiver of numerical limitations provided to non-preference investors.

Permits university researchers to be treated as faculty for purposes of the certification process.

Revises the requirement of continuous physical presence in the U.S. during a 7-year period for suspension of deportation to permit certain brief, casual, and innocent absences.

PART B—NONIMMIGRANT TOURISTS

Sec. 211. Visa waiver for certain visitors.

Authorizes the establishment of a 3-year pilot program for the admission of foreign tourists without the need to obtain a visitor's visa, with up to 8 countries.

PART C—NATURALIZATION

Sec. 221. Providing option of administrative naturalization.

Confers jurisdiction on the Attorney General to naturalize persons as citizens and permits an alternative administrative naturalization procedure in addition to the current judicial one.

Sec. 222. Waiver of English language requirement for individuals over 50 years of age.

Eliminates the English language requirement for naturalization applicants over 50 years of age.

Sec. 223. Eliminating six months residence requirement in a State for naturalization.

Eliminates the requirement that the petitioner have resided within the State where the petition was filed for at least six months preceding naturalization.

TITLE III—LEGALIZATION

Sec. 301. Legalization.

Provides that the Attorney General shall adjust to permanent resident status aliens who:

1. Establish that they entered the U.S. before January 1, 1982, and have resided continuously in the U.S. since that date;

2. Apply for adjustment during the 18-months application period to be established within 6 months of enactment;

3. Are not otherwise excludable, i.e., are admissible as immigrants, with limited exceptions, subject to the following provisos:

—Certain grounds for exclusion may be waived for specified reasons in the public interest

—An alien may not be excluded as likely to become a public charge if the applicant can demonstrate a good employment history without reliance on public cash assistance;

4. Have not been convicted of any felony in the U.S. (other than certain immigration law violations) and have not assisted in the persecution of any person on account of race, religion, nationality or political opinion; and

5. Register for the draft if required to do so.

Directs the Attorney General to established eligibility requirements by regulation and to publish guidelines for the approval of applications that:

1. Liberally construe the requirements for eligibility;

2. Provide for flexibility in determining continuous residence, allowing for brief and casual trips abroad;

3. Permit absences of 45 days or less annually without loss of continuous residence; and

4. Accept the use of affidavits of witnesses to establish continuous residence.

Allows the Attorney General to waive the requirement of continuous residence in cases of undue hardship to the alien, or his or her family.

Makes applicant subject to criminal penalties for knowingly and willfully making false statements.

Provides for transitional legal status protecting applicants from deportation and permitting them to work legally and travel abroad and provides aliens apprehended before the end of the application period the opportunity to apply for adjustment.

Provides for administrative and judicial review of denials of applications for adjustment.

Protects the confidentiality of individually indentifiable information contained in any application.

Restricts eligibility for federal benefits, with the exception of certain essential benefits, for a 5-year period beginning on the starting date that continuous residence was established.

Sec. 302. Cuban-Haitian adjustment.

Provides for a separate program of adjustment to permanent resident status for a specified class of Cuban-Haitian entrants who arrived in the U.S. before January 1, 1982.

Sec. 303. State and local assistance.

Provides for 100% reimbursement to state and local governments for the costs of providing public assistance to legalized aliens and for costs of providing public health services to legalized aliens and applicants for up to 4 years.

Provides for assistance to states for providing educational services to legalized aliens for the same period.

Sec. 304. Cooperation with State and local governments.

States that the Attorney General, Secretary of Labor, and Secretary of Health and Human Services will consider recommendations of advisory groups established by state and local governments.

TITLE IV—NATIONAL COMMISSION ON IMMIGRATION

Sec. 401. National Commission on Immigration.

Establishes a 3-year commission to study and seek solutions to certain immigration problems, reporting to Congress on:

1. Push and pull factors affecting unauthorized immigration (and specifically considering the affect of the development, in partnership with Latin American countries, of reciprocal trade and economic development programs of mutual benefit);

2. Incentives for employers to use unauthorized aliens;

3. Reliance of the agricultural industry on temporary employment of unauthorized aliens; and

4. Backlogs in approved immigrant visa petitions.●

FIDELITY TO SIGN FIRST REVERSE ANNUITY MORTGAGE IN NEW YORK STATE

HON. NORMAN F. LENT

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, April 29, 1985

● Mr. LENT. Mr. Speaker, recently, the Fidelity New York Savings & Banking Center of Garden City introduced the first reverse annuity mortgage [RAM] in New York State. This creative approach to financing will enable many of our senior citizens to retain their homes and, at the same time, provide them with needed financial assistance to meet the rising costs of everyday living. This is an excellent example of how our Nation's financial institutions can work to meet the needs of private citizens. I comment Mr. Thomas Dixon Lovely, Fidelity New York's chairman and CEO, for his leadership in promoting this innovation in banking, and I hope other banks throughout the country will follow in similar efforts.

At this time, I'd like to share a press release from Fidelity New York which provides further details on reverse annuity mortgages.

FIDELITY TO SIGN FIRST REVERSE ANNUITY MORTGAGE IN NEW YORK STATE

Fidelity New York, a $1.5 billion Savings and Banking Center introduced the first reverse annuity mortgage "RAM" to be signed in the State of New York today. The reverse annuity mortgage provides a monthly income to eligible homeowners over 60 years old. Nassau County Executive, Francis T. Purcell, has helped to spearhead enabling legislation, valid for all New York senior citizens.

Today, Fidelity will issue the first mortgage to a Long Island senior couple. Thomas Dixon Lovely, Fidelity New York's Chairman & CEO stated that he hoped all banks will begin to provide a true community service to retired citizens who try to live on a fixed income while expenses rise. He explained that many homeowners living on Social Security, plus limited private income or pension, find that combined real estate taxes, energy costs, maintenance and food costs have risen so dramatically as to seriously impact their standard of living. Mr. Lovely noted that "they may live in a home originally costing $15,000 or so, which may now be worth $165,000. The RAM mortgage enables them to receive payments from the bank each month of several hundred dollars; reversing the old procedure of making monthly payments to the bank when they first purchased the home."

Rising costs for older people can seriously drain income and savings damaging their living standards. Through the simple plan of reverse mortgages we can now offer a regular monthly income to qualified senior citizens. Individuals are eligible if income does not exceed $28,230 or $32,400 for a couple. Assets, excluding the house, should not exceed $50,000. Fidelity is happy to receive applications and works in conjunction with Family Services Association of Nassau County.

Mr. Lovely went on the state "that RAM mortgages are good for all concerned; the bank makes a modest profit, the senior citizen can remain in his home and have a more dignified standard of living and the community benefits by not losing its long term residents. Hopefully, more banks will begin to make RAM loans available." Mr. Lovely paid tribute to the efforts of Nassau County Executive Purcell, the Department of Senior Citizen Affairs and the Family Services Association of Nassau County.

Mr. Lovely feels "We have a debt to our older residents who built our communities. Our monthly annuity income plan is one way the bank should reinvest in the community." Fidelity New York is the oldest federally chartered savings institution on Long Island with 20 branches in Nassau, Suffolk and Manhattan.●

OUR NATIONAL DEBT

HON. JOSEPH M. McDADE

OF PENNSYLVANIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, April 29, 1985

● Mr. McDADE. Mr. Speaker, one of my constituents has written a letter to the Speaker regarding the national debt. He is very concerned about this problem and proposes a solution in his letter.

I am happy to request that it be printed in the RECORD for the benefit of my colleagues.

The letter follows:

JOHN K. NAGY,
Lake Ariel, PA, April 26, 1985.

TO THE SPEAKER OF THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES: Since I started to write my book in March, 1984, I was concerned and started to watch the newspapers who the big lottery winners were and the amount they won. These figures are from our local newspapers. Only since July, 1984 to January 10, 1985. These figures are those who won over a million dollars in the states of Massachusetts, New York, New Jersey, Pennsylvania, Ohio, and Illinois, the total in six months comes to $1,108,630.54 that shows that millions of people are buying lottery tickets.

Why the Federal Government that is paying interest on the National Debt of over $153.8 billion dollars and is doing nothing to pay the debt? But only the interest! It appears that the debt is a good investment as long as Uncle Sam has the money to pay over one hundred and fifty three billion dollars to Foreign Investors. I believe that money that should be used for the numerous needs for our nation's health, education, toxic waste, garbage pollution and many more problems that we have no money for—until the well goes dry—and it will go dry! With imports coming in putting our own people out of work, money that we still have going out to foreign wage earners while we have up to 8 million U.S. citizens out of work. They are not earning money, not paying any income tax or social security tax, how long can our nation keep this up without going broke. Where will Uncle Sam get the money to pay the retired army, navy and all servicemen who gave all they had for our Country. You and I as good loyal Americans must stand up and do everything we can to see that our nation remains free and free from our National Debt which will destroy our nation. Money must be earned to replenish what goes out. If cuts are to be made, a good place to start is to make a way to pay off the National Debt that is the big one. This is the well I want to see go dry!

As a person who has lived under President of these United States since 1900 and as a person who has held public office, in the community that I lived in, I believe I still have a right to defend this country, my country, your country, and to let the public know, how one grass roots person sees the debt of this nation growing higher and higher and nothing being paid to reduce it. The newspaper's report on October 26, 1984 shows that the U.S. Government paid on the $1.59 Trillion debt—the interest only of one hundred and fifty three billion dollars ($153.8)—nothing on the debt. A Washington report dated August 16, 1984 has a prediction of $2.3 Trillion debt by 1989. What will our interest come to then? It is no wonder that our U.S. Government has no money for its domestic needs. Our U.S. dollars going out of our country and nothing coming in! If we keep this up, congressmen might not get a pension when they retire! Our National Debt will eventually dry out the well.

If we keep imports coming in and 8 to 9 million of U.S. people out of work what can we expect! In March, 1984 I wrote a book called "How to Pay Off the National Debt". Since 46 states by law have a lottery to raise money our National Debt could be paid off. By selling ($1.00) one dollar tickets just for that purpose until the debt is paid, then use the $153.8 billion paid on interest for the needs of education, health, pure air, water, sewers, sanitation, garbage disposal, acid rain all our country's needs and more. Let us do something! Times goes on, before it will be too late.

As those who fought and gave their lives that made this nation we enjoy so great. We must do our part, as soldiers to preserve that we are proud that we are Americans and of our Freedom.

Thank you, a senior American,

JOHN K. NAGY.●

JOB OUTLOOK FOR WOMEN AT STATE AND AID

HON. OLYMPIA J. SNOWE

OF MAINE

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, April 29, 1985

● Ms. SNOWE. Mr. Speaker, the Congressional Caucus on Women's Issues, which I cochair, has a longstanding commitment to seeing that the Federal Government is exemplary in its efforts to expand women's opportunities for employment and promotion. In 1980, the caucus asked its research arm, the Women's Research & Education Institute [WREI], to conduct an examination of the status of women in both the civil and Foreign Services at the Department of State.

Last year, we issued a report entitled "Women at State" which represents the results of this thorough examination of how women fare at the Department of State. Overall, the findings were disappointing. While there has been progress in some areas—progress that has continued since the study was released—the report concluded that the State Department has been particularly slow at admitting women to its senior levels. In fact, only 3 percent of senior Foreign Service officers in 1981 were female.

Based on the findings of this report, I included language in the report on the State Department authorization recognizing that the State Department has not made sufficient progress over the last decade in realizing equal employment opportunities for women, and urging the Department to review its personnel policies to determine their impact on equal employment opportunities for employers in both the civil service and Foreign Service. Similar language was included in the fiscal year 1985 State, Justice, Commerce appropriations bill by my colleague, Representative BOGGS.

On a related matter, I would like to call my colleagues' attention to an article from the Washington Post on April 18, 1985, concerning the results of an unofficial study by women employees of the Agency for International Development. The conclusion is similar to the findings of the "Women at State" report: the Agency for International Development continues to hire far more men than women for professional career jobs and promotes them into the senior Foreign Service at more than six times the rate of women.

INSIDE: THE STATE DEPARTMENT—JOB OUTLOOK NOT IMPROVING, AID'S WOMEN EMPLOYES SAY

(By Peter Alsberg)

An unofficial study by women employes of the Agency for International Development has charged that AID continues to hire far more men than women for professional career jobs and promotes them into the Senior Foreign Service at more than six times the rate of women.

The 30-page study, entitled "A Profile of Women in AID; The Challenge Continues," was compiled by the Women's Action Organization (WAO), which seeks to improve career opportunities for women in the State Department, U.S. Information Agency and AID.

Recruitment and promotion of women long has been a contentious issue at all three agencies. In 1979, the WAO issued a study of women in AID that has been regarded as a rough gauge of the problems facing women seeking careers in foreign policy. The thrust of its new report is that things haven't improved very much since then.

Marilyn Zak, the WAO vice president for AID, said that has been the case even though AID Administrator M. Peter McPherson and Deputy Administrator Jay F. Morris "generally have been very supportive and sympathetic" to women's aspirations.

In fact, Zak, who is AID's human right coordinator, said that latest report indicates that as the number of women in AID has grown, the problems of fitting them into AID's organization also have grown.

Specifically, the report contends that there has been a tendency to shunt women into such specialized areas as health and nutrition, rather than what Zak calls "the fast track fields leading to senior administrative posts." The report also notes that a big increase in female political appointees has inflated the number of women at AID without significantly improving the advancement opportunities for women who want to climb the agency's career ladder through the Foreign Service or civil service.

The report also expressed concern that the Reagan administration's proposed personnel cuts will hit hardest at women employes, who often have less seniority than men.

And, echoing what also is an interesting problem for the State Department and USIA, the report focuses on "the new Foreign Service phenomenon" of married couples, and the difficulties of finding assignments for both spouses either overseas or in Washington.

In a gingerly worded reply, AID said it "continues to look for constructive approaches to remove any remaining barriers and will continue to encourage the input of groups like WAO." The statement maintained that any personnel reductions will be achieved through attrition so that women "will not be disproportionately affected."

The statement also took exception to the WAO report's statistics. It argued that an "analysis of our AID work force should be based on total representation and not on selected sub-categories as presented in the WAO report."

According to AID's reckoning, 36 percent of the agency's employes are female, with women averaging 34 percent of the "entry-level professional career candidates" and 50 percent of the interns. In terms of advancement, AID said, "since 1978 the representation of women, at the GS-15 and FS-1 level has more than doubled," even though the number of AID employes dropped 15 percent.

In response, Zak said, "The AID management gets those figures by lumping together women who are political appointees with Foreign Service and civil service members because it makes the numbers look better. But taking such a lump sum is misleading, particularly in the way that political appointees skew the percentages in the top ranks.

"Those women who have come into AID as political appointees have been very supportive of the career women employes," she said, "but they should be looked on as a separate category and not be used to carry the figures for all the women in the agency when you're trying to get an accurate picture of whether women making a career in AID can aspire to top positions."

According to the report, 11 of the 263 members of the Senior Foreign Service at AID are women, as are 36 of the 602 with the rank of FS-1 and 92 of the 651 with FS-2 rank. Of those in the civil service, 31 of the 133 AID employes with the rank of GS-15 are women. Only three of AID's overseas missions have a woman director.

"We are using the figures provided by AID management, even though different parts of the bureaucracy disagree on what is an accurate data base," Zak said. "But we feel that no matter how you look at the figures, they point in one direction: the gap has not narrowed in five years, and if things don't change, it will only get worse as more and more younger women seek to make careers in the foreign aid field, as more and more of them marry Foreign Service officers or other officials and question why they should have to choose between their own and their husbands' careers." ●

NEW ELECTION ONLY ANSWER TO INDIANA DILEMMA, SAYS NEWSPAPER EDITORIAL

HON. LAWRENCE COUGHLIN

OF PENNSYLVANIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, April 29, 1985

● Mr. COUGHLIN. Mr. Speaker, the Pulitzer Prize-winning Philadelphia Inquirer has called editorially for the only fair resolution of the Richard D. McIntyre-Frank McCloskey controversy over election to Indiana's Eighth Congressional District seat—conduct a new election.

As a Republican who has worked for more than 16 years under a Democrat House majority, I assumed naturally that House precedent would be followed and Mr. McIntyre seated despite the closeness of his victory. Mr. McIntyre was duly certified by Indiana law. The House majority, however, refused to seat Mr. McIntyre—contrary to House precedent—and embarked on a course that could lead only to a bitterness and divisiveness that this body can ill afford in trying to cope with issues of importance to our Nation.

The actions and decisions of the special House task force, created to resolve the dilemma, only added fuel to the anger and frustration of Republican Members. I need not point out what has been cited time and again. Suffice to say, any seating of Mr. McCloskey will leave raw wounds that will serve only to hamper the orderly business of the House and impede its legislative schedule.

Republicans are not being petty. I should note that my Democrat colleagues might try putting themselves in the place of the minority for a number of years, We've been discriminated against on committee ratios and committee staff members, bulldozed on voting procedures, and ignored on the Republican legislative agenda.

Is it any wonder that the McIntyre-McCloskey dispute raised Republican frustration to an all-time intensity?

I ask my Democrat colleagues to read the Inquirer editorial closely. Hardly a mouthpiece for the Republicans Party, the Inquirer succinctly lays out the case for a new election.

In addition, I appeal again to my Democrat colleagues that a certain amount of comity between the majority and minority parties is essental if the House is to conduct the people's business. Let's not traumatize the House with a decision to seat Mr. McCloskey that can lead only to more disruption and enmity.

I feel strongly that a new election is the only answer to resolve this dispute. So strongly do I believe that I feel the House of Representatives should appropriate the funds necessary for a new election if the State of Indiana protests or balks at the cost. The issue runs that deep in ensuring the integrity of our constitutional processes and the element of fair play which we as Americans value so highly.

A copy of the April 24, 1985, editorial from the Philadelphia Inquirer is inserted for the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD and I urge all my colleagues—regardless of their views on the contested election—to read it:

[From the Philadelphia Inquirer, Apr. 24, 1985]

LET INDIANA VOTERS DECIDE

The U.S. House of Representatives is being disrupted by its Republican members, who are hopping mad at what they say is the theft by the Democrats of a House seat won fair and square last November by a Republican. In protest Republicans are sowing confusion, delay and disorder into House procedures.

Such tactics, aside from being thoroughly un-Republican, are deplorable, but they have focused attention on the GOP's grievance. It appears that they may have a case. On election night, Democrat Frank McCloskey appeared to have won a closely fought House race in Indiana's Eighth District by 72 votes. A recount in one county pushed his Republican opponent, Richard D. McIntyre, ahead by 34 votes, however. Despite complaints from Mr. McCloskey about 5,000 contested ballots, Indiana's secretary of state, a Republican, certified Mr. McIntyre the victor.

The Democratic-majority House refused to seat Mr. McIntyre, despite another recount showing him winning by 418 votes. Instead the House Administration Committee formed a three-member task force, composed of two Democrates and one Republican, to do its own recount. Seven two-person teams of auditors from the respected General Accounting Office did the counting and proclaimed Democrat McCloskey the winner on April 18 by four votes.

That would seem to settle the matter, except that more than four contested ballots favoring Republican McIntyre were thrown out by the task force on 2-1 party-line votes.

Article One, Section Five, of the Constitution empowers each house of Congress to judge the elections of its members. The Democrats intend to seat Mr. McCloskey next week, and doubtless have the votes to do it.

Yet after so many contested recounts and partisan power plays, the only way to purge the taint of suspicion that either party stole the seat is to hold a new election, and the sooner the better. For until this is resolved, those voters have no voice in the House.●

JUST A BIT OF NEVADA WIT

HON. HARRY REID

OF NEVADA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, April 29, 1985

● Mr. REID. Mr. Speaker, for the amusement and edification of my colleagues, I am passing along a bit of the poetic wit and wisdom of Reid B. Gardner, a friend and constituent from Las Vegas, NV. Reid's words are fine/His rhymes sublime/Better than mine/Without further adieu/Here's a sample for you:

Richard Nixon, in reflection
Wondered where he'd lost direction
In fame's forest, found that he
Had climbed up higher than his tree.

I'm working hard for ERA
Tho I'm sure some will abuse it
My reasons are both strong and clear
We married men could use it.

The weather today, to be succinct
Didn't turn out the way I thinkt.

The early bird, he gets the worms
And feeds them to his mate
My wife was never fond of worms
So I just sleep in late.

The Hebrews wandered 40 years

Across the desert soil
They hunted manna every day
When they should have looked for oil.

THE QUESTION OF ARMENIA

HON. ROBERT H. MICHEL

OF ILLINOIS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, April 24, 1985

● Mr. MICHEL. Mr. Speaker, it is once again an honor to join with my colleagues in remembering the fate of Armenians who suffered and died 70 years ago in a terrible tragedy of world history.

In recent weeks we have heard much about Hitler's Holocaust against the Jews. It is good that we are reminded of this terrible event. But at the same time, our show of grief, of resolve, and of anger should not be limited to one group of innocent victims. Whenever the force of the state has been used to bring about the deaths of members of one race or one ethnic group or one religion—or one social or economic class as defined by Marxist-Leninist ideology—we must remember and speak about it. Not speaking about these things or denying they happened doesn't solve anything. We're not blaming anyone today for what happened years ago—unless they were directly responsible. All we're saying is "Don't forget."

But, remembering these various atrocities, like the one we commemorate today, should not be an end in itself. And it must never serve as an excuse for further atrocities, in revenge. We cannot revenge the deaths we speak of—but we can learn from them. We can work to see that similar crimes do not happen in the future.

From the Soviet gold mines of Kolyma where millions died from starvation and sheer exhaustion; from the plains of Anatolia where so many Armenians died under horrible circumstances; from the Nazi death camps; from the forest of Katyn where even now the Soviet Union is trying to disguise its sole responsibility for the coldblooded murder of Polish prisoners of wars, from the Ukraine, where millions were starved to death as matter of Soviet policy—from all of these places, and others throughout the world the voices of the innocent cry out—remember us. We are doing that today.●

INTERNATIONAL AND DOMESTIC DRUG TRAFFICKING—A GROWING PROBLEM

HON. JAMES A. TRAFICANT, JR.

OF OHIO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, April 29, 1985

● Mr. TRAFICANT. Mr. Speaker, an article in the April 25 edition of the Washington Post reports that two more Americans are believed to have been killed in Guadalajara, Mexico, at the hands of reputed drug kingpin Rafael Caro Quintero, who was recently apprehended by Mexican police. Quintero is also believed to have been responsible for the brutal murder of Drug Enforcement Administration agent Enrique Camarena Salazar. Quintero is now believed to have been involved in the alleged murder of two Americans whom Quintero and his cohorts suspected of being DEA agents. According to the Washington Post article, Quintero invited the two Americans to a local restaurant in Guadalajara for dinner. The two Americans were then alleged to have been accused by Quintero's men of being DEA agents. They were then allegedly beaten, then stabbed by Quintero and his men. To date the bodies of these two Americans have not been found.

Mr. Speaker, this incident disturbs me greatly. The murder of a DEA agent and now this incident, further underscore the tragic fact that international and domestic drug trafficking is becoming a growing problem and one that must be addressed. The arrogance of drug kingpins like Quintero and the number of Mexican law enforcement officers involved in illicit drug activity is further evidence that this problem has reached catastrophic proportions. The lives of our DEA officials—both abroad and in the United States—are in constant peril from "hit squads" sent out by internationally known drug kingpins. Most tragically, Mr. Speaker, is the fact that the heightened activity of drug trafficking across the country and across the world—translates into more poisonous drugs on our streets. Drug abuse among our youth has been characterized as this Nation's fastest growing problem. As a drug counselor for 10 years, I am acutely aware of the tragic consequences of drug abuse. Not only does it destroy the minds and bodies of our precious youth—the future of our Nation—but it also causes immeasurable suffering to the families of the victims.

The bottom line, Mr. Speaker, is that those international and domestic drug kingpins, who have arrogantly been increasing their activity and brutally taking on our law enforcement agents, are the ones who are ultimately responsible for the poisoning of our youth. They are the ones who are ultimately responsible for jeopardizing the very fabric of our society. They must be stopped. America must get as tough as possible and be as diligent as possible in combating illicit drug activities. The big time dealers must be caught, convicted, and put away for a long time. If they kill or threaten the lives of innocent civilians or our law enforcement officers, then they should be subject to the death penalty.

At this time I would like to site some statistics compiled by the Drug Enforcement Administration which reveal that drug trafficking is becoming a growing problem and is becoming increasingly more violent in nature. In fiscal year 1983, the DEA and Customs' Department's Joint Task Force Group in Florida reported two seizures of heroin totaling 0.4 kilograms; 412 seizures of cocaine totaling 3,555.6 kilograms; 606 seizures of cannabis totaling 874,083.6 kilograms; 10 seizures of methaqualone totaling 160,470 dosage units; and 13 seizures of other narcotic drugs totaling 39,092 dosage units. The figures for fiscal year 1983, released by the Florida Joint Task Force Group also reveals the massive scope of illicit drug activity in the State of Florida alone. During fiscal year 1983, the task force reported the following figures regarding seizures of assets involved in illicit drug activity: 79 vehicle seizures; 194 vessel seizures; 27 aircraft seizures; 143 currency seizures totaling $2,590,964; and 351 weapons seizures. These figures indeed are disturbing. Especially when one considers that they reflect a marked increase from previous years, and that these drugs are swiftly moved to the streets where the find their way into the hands of our youth.

The DEA reports that the number of domestic arrests by DEA officials increased 25 percent from fiscal year 1980 to fiscal year 1983, reaching its highest point in 5 years. The DEA must be commended for the fine job it has done and for the dedication and courage of its agents. They need our help. If they arrest a suspected drug kingpin, we must take steps to ensure that the suspect does not jump bail—as they so often do—and that the suspect stands trial for his crimes. I have introduced legislation, H.R. 994, the Controlled Substances Penalties Act of 1985, that would stiffen the penalties for those convicted of drug trafficking or smuggling in large amounts. My bill would also deny bond in cases involving large amounts of narcotics. My bill would also provide judges with the death penalty option for second offenders who murder either an innocent civilian or law enforcement officer in the course of arrest—based upon highjacking provisions in the Federal Aviation Act of 1958.

Mr. Speaker, recent events and DEA statistics show that international and domestic drug trafficking has become a dangerous problem. Drug abuse continues to destroy our youth and ravage families. Action must be taken—I urge all of my colleagues to support H.R. 994 and work hard for its passage.●

NICARAGUA AND DRUGS

HON. WM. S. BROOMFIELD

OF MICHIGAN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, April 29, 1985

● Mr. BROOMFIELD. Mr. Speaker, the image makers are doing all that they can to put a pretty face on Comandante Ortega and company. The basic fact, however, is that the Communist government is denying fundamental liberties to the Nicaraguan people, and is exporting both revolution and drugs in this hemisphere. The following New York Times article provides interesting details on the Sandinista involvement in the processing and export of drugs.

In recent months, well paid public relations firms have tried to convince the Congress and the American public that the Sandinistas are almost angelic. They have tried to cover up the seamier side of life in today's Nicaragua. They have directed attention away from support of guerrilla and terrorist groups in the region. They have blamed all of the Sandinistas' failings on the existence of the Contras. They have ignored the fact that the Sandinistas are practicing and preaching Marxism-Leninism and, as such, are dedicated to the destruction of our open democratic system.

Not unlike the chameleon who can easily and quickly change colors, the Sandinistas are putting on an image of respectability and decency. They are masters of timing. They know how to manipulate our media. They know how Americans can be swayed by evening news broadcasts and newspaper articles. They offered peace initiatives on the very eve of the Contra vote here in Congress. What masters of deception!

With these concerns in mind, I strongly recommend the following article on Managua's drug connection to all of my colleagues in the Congress. It is certainly food for thought. Let's wake up and call a spade a spade. The Sandinistas are clearly Communists dedicated to the export of their sorry revolution to the Rio Grande River.

The New York Times article follows:

[From the New York Times, Apr. 20, 1985]

PANEL HEARS DETAILS LINKING MANAGUA AND DRUGS

(By Joel Brinkley)

WASHINGTON, April 19.—A Senate subcommittee heard detailed evidence today showing purported links between the Nicaraguan Government and international narcotics trafficking.

A former drug trafficker, James A. Herring Jr., who has acted as a Federal informant, testified that he worked with Cuban Government officials and with the American fugitive Robert Vesco to help the Nicaraguan Government build a cocaine-processing laboratory near Managua.

Mr. Herring said that he had worked with members of the Nicaraguan military and that Nicaragua's Interior Minister, Tomás Borge, had offered his personal thanks for helping with what Mr. Borge called "our project," whose purpose was to earn foreign currency for Nicaragua's troubled economy.

The Customs Commissioner, William von Raab, and a Justice Department official both said Mr. Herring had passed lie-detector tests, adding that their agencies had corroborated large elements of his story through investigations.

Follow-up investigations from evidence Mr. Herring provided resulted in the indictments of 11 Americans on drug trafficking and related charges, they said. Mr. von Raab testified that these recent developments had "the potential of making Nicaragua a significant producer of cocaine."

Federal officials have charged for several years that cuba is involved in drug trafficking, despite repeated denials from Havana.

The first allegations of Nicaraguan involvement came last fall. But until now, Federal officials have said they were unable show that the trafficking was the work of the Nicaraguan Government and not just corrupt Government officers.

Today, however, Mr. von Raab told the Children, Families, Drugs and Alcohol Subcommittee, "We now know without any doubt that the Nicaraguan Government is directly involved."

NICARAGUA DENIES CHARGES

Nicaraguan officials have denied the drug trafficking charges, calling them ridiculous, and a Nicaraguan official repeated the denial today.

John C. Keeney, a Deputy Assistant Attorney General, testified that Sandinista officials decided in 1983 "to establish Nicaragua as a major cocaine exporter."

They began by purchasing coca paste from members of the Colombian guerrilla movement M-19, Mr. Keeney and others said.

Colombia is the world's largest producer of cocaine, and the M-19 guerrillas, who have ties with Cuba, have long been thought to be involved in trafficking. A United States investigation last fall showed links between Colombian drug traffickers and a Nicaraguan official, Frederico Vaughan, who was said to be an aide to Mr. Borge. Mr. Vaughn was indicted in Miami.

SAYS HE WAS ALWAYS GUARDED

Next, the officials testified, the Nicaraguans brought in an American expert to show them how to process coca paste to make cocaine. That expert was Mr. Herring, who said he had been involved in drug smuggling for some time. In the course of his work, he said, he became acquainted with Mr. Vesco, who lived in Cuba. United States officials have previously charged that Mr. Vesco has been involved in a variety of smuggling activities with the Cuban Government.

An associate of Mr. Vesco took Mr. Herring to Nicaragua in 1983, where Mr. Herring said he "gave them advice on setting up a cocaine-cutting lab for the Government."

He added that "they were setting it up on a rice farm the Sandinistas had confiscated" from Anastasio Somoza Debayle, the former dictator.

He said the Sandinista officials whisked him through customs immigration whenever he entered or left the country and that while working at the lab he was always guarded by armed, uniformed Sandinista soldiers.

The first processed cocaine from the laboratory was shipped to Europe, he said, and another witness, Jitze Kooistra, said he worked directly with Nicaraguan Government officials to arrange the sale. Mr. Kooistra was later arrested in the United States and is serving a term in a Federal prison in Florida.

A Customs Service official said Federal officers believed that the Nicaraguan cocaine laboratory was still operating, although they could not be certain.

Senator Christopher J. Dodd, Democrat of Connecticut, sparked an angry exchange with the subcommittee's chairman, Senator Paula Hawkins, Republican of Florida, when he said it "does the public a disservice" to pretend that "Nicaraguans are the only government officials to have ever been implicated in international narcotics trafficking schemes."

Recent investigations have produced similar allegations against Government officials in Mexico, El Salvador, Bolivia and the Bahamas, among other nations.●

CENTRAL AMERICA

HON. RICHARD A. GEPHARDT

OF MISSOURI

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, April 29, 1985

● Mr. GEPHARDT. Mr. Speaker, our country has long resisted change in Central America. Last night's House vote against military aid to the Contras confirms that most Americans want a change. They don't buy the administration's rhetoric that the Contras are "the moral equivalent of the Founding Fathers." They want to preserve our interests, but they sense the old ways will no longer work.

Military escalation is part of the problem, not the solution. Our 30-plus interventions in the area since 1900 have not produced longrun stability and peace. Military aid has always allowed the right wing to think it didn't need to compromise. Guatemala, where the CIA intervened 31 years ago to depose a socialist government, today faces a simmering revolt repressed by a rightist dictatorship.

The Reagan policy won't put the Contras back in power. No one I talked with during my recent trip to Central America believes the Contras can win. The Contras can't win because they lack the political identity required to advance their cause. $14 million won't change this. $80 million hasn't.

The administration's harsh rhetoric strengthens Sandinista hardliners. The CIA-backed minings and assassination manuals, the Contra attacks on civilians and our President's bellicosity deny Sandinista moderates the opportunity to present a credible political alternative to their own people. We invite the extremism Reagan complains of.

Reagan hasn't faced the hard reality that Americans won't support armed intervention unless it is clear that other possibilities for settlement have been exahusted. And they haven't. Why hasn't he relied more extensively on other tools at his disposal? And why does he recognize the regime if he believes it illegitimate?

The American people want a policy that offers us prospects for constructive change. They want to attempt negotiations before plunging us into a war.

The negotiations initiated by the Contadora nations of Venezuela, Colombia, Panama, and Mexico represent an excellent start. An agreement along the lines suggested by the Contadora group would require the Sandinistas to expel foreign military advisors, keep foreign military bases and offensive weapons out of the country and desist from exporting arms. We would need to insist on provisons to ensure that the Sandinistas are not violating these terms. If violations occurred, we could take steps to isolate them diplomatically or suspend trade. As a last resort, the Rio treaty would give us a legal foundation for the use of military force.

Today we need a demonstration of our commitment to negotiations.

We face two alternatives.

The Michel substitute would direct the Agency for International Development to dispense $14 million in aid to the Contras. It would not prohibit U.S. aid from being provided by other agencies such as the CIA. The CIA's record under Reagan—its failure in the past to inform Congress and the American people about its actions in Nicaragua—suggests to me that we could not be sure how this money would be used. Most significantly, MICHEL would allow the use of contingency funds for military operations after October 1, 1985.

The Hamilton substitute, on the other hand, initiates a new policy. It provides no funds for paramilitary operations, but it does not rule out use of military options in the future. It directs $10 million in assistance to Nicaraguan refugees through the International Red Cross or the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees. It directs $4 million to the implementation of a Contadora agreement. This will signify both our concern about the region and our support for a negotiated settlement.

I will vote for the Hamilton substitute. It better promotes negotiations.

For all of the complexities in Central America, the choice confronting us remains relatively simple. We can continue to focus on military solutions, even if this only expands and perpetuates the conflicts. Or we can support negotiated solutions.

The harsh rhetoric of the Reagan administration fosters nationalism among some Americans, but the record shows that for all the noise and bellicose language, we are not moving toward peace in this region or with our other adversaries around the world.

Policy changes do not come without risks. But an unwillingness to see change in Central America will only deepen the mire—not only in current wars but in conflicts to come. If we do not help resolve the region's differences peacefully, we will inevitably share the cost of its turmoil.●

ONE WORLD, RICH AND POOR

HON. GUS YATRON
OF PENNSYLVANIA
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, April 29, 1985

● Mr. YATRON. Mr. Speaker, I would like to bring to the attention of our colleagues an excellent keynote address by the Honorable Bradford Morse, Administrator of the U.N. Development Program and Director of the U.N. Office for Emergency Operatations in Africa, before the International Development Conference in Washington, DC, March 20, 1985. His speech, entitled, "One World, Rich and Poor," is profound and thought-provoking. As a former member of this Chamber, his words, are, no doubt, of interest to us all.

"ONE WORLD, RICH AND POOR"

If there is some dispute about who originated the concept and the term "Third World", there is little doubt that millions of people first learned to think about "One World" from the book with that title by Wendell Willkie, published in 1943 in the middle of the greatest global carnage humanity had ever experienced. Much of what he set down following a world air tour undertaken at President Roosevelt's suggestion remains fresh and apposite, even extraordinary prophetic, to this day. Listen for a moment to a few extracted passages:

"There are no distant points in the world any longer . . . I learned by this trip that the myriad millions of human beings of the Far East are as close to us as Los Angeles is to New York by the fastest trains . . . Our thinking in the future must be worldwide . . . Men and women all over the world are on the march, physically, intellectually, and spiritually . . . they are beginning to know that men's welfare throughout the world is interdependent . . . even our present standard of living in America cannot be maintained unless the exchange of goods flows more freely over the whole world".

Wendell Willkie's sense of a global interdependence that would be complex, fragile, and volatile, was far ahead of his time, and indeed we could use his voice today. Four decades after his warning, some 600,000 Americans lost their jobs from only three years of suddenly declining purchasing power among the developing countries; and it has been estimated that if developing-country economies had instead been able to maintain their rates of growth of the 1970s, instead of disemployment another half a million Americans would have found new jobs in the export sector alone.

Indeed, on all sides as we survey what we have accomplished since the first of these International Development Conferences 33 years ago, we see the evidence of these characteristics—complexity, fragility, and volatility. We witness it with grief in Africa, where drought and famine threaten thirty million people, and among them some ten million have had to abandon their homes and lands; Africa, where the very soil and vegetation reveal their fragility as much before the pressure of population and cropping patterns introduced by colonists as from the cycles of climate; Africa, where such remarkable gains since 1960 as the doubling of school enrollment, and the doubling of doctors and nurses in proportion to population, are promptly and thoughtlessly forgotten in the tides of catastrophic news. We witness the same fragility and volatility of our deeply interdependent economy in the sudden, devastating impact of high interest rates and new trade barriers in the North, on all the gains that developing countries had been making: a 1,100 per cent increase in capital formation between 1950 and 1980; an average increase of 400 per cent in Gross National Product over the same period; a 1,500 per cent increase in skills formation.

This picture is grim, but it is not in the least hopeless; and I do not assert this merely because I am by nature an optimist. I assert it because, if it had to come this way—if we had to have a period of multiple and interlocked crises to open minds just that much wider about our one world, and to consolidate our experience of the devlopment process—then we do indeed now have the crises. From Wendell Willkie's prophetic warning of the coming interdependence of the American economy with the South to the economic difficulties which indiscriminately struck all countries—rich and poor—in the early years of this decade there is no excuse whatever for tunnel vision on the international economic and financial dimension. And we have ample experience of success and failure in national development to analyze and on which to build, and on which I will concentrate this morning.

We do not need to search for whole new panaceas. We need more than anything to pay renewed attention to some simple, but crucial factors in development which have tended to fall by the wayside in the search for more glamorous answers. And such renewed attention should begin with people—especially the tens of millions of small, poor farmers and their families. Despite the pleas of some of us over so many years, these people slipped from the focus of development strategies that were predicated upon the Western model of industrial urbanization in which they seemed marginal because in any case assumed to be destined to migrate to cities and towns as part of "progress". From that one wildly inappropriately transferred macro-premise, we can trace an entire chain of neglect, and of urgently needed remedial action.

First, we must regain respect for small farmer families; for their energy, for their ancient wisdoms replete with the technologies of survival and sustainable production, and for their productivity and their cost-effectiveness which was so wrongly assumed to be less than that of the larger modernised farm. And it is no accident that what I have just said seems to be common between the heartland of this great country and the heartlands of the Third World: we are more "one world" in frailty of judgment and policy than is sometimes perceived.

From this regained respect, the chain of other neglected needs comes into sharp relief. In the little time we have left according to the frightening rates of projected migration to cities, we must redirect development to reach the small farmers—where they are, as they are. As the Africa food deficit strikingly indicates, there must be new pricing policies that provide incentives for small farmers and, for as long as food imports are necessary, that ensure such imports do not erode the value of their produce.

Long buried within these neglected equations, and as another casualty of the original model, I cannot overemphasize credit—small-scale credit on criteria small farmers can meet, and at interest they can afford. As an example of this need, in Zimbabwe in 1978 only some 3,000 smallholders received agricultural loans: by this year, an estimated 95,000 smallholders will receive credit for their agricultural necessities. And this strategic redirection, combined with new decentralised seed and fertilizer and tool distribution points, and grain depots, not leased assisted by USAID, assuredly accounts for the country's recent dramatic production increases when some rain blessedly fell last April.

In Bhutan, the Capital Development Fund, an arm of the United Nations Development Programme, has been helping some 8,000 small farmers with the tiny amounts they actually need for seed, fertilizer, livestock and tools, but which such people all across the Third World have seldom been able to obtain—in Bhutan averaging only $95 a season per family. And to dispel another myth, the repayment is excellent—above 95 percent—which goes into a revolving fund to assist another 30,000 small farmers.

We also need vastly more credit for women: in Honduras, UNDP with the Food and Agriculture Organization and the World Food Programme, is helping several hundred women with low-interest credits for small-scale productive projects including technical training, and designed to provide a framework for further support by the United Nations Voluntary Fund for the Decade for Women, and NGOs.

I hope you will already have mentally noted that these missing ingredients in development all have one strange characteristic—the moment you state them they seem so utterly obvious that it is hard to believe thay are not by now intrinsic, almost automatic considerations in development designs. But they have not been. Another classic example of this phenomenon is post-harvest storage. How on earth have so many millions upon millions of dollars been invested in reaching for higher vertical yields and for increased growing acreage, while 15 to 25 percent of present production has continued to be lost as a result of pests, right under everyone's eyes? Again, I submit that the essential answer is that the eyes were not on the main source of the harvests—the small farmers.

The chain of need thus brought back into focus continues. If development is once directed out to where the great mass of people live in abject poverty, then you decentralize and intensify training in farming techniques that the small farmer can adopt. You also decentralize the training of primary health care personnel, so that those who get the training come from the rural areas where they are needed, instead of trying to force already-urbanised graduates of urban schools to work in the countryside. And you decentralize small-scale and artisanal industry, and the training that it too will need to take root in rural areas. Rural feeder roads, reafforestation, and small-scale irrigation and drinking water supply systems also suddenly come into focus as very strategic—and do not need capital-intensive investment: UNDP's Special Public Works Programme with the International Labour Organization have to date generated over 10 million workdays in some 45 countries, with lasting development benefits and community-mobilized self-help to sustain them.

In all of this, there is the perennially elusive need for coordination, at two levels: the international and the design-level.

We simply must help developing countries from being overwhelmed by week-after-week, visitations by uncoordinated missions from all over the donor North, exhausting the same handful of planners in successive rituals of airport meetings, briefings, answering largely the same questions, then trying to cater to the individual sectoral enthusiasms and different procedural requirements of each mission, entertaining them, seeing them off, and rushing back to their offices to try to do some operational work before the next plane is due to land and disgorge the next mission.

At the design level, we have simply got to respond to the long-accumulated bad experience of projects planned so narrowly that they lack the crucial cross-sectoral reinforcement. Again, this need for holistic development design and budget-planning is so obvious that it seems almost ritual litany once stated. Yet to this day it remains a crucial weakness in numerous development projects. We must challenge all institutional and sectoral chauvinism (not least the UN System which is also only human), and the constantly debilitating effect of our artificial compartmentalizing of development. We must open minds, to "see things whole".

Above all, we must open our minds so that we can literally "see" people who have for too long been almost invisible; "see" women as economic agents not just wives and mothers; "see" communities for the repositories of practical knowledge that they really are, and for the cumulatively vast resources of human energy for self-help which have lain relatively untapped because of the official disdain of centralised minds for nongovernmental leadership and initiative. Development design and programme formulation needs human feasibility study; development needs to be planned with the intended actors and beneficiaries, consulting them about what is feasible for them to undertake, in what time-frame, and what first. Again, this seems desperately obvious to many when stated; but the lack of attention to it would suggest it were heresy.

I have used the term "heresy" quite deliberately, because we need to liberate ourselves from the surprisingly tight and narrow set of assumptions that modern growth-economists and theoreticians have elevated to almost holy writ out of scarcely more than a hundred years of operating experience of the urban-industrialised technology—and money-oriented model. We need to start asking, far more often, "Who said that such and such is a universal prerequisite of progress for all societies, everywhere?"

For example, who said that the practice of barter is primitive and must be replaced by the use of money for all exchange everywhere if development is to begin to take place? The impact of this single proposition on national and local economies and poor families and the dreadful extra burdens imposed upon trade among nations, above all upon poor nations trying to enter world trade markets, come into focus the moment the heretical question is asked.

Who said that modern, improved homes must be built with artificial factory-made materials, or they will not be modern and will not be capable of improved shelter? This notion has been picked up almost wholesale by people in developing countries. It has entailed incalculable costs in precious foreign exchange for imported cement and corrugated iron roofing for a minority, while masses of people were left waiting for such "modernity". Yet, as UNDP-supported projects have been proving, it is entirely possible to innovate and improve in traditional indigenous building materials, like adobe, at low cost and with large-scale local employment of people.

Yet again, who said that the entire accumulated technology in pharmaceuticals evolved in the Third World over millennia, should be ignored and disdained as primitive quackery, to be replaced by massive imports of factory-made drugs or of drug factories? Well, we lost years in that field, until it could become respectable for the World Health Organization, with UNICEF and UNDP, to begin building lists combining modern, and numerous, traditional indigenous medicines which were found upon testing to be entirely valid, safe, and low-cost.

And finally from so many such questions that emerge out of the trial and error of development these last 35 years, who said that people must achieve literacy—be able to read and write—before they can become agents of their own development? We would all agree, everywhere, that human innovation advances exponentially through printed communication. But does that mean the total neglect of the power of the spoken and the heard word, and of the latent development energy of the masses of poor people who have rich and vibrant oral cultures and forms of learning? A modest UNDP-supported project in Mali, making no earth-shaking claims, is quietly building audio cassette libraries of practical development information, run by each community asking for a library; and they are already dedicating garden plots to finance the repurchase of batteries for their cassette recorders, so deeply do they feel that these libraries belong to themselves.

I hope that in posing these questions and citing these examples of appropriate response, no one will have misunderstood my meaning. I am not advocating a return to the past, nor a dismissal of modern economic organization and technology. I have not suggested that any one of the ingredients, for sound development I have cited has been totally neglected by everyone—or, by the way, always remembered in UNDP. Nor I am urging that any of them is "the new key to development". I am opposed to excessive enthusiasms of all kinds in development work. What I am urging is that we pay much more attention to the simple factors—things that are not glamorous yet make straightforward common sense, the moment they are identified. And I am certainly urging a general intellectual liberation—in the South, from the inherited premise that progress means blindly copying everything in the North at whatever cost (cultural, financial, ecological); and in the North, a liberation from the deeply ingrained faith that it has all the right answers for development anywhere, if it has made so much progress so quickly in its own countries.

We must accordingly strengthen our perceptive capacities along the entire spectrum of development—and recheck our language to see what that, too, may reveal; for language both reflects and reinforces prejudices. Doubtless this will be addressed in the development education and communication components of this Conference which I am delighted to see in the programme. We should never, for example, have adopted the term "aid" to describe official development co-operation: it connotes and promotes images of charitable donations involving real deprivation by donor governments and their tax-payers; whereas the combination of spending these "aid" funds at home, and helping to develop purchasing power in developing countries, makes even grant funding as much of an extension and expansion of Northern domestic economies as expressions of compassionate charity. We should also stop using the term "technology transfer", because it connotes moving technology from those who have it to those who have none—and wholesale at that: technology selection and adaptation by developing countries is what we must support and advance.

I am not even sure that the term "development" gives us a deep enough understanding of what the developing countries have really been facing. For what they have really faced—involving everything from recovering their cultures to defining the nature of their needed indigenously designed institutions; from their agricultural policies to where they had roads and telegraph and where they didn't—has in many cases been "post-colonial reconstruction" and then development.

Let us also be more careful with sweeping references to "mis-management" and "corruption"—uttered in donor countries in a curious special way, as though intrinsically different from the mismanagement and corruption daily reported in many donor countries themselves. Of course there is corruption, and of course there is mismanagement in developing countries. I sometimes wonder whether some of the donor-country commentary about this doesn't have a note of special disappointment in it—as though some people in the Western world somehow hoped that liberated peoples in the South had a chance to start "from scratch", would do better than the West, and would all behave like saints before so much poverty. The answer of course is that they never could start from scratch; and there never was any reason why, as human beings like the rest of us, endowed both with nobleness and frailty, they should be able to avoid the weaknesses that plagued Western societies at comparable states—and that still do even amid our enormous affluence and much-vaunted standard-setting. Mahatma Gandhi was, not a Third World, but a global exception—and even he said that he was "only a politician trying to be a saint".

Although I know that media professionals dislike hearing this, it is also profoundly disturbing that the kindly generous, caring citizens of the donor countries—who are proving their solidarity all over again over Africa—are so seldom allowed to read or hear or see on their screens any good news from the South. Even over the Africa emergency, it is evident that scarcely anyone knows of the special self-help initiatives and sacrifices being made by Africans to help their fellow-citizens in distress. It is vital for development educators and nongovernmental organizations to find new ways to convey achievement by the developing countries, progress in our North-South partnership, amid all the problems and difficulties which themselves are means of positive development education.

And so, I come back to Wendell Willkie, a remarkably perceptive man who left us so soon after his unforgettable book had reached around the world in nearly three million copies in the midst of war. Urging that, and I quote him, "Our Western world and our presumed supremacy are now on trial. Our boasting and our big talk leave Asia cold", he went on to make one of the most powerful appeals then to be heard, even before the United Nations had been born. It has a healthy democratic, modest ring to it for a very proud United States even today. He wrote

"When I say that this world demands the full participation of a self-confident America, I am only passing on an invitation which the peoples of the East have given us. They would like the United States and the other United Nations to be partners with them in this grand adventure . . . the chance to help create a new society in which men and women the world around can live and grow invigorated by independence and freedom".

That is surely our agenda today, in this forthieth anniversary year of the United Nations. This Conference convenes in "one world, rich and poor", to build upon our successes and learn from our failures, so that the day will come when we can really meet in one world—rich in a universally energised humanity; rich in cooperativeness; tranquil amid real disarmament; one world where the word "poor" has been retired into history books.

It is a dream within our grasp—in which we have nothing to fear but complacency; nothing to lose but the weakness in our present economies. it is an "all-win" challenge in a positive-sum game which our children the world over have a right to expect us to overcome.

We cannot expect their forgiveness if we make it their inheritance.●

HONORING ROYCE SMITH

HON. WILLIAM D. FORD

OF MICHIGAN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, April 29, 1985

● Mr. FORD of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, how pleasurable it is to be able to laud and commemorate a resident of my congressional district who has combined all of the noble aspects of community service, professional attainment, family achievement and a fulfilling life. We are pleased to join family, friends and associates of Royce Smith in saluting him on the occasion of his retirement from government.

Very few individuals can take with them the satisfaction which comes from duty faithfully performed. But Royce Smith is able to do this based upon his record as Belleville councilman, Belleville mayor, member of the Wayne County Board of Commissioners and managing director of the Wayne County Department of Public Works.

Many people are satisfied to achieve either in the private sector or in public office holding. Seldom do we see the remarkable blend of both public and private achievement, intertwined with responsible partisanship on behalf of the 15th District Democratic organization.

We know that Royce and his family now look forward to his well-earned respite from his official duties. But in another sense he will never depart from the special job and pleasure he derives from his family and the satisfaction he derives from assisting others.●

THE TREASURY'S TAX PROPOSAL WOULD HURT OHIO OIL AND GAS INDUSTRY

HON. JAMES A. TRAFICANT, JR.

OF OHIO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, April 29, 1985

● Mr. TRAFICANT. Mr. Speaker, the Treasury Department's new tax proposal would severely impact the oil and gas industry in my home State of Ohio—an industry which just enjoyed its finest year ever. I rise today to express my opposition to three major components of the Treasury's plan that would have wide-ranging negative effects in the oil and gas industry in Ohio.

The Treasury's tax plan includes three proposals that I am very concerned about. They are: First, loss of intangible drilling cost deduction; second, repeal of statutory depletion; and third, elimination of investment tax credit. These three proposals, if enacted, would be a severe blow to the fiscal health of Ohio's oil and gas industry. A recent survey by the Ohio Oil and Gas Association regarding the Treasury's proposals revealed some disturbing information. If enacted, these proposals would have the following effects: First, expenditures for oil and gas production in Ohio would decline by 72 percent; second, the number of new wells in Ohio would decline by 71 percent; third, revenues paid to related industries in Ohio would decline by 54 percent; and fourth, employment in the industry in Ohio would be cut by 43 percent.

While all of the above facts are quite disturbing, I am most concerned about the unacceptable amount of jobs that would be lost and the grave reduction in oil and gas production in Ohio. In my home district the unemployment has been one of the highest in the Nation for several years. The State of Ohio is struggling to catch up with this so-called economic recovery. The oil and gas industry had been a steady part of Ohio's economic growth. If the above mentioned proposals by the Treasury Department were enacted, 3,266 fewer wells would be drilled in Ohio and over 7,000 Ohioans would lose their jobs. The effects of these proposals would not be isolated to Ohio—630,000 jobs would be lost nationally and investment capital for drilling in the United States would decline by $10 billion. This would ultimately add to our already severe trade deficit problem and have a significantly negative effect on the national economy.

I urge all of my colleagues to oppose these proposals by the Treasury Department and with me to bring forth a tax plan that is fair and equitable and one that will not discourage the growth and expansion of vital American industries.●

NICARAGUA—A CONTINUING PROBLEM

HON. JOHN MILLER

OF WASHINGTON

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, April 29, 1985

● Mr. MILLER of Washington. Mr. Speaker, the House has ended for the moment, a lengthy and heated debate on the proper response of the United States to the political situation in Nicaragua.

Many issues were raised during the debate, including the possibility of direct U.S. involvement, the deplorable atrocities attributed to each side, the reliability of various experts and partisans, and the amount of money under consideration. But I believe the crucial issue before the House was whether the United States should help the forces seeking a more democractic form of government for Nicaragua, whether we should keep a hands-off approach, or whether we should seek closer ties with the Sandinista government.

I feel the answer is clear. When given the choice of aligning ourselves with a Communist regime intertwined militarily and economically with the Soviet Union and Cuba, doing nothing, or supporting groups which espouse democratic ideals and economic opportunity, I believe the United States must take the lead in promoting democracy and freedom. This is especially true in the case of Nicaragua, where the national security interests of the United States and other Central American countries are so directly affected.

It is unfortunate, but true, that the Sandinista government, which the United States originally supported after we helped remove Somoza, has broken its promises of reform. It promised fair and open elections, yet junta member Bayardo Arce admits that the elections were a propaganda ploy and that the Communist Sandinistas had no intention of handing over or sharing power with their opponents. It promised political pluralism, yet the army, the militia, and the police are the private property of the ruling political party. It promised to remain nonaligned, yet in addition to inviting some 10,000 Cuban, East German, Bulgarian, and Soviet advisers to the country, the Sandinistas have also accepted some $300 million per year in Soviet bloc aid to build up the largest and best equipped military force in Central America.

On the other side, there are groups which espouse democratic ideals and economic opportunity. These groups are led, for the most part, by individuals who originally helped lead the democratic opposition to Somoza, but now find themselves philosophically and politically at odds with the Communist Sandinistas. These forces, call them Contras or freedom fighters or whatever, I am now convinced, have the will and the capability to carry on, grow in numbers, and effect change for the better in Nicaragua.

Mr. Speaker, we cannot consider the Nicaragua situation in a vacuum. Soviet and Cuban intrusion around the globe pose a serious threat not only to world stability but to our own national security interests. The United States now tries to meet this challenge through a variety of economic, political, military, and diplomatic means. We are now applying to Nicaragua moderate economic, political and, through the Contedora nations, diplomatic pressure. The proposed $14 million in military support to the rebels is a very moderate amount of potential military pressure.

I strongly support our policy of trying to return the Sandinista government to its original goals and aspirations. Our policy is to encourage the Sandinista government to negotiate with the various opposition groups; to end military ties with Cuba and the Soviet Union; to hold free and open elections; to allow a free press and to end religious and racial oppression. Ours is a temperate and positive policy, which, if supported by the American people and by Congress, I believe offers the hope of both improving our own security and redeeming for the people of Nicaragua the promises of the Sandinista revolution.●

MARKET ORIENTATION

HON. ARLAN STANGELAND

OF MINNESOTA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, April 29, 1985

● Mr. STANGELAND. Mr. Speaker, market orientation is certainly the buzz word surrounding this year's Farm Bill.

The administration has gone to great lengths to emphasize the importance of structuring a future farm program that will emphasize achieving new markets for our farm products.

I believe that one area with enormous market potential is being completely overlooked—the production of ethanol.

The fortunate absense of soaring oil prices—such as those occurring during the oil price shocks of 1973 and 1979—has made many view ethanol production as a thing of the past. Nothing could be further from the truth.

Ethanol production continues to be a growing industry. Alcohol produced in the United States for fuel purposes has exploded from an estimated 10 million gallons in 1978 to 410 million gallons in 1984. Sales of the 10-percent gasohol blend are estimated by industry sources at more than 5 billion gallons last year.

The potential market impact of widespread ethanol consumption is astounding. Over 100 billion gallons of gasoline are used in the United States each year. If you assume a 10-percent ethanol mixture, 4.3 billion bushels of grain would be needed. Considering the fact that total U.S. grain production is on the order of 10 billion bushels annually, the market implications for our farmers are obvious.

The increased prices our farmers could achieve through this type of national ethanol fuels program would make price supports, deficiency payments, acreage reduction programs, and other farm program tools a moot issue. A huge market would be opened to absorb the incredible level of productivity that makes American agriculture a modern-day miracle.

The advantages are as enormous as they are obvious. Farmers could produce for a price, farm suppliers would increase their sales, equipment dealers would be rejuvenated, small businesses would pick up, the health of rural banks would be restored, and the hum of American agriculture and our rural economy would be felt throughout the country.

It is easy—too easy—to get complacent about our national energy security during an oil glut and relatively stable fuel prices. But we all know that this is a temporary phenomenon at best. The transition from nonrenewable energy sources to renewable—such as ethanol—is going to come. The only question is whether or not we will be prepared to deal with it in a manner that will minimize the degree of disruption that will otherwise ensue.

During future congressional deliberations on the issue of market orientation, I urge my colleagues to keep in mind the need to further encourage and develop a domestic industry that may offer our farmers the greatest market potential of all—ethanol.●

AMERICAN DOLLARS?

HON. DOUGLAS APPLEGATE

OF OHIO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, April 29, 1985

● Mr. APPLEGATE. Mr. Speaker, while we continue to witness examples day in and day out of the steady erosion of America's foreign trade balance, what with American workers and American companies losing out to foreign imports, it now appears that our own Federal Government has finally decided to throw in the towel and will now give their business to foreign enterprises instead of to American firms.

I have recently been informed that the Bureau of Printing and Engraving, a division of the U.S. Department of the Treasury, has awarded a contract for $8 million to a firm located in Switzerland for printing equipment to be used in the production of American currency. I feel this recent disclosure that our own Government wishes to utilize equipment made outside of this country so as to print American dollars is the ultimate betrayal by this administration of American workers and American companies. The serious nature of America's trade imbalance problem should not be belittled and minimized by an administration that blatantly overlooks American firms when it comes to reviewing bids submitted to our Government. If we are to ever realize an America with full employment and strong and vital enterprises, then the time has come to correct the policy that our own Government has regarding contracts for goods and services.●

JEANNE SLIFKA HONORED FOR HER WORK

HON. FRANK J. GUARINI

OF NEW JERSEY

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, April 29, 1985

● Mr. GUARINI. Mr. Speaker, on Friday evening, May 3, 1985, a fine and gracious community servant, Mrs. Jeanne Slifka, is being honored by her friends and the community of Bayonne, NJ.

Jeanne Slifka has recently retired after 13 years service as executive director of the Bayonne Chapter of the American Red Cross.

As a former member of the National Board of Trustees of the National Red Cross, I can attest to the efficiency and dedication of Jeanne Slifka, and esprit de corps she has developed within all those she has touched, and for her compassionate delivery of home service needs.

Jeanne became executive director of the American Red Cross, Bayonne Chapter, after 7 years of volunteer service, including membership on its Board of Directors. She became involved with the Red Cross through Vincent Burke, chairperson of the American Red Cross.

Jeanne has been a civic leader in working for local volunteer groups and charitable organizations since 1946. Her role as an activist on behalf of such causes includes service as president of the Bayonne Hospital Volunteers for 2 years, and chairman of pediatrics, and appointment to the Juvenile Conference Committee.

Jeanne was instrumental in reactivating Mount Carmel Guild of Our Lady of Mount Carmel Church, together with the former Pastor, Rev. Ted Zaorski, she became its first president and remained as such for the first 7 years.

She has also served in an advisory capacity to the Executive Board of Mount Carmel Guild in Newark, which assists the handicapped and underprivileged; the Executive Board of St. Dominic Academy, Jersey City, and on the nominating committee of the Pavonia Girl Scout Council.

Jeanne has also served on the Board of Directors of the Conference of Christians and Jews.

For all of her hours of dedicated service, Jeanne is proud of the following awards: American National Red Cross, New Jersey Blood Services, United Way of Hudson County, Bayonne Boy Scout Council and Mount Carmel Guild.

In 1972 Jeanne was selected a "Woman of Achievement" by the Jersey Journal.

On May 1, at St. Andrew's Hall, Bayonne, Jeanne will receive the first annual Civic Achievement Award of the "Irelands' 32," as announced by Leo Hurley, president of the group. The Awards Committee felt that her longstanding record of achievement in the community clearly stamped her as an individual deserving of recognition as this year's achiever.

Jeanne is also a member of the Polish American Woman's Auxiliary and has served as its vice president.

Jeanne Slifka, the former Jeanne Sweeney, is a graduate of Holy Family Academy, a lifelong Bayonne resident whose family has been part of the city for three generations. She lives with her husband, Edward, and is the mother of two daughters.

Jeanne "makes a difference" as indicated in an article written about her in the Jersey Journal, which I would like to quote from:

> Her unique ability to recruit workers has resulted in an increase of volunteers—from 7 to nearly 100 in the last 7 years.
>
> The Bayonne Red Cross is partially funded by the United Way of Hudson County and the National Red Cross, but when more money is needed, Mrs. Slifka is one of the first people to start a drive.
>
> These additional funds raised by activities sponsored by Mrs. Slifka have greatly kept the chapter running.
>
> Expanding the number of blood banks within the city from 3 to 14 is another of Mrs. Slifka's projects.
>
> In addition to offering safety, swimming, First Aid and other courses, the Red Cross is a referral service. I come here every morning and never know what to expect, the executive director said.
>
> Perhaps a message she composed to a local organization best describes her attitude towards her role in the community:
>
> If every task is performed in His [God's] name, it no longer becomes a task—it is a labor of love.

Jeanne certainly lives up to her message, as her friends can attest. They are paying tribute to her with the dinner in her honor chaired by James P. Sweeney, assisted by Patrick F.X. Nilan, president of the United Way of Hudson County, who will introduce the guest of honor.

Bayonne Mayor Dennis P. Collins will be a speaker, joined by others who will tell the story of Jeanne Slifka's life and her great tributes not only to the people of Bayonne but throughout the area.

Jeanne Slifka has reiterated the words of David Grayson:

> To be needed in other human lives—is there anything greater or more beautiful in this world.

Jeanne leaves the Bayonne Chapter of the American Red Cross held in high esteem. The community has had its share of problems, especially dealing with fire victims, in addition to the problems of many servicemen at the Bayonne military base, and the growing older American population and that of the handicapped.

Jeanne Slifka has accepted the challenge of community service with competence and courage. In the few instances where perhaps the desired result could not be obtained, Jeanne gave a message of hope to those in need, reminding them that "everything is done in the world by hope, which urges us on telling us tomorrow will be better."

She echoes the words of Von Knebel who said:

> Hope awakens courage. He who can implant courage in the human soul is the best physician.

Jeanne tells us that she and Ed are planning retirement and will "take it easy." Many who know of her ebullient personality question that statement. However, if she does choose this route, she will be well deserving.

Oscar Wilde wrote:

> "Contentment lies not in the enjoyment of ease—> a life of luxury—
> but comes only to him that labors and overcomes—> to him that performs the task in hand and reaps
> the satisfaction of work well done."

If I could describe Jeanne Slifka by repeating the words of a great author, I would choose those of John Burroughs, as follows:

I AM CONTENT

The longer I live the more my mind dwells upon the beauty and wonder of the world * * *

I have loved the feel of the grass under my feet, and the sound of the running streams by my side. The hum of the wind in the tree-tops has always been good music to me, and the face of the fields has often comforted me more than the faces of men.

I am in love with this world; by my constitution I have nestled lovingly in it. It has been home. It has been my point of outlook into the universe. I have not bruised myself against it, nor tried to use it ignobly.

I have tilled its soul. I have gathered its harvests, I have waited upon its seasons, and always have I reaped what I have sown.

While delved I did not lose sight of the sky overhead. While I gathered its bread and meat for my body, I did not neglect to gather its bread and meat for my soul.

I have climbed its mountains, roamed its forests, sailed its waters, crossed its deserts, felt the sting of its frosts, the oppression of its heats, the drench of its rains, and the fury of its winds, and always have beauty and joy waited upon my goings and comings.

I am certain that my colleagues here in the House of Representatives wish to join me today in this well-deserved tribute to Jeanne Slifka, servant of God—servant of mankind.●

1985 AAA SCHOOL SAFETY PATROL LIFESAVING MEDAL RECIPIENTS

HON. FRANK R. WOLF

OF VIRGINIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, April 29, 1985

● Mr. WOLF. Mr. Speaker, in May, the American Automobile Association whose national headquarters is located in the 10th District of Virginia, is presenting five young people the highest award given to members of school safety patrols throughout the United States, the AAA School Safety Patrol Lifesaving Medal.

The lifesaving medal program was initiated in 1949 by the American Automobile Association to recognize and honor selected school patrol members for their heroic lifesaving contribution to their communities.

Since its inception, there have been more than 270 boys and girls from 28 States and the District of Columbia who have been honored with the lifesaving medal.

An award review board composed of representatives from active national organizations in the fields of education, law enforcement, and safety selects deserving medal recipients from those candidates who have been officially nominated for consideration.

The 1985 recipients of the AAA School Safety Patrol Lifesaving Medal are:

Shelby L. Butler, 11, Pershing School, St. Joseph, Missouri; Mark Gilbert, 12, Nathan Davis School, Chicago, Illinois; Shane M. Swiger, 11, Harden Elementary School, Salem, West Virginia; Randolph Wilson, 10, David Weir School, Fairfield, California; and Garth D. Yohn, 11, Stiegel Elementary School, Manheim, Pennsylvania.●

TEHACHAPI BREAKS GROUND ON FLOOD CONTROL PROJECT

HON. WILLIAM M. THOMAS

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, April 29, 1985

● Mr. THOMAS of California. Mr. Speaker, on April 27, 1985, the community of Tehachapi in my district marked a long-awaited occasion when ground was finally broken on a flood control project to protect homes, farms, and businesses in this beautiful mountain valley.

The Tehachapi watershed project, when it is completed, will protect more than 3,000 acres of farmland as well as the city of Tehachapi, and it will improve land and water management throughout the watershed while reducing soil erosion.

On April 27, ground was broken at the Antelope Dam site, and a number of local agencies and individuals worked for many years to make this day possible. The Tehachapi Resource Conservation District, Tehachapi-Commings Water District, city of Tehachapi, and Kern County Water Agency have all put forth a sustained effort to make the Tehachapi watershed project a reality.

For more than 25 years, from the very first feasibility study in 1959, the vision and perseverance of men such as Fred Patterson, Bob Jasper, Karl Backes, Darrell Sorenson, and Stuart Pyle has moved this project forward, inch by inch, through 9 Presidential administrations and 14 Congresses, to the groundbreaking at Antelope Dam.

The current president of the Tehachapi Resource Conservation District, Ernest Schaefer, succeeds the district's first president, J.C. Jacobsen, by nearly 40 years. It has been a long time coming, but I am pleased to tell my colleagues that the commendable efforts of everyone involved have gotten the Tehachapi watershed project underway.

April 27, 1985, is a historic day for Tehachapi. Through the partnership of the local community with the USDA Soil Conservation Service and U.S. Forest Service, Tehachapi will soon have the flood protection it has sought for decades. This partnership of Federal and local governments will yield benefits for many years to come.●

PERSONAL EXPLANATION

HON. JOHN E. GROTBERG

OF ILLINOIS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, April 29, 1985

● Mr. GROTBERG. Mr. Speaker, I was not present and voting during several instances last week. Had I been present, I would have voted in the following way:

On Wednesday, April 24: Rollcall No. 65, "nay."

On Thursday, April 25: Rollcall No. 70, "nay"; rollcall No. 71, "yea"; rollcall No. 72, "yea"; rollcall No. 73, "nay"; rollcall No. 74, "nay"; and rollcall No. 75, "nay."●

TRIBUTE TO WILLIAM C. LYNCH

HON. ROBERT T. MATSUI

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, April 29, 1985

● Mr. MATSUI. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to pay tribute to Mr. William C. Lynch. On March 29, 1985, Bill Lynch officially retired from his position as the Sacramento County Assessor after almost three decades of devoted public service. He will be sorely missed.

Bill Lynch first began working in the assessor's office in 1957. He was elected to the position of Sacramento County Assessor in 1970. Bill has handled and managed the integral and sometimes delicate duties of county assessor with integrity and great distinction.

Health considerations have played a major part in Bill's decision to leave the work he enjoys so much. I know that the entire Sacramento community joins with me in wishing Bill a long and enjoyable retirement.●

GALE BARTOW

HON. IKE SKELTON

OF MISSOURI

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, April 29, 1985

● Mr. SKELTON. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to honor a distinguished educator, Dr. Gale Bartow, who, for the last 14 years, has served as superintendent of the Blue Springs School District and is a past president of the American Association of School Administrators. Dr. Bartow is retiring after a long and distinguished career in education.

Gale Bartow has come to personify the phrase, excellence in education. He administered the R-4 school district, recognized as one of the most respected in the country, and continued to strive for excellence as president of the AASA. His devotion to quality education for Missourians, and Americans, is as heroic an act as performed on any battlefield. As one who believes that education is vital to our national security, I am comforted knowing that educators like Dr. Bartow have played an important part in our educational system.

I know American education will miss Dr. Bartow's leadership. However, I am sure that in retirement he will continue to remain active in the education of our Nation's youth. I ask my colleagues to join me in wishing Dr. Gale Bartow a happy retirement and extending to him congratulations on a job very well done. We thank you, sir.●

CH2M HILL RECEIVES AWARD

HON. RON WYDEN

OF OREGON

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, April 29, 1985

● Mr. WYDEN. Mr. Speaker, today I am pleased to share with my colleagues news of a recent Government award bestowed upon CH2M Hill, Inc., a consulting engineering firm whose headquarters are in Oregon.

CH2M Hill, the seventh largest consulting engineering firm in the Nation, was presented the second annual EPA Administrator's Award for "Outstanding Prime Contractor Achievement" on November 26, 1984. For the second consecutive year CH2M Hill's commitment to involving small-, minority-, and women-owned businesses as subcontractors in EPA-funded work has earned it this recognition.

EPA contracted with CH2M Hill several years ago to manage the Superfund Program dealing with hazardous waste sites in the 29 Western States and territories. Since then, CH2M Hill has successfully sought and obtained the participation of disadvantaged business enterprises, including those run by women and minorities, in its work.

All Americans benefit when groups historically excluded from the business cycle are afforded a greater opportunity to participate. It is through the good work of companies like CH2M Hill that these opportunities are being created.

This is a special award, one which I think CH2M Hill, Inc., should be proud of, and therefore be congratulated.●

IN HONOR OF GREGORY PEKICH

HON. DOUG WALGREN

OF PENNSYLVANIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, April 29, 1985

● Mr. WALGREN. Mr. Speaker, I want to call the attention of the Congress to a very special person. On May 1, Gregory Pekich, a constituent of mine, will be favored by the National Association of Letter Carriers with that organization's National Hero of the Year Award.

Mr. Pekich risked his life in an attempt to rescue a victim from a submerged autombile which had slid into the Monongahela River during a snowstorm. He was driving by the scene, saw that a car had skidded off the freeway and down a 50-foot embankment into the freezing river. He jumped chest deep into the water and, with the help of another passerby, attempted to release the victim from the car. Tragically, the car door and the seatbelt proved to be insurmountable, and the automobile slipped into the river and sank.

The Letter Carriers National Hero of the Year Award is recognition well deserved. On behalf of those we represent, I want to express our appreciation and respect to him for his courageous effort.●

A TRIBUTE TO THE KIWANIS CLUB OF ARCHER ROAD

HON. WILLIAM O. LIPINSKI

OF ILLINOIS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, April 29, 1985

● Mr. LIPINSKI. Mr. Speaker, it is with great pride that I rise before my colleagues to call attention to an outstanding community service organization in the Fifth Congressional District of Illinois, the Kiwanis Club of Archer Road, which will soon be celebrating its 50th anniversary.

Since its inception in May 1935, the Kiwanis Club of Archer Road has been serving the Brighton Park, McKinley Park, and Archer Heights communities of Chicago. The work of this small but dedicated group of men has greatly benefited the entire community. Kiwanians, past and present, have given generously of their time and talents to perform hundreds of youth related activities and raise thousands of dollars.

Some of the many projects of the Archer Road Kiwanis Club include: college scholarships to local high school graduates; an annual awards luncheon for the outstanding graduates of local public and parochial elementary schools; funding of local high school area Key Clubs; collecting and distributing canned goods to local families in need; annually sending 50 local children to the Shrine Circus; purchasing band uniforms and equipment for local high school bands; annually supporting the Kiwanis Plymouth Camp for Crippled Children and constructing a new dormitory at the camp; and raising and donating over $10,000 to Spastic Paralysis Research at a local children's hospital.

The success of the club's activities can be attributed to the fine leadership and guidance of its many presidents. From Walter Wolf, the first president, to John Thompson, the current president, the benefit of the club's 50 years of community service is clearly documented in the many awards bestowed on it by the Kiwanis Illinois-Eastern Iowa District and by Kiwanis International.

Mr. Speaker, I am sure my colleagues will join with me and the residents of the Fifth Congressional District in paying tribute to the Kiwanis Club of Archer Road and thanking them for their outstanding work.●

SMALL BUSINESS INVENTORY SIMPLIFICATION

HON. BYRON L. DORGAN

OF NORTH DAKOTA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, April 29, 1985

● Mr. DORGAN of North Dakota. Mr. Speaker, today I am introducing legislation to correct a serious tax problem facing many small businesses as a result of a U.S. Supreme Court decision, Thor Power Tool Co. v. Commission, 439 U.S. 522 (1979). The Court held, in essence, that if a taxpayer continues to hold excess or obsolete inventory in case a customer may need it in the future in order to keep an old piece of machinery operating, for example, then the business man or woman must value that inventory for tax purposes at its cost to him or her or at its sales price, whichever is lower.

I do not argue with the Court's decision in Thor Power Tool because the Court was just enforcing the law. But the law is flawed in that it does not reflect the reality of actual business practice.

Consider the manufacturer or dealer who stocks many parts, rather than selling them for salvage, in order to better serve customers. After a length of time, the odds that someone will buy a part from this stock of obsolete inventory are remote. However, if this business person does not maintain this stock of old parts, a customer might be forced to dispose of a perfectly good piece of equipment because the necessary part is no longer obtainable.

Now, it is clear that a stock of outdated parts is not worth its initial cost to the dealer. But, under current law, a dealer is not allowed to devalue his her or outdated items in accordance with actual business experience.

The bill I am introducing today attempts to correct this situation. It allows for a writedown of obsolete inventory. It will also help to prevent abuses by eliminating the potential for fluctuating inventory deductions for tax purposes.

For years beginning after December 31, 1984, a small business, which is defined as any domestic trade or business with equity capital of $25 million or less, could elect to writeoff its excess or obsolete inventory in a prescribed, balanced manner. After an item has been in inventory for 4 years, it is completely writtenoff for tax purposes. The writeoff would not begin until the second year after the item is purchased. Thus, The deduction will be taken in equal installments in the second, third, and fourth years.

Enactment of this bill will help to achieve some measure of tax equity and simplification for our small businesses at a time when they can truly use some relief under our tax laws.●

ON U.S. POLICY TOWARD NICARAGUA

HON. JAMES M. JEFFORDS

OF VERMONT

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, April 29, 1985

● Mr. JEFFORDS. Mr. Speaker, during 14 hours of difficult debate, the House recently acted upon the administration's request for aid to the Contras. A strong message was sent to the President declaring that Congress and the American people feel the Contras should not be the main instrument of U.S. policy in the region.

There is some concern that by rejecting at this time both military and humanitarian aid to the rebels, we have pulled the rug out from under the administration's position and thus prevented our Government from dealing from a position of strength. I would argue that this certainly is not the case. This series of votes forcefully demonstrates the necessity of forging a constructive and successful policy with regard to Nicaragua and all of Central America.

It is unrealistic to expect the administration to immediately turn away from its primary instrument of Nicaraguan policy. Nor is it in the best interest of stability in the region for us to ignore the Contras from here on. Therefore, it is imperative that we devise a policy which effects a shift in emphasis from military support of the Contras to responsible concern for the problems facing Honduras and Costa Rica in providing for the refugees and preventing erosion of their own domestic stability.

Our first instrument of foreign policy toward Nicaragua must not be military intervention. We have several, more constructive, alternatives in our arsenal. These include trade concessions, health assistance, agricultural development, Peace Corp programs and support for the democratic opposition within Nicaragua. By not supporting the Contras militarily, we will also be in a better position to coordinate trade sanctions or other means of pressure on the Sandinistas with our European allies, as the European refusal to cooperate with us in the past has been based primarily on their objection to our Nicaraguan policy.

There is considerable reason to believe that Nicaragua will respond to these types of incentives or sanctions. We have traditionally been Nicaragua's primary trading partner, and their economy remains heavily dependent upon foreign trade. The Sandinistas have long indicated their eagerness to increase trade with the United States.

While the Soviet-Cuban connection is clearly an operative force in Nicaragua, there are increasing signs that the Soviet Union is not particularly anxious to become involved in substantial economic commitments to Nicaragua. Cuba and the U.S.S.R. have obviously had some disagreements of late on the nature of their partnership and the extent of Soviet financing to be provided for Cuban endeavors in the Western Hemisphere. The refusal by Castro to attend Chernenko's funeral is symptomatic of less than harmonious relations between the two nations. This provides us with the opportunity to use the promise of improved trade relations and the threat of Western trade sanctions to induce the Sandinistas to live up to their promises of pluralism, personal freedoms and neutrality in regional conflicts.

Diplomatic channels provide numerous opportunities for bringing both pressures and incentives to bear on the Sandinistas. The threat of diplomatic isolation by not only the United States but also the countries of Latin America and Europe would be of great concern to the Nicaraguan Government. Turning to incentives, we are in a very strong position to further the peace process and initiatives of the Contadora group by working for a cease fire in the region. We could then insist that the Sandinistas live up to their original promise of nonalignment. The Contras should not be cut out of the negotiation process, however, it is unreasonable to demand that the Sandinistas deal exclusively with them. A balanced policy requires several prongs, that is, negotiations to which the Contras are a party and negotiations which deal exclusively with United States-Nicaraguan relations and Contadora concerns. We must not ignore the useful role that multilateral organizations and our European allies can play in furthering this goal.

The recent House actions must not be looked on as a defeat for U.S. policy toward Nicaragua. Rather, it must be seen as creating the opportunity for development of a positive, productive and humane policy toward our troubled southern neighbors.●

A TRIBUTE TO DAVID McCARTHY

HON. SILVIO O. CONTE

OF MASSACHUSETTS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, April 29, 1985

● Mr. CONTE. Mr. Speaker, I would like to take this opportunity to pay tribute to David McCarthy, police chief of the town of Greenfield, MA, who will be honored on May 8, 1985, with the Greenfield Rotary Club's Vocational Service Award.

This award is presented to a member of the Greenfield area community who has, through his or her vocation, promoted and developed public service. Chief McCarthy more than deserves this recognition because of his continuing, unselfish efforts on behalf of the youth of the Greenfield area, and particularly for his role in establishing Greenfield's "After Hours Teen Center."

Chief McCarthy's work, with and for our young people, is indeed inspirational. As an officer of the law, he has seen, first hand, the consequences of neglected and uninspired youth. Because of this, Chief McCarthy has worked hard to creatively challenge and channel this vast and valuable resource.

Mr. Speaker, I am honored to be able to represent such a person in Congress, and am extremely pleased to share with you the reasons for his well deserved recognition.●

MRS. LEE GOLDMAN

HON. GARY L. ACKERMAN

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, April 29, 1985

● Mr. ACKERMAN. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask my colleagues in the U.S. House of Representatives to join me now in honoring Mrs. Lew Goldman for her years of dedicated service to the educational endeavors of her community and of Queens County, NY.

Lee Goldman's distinguished career has earned her great respect throughout the borough. Since 1970, she has served as a member of Community School Board 26, in northeast Queens. In 1975, she was voted vice president of the board, and subsequently was elected president for two successive terms.

During the years that Mrs. Goldman devoted her efforts to these offices, she continued her involvement in other commendable activities. Lee Goldman is greatly admired for her consistent concern with a wide scope of community affairs. The long list of civic organizations that have benefited from her wisdom and experience include the Oakland Terrace Civic Association, the Queensborough Library Council, the National Library Week Committee, and the Girl Scout Maple Leaf District.

Despite her dedicated service to these important organizations, Lee Goldman always found time for her devotion to the children, parents, and teachers of District 26. She has chaired the school board's drug abuse education committee, and its capital budget committee, and has served as representative to the consultative council of the central board of education.

For her unstinting service to the community, Lee Goldman has been presented with the Builder of Brotherhood Award from the National Conference of Christians, and Jews, the Community Service Award from Benjamin Cardozo High School, and the 10 Years of Service Award from the New York City Board of Education.

On May 1, Mrs. Goldman will be honored by Community School Board 26 with a special gala testimonial dinner. I ask all my colleagues in the U.S. House of Repesentatives to join me now in honoring Lee Goldman, a woman of extraordinary achievement, and in congratulating her of enriching the schools, the students and the entire community of Queens County.●

PAYING TRIBUTE TO ROBERT MANDERA

HON. DOUG WALGREN

OF PENNSYLVANIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, April 29, 1985

● Mr. WALGREN. Mr. Speaker, it is a great honor for me to call a very special person to the attention of the Congress. Robert Mandera, a citizen from my district, has worked tirelessly on behalf of the American Diabetes Association. On May 1, Mr. Mandera will be honored by the National Association of Letter Carriers and presented with that organization's National Humanitarian Award.

Mr. Mandera has a very personal interest in those with diabetes. His 13-year-old daughter is a diabetic. Each year for the past 7 years, he has spent one weekend conducting his own walkathon, walking from Erie to Pittsburgh—approximately 100 miles—to raise funds for the American Diabetes Association. He alone, through these personal walkathons, has raised over $30,000 for the cause of diabetics.

On behalf of all my constituents, I want to pay tribute to Mr. Mandera's contribution to a very special cause, and say thank you to him for his inspiration and effort to make a difference in the lives of many.●

THE FUROR IS OVER

HON. PATRICIA SCHROEDER

OF COLORADO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, April 29, 1985

● Mrs. SCHROEDER. Mr. Speaker, the furor is over. Ms. Eileen Gardner has resigned her position as Education Assistant in charge of the Office of Education Philosophy and Practice. Yet, we must not so quickly dismiss the significance of her views or the fact of her appointment.

Given Ms. Gardner's statement that the handicapped are responsible for their life situation, I think we should consider the dangers of applying 15th-century beliefs to 20th-century problems.

Should we appoint to the Office of Surgeon General an individual who believes in bloodletting for the cure of disease? Should we look to someone who believes the Earth is flat to head the National Science Foundation? In place of our judicial system, should we revert to a system whereby we submerge the accused in water and, if they drown, declare them guilty?

Ms. Gardner's statements clearly imposed an obsolete philosophy on today's education issues. To our credit, the American people would not stand for it.●

A TRIBUTE TO MAJ. JOHN MERIWEATHER

HON. CHARLES WILSON

OF TEXAS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, April 29, 1985

● Mr. WILSON. Mr. Speaker, there are some who say age is its own reward. Maj. John Meriweather, however, has never been one to stand still waiting to accept the rewards of age. At 89 young and vital years, he is still working full time as an energetic, productive member of the executive staff of Timberland Savings & Loan in Nacogdoches, TX.

This past weekend I joined many of the major's neighbors and coworkers in honoring him with a tribute to his unflagging contributions in time, inspiration and effort to job and community. The history of these contributions spans at least 70 years—more than a lifetime for many of us.

John Meriweather is a veteran of World War I, where he served in France as an infantry soldier, and of World War II where he achieved his rank of major. After retiring from a sales position with the International Shoe Co. at age 65, the major worked for 18 years at Stone Fort National Bank in Nacogdoches. Retirement from that position brought him to his current post as senior vice president and public relations and investment officer at Timerland Savings & Loan.

During these many years, he also found time to head the local Chamber of Commerce, marry and raise a family and, sadly, take care of both an invalid wife and daughter as only a devoted husband and father can.

It goes without saying that this is a man worthy of our respect. He has weathered the horrors of two wars, both the sadness and joys of life and the technological reshaping of his world. Yet after nearly nine decades he continues to meet each day looking forward to new challenges.●

A SALUTE TO NIH

HON. MICHAEL D. BARNES

OF MARYLAND

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, April 29, 1985

● Mr. BARNES. Mr. Speaker, I would like to bring my colleagues' attention to an important event that will be taking place in January 1986 in my district of Montgomery County, MD. That is, a "Salute to the National Institutes of Health," sponored by the Juvenile Diabetes Foundation.

The timing of this event is most appropriate as NIH approaches its 100th birthday in 1987, as is the theme of the salute—"Bethesda, the Healing Well"—blending the concept of the biblical healing well with the location of NIH itself. This will serve to emphasize the striking advances in health care, including innumerable new insights into human disease, for which NIH has been responsible in their laboratories and clinics in Bethesda, MD.

Dr. Lewis Thomas, president emeritus of the Sloan-Kettering Institute for Cancer Research, stated in a recent reference to the National Institutes of Health:

> As social inventions for human betterments go, this one is standing proof that, at least once in awhile, Government possesses the capacity to do something unique, imaginative, useful and altogether right * * *. It has, in short, been a success story from start to finish, although the finish is, I trust, nowhere near. The NIH laboratories are something for the Government to boast about, to dine out on, and to be immensely proud of. It is my hope that the same intelligence and good taste will be displayed for the institution's future as were used to build the magnificent instrument now at hand.

As the Federal agency entrusted with the development and progress of research in the biomedical sciences, NIH has enjoyed the consistent support of Congress. I am sure that we can wholeheartedly agree with Dr. Lewis' sentiments as we celebrate this outstanding achievement.●

THE FRUIT AND FLOWER CHILD CARE CENTER

HON. LES AuCOIN

OF OREGON

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, April 29, 1985

● Mr. AuCOIN. Mr. Speaker, I would like to share with my colleagues the anniversary of a child center in my district which, for the past 100 years, has given a number of children in Oregon an opportunity and positive environment for growth, socially, emotionally, physically, and intellectually. The Fruit and Flower Child Care Center celebrates its anniversary today, April 29, with an alumni organization of more than 10,000 students.

One of the many events which will take place during the anniversary celebration stems back to the origination of the center—in 1885, a group of eight girls began delivering baskets of fruits and flowers to shut-ins and patients in area hospitals. In 1906, the mission began the child care center in response to the growing need for child care, due to the increasing number of women entering the work force. This week, again children will uphold the tradition of visiting local nursing homes with gifts of fruits and flowers just as their founders did 100 years ago.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to commend the Fruit and Flower Child Care Center for their dedication to creating a safe, nuturing, and educational environment for so many children in Oregon for the past 100 years. I hope that the valuable services they provide to the families and communities of Oregon will continue.●

SBA—A SUCCESS

HON. BERKLEY BEDELL

OF IOWA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, April 29, 1985

● Mr. BEDELL. Mr. Speaker, in our current national debate over President Reagan's proposal to kill the Small Business Administration, the voices of America's small business people too often are not heard over the argumentative din among bureaucrats, partisan spokesmen, and representatives of various interest groups.

The Des Moines Register recently printed a meaningful letter from a successful and respected Iowa businessman, John Dodgen, president of Dodgen Industries in Humboldt, IA. Mr. Dodgen's experience provides us with a valuable lesson, and I am pleased to recommend a portion of his letter to my colleagues for their consideration:

These comments are in response to Mr. David Stockman's statement in the Senate Small Business Committee, wherein he said: "The SBA should be abolished. Why should the government subsidize one small business at the expense and in competition with another businessman who has saved his money and invested at his own risk?"

In my opinion, Mr. Stockman's desire to reduce the budget either won't allow him to understand the role that SBA has played in developing and nurturing the small-business enterprise in America, or his biases and views are so perverted that he doesn't want to trouble himself to investigate the absolutely super role SBA has performed in providing the otherwise unavailable seed capital that has literally been the salvation of small business in America and the stimulation of untold millions of jobs which would not be here today without SBA.

In my own company's case, there would be 60 families out of work in Humboldt, without SBA.

As a small businessman, this is the most regrettable letter I ever felt (obliged) to write concerning a government official.●

RECEIVES GOLDEN JUBILEE AWARD

HON. TONY COELHO

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, April 29, 1985

● Mr. COELHO. Mr. Speaker, Sir, at this time I would like to take a moment to recognize one of my more outstanding constituents. In recognition of his 50 years of service to the trucking industry, Opie Wallace was presented with the Golden Jubilee Award by the California Trucking Association at its 1985 annual convention.

This gentleman arrived in Chowchilla, CA in 1935. He took a job hauling sack grain at $2 a day. Ten years later he had saved $5,000 and purchased a truck and trailer, founding Wallace Trucking. Today, Wallace Transport is one of the largest carriers of agricultural products and groceries in the State of California. The success of this company can be directly traced to the hard work and dedication of its founder, Opie Wallace.

Mr. Wallace has devoted a considerable amount of his time to a variety of civic activities and has worked extensively with trade associations involved with the trucking industry. He is a longstanding member of the California Trucking Association, and served as its president in 1979.

I hope you will join with me in congratulating Mr. Wallace on this well deserved award. He is a man who has earned the respect and admiration of his colleagues, and who deserves ours as well. Opie, I thank you for all your efforts on behalf of the trucking industry.●

HONORING THE BISHOP McCORT BASKETBALL BANDWAGON

HON. JOHN P. MURTHA

OF PENNSYLVANIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, April 29, 1985

● Mr. MURTHA. Mr. Speaker, we have seen many examples in recent years of communities pulled together by the dynamic success of sports teams.

We had such an event recently in Johnstown as both the boys and girls basketball teams at Bishop McCort High School pursued State championships.

The boys team, led by Coach Tim Koshute, compiled an overall 25 to 5 record. They won the UPJ Mountain Cats Tournament, the West Central League, the District VI Class AA Championship, and were State finalists in the PIAA Class AA Championship.

The girls team led by Coach Rob Eckenrod, compiled a 27 to 3 record, including winning the Windber Athletic Boosters Association Tournament, the Steel City/Crusher Classic Tournament, and were District VI Class AA Champions, and PIAA Class AA State Champions.

What is most important is that from knowing many of these families of these young athletes and many of the youngsters themselves, that through this experience they helped to shape the character, dedication, and hard-working attitude that will translate into success for them not only in athletics, but in the classroom and in their working careers and family development.

I extend my best wishes to all the team members, support staff, and coaches, and thank them for the thrill they gave to our community. It is an experience we will all remember.●

BANQUET MARKING REV. FRANCIS A. DOBRYDNIO'S RETIREMENT

HON. PAUL E. KANJORSKI

OF PENNSYLVANIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, April 29, 1985

● Mr. KANJORSKI. Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to bring to your attention the contributions of an active and valued member of the Hazleton, PA, area. Rev. Francis A. Dobrydnio is stepping down as pastor of St. Stanislaus Church in Hazleton after a long career of service to his church and the community. He will be succeeded by Rev. Thomas D. Skotek, who is currently pastor at St. Casimir's Church in Freeland, PA.

Reverend Dobrydnio was ordained in 1943 and had served as an assistant pastor at Most Precious Blood Roman Catholic Church in Hazleton before coming to St. Stan's. As you may recall, Father Dobrydnio also recently returned from Calcutta, India where he spent 5 days with Nobel Peace Prize winner, Mother Teresa. I had the pleasure of bringing his trip to your attention here in the House just a few weeks ago.

Francis A. Dobrydnio was honored at a special banquet last week. His contributions to the parish and the community have earned him the well-deserved appreciation and affection of all who know him. Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to bring this fine gentleman to your attention once again.●

TRIBUTE TO FRANCIS X. BATTERSBY

HON. RAYMOND J. McGRATH

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, April 29, 1985

● Mr. McGRATH. Mr. Speaker, I would like to take a moment to recognize Mr. Francis X. Battersby, a distinguished public servant.

On the evening of May 3, 1985, Walter Ruina, president of the H.H. Arnold chapter of the Air Force Association, named Francis X. Battersby as their man of the year. The chapter chose to honor Frank as an individual that has spent his life fulfilling the spirit of President John F. Kennedy's request for Americans to "Ask not what your country can do for you, but, rather, what you can do for your country."

Frank began his career of service in 1939 when he joined the Sperry Gyroscope Co. He then moved into Government service as both a member of the military and as a high ranking civilian employee of NASA. During the past 25 years Frank has been a driving force within the Air Force Association. He has been a leader in promoting the association's objectives to insure that the public is informed as to the objectives and problems of the Air Force and our country.

The chapter on that gala evening said to Francis X. Battersby, "well done."●

KEEPING DEFICIT REDUCTION THE TOP PRIORITY

HON. WILLIS D. GRADISON, JR.

OF OHIO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, April 29, 1985

● Mr. GRADISON. Mr. Speaker, I take this opportunity to call to the attention of my colleagues an excellent essay by our former colleague, Barber Conable. Writing in the April 29, 1985, issue of "U.S. News and World Report," Barber hits the deficit problem nail squarely on its head. His article is especially timely in view of the President's national address last week on the same topic.

As Barber points out, "It's hard to get good government with a bad budget plan," and he also argues that we should not permit tax reform to distract us from the most important task—cutting the deficit—even if the dirty work of deficit reduction "involves unnecessarily painful decisions."

The essay follows:

THE NEW BREED VS. THE PURITANS

(By Barber Conable)

Do deficits make a difference?

There's a new breed of politicans who say they don't—that you can have it all and not pay for it. Don't suffer, they say; just vote for tax cuts, new programs, more of everything for everybody, and enjoy the satisfaction of knowing you're doing the right thing. Growth is joy, and the avenue to growth is to use every tool of Government to stimulate the economy.

Until now, the problem has been America's Puritan heritage—that dour, unhappy feeling that goes with having to exercise restraint for fear of the hangover. Politicans of this tradition see a downside of gloom and pain when they could be focusing on a rosy future.

Is the new breed of politicians exercising the power of positive thinking, or are they living in a fool's paradise?

We've come to the time of year when we should be considering how to pay for our own governance rather than sending the bill to our grandchildren. Among the oldtimers, budgeting is the real stuff of Government in that it requires setting priorities and making a serious effort to get program spending and tax revenue into the same monetary ballpark.

The Senate Budget Committee, after a good deal of anguish and some unpopular decisions, has worked out a compromise with the President that is at least $52 billion closer to that ballpark, and it is to be complimented for its effort. The House Budget Committee can be expected to react to some of the things the Senate Budget Committee suggests, but in a bicameral legislature each house is entitled to seek its own formula. Even in the Senate a lot remains to be done, and a certain amount of disorderliness will occur on the Senate floor as next year's candidates try to back away from some of the toughest budget decisions. Expect interest groups to be active—and who can blame them?—as they fight for their share of the budget pie. If any one of them gets a bigger piece, somebody else, now or later, is going to pay for it by receiving less.

That's what it's all about, tradeoffs. If people are more productive, the pie may grow, but there are limits to growth. Low taxes don't guarantee growth if the Government is borrowing so much of the American people's (and the foreigners') savings that high interest rates become a restraining factor. And if the dollar is losing value because the Government is printing the money rather than borrowing it, thus taking savings indirectly, the nominal resulting growth is really cancerous.

You have to pay for what you get; it's as simple as that. And hope that what you're paying for isn't snake oil. Tough decisions have to be made at times other than budget season, but it's hard to get good government with a bad budget plan. So those who believe in representative government should be giving Congress their undivided attention now for maximum effect.

Unfortunately, tax reform is being used as a distraction by those who believe budgeting involves unnecessarily painful decisions. Taxes are important, too, but the ultimate burdens on the people are determined more by what we spend than by how we tax. Unless you have a confiscatory tax system (we don't) you normally can't raise more money by reducing taxes. Already, some people are saying we shouldn't get hung up on "static revenue neutrality" in designing the new tax plan, which is a cute way of saying we should cut taxes further to stimulate the economy. How can you have a more stimulative budget policy than to borrow almost a quarter of what you spend, which is what we're doing, and that at a time of relative prosperity?

It may appear unpleasant or puritanical, but most of the real decisions of Government are tough ones. True growth usually results from a willingness to defer some degree of current pleasure and to invest the savings from the deferral in a better future. If this sounds simplistic, at least it's not as dangerous as eating the seed corn.●

IN HONOR OF THE SESQUICENTENNIAL CELEBRATION OF HIGHLAND TOWNSHIP, MI

HON. BOB CARR

OF MICHIGAN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, April 29, 1985

● Mr. CARR. Mr. Speaker, it gives me great pleasure today to recognize Michigan's Highland Township, which is proudly celebrating its 150th anniversary this year. As Highland's representative in Congress, it is an honor for me to officially record Highland's sesquicentennial in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

At the time of its founding in 1835, Highland was so named because it was thought to be the highest land in the settled part of Michigan. The township was organized by an act of the territorial legislature on March 17, 1835.

One of the first buildings in Highland Township was the school, built the same year as the town was founded, a symbol of the historic dedication of Michigan's people to education. Soon after, several churches were organized to satisfy the spiritual and social needs of the early Highland citizens. These citizens were quite civic minded: one action they took at their first township meeting was to raise $25 for the support of the poor during the current year.

In 1871, the Pere Marquette Railway was complete and brought an impetus to trade to the villages of Highland and Clyde. The small villages had schools, stores, and post offices. Highland also had a grain warehouse and a pickle factory. Clyde offered a lumber yard, offices for Western Union and the American Express Co.

By 1950, Highland Township consisted of four hamlet-type communities: Highland, East Highland, West Highland, and Clyde. The population had grown to about 4,000 and farming was no longer the principal way of life. It had become a rural suburban area, with only a handful farmers and a few small industries.

As the 1960's and 1970's arrived. Highland became more and more attractive to newcomers seeking a country setting near more urbanized areas. The population more than doubled, increasing to 13,476 in 1976, and 16,958 in the 1980's. It is expected that Highland's population may exceed 25,000 by the year 2000.

It is an honor for me to recognize the people of Highland Township, who continue to enjoy and preserve small-town and rural life today, just as fellow township residents did before them. Highland's people have worked hard to make their sesquicentennial a yaer to remember and cherish. I am happy to join them in marking this anniversary, and in looking back over their history as a township. They share in a rich heritage of the thriving towns and villages all across America, where much has grown and changed, but much has remained the same.●

HONORING THE MEMORY OF UNION MEMBER MIKE QUEVEDO

HON. ESTEBAN EDWARD TORRES

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, April 29, 1985

● Mr. TORRES. Mr. Speaker, on May 3, 1985 the Laborers' International Union of North America, local 300, will be dedicating their newly acquired building in the memory of Mike Quevedo, Sr. This honor is very fitting for a man whose dedication to the service of working men and women will be long remembered.

Mike Quevedo joined local 300 in 1938 and served as the secretary-treasurer and business manager. His record as a labor leader shows his understanding of the plight of working people and his compassion toward his fellow man.

He is survived by his wife, Josephine and three children, Mike, Jr., Maragret and Ricardo. His son Mike is following in his footsteps by serving as the current business manager for local 300.

Mr. Speaker, the dedication of this new building in honor of Mike Quevedo is a fitting memorial to a man who devoted his life to the service of his fellow laborers. I ask my colleagues to join me in giving our best wishes to the family of Mike Quevedo, Sr., who can be very proud of the contributions of his remarkable man.●

SENATE COMMITTEE MEETINGS

Title IV of Senate Resolution 4, agreed to by the Senate on February 4, 1977, calls for establishment of a system for a computerized schedule of all meetings and hearings of Senate committees, subcommittees, joint committees, and committees of conference. This title requires all such committees to notify the Office of the Senate Daily Digest—designated by the Rules Committee—of the time, place, and purpose of the meetings, when scheduled, and any cancellations or changes in the meetings as they occur.

As an additional procedure along with the computerization of this information, the Office of the Senate Daily Digest will prepare this information for printing in the Extensions of Remarks section of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD on Monday and Wednesday of each week.

Any changes in committee scheduling will be indicated by placement of an asterisk to the left of the name of the unit conducting such meetings.

Meetings scheduled for Tuesday, April 30, 1985, may be found in the Daily Digest of today's RECORD.

MEETINGS SCHEDULED

MAY 1

9:00 a.m.

Commerce, Science, and Transportation
Communications Subcommittee
To hold hearings on proposed legislation authorizing funds for the National Telecommunications and Information Administration.
SR-485

*Judiciary
To hold hearings on pending nominations.
SD-226

9:30 a.m.

Appropriations
Labor, Health and Human Services, Education, and Related Agencies Subcommittee
To hold hearings on proposed budget estimates for fiscal year 1986 for the Departments of Labor, Health and Human Services, Education, and certain related agencies.
SD-116

Appropriations
Commerce, Justice, State, the Judiciary, and Related Agencies Subcommittee
To hold hearings on proposed budget estimates for fiscal year 1986 for the Supreme Court of the United States, and the U.S. district courts.
S-146, Capitol

Banking, Housing, and Urban Affairs
To hold oversight hearings on recent changes in the financial services industry.
SD-538

Commerce, Science, and Transportation
Consumer Subcommittee
To hold hearings on proposed legislation authorizing funds for the Consumer Product Safety Commission.
SR-253

Veterans' Affairs
To hold oversight hearings on the Veterans' Administration home loan guaranty program.
SR-418

10:00 a.m.

Agriculture, Nutrition, and Forestry
To hold hearings to conduct an analysis of agriculture policy options for 1985 farm legislation.
SR-328A

Appropriations
Defense Subcommittee
Closed briefing on Afghanistan.
S-407, Capitol

Appropriations
HUD-Independent Agencies Subcommittee
To hold hearings on proposed budget estimates for fiscal year 1986 for the Department of Housing and Urban Development and certain independent agencies.
SD-124

Appropriations
Transportation and Related Agencies Subcommittee
To hold hearings on proposed budget estimates for fiscal year 1986 for the Department of Transportation and related agencies.
SD-138

Armed Services
To hold hearings on the President's Chemical Warfare Review Commission.
SR-222

Energy and Natural Resources
Business meeting, to consider the nominations of Helmut A. Merklein, of the District of Columbia, to be Administrator of the Energy Information Administration, Theodore J. Garrish, of Virginia, to be Assistant Secretary of Energy for Congressional, Intergovernmental and Public Affairs, J. Michael Farrell, of the District of Columbia, to be General Counsel of the Department of Energy, and Joseph F. Salgado, of California, to be Under Secretary of Energy, and other pending business; to be followed by hearings on S. 979, to extend the expiration date of titles I and II of the Energy Policy and Conservation Act.
SD-366

Environment and Public Works
Business meeting, to mark up S. 53 and S. 652, bills authorizing funds for programs of the Clean Water Act, and other related measures.
SD-406

Foreign Relations
To hold hearings on the nomination of Vernon A. Walters, of Florida, to be the U.S. Representative to the United Nations with the rank and status of Ambassador, and the U.S. Representative in the Security Council of the United Nations.
SD-419

Judiciary
To hold hearings on S. 473, to impose a temporary moratorium on hostile takeovers of domestic petroleum corporations.
SD-226

2:00 p.m.
Appropriations
Treasury, Postal Service, and General Government Subcommittee
To hold hearings on proposed budget estimates for fiscal year 1986 for the General Services Administration, and the National Park Service of the Department of the Interior regarding the White House.
SD-138

Select on Intelligence
Closed business meeting, to resume markup of proposed legislation authorizing funds for fiscal year 1986 for the intelligence community.
SH-219

Conferees
On H.R. 1869, to repeal the contemporaneous recordkeeping requirements added to the Tax Reform Act of 1984.
H-208, Capitol

MAY 2

9:00 a.m.
Armed Services
Closed briefing on the U.S.-U.S.S.R. arms negotiations on strategic offensive forces.
SR-222

9:30 a.m.
Agriculture, Nutrition, and Forestry
Nutrition Subcommittee
To hold hearings on proposed legislation authorizing funds for certain child nutrition programs.
SR-328A

Appropriations
Labor, Health and Human Services, Education, and Related Agencies Subcommittee
To hold hearings on proposed budget estimates for fiscal year 1986 for the Departments of Labor, Health and Human Services, Education, and certain related agencies.
SD-116

Banking, Housing, and Urban Affairs
Securities Subcommittee
To hold hearings on S. 936, to provide improved protection for investors in the Government securities market, and related measures.
SD-538

Rules and Administration
To hold hearings on Senate Joint Resolution 81, to provide for the appointment of Barnabas McHenry as a citizen regent of the Board of Regents of the Smithsonian Institution, and proposed legislation authorizing funds for fiscal year 1986 for the Federal Election Commission.
SR-301

10:00 a.m.
Appropriations
Defense Subcommittee
To hold hearings on proposed budget estimates for fiscal year 1986 for certain defense programs, focusing on Navy aircraft procurement and research, development, technology and engineering.
SD-192

Appropriations
HUD-Independent Agencies Subcommittee
To hold hearings on proposed budget estimates for fiscal year 1986 for the Department of Housing and Urban Development and certain independent agencies.
SD-124

Environment and Public Works
Business meeting, to mark up S. 124, authorizing funds through fiscal year 1989 for programs of the Safe Drinking Water Act, including public water systems and protection of underground sources of drinking water.
SD-406

Foreign Relations
To resume hearings on American policy toward South Africa.
SD-419

Judiciary
Business meeting, on pending calendar business.
SD-226

Labor and Human Resources
Children, Family, Drugs, and Alcoholism Subcommittee
To hold hearings on S. 140, Children's Justice Act.
SD-430

Select on Indian Affairs
Business meeting, to mark up S. 277, authorizing funds through fiscal year 1989 for Indian health care programs.
SD-342

2:00 p.m.
Appropriations
Interior and Related Agencies Subcommittee
To hold hearings on proposed budget estimates for fiscal year 1986 for territorial affairs, Department of the Interior.
SD-138

Armed Services
Military Construction Subcommittee
To hold hearings on base closures.
SR-222

Commerce, Science, and Transportation
Science, Techology, and Space Subcommittee
To resume hearings on the effect of new technologies on industrial competitiveness.
SR-253

MAY 3

9:30 a.m.
Energy and Natural Resources
To hold hearings on the nominations of Eric Reichl, of Connecticut, Tom Corcoran, of Illinois, and Paul W. MacAvoy, of New York, each to be a member of the Board of Directors of the U.S. Synthetic Fuels Corporation.
SD-366

Finance
International Trade Subcommittee
To hold hearings on S. 942, to remove trade barriers to U.S. exports of telecommunications equipment and services, and S. 728, to prohibit the entry of Japanese telecommunications products into the United States until Japanese markets are open to U.S. telecommunications goods.
SD-215

Joint Economic
To hold hearings on the employment/unemployment situation for April.
2359 Rayburn Building

10:00 a.m.
Commerce, Science, and Transportation
To hold hearings on the nomination of Douglas A. Riggs, of Alaska, to be General Counsel of the Department of Commerce, to be followed by hearings in conjunction with the National Ocean Policy Study on S. 959, authorizing funds for fiscal years 1986 through 1990 for the Coastal Zone Management Act, and S. 990, authorizing funds for fiscal years 1986 and 1987 for ocean programs of the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration, Department of Commerce.
SR-253

MAY 6

9:30 a.m.
Commerce, Science, and Transportation
Surface Transportation Subcommittee
To hold hearings on proposed legislation authorizing funds for rail safety programs of the Department of Transportation.
SR-253

Energy and Natural Resources
Energy Regulation and Conservation Subcommittee
To hold hearings on S. 410, to repeal the Commercial and Apartment Conservation Service.
SD-366

10:00 a.m.
*Commerce, Science, and Transportation
Merchant Marine Subcommittee
To hold hearings on S. 664, to facilitate the competitiveness of exports of U.S. agricultural commodities.
SR-232

2:00 p.m.
Commerce, Science, and Transportation
To hold hearings in conjunction with the National Ocean Policy Study on S. 958, authorizing funds for fiscal years 1986 and 1987 for programs of the Magnuson Fishery Conservation and Management Act, and S. 991, authorizing funds for fiscal years 1986 and 1987 for fisheries programs of the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration.
SR-253

MAY 7

9:30 a.m.
Appropriations
Labor, Health and Human Services, Education, and Related Agencies Subcommittee
To hold hearings on proposed budget estimates for fiscal year 1986 for the Departments of Labor, Health and Human Services, Education, and certain related agencies.
SD-116

Rules and Administration
To hold hearings on S. 43, to grant line item veto authority to the President on appropriation bills.
SR-301

Veterans' Affairs
To hold hearings on S. 6, S. 875, and S. 876, bills to clarify and improve certain health-care programs and services provided and administered by the Veterans' Administration, and related health legislation affecting veterans.
SR-418

10:00 a.m.
Environment and Public Works
Business meeting, to consider pending calendar business.
SD-406

2:00 p.m.
Appropriations
Interior and Related Agencies Subcommittee
To hold hearings on proposed budget estimates for fiscal year 1986 for the Indian Health Service, Department of Health and Human Services.
SD-138

MAY 8

9:30 a.m.
Appropriations
Labor, Health and Human Services, Education, and Related Agencies Subcommittee
To hold hearings on proposed budget estimates for fiscal year 1986 for the Departments of Labor, Health and Human Services, Education, and certain related agencies.
SD-116

Labor and Human Resources
To hold hearings on the nominations of Marshall B. Babson, of Connecticut, and Wilford W. Johansen, of California, each to be a member of the National Labor Relations Board.
SD-430

Rules and Administration
Business meeting, to consider Senate Joint Resolution 81, to provide for the appointment of Barnabas McHenry as a citizen regent of the Board of Regents of the Smithsonian Institution, proposed legislation authorizing funds for fiscal year 1986 for the Federal Election Commission, and other legislative and administrative business.
SR-301

10:00 a.m.
Select on Intelligence
Closed business meeting, to resume markup of proposed legislation authorizing funds for fiscal year 1986 for the intelligence community.
SH-219

2:00 p.m.
Appropriations
Treasury, Postal Service, and General Government Subcommittee
To hold hearings on proposed budget estimates for fiscal year 1986 for the Office of Management and Budget, including the Office of Federal Procurement Policy.
SD-124

MAY 9

9:30 a.m.
Appropriations
Labor, Health and Human Services, Education, and Related Agencies Subcommittee
To hold hearings on proposed budget estimates for fiscal year 1986 for the Departments of Labor, Health and Human Services, Education, and certain related agencies.
SD-116

Veterans' Affairs
Business meeting, to mark up S. 6, S. 875, S. 876, bills to clarify and improve certain health care programs and services provided and administered by the Veterans' Administration, and related proposals, and S. 367, to provide for judicial review of certain administrative decisions of the VA, to codify certain VA adjudication procedures, to improve the VA appeals process, to require the VA to comply with certain rulemaking procedures, and to provide for reasonable fees to attorneys serving as legal counsel for veterans.
SR-418

10:00 a.m.
Environment and Public Works
Business meeting, to consider pending calendar business.
SD-406

2:00 p.m.
Appropriations
Interior and Related Agencies Subcommittee
To hold hearings on proposed budget estimates for fiscal year 1986 for the Bureau of Land Management (including the land and water conservation fund), Department of the Interior.
SD-138

Energy and Natural Resources
Energy Research and Development Subcommittee
To resume oversight hearings on proposed budget requests for fiscal year 1986 for programs of the Department of Energy, focusing on fusion energy programs.
SD-366

MAY 10

9:30 a.m.
Energy and Natural Resources
Energy Research and Development Subcommittee
To continue oversight hearings on proposed budget requests for fiscal year 1986 for programs of the Department of Energy, focusing on conservation and renewable programs.
SD-366

Finance
Health Subcommittee
To hold hearings on health promotion and disease prevention strategies for Medicare beneficiaries.
SD-215

10:00 a.m.
Environment and Public Works
Water Resources Subcommittee
To hold hearings on S. 366 and S. 534, bills to authorize the U.S. Army Corps of Engineers to construct various projects for improvements to rivers and harbors of the United States, and related proposals.
SD-406

MAY 13

10:00 a.m.
Foreign Relations
To hold joint hearings with the Committee on the Judiciary on international terrorism and narcotic trafficking.
SD-419

Judiciary
To hold joint hearings with the Committee on Foreign Relations on international terrorism and narcotic trafficking.
SD-419

2:00 p.m.
Energy and Natural Resources
Energy Research and Development Subcommittee
To resume oversight hearings on proposed budget requests for fiscal year 1986 for programs of the Department of Energy, focusing on nuclear energy programs and nuclear waste activities.
SD-366

MAY 14

9:30 a.m.
Appropriations
Labor, Health and Human Services, Education, and Related Agencies Subcommittee
To hold hearings on proposed budget estimates for fiscal year 1986 for the Departments of Labor, Health and Human Services, Education, and certain related agencies.
SD-116

Energy and Natural Resources
Energy Regulation and Conservation Subcommittee
To hold oversight hearings on automobile fuel economy standards.
SD-366

10:00 a.m.
Appropriations
Interior and Related Agencies Subcommittee
To hold hearings on proposed budget estimates for fiscal year 1986 for the Energy Information Administration, and the Economic Regulatory Administration, Department of Energy.
SD-138

Appropriations
Legislative Branch Subcommittee
To hold hearings on proposed budget estimates for fiscal year 1986 for the Legislative Branch of the Federal Government.
S-128, Capitol

Foreign Relations
To continue joint hearings with the Committee on the Judiciary on international terrorism and narcotic trafficking.
SD-419

Judiciary
To continue joint hearings with the Committee on Foreign Relations on international terrorism and narcotic trafficking.
SD-419

10:30 a.m.
Governmental Affairs
Intergovernmental Relations Subcommittee
To resume hearings on S. 483, to ensure that the Federal Government assume the full cost of legislating and regulating Federal purposes and mandates.
SD-342

MAY 15

9:30 a.m.
*Appropriations
Defense Subcommittee
To hold hearings on proposed budget estimate for fiscal year 1986 for certain defense programs, focusing on Army modernization.
SD-192

Appropriations
Labor, Health and Human Services, Education, and related Agencies Subcommittee
To hold hearings on proposed budget estimates for fiscal year 1986 for the Departments of Labor, Health and Human Services, Education, and related agencies.
SD-116

10:00 a.m.
Foreign Relations
To continue joint hearings with the Committee on the Judiciary on international terrorism and narcotic trafficking.
SD-419

Judiciary
To continue joint hearings with the Committee on Foreign Relations on international terrorism and narcotic trafficking.
SD-419

MAY 16

9:30 a.m.
Commerce, Science, and Transportation
Business meeting, to consider pending calendar business.
SR-253
Labor and Human Resources
Handicapped Subcommittee
To hold hearings on S. 415, the Handicapped Children's Protection Act.
SD-430

10:00 a.m.
Appropriations
Interior and Related Agencies Subcommittee
To hold hearings on proposed budget estimates for fiscal year 1986 for fossil energy.
SD-138
Appropriations
Legislative Branch Subcommittee
To resume hearings on proposed budget estimates for fiscal year 1986 for the Legislative Branch of the Federal Government.
S-128, Capitol
Environment and Public Works
Water Resources Subcommittee
To resume hearings on S. 366 and S. 534, bills to authorize the U.S. Army Corps of Engineers to construct various projects for improvements to rivers and harbors of the United States, and related proposals.
SD-406

2:00 p.m.
Energy and Natural Resources
Energy Research and Development Subcommittee
To hold hearings to discuss the Department of Energy's prospective report to Congress on emerging clean-coal technologies.
SD-366

MAY 17

9:30 a.m.
Commerce, Science, and Transportation
Surface Transportation Subcommittee
To hold hearings on the deregulation of surface freight forwarders.
SR-253

MAY 21

10:00 a.m.
Appropriations
Interior and Related Agencies Subcommittee
To hold hearings on proposed budget estimates for fiscal year 1986 for the Holocaust Memorial Council, Minerals Management Service, Department of the Interior.
SD-138

2:00 p.m.
Appropriations
Legislative Branch Subcommittee
To resume hearings on proposed budget estimates for fiscal year 1986 for the Legislative Branch of the Federal Government.
S-128, Capitol

MAY 22

2:00 p.m.
Appropriations
Interior and Related Agencies Subcommittee
To hold hearings on proposed budget estimates for fiscal year 1986 for Naval Petroleum Reserves, and fossil energy.
SD-138

MAY 23

10:00 a.m.
Labor and Human Resources
Children, Family, Drugs, and Alcoholism Subcommittee
To hold hearings on efforts to locate missing children.
SD-430

JUNE 4

9:30 a.m.
Energy and Natural Resources
Energy Regulations and Conservation Subcommittee
To hold oversight hearings on the impact of imported petroleum products on the domestic petroleum industry.
SD-366

JUNE 6

9:30 a.m.
Energy and Natural Resources
Natural Resources Development and Production Subcommittee
To hold oversight hearings on the impact of coal imports on the domestic coal industry.
SD-366

JUNE 10

2:00 p.m.
Energy and Natural Resources
Energy Research and Development Subcommittee
To resume oversight hearings on proposed budget requests for fiscal year 1986 for programs of the Department of Energy, focusing on fossil energy programs.
SD-366

JUNE 11

9:30 a.m.
Labor and Human Resources
To hold oversight hearings on the implementation of the Orphan Drug Act (P.L. 97-414), focusing on section 7(b) relating to radiation-cancer liability.
SD-430

10:00 a.m.
Energy and Natural Resources
Water and Power Subcommittee
To hold hearings on S. 403, to revise requirements with respect to the issuance of licenses for existing hydroelectric facilities, and S. 426, to provide for more protection to electric consumers.
SD-366

JUNE 12

9:30 a.m.
Labor and Human Resources
To continue oversight hearings on the implementation of the Orphan Drug Act (P.L. 97-414), focusing on section 7(b) relating to radiation-cancer liability.
SD-430

JUNE 18

9:30 a.m.
Energy and Natural Resources
Energy Regulation and Conservation Subcommittee
To hold oversight hearings on the current status of and factors affecting the natural gas market.
SD-366

OCTOBER 1

11:00 a.m.
Veterans' Affairs
To hold hearings to review the legislative priorities of the American Legion.
SD-106

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES—Tuesday, April 30, 1985

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Reverend William R. Grady, St. Mary's Catholic Church, Muncie, IN, offered the following prayer:

God, our Creator, we pray, direct our actions by Your holy inspiration. We seek Your wisdom and Your guidance in the matters of state which will be considered today.

Lord, we sincerely ask Your blessing upon those entrusted with leadership and authority in government. Leadership of service and sacrifice; authority exercised as a commitment to the common good.

And, "May the Lord support us all the day long, till the shadows lengthen and the evening comes, and the busy world is hushed and the fever of life is o'er and our work is done. Then in His mercy may He grant us a safe lodging, a holy rest, and peace at last. Amen."—John Henry Newman.

THE JOURNAL

The SPEAKER. The Chair has examined the Journal of the last day's proceedings and announces to the House his approval thereof.

Pursuant to clause 1, rule I, the Journal stands approved.

Mr. SAXTON. Mr. Speaker, pursuant to clause 1, rule I, I demand a vote on agreeing to the Speaker's approval of the Journal.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the Chair's approval of the Journal.

The question was taken; and the Speaker announced that the ayes appeared to have it.

Mr. SAXTON. Mr. Speaker, I object to the vote on the ground that a quorum is not present and make the point of order that a quorum is not present.

The SPEAKER. Evidently a quorum is not present.

The Sergeant at Arms will notify absent Members.

The vote was taken by electronic device, and there were—yeas 231, nays 172, answered "present" 1, not voting 29, as follows:

[Roll No. 80]

YEAS—231

Ackerman	Barnes	Bosco
Addabbo	Bates	Boucher
Akaka	Bedell	Boxer
Alexander	Bennett	Breaux
Anderson	Berman	Brooks
Andrews	Bevill	Broomfield
Annunzio	Biaggi	Brown (CA)
Anthony	Boland	Broyhill
Aspin	Boner (TN)	Bruce
Atkins	Bonior (MI)	Bryant
AuCoin	Bonker	Burton (CA)
Barnard	Borski	Bustamante
Byron	Hoyer	Price
Callahan	Hubbard	Rahall
Carper	Hughes	Rangel
Carr	Hutto	Ray
Coelho	Jenkins	Reid
Coleman (TX)	Johnson	Richardson
Collins	Jones (NC)	Robinson
Cooper	Jones (OK)	Rodino
Coyne	Jones (TN)	Roe
Crockett	Kanjorski	Rose
Daniel	Kaptur	Rostenkowski
Darden	Kastenmeier	Rowland (GA)
Daschle	Kennelly	Roybal
de la Garza	Kildee	Russo
Dellums	Kleczka	Sabo
Derrick	Kolter	Savage
Dicks	Kostmayer	Scheuer
Dingell	LaFalce	Schneider
Dixon	Lantos	Schumer
Donnelly	Leath (TX)	Sharp
Dorgan (ND)	Lehman (FL)	Shelby
Dowdy	Leland	Sisisky
Downey	Levin (MI)	Skelton
Durbin	Levine (CA)	Slattery
Dwyer	Lipinski	Smith (FL)
Dyson	Lloyd	Smith (IA)
Early	Long	Snyder
Eckart (OH)	Lowry (WA)	Solarz
Edgar	Luken	Spratt
Edwards (CA)	Lundine	St Germain
English	MacKay	Staggers
Erdreich	Manton	Stallings
Evans (IL)	Markey	Stenholm
Fascell	Martinez	Stokes
Fazio	Matsui	Stratton
Feighan	Mavroules	Studds
Flippo	Mazzoli	Swift
Florio	McCurdy	Synar
Foglietta	McHugh	Tallon
Ford (TN)	Mica	Tauzin
Fowler	Mikulski	Thomas (GA)
Frank	Miller (CA)	Torres
Frost	Mineta	Torricelli
Fuqua	Mollohan	Traficant
Garcia	Montgomery	Traxler
Gaydos	Moody	Valentine
Gejdenson	Morrison (CT)	Vento
Gephardt	Mrazek	Visclosky
Gibbons	Murphy	Volkmer
Glickman	Murtha	Walgren
Gonzalez	Natcher	Watkins
Gordon	Neal	Waxman
Gray (IL)	Nelson	Weiss
Gray (PA)	Nichols	Wheat
Guarini	Nowak	Whitley
Hall (OH)	Oakar	Whitten
Hall, Ralph	Oberstar	Wilson
Hall, Sam	Obey	Wirth
Hamilton	Olin	Wise
Hatcher	Owens	Wolpe
Hayes	Panetta	Wright
Hefner	Pease	Wyden
Hertel	Pepper	Yates
Hopkins	Perkins	Yatron
Howard	Pickle	Young (MO)

NAYS—172

Archer	Cheney	Dickinson
Armey	Clay	DioGuardi
Badham	Clinger	Dornan (CA)
Bartlett	Coats	Dreier
Barton	Cobey	Duncan
Bateman	Coble	Eckert (NY)
Bentley	Coleman (MO)	Emerson
Bereuter	Combest	Evans (IA)
Bilirakis	Conte	Fawell
Billey	Coughlin	Fiedler
Boehlert	Courter	Fields
Boulter	Craig	Fish
Brown (CO)	Crane	Franklin
Burton (IN)	Dannemeyer	Frenzel
Campbell	Daub	Gallo
Carney	Davis	Gekas
Chandler	DeLay	Gilman
Chappie	DeWine	Gingrich
Gradison	McEwen	Schuette
Green	McGrath	Schulze
Gregg	McKernan	Sensenbrenner
Gunderson	McKinney	Shaw
Hammerschmidt	McMillan	Shumway
Hansen	Meyers	Shuster
Hartnett	Michel	Sikorski
Hawkins	Miller (OH)	Siljander
Hendon	Miller (WA)	Skeen
Henry	Molinari	Slaughter
Hiler	Monson	Smith (NE)
Hillis	Moore	Smith (NH)
Holt	Moorhead	Smith (NJ)
Horton	Morrison (WA)	Smith, Denny
Hunter	Myers	Smith, Robert
Hyde	Nielson	Snowe
Ireland	O'Brien	Solomon
Jacobs	Oxley	Spence
Kasich	Packard	Stangeland
Kindness	Parris	Strang
Kolbe	Pashayan	Stump
Kramer	Penny	Sundquist
Lagomarsino	Petri	Sweeney
Latta	Porter	Swindall
Leach (IA)	Pursell	Tauke
Lent	Quillen	Thomas (CA)
Lewis (CA)	Regula	Vander Jagt
Lewis (FL)	Ridge	Vucanovich
Lightfoot	Rinaldo	Walker
Lott	Ritter	Weber
Lowery (CA)	Roberts	Whitehurst
Lujan	Roemer	Whittaker
Lungren	Rogers	Wolf
Madigan	Roth	Wortley
Marlenee	Roukema	Wylie
Martin (IL)	Rowland (CT)	Young (AK)
Martin (NY)	Rudd	Young (FL)
McCain	Saxton	Zschau
McCandless	Schaefer
McCollum	Schroeder

ANSWERED "PRESENT"—1

Dymally

NOT VOTING—29

Applegate	Heftel	Moakley
Beilenson	Huckaby	Ortiz
Boggs	Jeffords	Seiberling
Chappell	Kemp	Stark
Conyers	Lehman (CA)	Taylor
Edwards (OK)	Livingston	Towns
Foley	Loeffler	Udall
Ford (MI)	Mack	Weaver
Goodling	McDade	Williams
Grotberg	Mitchell

□ 1220

Mr. DREIER of California and Mr. HORTON changed their votes from "yea" to "nay."

So the Journal was approved.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

SUNDRY MESSAGES FROM THE PRESIDENT

Sundry messages in writing from the President of the United States were communicated to the House by Mr. Saunders, one of his secretaries.

REV. WILLIAM GRADY

(Mr. SHARP asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

□ This symbol represents the time of day during the House proceedings, e.g., □ 1407 is 2:07 p.m.

● This "bullet" symbol identifies statements or insertions which are not spoken by the Member on the floor.

Mr. SHARP. Mr. Speaker, I am delighted we have as our guest chaplain, Father William Grady. Father Grady is pastor of St. Mary's Roman Catholic Church in Muncie, IN, having also served in other Indiana communities of Winchester, Monticello, and Peru.

Father Grady brings to his spiritual mission a special humor, humanity, and intelligence. He is held in high regard in the community beyond his own parish. He was the initiator of Hospitality House to aid families visiting the critically ill at our local hospital. He has been a member of the Delaware County Mental Health Board.

Father Grady has provided special attention to our young, giving leadership to a superb school at St. Mary's, giving counsel to students at Ball State University, giving service on the mayor's commission on youth.

Mr. Speaker, I think today we especially need Father Grady's prayers.

LET'S START OVER IN INDIANA'S EIGHTH

(Mr. FIELDS asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks and include extraneous matter.)

Mr. FIELDS. Mr. Speaker, "Let's Start Over" is the title of an excellent editorial which appeared in Monday's Houston Post. The editorial reviews the handling of the contested race in Indiana Eighth and calls for a special election in that district.

The Houston Post editorial points out that "the issue has become one of shameful partisanship and a national disgrace."

The editorial concludes, "The best thing [the House] can do now is to start over with a special election in the district—and this time let the voters decide the issue without fear of being overruled by a legislative majority."

Mr. Speaker, I commend this fine editorial to your attention and the attention of my colleagues—particularly those from Texas and the Houston area.

Mr. Speaker, I wish to insert this fine editorial in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD following my remarks.

[From the Houston Post, Apr. 28, 1985]

LET'S START OVER

It began simply enough—voters in Indiana's Eighth Congressional district went to the polls last November to decide whether one-term Democratic incumbent Frank McCloskey or Republican Richard McIntyre would represent them in the U.S. House. So far nobody has won. The issue has become one of shameful partisanship and a national disgrace.

The Indiana Secretary of State says McIntyre won. His initial margin was 34 votes; a subsequent recount increased that margin to more than 400. But when McIntyre showed up in Washington Jan. 3 to be sworn in, the Democratic majority in the House refused to seat him.

Instead it put both candidates on the payroll while establishing a special task force (two Democrats and one Republican), which held yet another recount. Voting along party lines, it recommended that Democrat McCloskey be given the seat—winner by a four-vote margin. Outraged Republicans charge, basically, that the task force kept counting (sometimes ruling inconsistently on ballot validities) until their man was ahead by four votes, then stopped and called him the winner.

That left the scorecard showing two rounds for McIntyre and one for McCloskey, with the tentative decision going to the Democrats and the Indiana voters knocked out of the ring. The House will vote on the task force recommendation this week. The best thing it can do now is to start over with a special election in the district—and this time let the voters decide the issue without fear of being overruled by a legislative majority.

BITBURG IS NOT YOUR PLACE, MR. PRESIDENT

(Mr. LANTOS asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. LANTOS. Mr. Speaker, it is not too late for President Reagan to call off his proposed visit to Bitburg.

This is not a Holocaust issue. This is not a veterans issue. It is a human rights issue of transcendental importance.

In an open letter to President Reagan published in Sunday's New York Times, a distinguished array of Christian leaders expressed "profound disappointment" over the President's decision to go to Bitburg, noting:

The failure to distinguish between perpetrators and victims, betweeen the death of combatants in battle and the slaughter of innocents in the Nazi concentration camps does injustice not only to the memory of the dead but to the most basic tenents of Christian morality.

There are many appropriate sites that the President could visit to symbolize the theme of reconciliation. Yes, we should heal the wounds 40 years after the end of the Second World War, but this does not require a gesture honoring SS soldiers who voluntarily served with the corps of killers who massacred unarmed American servicemen at Malmedy and murdered 6 million innocent civilians, including over 1 million children.

As Elie Wiesel so eloquently said of Bitburg last week: "That place, Mr. President, is not your place. Your place is with the victims of the SS."

VIETNAM: A NOBLE CAUSE

(Mr. DORNAN of California asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. DORNAN of California. Mr. Speaker, let justice be done; seat Rick McIntyre.

Mr. Speaker, April 30 is a remarkable day in the history of the world. Today is the day that Adolph Hitler met his Creator after taking his own life and that of his mistress. On this day his Propaganda Minister, Goebbels, poisoned his wife and eight children and then killed himself. Sic sember tyrannis.

But, tyranny still lives. I ask my colleagues, particularly on the majority side of the aisle: What will convince this world that communism is inherently evil? Did you hear this morning on the early news that Soviet soldiers machinegunned hundreds, hundreds, of people in a village square in Afghanistan? And you question that communism is raw evil, whether it is in Nicaragua or Poland or in Vietnam? What will convince you? The Gulags are not enough. The coldblooded murder of Major Nicholson is not enough. Not even the murder of one of your own, Larry MacDonald, seemed to take the scales from some eyes. My God, a 747 jumbojet filled with women and children, all slain.

Did you hear Le Duc Tho turn to the cameras last night on Ted Koppel's "Nightline" and thank his supporters in the United States? We know that includes some Members who still serve in this House. Then did you hear Koppel say that all, all, free enterprise shops will be surpressed next week after all the Western journalists leave Saigon; that is, Ho Chi Minh City, after their orgy of liberal rationalizing of the guilt over the tragedy of our betrayal of Vietnam, Laos, and Cambodia is over. What caused the genocide in Cambodia? The 14 concentration camps in Vietnam, where our allied friends still rot after 10 years of cruel imprisonment? The answer my friends is not written in the wind, it is written in blood: communism. When Koppel says that every last little shop, every free enterprise shop, will be closed down in Saigon and that the final act of oppression of the 10 years of Communist rule will be locked in place forever, we should hang our heads.

Then, Koppel admitted, Vietnam is the worst place on the face of the Earth. That's quite a statement given Afghanistan, Ethiopia, or Iran. Le Duc Tho thanks you, remaining House defenders of Ho Ch Minh, for creating the agony and living hell of communism in Laos, Cambodia, and Vietnam. You helped write the darkest page in American history.

God bless our men and women who served and serve, their's is truly a noble cause.

THE CONSUMER RAIL EQUITY ACT

(Mr. TAUZIN asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.

Mr. TAUZIN. Mr. Speaker, in 1980, Congress enacted legislation which deregulated railroad rates and practices where competition exists, but directed the Interstate Commerce Commission to protect through continued rate regulation those shippers and consumers who are captive to a single railroad.

The 1980 Staggers Rail Act has generally been a success, but has not been effective in preventing the ICC from allowing grossly excessive rate increases for captive shippers. Consumers who depend upon these rail lines are being required to pay unfair and unreasonable transportation and utility rates.

This February, I introduced H.R. 1190, the Consumer Rail Equity Act. The bill is neither "anti-railroad" nor is it "re-regulation." But the bill does require the ICC to take a more realistic view of the captive shipper and of the railroad's "revenue adequacy." And the bill further requires that before a rail abandonment is permitted, a local hearing be held to assess the need and effect of such an abandonment.

Captive shippers do not have the ordinary protections of a competitive marketplace, and the 1980 Staggers Rail Act recognized this by preserving for captive shippers ICC rate regulation. H.R. 1190, the Consumer Rail Equity Act, will insist that the ICC does its job by giving captive shippers and their consumers a fair break on rates.

□ 1230

NEWSPAPERS CALL FOR SPECIAL ELECTION IN INDIANA

(Mr. SENSENBRENNER asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks and include extraneous material.)

Mr. SENSENBRENNER. Mr. Speaker, in the last week, the two largest newspapers in the State of Wisconsin, the Milwaukee Journal and the Milwaukee Sentinel, have both editorially called for a special election to be held in the Eighth District of Indiana.

The Milwaukee Journal endorses a preponderance of Democratic candidates for office including my colleagues from Wisconsin, Messrs. ASPIN, KLECZKA, and MOODY.

I would hope that they particularly, and the Democratic Members of the House in general, will follow the lead of these two outstanding newspapers and also the lead of the other body in 1975 when faced with a similar situation, and voting to support a special election in Indiana's Eighth District.

The letters follow:

[From the Milwaukee Sentinel, Apr. 24, 1985]

DEMOCRATS TAKING LIBERTY ON ELECTION

House Democrats seem to be on the verge of taking indecent liberty with a Constitutional provision which says that Congress shall be the judge of the elections of its own members.

After protesting Republican members walked out, the House Administration Committee Tuesday voted, 12-0, in favor of seating incumbent Democrat Frank McCloskey as representative from the 8th Congressional District in Indiana.

On Monday, a three-member House task force recommended by a vote of two Democrats to one Republican that McCloskey be given the seat which he apparently lost to Republican challenger Rick McIntyre last November. That action affirmed a controversial finding that McCloskey actually beat McIntyre by 4 votes out of the 233,286 cast and ultimately counted by the task force.

The original tally showed McIntyre to be a winner by 400 votes, close enough for a recount, certainly. But the task force was set up after the House twice rejected figures provided by Indiana officials. Although no allegations of fraudulent procedures were made, designated counters picked by the Democrats were sent into the state to get the vote count that put McCloskey ahead.

The stage is now set to compound the affront to the apparent will of the voters when the full House, also dominated by Democrats, is expected to vote on the administration committee's ruling early next week. But, conceivably, that action could be held up through what one Republican lawmaker termed "massive retaliation."

Virtually disenfranchised voters in the district, meantime, are in their fourth month without representation in the House. Given the shenanigans since they cast their ballots last November, they might not even bother to go to the polls in 1986.

[From the Milwaukee Journal, Apr. 27, 1985]

QUIT SQUABBLING AND RERUN ELECTION

If House Democrats wish, they apparently can seat Democrat Frank McCloskey to represent the 8th Congressional District of Indiana. He has been declared the winner of a vote recount ordered by the House leadership, and the legislative body has the constitutional right to judge the election of its own members.

Even so, the Democrats would be wise to call for a new election instead.

That's not to say we condone the Republicans' wild allegations that the House leadership stole the election for McCloskey. It's partisan nonsense to say, as one GOP congressman did, that the leadership's behavior was "the House equivalent to Watergate."

Still, it was a very close election. On election night, McCloskey appeared to have won over Republican Richard McIntyre by 72 votes, but McIntyre pulled ahead by 34 votes after a counting error was discovered the next day. Recounts ensued, with the parties squabbling over which votes were countable and which ones weren't.

A federal judge ruled that it was up to the the House to decide who won. The House-ordered recount ended with Democrat McCloskey ahead, by a mere four votes, and with Republicans complaining that there were more votes to count.

In such murky circumstances, it would be better to rerun the election and hope for a clear result. Squabbling over the first vote has gone on for more than five months. That's long enough.

ARMENIAN MARTYRS DAY, APRIL 24

(Mr. LIPINSKI asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. LIPINSKI. Mr. Speaker, Armenian Martyrs Day, April 24, is a day that has great meaning for me. My Polish ancestors also have suffered persecution and pain at the hands of tyrannical governments. Of course we are not alone. Almost every ethnic group in the world has been the subject of wrongs committed by others. The reasons that these wrongs have been committed are many: fear, hate, nationalism, and jealousy. Every human emotion has been used at some time in history as an excuse to subjugate others.

But the Armenian genocide stands out in man's past as a particularly brutal act. The Turkish Government at that time announced that it was relocating the Armenians to other countries, while in fact the Government had no intention of doing so. The subsequent atrocities were so terrible that U.S. Ambassador Henry Morgenthau, Sr., could not bring himself to write down the details of the events. Our commemoration of the Armenian massacre shows our resolve to work for freedom and justice around the world. It is only by remembering such terrible acts of the past that we can be reminded to work for their prevention in the future. I am proud to be a Member of this body which is working to see that massacres of any people do not take place again.

A GOOD COMPROMISE

(Mr. SAXTON asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. SAXTON. Mr. Speaker, I've listened to many of my Republican colleagues urging a special election in the Eighth District of Indiana.

Their arguments, as compelling as they are, represent a sad state of affairs. Frankly, I still think Rick McIntyre should be sworn and seated. I did not expect him to become a victim of creative vote counting.

Obviously, we are now beyond the proper resolution of this problem. My Democratic colleagues cannot let go of the four-vote victory they created, and still save face. And they will not seat the duly elected Rick McIntyre.

A good compromise, it is said, is one which neither side is happy with. Frankly, that is the exact reason we should declare the Eighth District seat in Indiana vacant.

It is a compromise none of us is happy with.

51-059 O-86-40 (Pt. 7)

But it is a chance to wipe the slate clean, and restore the dignity that this Congress is about to lose.

TRADE SHOULD BE HIGHEST PRIORITY

(Mr. LUNDINE asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.)

Mr. LUNDINE. Mr. Speaker, trade should be the highest priority for our national government because our long-term prosperity depends more on our balance of trade than any other single aspect of our national economic life. It is vital to improving our standard of living that we bring our trade back into balance.

The President should make trade the top priority. He has a new opportunity starting today as he goes off to Germany to make trade the No. 1 priority, and unlike his own administration and past administrations, stop ignoring this vital factor.

Last year, together with the gentleman from Oregon, I was privileged to cochair a task force that produced a report providing a five point program to improve America's trade posture. This year I have introduced bills to follow up on those recommendations.

I believe that we can improve the exchange rate of the dollar, improve our industrial competitiveness and our adjustment processes for workers and industry alike. We can support our exporters and toughen our trade laws.

We need leadership, we need it here in the Congress, and we need it from the President of the United States.

GOALS OF THE RECOUNT IN INDIANA NOT ACCOMPLISHED

(Mr. MONSON asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.)

Mr. MONSON. Mr. Speaker, on January 3 we were told that two things could be accomplished if we would go through a recount process of the Eighth District seat in Indiana, conducted by the House of Representatives. We were told that it could end partisan bickering and we were told that it could determine that consistent rules were applied in the recount.

We will never know whether consistency will be applied, because the rules of the recount were changed, and we certainly know that partisan bickering was increased to the most intense level that it has ever been.

I therefore submit that neither of these two goals were accomplished. It is recognized throughout this country that something must be done to correct this situation, and it is recognized widely that the best way to accomplish that is through a special election.

While I still think that there is evidence that Rick McIntyre should be seated, for after all, he was certified by that State, I think that we should put aside our partisan feelings and call for a special election. I urge our colleagues to support us in that endeavor.

TRADE DEFICIT SHOULD BE PRESIDENT'S TOP PRIORITY AT BONN ECONOMIC SUMMIT

(Ms. KAPTUR asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend her remarks.)

Ms. KAPTUR. Mr. Speaker, today the Commerce Department announced a record trade deficit of $11 billion more in imports into the United States than exports out last month. It is anticipated this year's overall trade deficit will be $150 billion, an alltime high.

As a Representative from automotive America, the Midwestern industrial heartland, today's record trade deficit figures are extremely distressing. More foreign imports on our markets means a loss of more jobs in America. Right here, Champion spark plugs are made in my district. Since 1981, there has been a 36-percent increase in imported spark plugs on our market. The figure for automotive glass, much of it made at Libbey-Owens-Ford in my district, is 40 percent more imports, and transmissions, also made in my district, is 38 percent more imports in the last 2 years. As the President prepares to depart for Europe later today, I urge him to make the deteriorating world trade situation his top priority at the Bonn economic summit. He has a unique opportunity to let our trading partners know—face to face—that current trade practices are wiping out American factories, American farms, and American families. We're fed up. Our President must seize the initiative so that we begin exporting American products and not American jobs.

TASK FORCE RECOUNT DID NOT ACHIEVE ITS GOALS

(Mr. GUNDERSON asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. GUNDERSON. Mr. Speaker, later today we will determine whether this Congress has a conscience and whether we want to uphold the Constitution of this United States.

As we consider this issue, I would like to call to the attention of all of my colleagues the memo sent to us yesterday in our offices from Congressman Mr. PANETTA.

He says in that letter that the task force had, in effort to avoid the problems that occurred during the State recount, the primary goal of the task force in establishing counting rules was to No. 1, disenfranchise the smallest number of precincts or voters, and No. 2, consistently apply the counting rules.

I would like to call your attention, as you review further that memo, the Dear Colleague letter, you will find the issue of unnotarized absentee ballots. But for this class, those invalid absentee ballots that had been properly retained by the county clerks, he goes on to say there was simply no compelling reason to count them. Yes, we want to count every one, don't we?

Likewise, on the issue of late-arriving military ballots, the task force voted not to count late-arriving military ballots. Finally, on the issue of reconciliation of election data, the reconciliation process indicated there were a number of administrative errors, but the observer, the director of the recount, Mr. SHUMWAY, went on to say, "Those numbers of errors are well within the normal range of administrative oversight or error."

Mr. Speaker, we did not follow either of the goals; counting the ballots or of being consistent, in our rules, and now we are going to go on and also ignore the issue of fairness.

WEST GERMAN WOMEN ASK KOHL TO CANCEL BITBURG MEMORIAL

(Mrs. SCHROEDER asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend her remarks and include extraneous material.)

Mrs. SCHROEDER. Mr. Speaker, this letter is very, very important, because it does say that there is a great difference of opinion in Germany among Germans about the Bitburg visit.

This is a letter from 70,000 West German women to their Chancellor Helmut Kohl asking him, please to withdraw his invitation for President Reagan to go to Bitburg.

They go on to say that they support any initiatives for reconciliation between peoples, but they do not want it happening over graves of the SS. They want to salute the new era and the new generation.

I think many people have said that the President must go to Bitburg because the Germans are insisting on it, however it is very important that we Members of Congress realize there is a very large number of the German people who do not agree with what their Chancellor is doing. The Nazis were a government that went mad. The liberation being celebrated is also the liberation of the German people from this oppressive regime. Many of the German people know that and resent Chancellor Kohl's stand. This letter should be read by all Members.

The letter follows:

WEST GERMAN WOMEN ASK KOHL TO CANCEL BITBURG MEMORIAL

BERLIN.—Women for Peace, a group of 70,000 women in West Germany, addressed an open letter to Chancellor Helmut Kohl April 26, asking him to cancel the memorial service at Bitburg cemetery and urging him to "recognize the voice of another Germany with peace movements trying to learn from our history." The letter was also sent, in solidarity, to the U.S. Congress and Jewish organizations in the U.S. and West Germany.

TEXT

We, the women of the German peace movement, are angry and deeply ashamed about Chancellor Kohl's invitation to President Reagan inviting him to take part in memorial services at the military cemetery at Bitburg in memory of May 8, 1945. This day should be a day of remembrance of the end of the Second World War, of Nazi dictatorship and the end of militarism.

Together with Jewish organizations, together with American Representatives and together with all those Jewish women and men and all those who have been politically and racially persecuted, as well as with the civilians and soldiers who suffered under the criminal acts of the Waffen S.S. and Nazi dictatorship, whose suffering did not end in May 1945, we ask Chancellor Kohl to withdraw his invitation to President Reagan to hold memorial services at the Bitburg military cemetery.

Reconciliation between people and the serious remembrance of the guilt and the criminal acts of World War II and the Nazi dictatorship can only be reached through a memorial to those women and men resistance fighters against fascism and German militarism (for example, Sophia Scholl) and with the responsibility that never again shall war begin on German soil.

We hope that you recognize the voice of another Germany with peace movements trying to learn from our history. We are indignant over the letter of Mr. Dregger to the U.S. Senate. We support instead all those initiatives of reconciliation between people that do not happen over the graves of the Waffen S.S., at military cemeteries or near modern weapon arsenals, as in Bitburg.

We ask you to make possible together with us and in memory of the Nazi terror and World War II, a peaceful and socially just coexistence and cooperation in North and South, East and West, and the earth and space.

WOMEN FOR PEACE.

(Eva Quistorp, speaker for Women for Peace; Petra Kelly, member, West German Parliament, Ginna Dullmann, Jewish community in Bonn, Gabi Witt, Heinemann Initiative.)

□ 1240

INDIANA'S EIGHTH CONGRESSIONAL DISTRICT ELECTION

(Mr. SWINDALL asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to include extraneous matter.)

Mr. SWINDALL. Mr. Speaker, I have served in this august body for now almost 4 months. During that 4 months I have been impressed by the fact that in spite of the various controversial issues that we have been called upon to address, this body has always looked at the merit of all of the arguments and has tried to reach the right decision. While those decisions on most occasions have been different from the decision that I, personally, would have made, I have been impressed by the conscientiousness of those who have made the decisions on both sides of the aisle.

It is in that backdrop that I ask this body, in considering a resolution that will be offered to have a special election in the Eighth District of Indiana, to consider carefully what is really at stake in this issue. Specifically, what is at stake is whether this body will set the precedent, as it already has, of going beneath the State certification process and examining on its own those various elections.

Mr. Speaker, I include in the RECORD at this point a letter from one of my constituents, Hiram E. Greer, dated April 23, 1985, to the Honorable TIP O'NEILL.

CHAMBLEE, GA.,
April 23, 1985.

Hon. THOMAS P. O'NEILL, Jr.,
Speaker, House of Representatives,
Washington, DC.

DEAR MR. SPEAKER: I have just witnessed what I consider to be one of the most despicable acts in the history of our United States. Quite frankly, I refer to the denial of a seat in the House of Representatives to Mr. Richard McIntyre of the 8th District from the State of Indiana. According to the 1985 Edition of The World Almanac and Book of Facts, Mr. McIntyre won the election by virtue of his receiving 116,451 votes to 116,291 received by his opponent, Mr. Francis X. McCloskey.

Also according to the Indiana Secretary of State, who certified his election victory, Mr. McIntyre was entitled to take the seat and represent the voters of the 8th District. However, according to you, the Speaker of the House, Mr. Jim Wright, House Majority Leader and other members of your party, Mr. McIntyre did not win, but Mr. McCloskey won after a recount of the votes by the House Committee assigned to this project.

Mr. Speaker, it has been brought out that every time before, the House of Representatives has accepted the certification from the state involved, as to who won the particular election in question. Not so this time.

There was at least one other election in 1984 that was in doubt due to the closeness of the vote and that was from the State of Idaho which involved Mr. George Hansen, the incumbent and Mr. Richard Stallings. In this race, Mr. Stallings was declared the winner and accepted by the House even though the vote was much closer, Mr. Stallings having received 101,099 votes and Mr. Hansen 101,032, a narrower margin than the Indiana situation according to the 1985 World Almanac and Book of Facts.

This latest tragedy and travesty perpetrated in the name of partisan politics has left a very sour taste in the mouths of a lot of citizens all over the country. The result of this miscarriage of justice has very serious implications for the future of our country. Hereafter, any candidate for the House of Representatives who wins a race by a small margin will not really know whether he or she really did win or if they will have to wait until the powers that be decide if the voters of the state elected or the winner is whomever the House Committee wants to win.

In my own State of Georgia about twenty years ago, a candidate named Julian Bond was elected to the State Senate, but because he had some unpopular views, he was denied his right to take his seat by the State of Georgia. This denial was taken to court and Mr. Bond was seated by order of the court, stating that the Legislature arrogated to themselves powers that were not rightfully theirs. I believe that the same logical situation has now occurred in the United States House of Representatives. Surely this great indignity that has been inflicted upon the voters of the 8th District of Indiana and by extension to voters everywhere, will not be allowed to be confirmed by the House of Representatives through the power of the majority party in the House.

In closing, Mr. Speaker, permit me to quote from an unnamed source the statement "Tyranny, whether it be from within or without the country, is still Tyranny and ultimately a threat to us all."

A copy of this letter is being sent to all the members of your party in the House of Representatives in the fervent hope that they will still be able to rectify the grave insult to voters everywhere as a consequence of your action.

Most sincerely yours,

HIRAM E. GREER,
Member 4th District,
State of Georgia.

TIP O'NEILL'S LAST HURRAH

(Mr. WRIGHT asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to include extraneous matter.)

Mr. WRIGHT. Mr. Speaker, the May issue of the Washingtonian magazine contains an article about our Speaker, TIP O'NEILL. It is not an undiluted paean of praise. It is, however, a sensitive and tender piece about a warm and tough and sensitive and decent and truly great American. I commend it to our reading, and under permission to extend I include it at this point in the RECORD.

TIP O'NEILL'S LAST HURRAH

(By Vera Glaser)

The Last Hurrah, Edwin O'Connor's novel about big-city political boss Frank Skeffington, is believed to be a portrait of Boston mayor James Michael Curley, a controversial figure of the 1930s and '40s and a mentor of young Thomas P. "Tip" O'Neill Jr., who later broke with Curley and went on to become Speaker of the US House of Representatives. Near the end of the novel, a handful of relatives watch a priest administer the last rites to Skeffington.

"There was an awed, a dreadful silence, the vacant interval when all preliminaries had been accomplished, and death itself was yet a moment away. The silence was broken by Maeve's father, who was going to be generous to his old foe:

" 'Knowing what he knows now, if Frank had it all to do over again, there's no doubt he'd do it all very, very differently!'

"The figure on the bed stirred; they heard the movement and turning, saw that Skeffington had raised himself slightly. His eyes were now wide open, and in them they saw the old, challenging, mocking gleam. And they heard his voice, as taking charge now for the last time he gave his answer: 'The Hell I Would!' "

It is mid-morning, January 21. House Speaker "Tip" O'Neill, the nation's most powerful Democrat, is riding to the Capitol with Ronald Reagan for the President's second inaugural. Inside the bulletproof limousine, O'Neill congratulates Reagan on his sweeping election victory. Then the two men chat about Reagan's decision to cancel the inaugural parade because of Washington's freezing weather.

"There ought to be a law," Reagan suggests, "automatically providing for a 24-hour postponement of inaugural events if the weather calls for it."

"Mr. President," O'Neill responds, "I doubt that would pass the Congress."

After the swearing-in ceremony, Reagan visits O'Neill's luxurious private office in the Capitol. Four years earlier, at the beginning of his first term, the President paid O'Neill a similar call. At that time, according to the Speaker, he showed Reagan his desk, which had been used by Grover Cleveland in the interval between his two nonconsecutive terms as President.

"Yeah, I played him in the movies," Reagan said.

"No, Mr. President, that was Grover Cleveland Alexander, the ball player," replied O'Neill.

House Democrats, chuckling over the incident, have passed it around, embroidering it along the way. Representative Barney Frank cracked, "Maybe Reagan thought Grover Cleveland pitched a few seasons between his White House terms."

The burly, six-foot-two Speaker pulls no punches, even with Presidents, and often draws a laugh while verbally skinning them. He regards himself as a kind of Horatio at the bridge, fighting off a conservative onslaught. Although the 1980 and 1984 elections were disasters for Democrats, they projected O'Neill into a national role as the defeated party's spokesman. His New Deal liberalism, as he commands a 70-vote Democratic majority in the House, almost always puts him at odds with the Republican-controlled White House and Senate.

For more than four years he has blasted Reagan's initiatives as "unfair" to the elderly and poor and has opposed the administration's efforts to aid rebels in Nicaragua and develop the MX missile. The slugfest has made O'Neill a kind of folk hero to some Democrats, the whipping boy of others.

Now that O'Neill has announced his retirement in 1986, he enters the final chapter of his political career. He is thinking about his place in history and his party's future. He looks at November's election results, in which Reagan carried 49 states, the biggest landslide in history, and says, "We can read."

Not surprisingly, the Speaker was conciliatory in the first days of the 99th Congress. But no one who knows the man expected that to last. In attempting to cut the federal deficit, O'Neill and his Democrats were determined that the White House and Senate make the first proposals for budget cuts. O'Neill said that he wouldn't block a House vote on Reagan's proposals, but if student loans or programs for the elderly were to be cut, for example, the signal had to come from Reagan. Democrats feel that Reagan, after running a Dr. Feelgood campaign, should take the political heat for any medicine voters have to swallow.

After Reagan's State of the Union address in February, O'Neill took off the gloves. He accused Reagan of using "clever rhetoric" to hide the fact that the national debt, standing at $900 billion when Reagan took office, has doubled to $1.8 trillion. "Let us work hard to cut the deficit, Mr. President, but let us start with the facts," O'Neill said. "Do not point the finger at the distant past when you yourself have so much responsibility for these deficits."

Implacable foes they may be, but O'Neill and Reagan have things in common. Both are Irish. Both are fiercely partisan. Both came up from modest beginnings. Both have a sense of humor. Both have long memories but rarely hold a grudge. And both are lame ducks.

At 72, O'Neill is like an old shoe with steel insoles. He is a gregarious Massachusetts pol who loves to sing, tell stories, play gin and poker, and hoist a friendly glass of beer—a man of imposing presence, partly because of his 260-pound bulk and shock of white hair. He is unpretentious, as natural as water, and affectionately regarded by members of both parties despite partisan clashes. He is full of blarney, hugging the women and calling them "darlin'." He loves pasta, chocolate ice cream, and the Boston Red Sox, not necessarily in that order, and carries a headful of baseball and election statistics.

Loyalty is the quality he values most. If O'Neill is your friend, he's for you all the way—and he expects that to be a two-way street. He has an Irish temper, but it fades fast. He is sentimental. Last December he took time out to recite "The Night Before Christmas," accompanied by the Boston Symphony Orchestra. He can be self-effacing. At a nationally televised Ford's Theater gala sponsored by his wife, Millie, O'Neill said, "I'm just window-dressing."

He is tough, sometimes scathing. When former Republican representative John LeBoutillier sported a "Repeal O'Neill" button, the Speaker said, "I wouldn't know him from a cord of wood." And O'Neill can be profane. He addressed President Carter's chief of staff, Hamilton Jordan, on at least one occasion as "you son of a bitch."

The Democratic party is O'Neill's second religion, and his Roman Catholic faith can influence his politics. Many of the activist priests and nuns in Central America come from O'Neill's congressional district in Cambridge, Massachusetts. They helped shape his intense opposition to aid for El Salvador and for the rebels seeking to topple Nicaragua's Sandinista regime.

And O'Neill wears his Irish heritage like a badge. In March he and Millie traveled to Ireland's County Cork, where O'Neill led the St. Patrick's Day parade.

When O'Neill retires at the end of next year, he will have spent almost half a century in public life, 34 of those years in the House, ten of them as Speaker, holding the job longer than anyone except Texan Sam Rayburn. Under the Constitution, Speaker O'Neill would succeed to the presidency if anything happened to Reagan and George Bush.

O'Neill is noted more for his instincts in reading the mood of the House than for his skill at legislative detail. He decides when to bring up bills, influences committee assignments, and helps raise money for colleagues' campaigns. His $94,600 position is loaded with perks, including a chauffeured limousine and two plush suites in the Capitol. There the Speaker lumbers across fine carpets, works before a marble fireplace under a magnificent chandelier in an office filled with couches, wing chairs, crystal lamps, and a private lavatory. At his elbow rests a monogrammed box filled with his favorite Dom Diego cigars.

Now, after their second defeat at Reagan's hands, Democrats are in disarray and O'Neill, as the party's most visible symbol in Washington, is taking his lumps. Since 1980, Republicans have blistered him in TV commercials as a liberal boogieman. He has been painted as a "tired relic" and "a giant plum pudding." Some Democrats say O'Neill was "poison" for their candidates in places like Oklahoma, Texas, and parts of the South. To them, he represents the old New Deal special-interest politics. They worry that his physical image—"fat and out of control," as LeBoutillier put it in comparing O'Neill to the federal budget—makes him an easy-to-target caricature of the Democratic party.

A former Carter White House official criticizes O'Neill's image as "terrible. If one person combined the perceptual problem of Democrats in the '80s, it would be the Speaker. Tip is a good man who is in government for all the right reasons. He has never benefited personally or financially from his position. He really cares about the poor and elderly. But now he is part of the problem."

Democrats are struggling—so far unsuccessfully—to redefine the party, to come up with new ideas or to repackage old ones. They wince as they contrast the TV charisma of Reagan and Senate Majority Leader Bob Dole with that of O'Neill and Senate Minority Leader Robert Byrd. Yet House and Senate Democrats re-elected both men. Senator Lawton Chiles did mount an eleventh-hour challenge against Byrd, saying that Democrats needed to "make a strong symbolic statement to the American people that we are going to change." But the Chiles effort fizzled, partly because some Senate Democrats want to wait on the Byrd problem until 1986, when they hope to recapture control of the body.

There were early rumblings in the House about a challenge to O'Neill, too, but he remains popular with many members and it was clear that there were not enough votes to dump him, particularly after his announcement that he would step down in 1986.

As this year's session gets well under way, O'Neill has all he can do to keep his House troops in line. For one thing, the party loyalty he cherishes has eroded. The most dramatic defection came in 1981, when conservative and moderate Democrats broke ranks to help enact Reagan's budget and tax cuts. Again, in March of this year, 61 Democrats succumbed to a lobbying blitz by Reagan and provided the winning margin to free funds for the MX missile.

Congressional veterans who rose through state legislatures and party hierarchies know the meaning of loyalty. But the new breed—the blow-dried TV kids, as they are called around the Hill—who have come to office since 1974 have made it mainly by knowing how to use the media and computerized constituent-stroking. Now, O'Neill says ruefully, "65 percent [of House members] never had any previous party experience, so they don't know about party loyalty."

For another thing, his lame-duck status has set off a power struggle among Democrats eager to succeed him. Traditionally, the Majority Leader, Jim Wright of Texas, would inherit the Speaker's chair, but the post-November ferment made Wright nervous enough to line up commitments of support from his fellow Democrats in early February, almost two years in advance of the election for Speaker. Ambitious young members such as Richard Gephardt, chairman of the Democratic caucus, Democratic Congressional Campaign Committee chairman Tony Coelho, budget moderate Leon Panetta, and former Budget Committee chairman Jim Jones want a bigger share of the action. So do conservative Democrats such as Charles Stenholm of Texas, who threatened to run against O'Neill for the Speakership this year, charging that he was "out of step" philosophically with the American people and that he was "perceived as being the cause of our federal deficit."

"That's ridiculous," O'Neill snaps in his private office. "We know our faults. We know our failures, and we know our policies. We also know what we did for America and the glories of the past that we helped develop. When I started in politics in 1935, half of America was impoverished. We got that down to about 10½ percent in 1980. The GI Bill of Rights educated 10 to 12 million people. We developed housing programs, grants, job programs, a farm program that made us the greatest agricultural nation in the world. The government responds to the will of the American people. We created the middle class."

And O'Neill knows that the middle class is still responsive to many Democratic programs. Even as he was being lambasted by Republicans and Democrats alike in last year's campaign, a Harris survey in June showed an 80-16 percent majority agreeing that O'Neill was "right in standing up to the Republicans by not cutting Social Security and Medicare."

O'Neill has also responded to divisions within his party. He has given younger House members more responsibility and exposure by putting them on radio and television to answer Reagan's pronouncements. He leads his committee chairmen with a loose rein and hosts think-tank meetings on the Hill in an effort to promote new Democratic ideas. He was one of the first Democrats to urge the nomination of a woman, Geraldine Ferraro, for Vice President.

According to Anne Wexler, a former presidential assistant to Carter and now a lobbyist, "Tip O'Neill is the one who gave Tony Coelho the leeway and running room he needed to set up the Democratic Congressional Committee. . . . The proof of Tip's leadership is that we won 26 new seats in 1982, lost a minimum [fourteen seats] in 1984, and probably will gain them in 1986. I think Tip will go down in history as a great leader in a tough time, and a real transition time."

Coelho himself, who raised $12 million for last year's Democratic House candidates—more than six times the "take" of his predecessor, but considerably less than the GOP's $100 million—credits O'Neill with "keeping the party spirit alive."

O'Neill concedes that times have changed, that some of the old Democratic programs may no longer be needed. "The people are saying too much has been spent. So we're going to put these laws on the table—everything: Social Security, education grants, revenue sharing."

Yet as he speaks, there is a hint of bitterness in the Speaker's voice, a suggestion that his loyalty has been betrayed. In a poignant aside, he notes that Reagan said in 1965 that Social Security should be voluntary, but in 1984, under pressure from Democratic nominee Walter Mondale, Reagan promised not to touch it. "There's no stronger person for fighting for the golden-ager and senior citizen than I have been," O'Neill says. "I have been a champion for them. Yet the record shows that some 67 percent of them voted for Mr. Reagan." Since then Reagan has supported a cut in cost-of-living increases in Social Security benefits.

O'Neill is indignant at the way Reagan has manipulated the tax-and-spend issue to put the onus on Democrats while O'Neill sees the administration's defense build-up as the principal cause of the $200 billion deficit. And he notes that Reagan boasts of his 1981 tax cut but never mentions that he subsequently signed two tax bills eroding the cut. "They were high-tax bills. In 1982 we gave him a tax bill, and the President went along. Last year the Republicans wanted a tax bill to help reduce the deficit. We gave it to them. The President signed it. But during the campaign, he doesn't mention it. He calls us tax-tax-tax and spend-spend-spend."

Similarly, O'Neill feels that Democrats have been hornswoggled by Reagan on foreign policy. His feelings run particularly deep on the subject of Lebanon, where 241 Marines were killed in a terrorist bomb attack.

As Representative Dick Cheney, chairman of the Republican Policy Committee, explains it. "The Speaker did yeoman duty on behalf of the President on the Lebanon resolution [approving the stationing of Marines there]. That was hard for Tip because he opposed our involvement in Vietnam and, more recently, in Central America. But he delivered a significant chunk of Democratic votes on Lebanon, making it truly bipartisan."

O'Neill says he rallied Democrats behind the resolution "to give credence to our government, a bipartisan view. We were told the troops were there as a symbol. When I learned the President intended to withdraw them, I came out with a statement a couple of days earlier, calling on him to do that. The President said, 'Tip O'Neill may want to surrender, but I don't'—at the very time he was planning to pull them out."

O'Neill felt he had been badly burned, possibly deceived, according to Cheney, who attended a White House meeting after the bombing at which Reagan and O'Neill had a heated exchange. "The President implied that if he had gotten more support out of Congress, he might have been able to achieve his objectives in Lebanon. The Speaker was legitimately outraged," Cheney says.

During the exchange, O'Neill recalls, "the President said to me, 'You're going to see the time before many weeks ago by, much sooner than you believe, that the people in Lebonon will stand with garlands and flowers, waiving American flags, and thanking our Marines, Navy, and Army as they leave the area, thanking us for having united the country.' "

After the meeting, O'Neill, thinking something was afoot on which he hadn't been briefed, immediately telephoned Secretary of State George Shultz, "Well, you know how the President kind of exudes. Nothing like that is going to happen." Shultz said, according to O'Neill.

That didn't alter O'Neill's conviction that politics stops at the water's edge. In April he led a congressional delegation to Moscow carrying a letter from Reagan to Premier Gorbachev.

Republicans, many of whom like O'Neill personally, resent his intense partisanship and the often heavy-handed way he wields power in the House. They are angry that Democrats for months refused to seat an Indiana Republican member duly certified by state authorities after a recount. And nothing irks Republicans more than the Speaker's refusal to allot them important committee seats and staff. "The capable men we get who bust their fannies and go into debt to get here, serve two or three terms, and the next thing you know, they can't get good committees," Cheney says. In January O'Neill relented somewhat and improved the party balance in House committees.

House GOP Leader Robert Michel complains that the Speaker also bloats Democratic committee staffs "in a manner to cripple the Republicans." Michel cites the Energy and Commerce Committee, which has 109 investigative staffers. Nine are Republicans.

During the last session of Congress, relations between O'Neill and House Republicans hit an all-time low. In May 1984 a furious fight erupted on the House floor over the partisan use of TV broadcasts of House proceedings by Representative Newt Gingrich of Georgia and a group of conservative Republicans. In a venomous exchange, O'Neill termed Gingrich's behavior "the lowest thing" he had seen in the House. The Speaker was ruled out of order, the first such rebuke in 200 years.

In July, at the Democratic convention in San Francisco, O'Neill lashed out at Reagan: "The evil is in the White House . . . and that evil is a man who has no care and no concern for the working class. He's cold. He's mean. He's got ice water for blood."

Michel returned the salvo on the House floor, saying he had never heard such abusive language used by a Speaker of the House against a President. "Mr. Speaker, it is beneath the dignity of your office," Michel said.

Not long afterward, Michel and O'Neill teed off for a happy afternoon on the golf course.

Thomas P. "Tip" O'Neill Jr. was born December 9, 1912, in Cambridge, Massachusetts, while his father marched in a picket line at Harvard University. O'Neill's forebears were refugees from the Irish potato famine. His grandfather, born in Mallow, County Cork, left Ireland in 1846 to work for the New England Brick Company. Tip's mother died when he was an infant. His father, a bricklayer and contractor, became a member of the Cambridge City Council and then sewer commissioner, with control over 1,000 jobs. Young Tip was nicknamed for a St. Louis Browns baseball player adept at hitting foul balls until the pitcher walked him.

The O'Neill home was a meeting place for local politicians, and Tip took to the subject early. His schooling came in the ethnic wards of Cambridge, where dispensing favors to friends was a way of life. At age fifteen, he helped get out the vote for state legislator Charles Cavanaugh. In 1928 he knocked on doors for Al Smith's presidential campaign.

After graduating from St. John's High School in Cambridge, O'Neill earned $3 a day driving a truck. After hours he played poker with his pals and frequented Friday-night dances. At the suggestion of his parish priest, he entered Boston College, working to pay his tuition and traveling by subway to classes in Newton. He earned an AB in history in 1936.

While a senior at BC, O'Neill, then 22, ran for the Cambridge City Council, losing by 150 votes. It would be the last election he ever lost. O'Neill tells the story of encountering his neighbor, Elizabeth O'Brien, during that campaign: "I'm going to vote for you, Tom, even though you didn't ask me, she said. Surprised, O'Neill replied, "I've lived across the street from you for eighteen years. I shovel your walk in the winter. I cut your grass in the summer. I didn't think I had to ask you for your vote." She said, "Tom, I want you to know something: People like to be asked."

O'Neill never again failed to make direct personal appeals.

Upon analyzing the election returns, O'Neill saw that his strength was in his own neighborhood, so he decided to run for the north-Cambridge seat in the state legislature, enlisting the campaign aid of some of his BC classmates, who had voted O'Neill "class politician."

After graduating from BC, O'Neill sold insurance and campaigned. He was elected to the Massachusetts legislature that fall at the age of 24. Between legislative sessions, O'Neill worked in the city treasurer's office for $35 a week. With that kind of job security, he proposed to his best girl, Mildred Miller, daughter of a trainman on the Boston elevated. They were married in June 1941. "I'll Be with You in Apple Blossom Time" was their favorite song. They honeymooned in Atlantic City, where they stayed at the posh Claridge Hotel for $5 a day, including breakfast.

As a member of the legislature during World War II, O'Neill was exempt from the draft; he volunteered for the Army anyway, but was rejected because of a history of diabetes in the family. He continued to sell insurance while serving in the legislature.

In 1948 O'Neill, by then Minority Leader of the Massachusetts House, helped Democrats win control of the legislature for the first time in a century. At age 36, his hair was gray and his girth evidence of his fondness for beer and sweets.

In those days, Jim Curley was in his heyday, and O'Neill was fascinated by the way Curley drew people to him. O'Neill picked up speechmaking cues from the colorful mayor of Boston and, on his advice, memorized several all-purpose poems to appeal to Democratic constituent groups. But Mayor Curley was convicted of taking a civil-service exam for one of his cronies—and then was re-elected from his jail cell.

When he was freed, Curley tried to control delegate selection for the 1948 Democratic presidential convention, according to the biography Tip, by Paul Clancy and Shirley Elder. When O'Neill challenged him, Curley said, "You fat son of a bitch, I'm going to give you the lesson of your life. I'm removing you from my slate." O'Neill put together his own delegate slate, but Curley's slate won. "They waited until the early hours of the morning," O'Neill recalls, "and stole the goddamn election on us in Boston. They just transferred the figures."

Even though he lost that confrontation, O'Neill impressed party regulars with his ability and discretion. The following year, he was elected Speaker of the Massachusetts House.

As Speaker, O'Neill wielded both his official and his personal power effectively. He pushed through a wide-ranging program of social legislation known as "the Little New Deal." He describes himself as the "toughest disciplinarian they ever had. Christ, you wouldn't rattle a newspaper or talk. Nobody would dare put his feet up on a chair." O'Neill was also an avid poker player, often dropping in on the nonstop card games held in vacant rooms of the state Capitol.

During his years in the Massachusetts legislature, O'Neill became fast friends with fellow Democratic member Leo Diehl and Republican state senator Silvio Conte. He remains close to both men. Diehl is now O'Neill's administrative assistant. Conte has served in Congress since 1958. He is more liberal than most Republicans and confesses that his GOP colleagues "needle" him because he is close to O'Neill. "We don't discuss politics," Conte says. "That breaks up friendships."

When John F. Kennedy decided to run for the Senate in 1952, he tipped off O'Neill in advance and O'Neill announced for Kennedy's seat in Congress. He was elected against the Eisenhower tide.

When O'Neill went to Congress, Millie stayed in Cambridge with their school-age children. In Washington, O'Neill shared an apartment with fellow Massachusetts congressman Eddie Boland. Most evenings they dined at Duke Zeibert's—O'Neill loved chicken-in-the-pot—and afterwards played cards at the University Club.

In his second term, O'Neill was assigned to the Rules Committee, unusual for one so new. Yet O'Neill remained a Tuesday-to-Thursday congressman, showing little interest in national issues and tending mostly to his constituents in the eighth district, which includes such working-class areas as Italian east Boston and Irish Charlestown, as well as fashionable Back Bay Boston. Even today, O'Neill's maxim is that "all politics is local."

In the 85th Congress, when the Democratic Study Group was organized in an effort to break the hold of the coalition of Republicans and southern Democrats that then ruled Congress, O'Neill joined but wasn't very active. He still preferred to concentrate on his contacts and visibility in Massachusetts in order to run for governor. It was a goal, however, that Millie discouraged, calling it a "dead-end job."

Gradually, O'Neill was being drawn into the national mainstream and creating a new image that was to place him on the leadership ladder. In late 1967 he jolted the Democratic party and angered President Lyndon Johnson by opposing the Vietnam war. O'Neill's children had expressed growing unhappiness with the war, and his own talks with the military and the CIA convinced him that it was unwinnable. O'Neill called it "too high a price to pay for an obscure and limited objective." He thought his stand would ruin him politically, but it appealed to liberals.

In 1971 Millie encouraged her husband to seek the job of House whip. O'Neill knew that Majority Leader Hale Boggs favored Dan Rostenkowski (now chairman of the House Ways and Means Committee) for the post, but O'Neill asked for it anyway. When then-Speaker Carl Albert and Boggs disagreed over whom to choose for whip, they compromised on the loyal and popular O'Neill.

A year later, Boggs and three others were lost in a plane crash over the Alaskan wilderness. O'Neill waited a decent interval; then, with the permission of Boggs' wife, Lindy, now a formidable House member herself, he began lining up votes for Majority Leader. He made it, and when Albert retired in 1976, O'Neill was chosen Speaker by acclamation.

O'Neill's biggest challenge in his first term as Speaker was to educate the new Democratic President, Jimmy Carter, in the ways of Washington. Carter had alienated Congress by targeting the institution in his presidential race. O'Neill made it clear that cooperation had to work both ways between 1600 Pennsylvania Avenue and Capitol Hill.

" 'Jeez, Mr. President,' I said, 'I gotta tell you you're making a mistake. You're not talking about the Georgia legislature now. You're talking about people in Congress who are mostly young, highly intelligent, successful in business and the professions, who ran against the establishment like you did.' " It was a pointed reminder that many House Democrats had run ahead of Carter the preceding November and didn't owe their seats to him.

Trouble between the Speaker and the Carter White House began almost immediately. An epic blowup between O'Neill and White House chief of staff Hamilton Jordan is described in Tip:

"O'Neil, as Speaker of the House, was scheduled to sit in a special box at the Kennedy Center for Carter's inaugural gala. He sent in a check for $300 for ten seats so that he could take some members of family and close friends. When the tickets arrived, he was surprised to find his friends and had been assigned seats in the last two rows of the orchestra. He protested to Jordan: "When a guy is Speaker of the House and he get tickets like this, he figures there's a reason behind it." Jordan cooly said if O'Neill didn't like the seats, the money could be returned. With that, O'Neill exploded: 'I'll ream your ass out, you son of a bitch!' The seats were not changed, and O'Neill started referring to Jordan (pronounced Jerden) as 'Hannibal Jerkin.' "

For his part, O'Neill was tagged "the Godfather" by White House aides, with whom he clashed regularly. Besides Jordan, O'Neill had little regard for press secretary Jody Powell, and for a time he barred his office to Frank Moore, Carter's congressional-liason man.

O'Neill also turned down at least three invitations to state dinners in the Carter White House, which usually are command performances. Despite his personal and political differences with the administration, however, O'Neill worked hard to push through Carter's ethics-code and energy legislation, among other bills.

Over the years, O'Neill spent a lot of time away from his home in Cambridge, where Millie stayed with the children. He tried to make up for it by taking them bowling every Saturday afternoon and escorting Millie out on Saturday nights. Now the children are grown: Rosemary is a Foreign Service officer, Tommy has served two terms as lieutenant governor of Massachusetts, Susan is head of a public-relations partnership, Christopher (Kip) is a lawyer, and Michael is an insurance broker. Seven grandchildren call the Speaker "Pop-Pop."

Although Millie did not expect Tip to be a politician for life and prefers to shun the limelight, she clearly has been a major influence in his political career. Their affection is unabashed. She calls him Tom; he calls her Mum. He still breaks into strains of "I'll Be with You in Apple Blossom Time" in her presence and says, "After 44 years of married life, I love her more each day, if it's possible."

When Tip became Speaker, with the children on their own, Millie moved to Washington. With the help of Conte's wife, Corinne, a real estate agent, they located a fourth-floor, two-bedroom apartment with fireplace in Summer Village, a townhouse development off Massachusetts Avenue in Bethesda.

"Tip never looked at it," Mrs. Conte recalls. "We had the settlement in his office, and he didn't see it until Millie had it furnished. It has a New England look. We had them to dinner the night they bought it, and Tip asked Millie to drive us out to where they would live. His face just dropped. 'Millie, are we going to be second-class citizens all our lives? I never thought I would be living in a project,' he said." Now settled in, O'Neill calls the place "cozy and intimate." The O'Neills also maintain their home in the old Cambridge neighborhood and have a summer house at Harwichport, on Cape Cod.

Twice a week the Speaker dons an Irish-knit sweater and slacks for the O'Neills' regular bridge games with the Contes. They play for a quarter-cent a point.

Conte says he and O'Neill are "like brothers." The two couples have toured the world together on O'Neill's annual foreign trips.

On a recent trip to Kenya, Millie suffered a respiratory attack and had to be evacuated to a hospital in Germany. "That was a crisis. I never saw Tip look so sad. He was a lost soul," Conte says. As a result, Millie quit smoking. Until then Conte recalls, "when we played cards, between him and me smoking cigars and Millie and Corinne smoking cigarettes, you couldn't even see the players." In recent months, O'Neill has cut back on cigars as a favor to Millie.

Whatever message the fractured Democrats are trying to hammer out now, it is unlikely that a party consensus will be reached until they choose their presidential nominee in 1988. Until then, the soul-searching and self-criticism will continue. The past five elections have shown that the New Deal coalition, once the Democrats' ticket to victory, has eroded, with the GOP cutting heavily into traditionally Democratic groups such as youth, ethnics, southerners, blue-collar workers, and Hispanics. Almost half the voters now identify themselves as Republicans.

Despite their losses, Democrats continue to maintain strong control of the House and have a better than two-to-one margin in governors. They hold about 60 percent of the state legislative seats, and their prospects are good for recapturing the Senate in 1986. The party's biggest problem is trying to get together nationally.

There is a strong feeling among Democrats that their party must move to the center. "We've been overly concerned about the low-income people who needed help, to the exclusion of those paying the bills," says Representative Butler Derrick of South Carolina. Their most pressing need, Democrats say, is for a national leader with TV charisma, someone who can embody the traditional Democratic values while recapturing the political center.

The new Democratic chairman, Paul Kirk, may succeed in overcoming his perceived ties to liberal interests to reunify the party, but because chairmen rarely talk issues, the Speaker—from his forum in the Capitol—will remain the ranking party spokesman. And how that role will be filled after O'Neill retires is an open question. Majority Leader Jim Wright's image is not different enough from O'Neill's for some House members. Despite early commitments to Wright, there is some feeling that various factions might unite behind Tom Foley of Washington, now the House whip, for Speaker. Whether the Coelhos and Gephardts will have enough strength by then to try to put one of their own into the Speaker's job remains to be seen.

Gephardt, the newly elected head of the House Democratic caucus, is a leader of the congressional "neo-liberals," who believe in helping the needy but do not always line up with unions and big government or oppose the military and big business. They tend to admire entrepreneurs who create new jobs, and they see high technology as the way to economic growth. Their dilemma is conveying those views without sounding like "me-too" Republicans.

Representative Michael Barnes of Maryland wants Democrats to tone down their allegiance to interest-group politics. So does Anne Wexler, who urged Democratic presidential nominee Walter Mondale during the campaign to shed his image as captive of special-interest groups by saying, "Here is what I believe. If you think I am right, vote for me; if not, go with somebody else." Even long-time liberal Senator Edward Kennedy wants to cut ties to the special interests.

Barnes claims that a new Democratic party exists that differs from the perception Americans seem to have of the national party. He contends that Democrats are alive and well at the state and local levels, "where they govern with sound fiscal policies while retaining the traditional values of caring and compassion that have always defined the difference between Democrats and Republicans."

O'Neill agrees with much of that and is amenable to working some of it into party policy in the next two years. He will not be an obstacle, he says. But the fact remains that it will be a party and a policy different in many ways from those Tip O'Neill has represented over the past 50 years. Still, one thing is sure—when O'Neill walks out of the Capitol for the last time, something zesty, tough, compassionate, and larger than life will be gone.

Ever since O'Neill announced his retirement plans a dozen book publishers have been clamoring for his last hurrah. "There are so many secrets I've been part and parcel of that I may have to wait until a lot of people die," he laughs, but he does plan to write a book. He has been invited by Boston College to take over the O'Neill chair in 1987 and says he will teach a course there. The chair was established with a $1.3 million endowment in 1979 by friends and fellow alumni of the Speaker. Ironically, the current lecturer there is former Carter aide Jody Powell, now a columnist. O'Neill has said that he would love to be ambassador to Ireland, but it's as doubtful he would accept an appointment from a Republican President as it is that one would be offered.

The Speaker has done some thinking about how he wants to be remembered: "I look back at the success of young people I knew as a lad, and the success of their children. None are left in the old neighborhood. All are out there doing well. I know I've played a part in changing America and making it better for these yuppies. I want to be remembered as a person who never forgot his people or where he came from. In the beginning, only the old Boston blue-blood Brahmin had an opportunity to move up. I was part of an era of responsibility and politics that helped change all that."

Do the changes in the electorate and the shift toward conservatism mean that O'Neill wishes he had done things differently? As Frank Skeffington would say, "The hell it does!"

SPECIAL ELECTION CALLED FOR IN INDIANA'S EIGHTH CONGRESSIONAL DISTRICT

(Mr. BARTON of Texas asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. BARTON of Texas. Mr. Speaker, later on this afternoon it appears that we are going to address an issue that, in my opinion, is as serious a constitutional issue on the legislative branch as the Watergate issue was to the executive branch. I am referring to the resolution later on to vacate the Eighth Congressional seat in Indiana and ask the Governor of Indiana to call for a special election.

We have a task force that is chaired by the Honorable LEON PANETTA that has finished its report and has been made available to Members of the Congress. I would like to very briefly read one paragraph from that report. It says:

* * * doubt about the election result began on election night and continued through the course of the state recount process. It became apparent that not only on election night, but even more pronouncedly during the course of the state recount, uniform standards for the counting of ballots were not applied. In an election this close, the lack of uniform standards for determining what constituted a valid vote fundamentally undermined the confidence that the House would otherwise extend to the certified state result.

Now, the original election was a 34-vote margin. We have now gone through the Federal recount, and we have a four-vote margin. Rules have been consistently applied inconsistently. For that reason, to diffuse the constitutional issue at hand, I would ask that we do allow the Governor of the State of Indiana to call for a special election, and I would hope that the Members of the Democratic majority would agree with that position.

PRESIDENT'S SCHEDULED VISIT TO BITBURG MILITARY CEMETERY IS INAPPROPRIATE AND INSENSITIVE

(Mr. BIAGGI asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. BIAGGI. Mr. Speaker, shortly the House and properly so, will pass House Concurrent Resolution 130, expressing our opposition to the President's scheduled visit to the Bitburg Military Cemetery this Sunday.

As the President prepares to leave for Europe, I continue to be amazed at the faulty rationale used by the White House to justify this obviously inappropriate and insensitive visit.

The White House says the President will only spend 15 minutes at the Bitburg Cemetery. What real difference does this make? Consider what horrors were perpetrated in the Nazi-run death camps in any 15-minute period. Consider the number of innocent men, women, and children who were slaughtered in a 15-minute period. The issue is not whether the President spends 1 second, 15 minutes, or 1 hour in Bitburg. He does not belong there at all.

The White House says Bitburg will symbolize the reconciliation that now exists between the United States and Germany. What about the divisiveness in America over the visit? Should not that be the higher concern?

The President said yesterday that "it is morally right" for him to visit Bitburg. I contend that he must seek to do what is morally just—and that would be to cancel the Bitburg visit.

WHO WILL BE NEXT?

(Mr. LAGOMARSINO asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. LAGOMARSINO. Mr. Speaker, what do the following newspapers all have in common: the New York Times, the Washington Post, the Washington Times, the Baltimore Sun, the Detroit News, the Philadelphia Enquirer, the Wall Street Journal, the Bakersfield Californian, and the Evansville Press?

The answer, Mr. Speaker, is that each of these newspapers, and many more, have editorially called for a new election in the Eighth District of Indiana.

Why, you might ask, should newspapers as diverse as these care about a single seat in a single district in Indiana? The answer is simple. They know that if the Democratic majority in the House can steal a seat in Indiana by throwing out that State's election laws, they can do the same thing in New York, in Massachusetts, in Florida—anywhere in the country.

Every voter who cast a ballot for Congress in last November's election has a right to be concerned about what this House is about to do here: to disenfranchise voters and ignore State election laws for partisan gain. I urge each of my colleagues to think about the consequences of such an action. Who will be next?

PERSONAL EXPLANATION

(Mr. PEPPER asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.)

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. Speaker, unavoidably yesterday I missed two rollcalls, rollcall No. 77 and rollcall No. 79. Had I been present I would have voted "no" on the motion for adjournment, on rollcall No. 77, and I would have voted "aye" on the motion for a second on House Concurrent Resolution 130, rollcall No. 79.

POLITICAL MACHINE IS ALIVE AND WELL ON THE FLOOR OF THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Mr. McEWEN. Mr. Speaker, political pundits and historians have prematurely been reporting the demise of political machines in Boston, New York, Philadelphia, Baltimore, Chicago, and Los Angeles.

I am delighted to report that the political machine is alive and well on the floor of the House of Representatives.

Mr. Speaker, You know how to win vots the old-fashioned way: You steal them.

OPPRESSIVE GOVERNMENTS

(Mr. LELAND asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.)

Mr. LELAND. Mr. Speaker, earlier, the gentleman from California [Mr. DORNAN] talked about the horror of what happened in Afghanistan this morning. Let me tell you that, as a black man and a young boy growing up in the fifth ward in Houston, TX, I understand what oppression meant as imposed by racism, and that gave me a relatively interesting perspective on life, a real empathy for those people who suffer at the hands of oppression whether it is from the left or the right.

I call upon people like Mr. DORNAN to be consistent in their overtures about human rights and the treatment of human beings. Just this weekend, seven human beings were killed—murdered, if you will—in South Africa. I would hope that he will express the same kind of fervent interest in the protection of the people of the South African Republic as he does those people on the left in the Communist nations, as I have done in speaking out against the Soviets in Afghanistan, the Polish Government in Poland, the Government of Zaire, and the Government of Haiti, and places like that.

Also, Mr. Speaker, let me add to those numbers those governments of Latin America like Chile—Mr. Pinochet in Chile—and how cruelly he treats his people.

□ 1250

THE VOICES OF REASON

(Mr. DREIER of California asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to include extraneous material.)

Mr. DREIER of California. Mr. Speaker, we have once again seen a reprehensible obfuscation of the issue of the contested race in the Eighth District of Indiana. I have in my hand a "Dear Colleague" letter which lifts a quote from that now famous editorial that ran in the Evansville Press, dated April 20, 1985.

The quote lifted, that was included in this "Dear Colleague" letter, says, "Was the election stolen as Republicans are inclined today to charge? We do not think so."

That is incorporated in the body of the editorial, but we should read the last paragraph of that editorial which in fact does call for a special election. It says:

> Unless those voters, all the votes are counted, those shouting for a special election, a costly venture that could set the State back as much as a half million dollars and possibly still not clear up this mess, may more and more begin sounding like the voices of reason who have the candidates' best interests at heart.

In your last term, Mr. Speaker, become a hero. Preserve our great Constitution—allow the people of the Eighth District of Indiana to vote in a special election.

[From Evansville Press, Apr. 20, 1985]

ONCE AGAIN, WHO WON?

At long last, the confusing, troublesome, tiresome Eighth District Congressional race is about to come to an end. Or is it? Will it ever?

The background is this: On Nov. 6, 1984, nearly a quarter-million southern Indiana voters went to the polls to pick their representative for 1985 and 1986 in the United States House.

Ever since that November day, we've been trying to determine who won.

Election-night totals gave the victory to Democratic incumbent Frank McCloskey; day-after-election totals, following the correction of a tabulating error in Gibson County, gave the victory to Republican challenger Rick McIntyre; a full recount of all 15 counties in the district also gave the victory to Mr. McIntyre; and now, a House-ordered full recount of those same 15 counties has returned the victory to Mr. McCloskey.

So who did win? It is shameful to have to say that it's quite possible we still don't know.

Was the election "stolen" as Republicans are inclined today to charge?

We don't think so. Clearly, the federal auditors were more circumspect and thorough in their duties than the previous recount, when thousands of voters were disfranchised over technical violations not the fault of voters but instead of poll workers. Clearly, the effort was made this time to count votes earlier denied where no fraud had been alleged or found.

What the task force heading the recount did this time was decide to count every ballot, or determine voter intent, where it could, even if election workers' or voters' technical mistakes made them subject to some question. The problem is that the task force, once it decided to follow that rule, then violated it.

In nine counties, for a variety of reasons too complicated to rehash here, the task force did count technically flawed absentee ballots. In two counties, Vanderburgh and Crawford, similarly flawed absentee ballots were not counted because they had not been kept under lock and key since election day. Their integrity could not be guaranteed, so the ruling not to count them seemed reasonable.

But in the four remaining counties the integrity of the absentee votes was not questioned, yet the task force still refused to count them. It is those uncounted votes that now allow Republicans to charge that the recount was inconsistent and designed by the Democratic-controlled task force to rig the results.

We are not talking about many votes in those four counties—only 25 or so. But that number looms large when one considers that the final margin of victory for Mr. McCloskey was declared to be only four votes. And the fact that the 25 disallowed votes came from four counties that are considered Republican strongholds (Orange, Daviess, Green and Lawrence), only gives Republicans more fuel to cry foul.

Neither side knows, nor do we, whether those 25 votes would change the result that was arrived at late Thursday night.

But unless—and until—they are counted, as were all the other absentee votes in counties that had secured them since election day, we still won't know who really won this election.

The recount appeared to be a fair one; it simply stopped 25 votes short of the end. Since the rationale for a federal recount was based on obvious major inconsistencies in the earlier local recount of votes, there should be no tolerance for smaller, but equally obvious, inconsistencies where an election is being decided by a handful of votes.

Unless those votes—all the votes—are counted, those shouting for a special election—a costly adventure that could set the state back as much as a half million dollars and possibly still not clear up this mess—may more and more begin sounding like the voices of reason who have the candidates' best interests at heart.

THE PRESIDENT SHOULD FIND ANOTHER PLACE TO VISIT

(Mr. SCHUMER asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. SCHUMER. My colleagues, today we will vote on the resolution urging the President not to visit the Bitburg Cemetery. I urge a unanimous vote.

In the name of Holocaust survivors, hundreds of thousands of whom live in this country and love it, a trip to Bitburg will be a tremendous slap in their faces, honoring those who made them suffer. In the name of families of veterans who were massacred by the SS as helpless POW's, by visiting Bitburg, the President will again step on their graves.

In the name of diplomacy, a visit to Bitburg, an act that was supposed tc bring America and the Federal Republic of Germany closer together, will move us further apart. Most important, a visit to Bitburg will undermine the moral leadership of the United States.

Mr. President, when you set foot in that cemetery, no matter how short your visit, no matter what you say, the beacon of our moral leadership will be dimmed. Mr. President, visiting Bitburg is not the moral thing to do, as you said it was; the moral thing to do is admit your mistake and find another place, a real symbol of reconciliation, to visit.

LET US SEE JUSTICE AND EQUITY PREVAIL

(Mr. BOULTER asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. BOULTER. Mr. Speaker, last week, the Republican delegation of the State of Texas signed a letter which was sent to major newspapers throughout our fine State. That letter was sent because each of us believe that the people in Texas should know that the Democrat leadership in this House is about to trample on their constitutional right to choose their own Representative. The letter explained that the party leadership on the other side of the aisle is using bareknuckle partisan power to take an election from the people of Indiana's Eighth District and seat their handpicked candidate as the Representative. Despite the fact that that candidate lost an election, and a recount, the Democrats will try to seat him. Mr. Speaker, it is important to me to note that there are three fine courageous, Texas Democrats who have voted in the past to seat the rightful winner of this election. We hope the remaining members of our delegation will join them, and us, as we vote to see that justice and equity prevail in the McIntyre case.

AN ALL-TIME LOW

(Mr. RUSSO asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. RUSSO. Mr. Speaker, I believe that the debate on this issue of who shall represent the Eighth Congressional District has hit an all-time low. It is absolutely outrageous and uncalled for for the Member from Ohio to step into the well and indicate that the Speaker of the House of Representatives has stolen the election. That is totally irresponsible and reprehensible.

If the gentleman from Ohio can show the House of Representatives, and the media that he is speaking to, that the Speaker has stole the election, bring the evidence forward so that we can deal with it openly. But if the gentleman does not have any evidence, he should not demean the House of Representatives by saying the Speaker of the House of Representatives has stole the election.

The debate has gotten down so low that it is not even worth discussing any more.

LET THE PEOPLE OF INDIANA'S EIGHTH DECIDE WHO THEIR REPRESENTATIVE SHALL BE

(Mr. WOLF asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. WOLF. Mr. Speaker, the 99th Congress has been in session almost 4 full months today and during this time, the people of the Eighth District of Indiana have been without representation because this House has refused to seat the certified winner—Rick McIntyre. Instead, the majority in this body established a task force weighted 2 to 1 for the majority to investigate the election, refusing to seat Mr. McIntyre in the interim.

Now, we've reached the end of the task force's investigation, or I should say, where the majority members of the task force wanted to stop, and alas, what did the task force report—the winner by four votes is Frank McCloskey. Were all the ballots counted? No. Just enough ballots to put Mr. McCloskey in the lead.

Mr. Speaker, this entire episode has been a travesty, a dark spot on the history of this institution and the only way for this House to right this wrong is to declare the Eighth District seat vacant and let the people of that district decide in a special election who they want to represent them. That is the only fair and decent thing for the Members of this body to do and I implore my colleagues to take the necessary step today to give back to the people of the Eighth District of Indiana their fundamental right in our system of representative government.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to read from several editorials:

From the New York Times: The problem is that the recounts have been hopelessly tainted by the appearance of partisanship . . . Wisdom and fairness argue for a special election.—April 26, 1985.

From the Washington Post: In an election so close, neither contestant should be seated. The House, embroiled in an earsplitting dispute over the outcome, should in fact declare the seat vacant and let Indiana hold another election.—April 23, 1985.

From the Detroit News: Democrats evidently accepted those rules until their man crept ahead—and then quit.

House Republicans are rightly outraged about all this. Never before in American history has Congress ignored the certified results of an election that was conducted without allegations of fraud.—April 23, 1985.

From the Philadelphia Inquirer: Yet after so many contested recounts and partisan power plays, the only way to purge the taint of suspicion that either party stole the seat is to hold a new election, and the sooner the better."—April 24, 1985.

From the Baltimore Sun: This was a virtual dead heat—and no winner ought to be declared. Otherwise, people will have another reason to be cynical about politics, and Mr. McCloskey will take his seat under a cloud.—April 22, 1985.

AN INSULT TO MANY

(Mrs. LLOYD asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend her remarks.)

Mrs. LLOYD. Mr. Speaker, I do feel compelled today to protest in the strongest terms President Reagan's planned visit to the Bitburg Cemetery. The President has said that the German soldiers buried at Bitburg were as much victims of nazism as were the millions who died in the concentration camps.

I am appalled that such a comparison would be drawn. I think it is a slap in the face, not only to the survivors of the concentration camps, but to the memory of the millions who did not survive. Also, it shows disrespect to the tens of thousands of service people, American, British, and others, who bravely fought, and often died, in combating the Nazis to make the world safe for democracy.

I would like to inject a personal note, Mr. Speaker. My brother was first pilot on a B-17, and his plane was shot down over Germany. He served as a prisoner of war in a Nazi prison camp for 20 months. These were hard months and they were long months for my family, Mr. Speaker. For the President of the United States to pay tribute to the German soldiers buried at Bitburg is an insult not only to my brother and to my family, but to all those who risked their lives fighting Nazi totalitarianism.

WISDOM AND FAIRNESS

(Mrs. BENTLEY asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend her remarks.)

Mrs. BENTLEY. Mr. Speaker, on Friday, the New York Times joined the overwhelming number of media who have called for a special election in the Eighth District of Indiana.

"Wisdom and fairness argue for a special election" is their terse summation.

There are always benefits, even in the worst of situations. Even the McIntyre case, coming at the beginning of my services in the House, has its plusses.

I have come to know the fine group of legislators who comprise the Republican freshman class more quickly than might otherwise be the case. We as a class have learned more about the House and about its internal politics than would have been true without the McIntyre matter.

And we have learned how to act more effectively. I expect we will put that training to good use in the rest of this Congress and in future Congresses.

The Republican freshman class is a group of fine people and I am proud to be numbered among them.

□ 1300

CURBING CORPORATE RAIDS

(Mr. AuCOIN asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. AuCOIN. Mr. Speaker, today I'm joining my colleague from Oklahoma, Mr. JONES, in cosponsoring legislation to break the stride of corporate raiders who are enriching themselves at the expense of taxpayers and America's long-term economic growth.

In Oregon, the forest products industry is especially vulnerable to this practice because of a peculiarity of the stock market which undervalues the future worth of natural assets, such as standing timber. Right now, the Crown Zellerbach Corp. is desperately trying to fend off the well-known corporate raider, Sir James Goldsmith. If Crown Zellerbach is lucky, it will succeed. But at what price? And for whose benefit?

In order to survive raids of this kind, companies must incur tremendous debt. But the raider makes off like a bandit. He can even deduct the interest costs on the money he borrows to finance the raid that he embarks upon.

St. Regis Paper, the Continental Group, and Diamond International have all been subjects of hostile takeover attempts within the past 2 years. Evans Products was recently taken over by a raider, its stock plunged, and it is in bankruptcy today.

Mr. Speaker, these raiders are not only picking the pockets of the American taxpayers; they are also robbing the Nation of the capital this Nation needs to make productive investments in our economic future. American corporations are cannibalizing themselves while our international competitors are using their resources for research, for innovation, and for quality control.

America needs to be investing in new plants and equipment to compete with the Japanese and other competitors. We need to be investing in the future—not padding the wallets of corporate raiders. To do the latter is not the way to create new products, new jobs, and new payrolls.

PUT THE PARTISANSHIP ASIDE TODAY

(Mr. LUNGREN asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. LUNGREN. Mr. Speaker, today we are going to have an important vote on the question of whether or not we should declare the Eighth District congressional seat from Indiana vacant and, therefore, make way for a special election.

I have spoken with a number of Members on the Democratic side of the aisle who have indicated to me that they think, frankly, that is the best outcome. Some of them feel extremely uncomfortable in taking that position because unfortunately this whole question has taken on partisan concerns.

I can only think how different the atmosphere is as we approach this vote than it has been on this floor when we have taken the serious votes on disciplining our Members after the Ethics Committee has made a recommendation. I am sorry about that. I wish we would handle this in the same way, having bipartisan subcommittees and full committees. We will have an opportunity, I hope, to change that in the future. But at this point in time, I would ask Members on the other side of the aisle, as well as on my own side of the aisle, to look inside and make a good-faith conscience decision today. This decision today will have far greater implications than just the Eighth District of Indiana. It will not only speak to the question of the atmosphere in this House, but it will establish a precedent for us to be directed by in the future.

I would just hope that we might put partisanship aside today and perhaps vote this, look at this, in the same manner and the same way, with the same bipartisan spirit that we normally look at issues of ethics in this House. I think it is of the same concern. I think it is of the same moment, and I would hope that all Members, Democrat and Republican alike, would try and treat it that way this afternoon.

PRESIDENT SEEKS WRONG COUNSEL ON BITBURG CONTROVERSY

(Mr. LUKEN asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. LUKEN. Mr. Speaker, the President continues the Bitburg controversy not only by his obduracy in planning to go ahead, but by his misstatements. Almost every morning we come across another one. This morning it was his statement, astonishing as it is, that it is morally right to go to Bitburg.

Unfortunately, the President seeks the wrong counsel in his Bitburg controversy. He sought Mr. Nixon on the issue of credibility, obviously the wrong source, and on the question of morality, now that he has recognized that it is a moral issue, he should have sought the counsel and advice of the survivors of the death camps because they would advise him and have advised him that it is wrong to go to Bitburg. The President is wrong. The survivors are right.

He was wrong in his initial refusal to visit the concentration camps because of his misguided attempt to put the Holocaust behind us. We cannot put the Holocaust behind us. And he was wrong in saying that all war dead, those from the death camps and those from the battlefield, are the same.

There is still time, Mr. President. Your statement that you have stated the last word on the subject is wrong. The last word on the Holocaust will never be said, it cannot be said, because only memory will prevent the recurrence.

REPRESSION AND GENOCIDE FOLLOW SOVIET SUPPORT

(Mr. BURTON of Indiana asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. BURTON of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, everywhere the Soviet Union puts its money and military support, repression and genocide soon follow. Repression and genocide followed their support in Afghanistan. Repression and genocide followed their military support and monetary aid in Ethiopia. It was followed by genocide and repression in South Vietnam and in Cambodia and Laos. Repression and Genocide followed Soviet military and economic aid in Cuba. Now in Nicaragua, Mr. Speaker, we see $200 million in economic aid being requested as well as 18,000 tons of military aid being sent down there last year by the Soviet Union, and you may rest assured that, in addition to the repression the people of Nicaragua are seeing today, the genocide will not be far behind.

Mr. Speaker, this House voted against $14 million in aid to the freedom fighters just a few days ago. I hope this House will reconsider, because this issue will come up again, only the next time it may be in El Salvador or Honduras or Guatemala, and the cost for freedom will be much higher.

Mr. Speaker, when will the people on the Democratic side of the aisle open their eyes. I hope they do before it is too late.

IF YOU CANNOT UNDERSTAND HISTORY, AT LEAST READ A NEWSPAPER

(Mr. MARLENEE asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. MARLENEE. Mr. Speaker, Vietnam became a totalitarian Communist holocaust. Cuba became a Communist ulcer that exports parasites of revolution and discord. As the eloquent colossus, my respected friend, HENRY HYDE, stated to those who oppose American involvement in Nicaragua:

If you cannot understand history, read a history book anyway.

I would add to that, at least read a newspaper; $250 million in Soviet military aid to Nicaragua last year.

April 4 Washington Times: Mass grave indicates Sandinista massacre.

April 2 Times: Qadhafi advocates "suicide" terrorism.

April 25 Times: All aid to Contras rejected by the House.

April 26 Times: Russian maneuver, after Reagan defeat.

Same paper on the same day: Soviets ship arms to Sandinista.

April 27: Ortega travels to Moscow.

April 29 Times: Nicaragua runs guns and agents to Honduras.

What a travesty. What an export of terrorism. Let me repeat. April 27 Ortega travels to Moscow. April 29 Washington Times reports Nicaragua runs guns and agents to Honduras.

My heart weeps for our country and for our friends the defenders of freedom and democracy who are stripped naked by me who can't read or who won't read or who fail to comprehend.

I urge the President to immediately impose a prohibition against imports from Nicaragua. I have introduced legislation which would ban all Nicaraguan bananas, sugar, and beef from entering the United States, but we need immediate action.

Mr. President, impose a trade prohibition right now against the Sandinista government in Nicaragua.

□ 1310

AMERICAN AGRICULTURE STRUGGLING TO SURVIVE

(Mr. McCURDY asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. McCURDY. Mr. Speaker, the economic recovery may have arrived in many sectors of our economy. However, there is no economic recovery in Oklahoma today due in many respects to crisis in agriculture.

The huge Federal deficits, high real interest rates, and dollar exchange rates place agriculture at an extreme disadvantage because:

First, farming requires twice as much capital per worker as any other industry;

Second, farmers are major net debtors; and

Third, American agriculture depends heavily on exports.

Economists in our State warn that no less than one-third of our agriculture producers are in serious financial trouble. They are having difficulty generating cash flow. The effects of financial stress on Oklahoma farms is becoming evident across the State. Banks, implement dealers, fertilizer, and chemical dealers are all failing or struggling to survive.

We are wrong if we assume that the 1985 Farm Bill will rescue our full-time, medium-size farmers. Action is needed now to restore profitability to American agriculture, to restore what is the heart and soul of rural America.

HISTORY'S TREATMENT OF THE INDIANA ELECTION CONTEST

(Mr. GRADISON asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. GRADISON. Mr. Speaker, when future historians write about the rise and fall of the Democratic Party a key chapter will chronicle the story of Indiana's Eighth District—a classic case of the triumphs of power over principle, of changing the rules after the game is over, of kicking the other guy when he's down. One of the saddest parts of this episode is the strange, eerie silence which has fallen over those Democratic House leaders who in the past have called for bipartisanship in confronting the problems which face our Nation at home and abroad. Where are the voices of moderation and compromise? Why are they afraid to speak out? Why is there such resistance to turning to the only people truly entitled to resolve this controversy: the people of the Eighth District—through a special election? There is no other fair resolution of the issue of this tainted seat.

CENTRAL AMERICA: DOSE OF REALITY—NO. 6

(Mr. GONZALEZ asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.)

Mr. GONZALEZ. Mr. Speaker, when the Congress considered aid to the so-called Contra forces of Nicaragua, it did so with the greatest of trepidation. The President argued that the money would be used simply to support forces that would interdict arms traffic that was supposed to be flowing from Nicaragua into El Salvador. But when no evidence ever emerged that there was any such arms traffic, the justification changed. Now the purpose of the aid was to force Nicaragua into elections. When elections took place, the President urged opponents of the Sandinistas to sit them out, ironically, just as the leftwing opponents of the Salvadoran Government are urged to sit out elections there.

With each increment of aid to the Contras, the justifications changed, and with each change in justification, the suspicions of Congress grew. This led to the enactment of the Boland amendments, which prohibit the use of funds to overthrow the Government of Nicaragua, directly or indirectly. Congress recognized that the Contras were something other than what they were advertised to be, and that it would not be possible to dislodge the Sandinistas by means of a clandestine war. And further, the fact was that the only kind of war the Sandinistas and the Contras could carry out was exactly the kind of terrorism that the people of the United States have never supported. Terrorism means attacks on the weak or the defenseless. It means implacable cruelty. And it is not easy to square the use and support of terror in one country while denouncing it next door. It is not easy to follow the logic of how terrorism promotes the causes of democracy and freedom—most particularly when those who are carrying out the terrorism are mostly members of the same national guard that is loathed throughout Nicaragua, for ample reason. After all, this was the military force of the Somozas, who earned a place in history as among the most cruel and corrupt of governments in a region not noted for honesty and justice.

The whole business of aid for the Contras never had a clear direction. Was it to interdict arms? Was it to support a true popular rebellion? Was it to harass the Government of Nicaragua? Or was it to overthrow that Government?

The Boland amendments were designed to establish what our policy really was. Otherwise, the aid was merely throwing money at the situation.

We have seen that Congress does not believe the Contras represent any hope for the advancement of justice in Nicaragua. They are in disarray among themselves, there is no sign of any significant popular support for them, and they have done far more damage to our cause than good. Why has this been the case? Because the President has steadfastly refused to follow the letter or intent of the law. He has repeatedly violated the War Powers Act. He has also violated the Boland amendments. And in so doing, he has proved unwilling or unable to lay out a policy in Nicaragua that makes sense or that the people of this country can support. In my next statements, I will outline what the Boland amendments did, and how the President violated them.

Of course, he may not even have been aware of the law; for in response to a press question, he assumed that the law was only a pending proposal. In his direction of foreign policy, Mr. Reagan is very much a loose cannon on a pitching deck. But in law, and in history, ignorance of the law is no excuse.

THE HOUSE EMBARKED ON A RECKLESS COURSE

(Mr. STRANG asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. STRANG. Mr. Speaker, today we appear to be launched on a reckless course, one which cannot help but destroy comity, probity, and trust in the House. While we thumb our noses at the laws of the sovereign State of Indiana and seat a man who did not contest the loss of his election, we send a signal of arrogance and disregard of the basic guarantees of the liberties and rights of our citizens. The body of justice lies bleeding, impaled upon the sword of partisan politics.

Mr. Speaker, let us turn from this reckless course. Even the newspapers in California have moved on this. Take heed.

A TRADE EMBARGO AGAINST NICARAGUA

(Mr. MAZZOLI asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. MAZZOLI. Mr. Speaker, last week, along with a majority of my colleagues in the House, I voted against military assistance for the Contras in Nicaragua. I did so with trepidation and with a certain amount of reserve because that is a villainous, oppressive government, a godless government, and it should not take any aid and comfort from that vote.

I voted as I did in large part because I do not think we have done everything short of military action to indicate our disrespect for that government and to try to replace it with a democratic form of government.

I, for example, would suggest that the American people would be amazed to know that the No. 1 trading partner of Nicaragua is the United States. Depending on whose view you take, we export up to $120 million a year and import some $60 million a year from Nicaragua.

I think the average American would be amazed to know that our Embassy is open and doing business in Managua.

And, I think the people would be amazed to know that you can board an airplane and fly into Managua very freely and openly.

I, for one, Mr. Speaker, suggest to the President that there be an immediate trade embargo ordered against Nicaragua in which we would ask our partners and allies in the world to join. I believe commercial airline service ought to be cut off to Nicaragua from the United States.

Mr. Speaker, we have spoken with a garbled message. Up till now we have condemned the Sandinistas and arranged trade deals with them all in the same breath, I think now we have to speak with a very clear voice against the Sandinistas. Let's not confuse the issue.

MEDIA VOICES JOIN IN EXPRESSING CONCERN OVER INDIANA ELECTION CASE

(Mr. COBLE asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. COBLE. Mr. Speaker, addressing the concern over the manner in which the McIntyre fiasco has been mishandled, is that concern reserved for Republicans and the isolated Democrats on this floor who have stood with us? No, indeed not.

The New York Times, the Wall Street Journal, the Evansville Press, the Detroit News, the Washington Post, the Denver Post, the Philadelphia Inquirer, the Bakersfield Californian, the Washington Times, the Florida Times-Union, the Baltimore Sun, and the Greensboro News Record in my district, among others, have expressed concern about where there is "something rotten." In this case it is not in Denmark, I fear, but on the floor of this House. These diverse editorial voices have cried out.

Mr. Speaker, there is still time for us to exercise an honorable role and conduct a special election to see who in fact should occupy this seat to represent the citizens of the Eighth District of Indiana.

REAGAN URGED AGAIN TO CANCEL BITBURG VISITATION

(Mr. MARKEY asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.)

Mr. MARKEY. Mr. Speaker, the President, more than anyone else, understands the power of symbols and gestures. This is one gesture that should not be made, one symbol that should not be honored.

Germany has traveled light-years since the horrors of Hitler's reign.

Do not resurrect the nightmare of nazism, Mr. President. The focus of your vist should not be the horrors of the past but the achievements of the present and the challenges of the future.

It does no good to try to balance the visit with a visit to a concentration camp. It is morally shallow to reduce the time spent at the Bitburg Cemetery and to increase the time at Bergen-Belsen—as if to say there are two sides to this issue and we are going to strike a balance between the perpetrators of the Nazi Holocaust and its victims.

Mr. Speaker, it is morally blind to say that the SS were as much victims of Hitler as his victims in the concentration camps.

□ 1320

THE DEMOCRATIC PARTY IS CHANGING

(Mr. SWEENEY asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. SWEENEY. Mr. Speaker, I was born and raised a Democrat in a heavily Democratic State and a heavily Democratic congressional district, going back and representing as my family does four generations of Democrats in the State of Texas.

As a matter of fact, my grandmother, confronted for the first time with voting for a Republican in the recent congressional election, did not make up her mind until election day to vote in fact for her grandson. She did so in part because she feels the Democratic Party is changing.

Nothing, Mr. Speaker, symbolizes or helps to symbolize more so that change in the Democratic Party than the matter before us today in the Eighth Congressional District of Indiana.

I had hoped not to have to address this House on this matter, because I had hoped that the Democratic Party would return at least on this one issue to those days when they honored the integrity of the individual and the sanctity of the voter. This is not, in fact, the Democratic Party of Sam Rayburn, of John Nance Garner, of Albert Thomas, of Lyndon Johnson even, of John Connelly or Alvin Shivers. It is not the party of the Democrats who so valiantly and honorably represented my State.

Mr. Speaker, not only have the Democrats perpetrated an unfairness, and I think I can say today committed an illegal act in Indiana, but they have also written the last chapter of the Democratic Party that I knew and that millions of other people know in the South.

SPINOFF: SPACE TECHNOLOGY USEFUL ON EARTH—FERROFLUIDS

(Mr. NELSON of Florida asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. NELSON of Florida. Mr. Speaker, I would like to talk to you today about ferrofluids.

Ferrofluids are not the latest breakthrough in preventing tooth decay.

What ferrofluids do represent is a successful commercial spinoff from this country's space program.

A ferrofluid is a mixture of a liquid such as kerosene and tiny particles of iron oxide which are attracted to a magnetic force.

The initial investigation of ferrofluids was sponsored by NASA.

In 1969, two enterprising chemical engineers thought they saw some commercial potential and started a company to pursue possible ferrofluid products.

Today Ferrofluidics Corp. is the world leader in manufacturing ferrofluid liquids. One of its products is used almost universally in the computer industry as a dust free sealer in certain computer memory hardware components.

As we increase our efforts to commercialize space and elements of our space program, it is important to recognize ventures like Ferrofluidics Corp. which exemplify how the transfer of technology from the public sector to the private domain should work!

In addition, we should recognize the contribution that space technology makes for our economy here on earth.

DANIEL ORTEGA VISITS MOSCOW

(Mr. RITTER asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. RITTER. Mr. Speaker, we are hearing a great deal about the controversy surrounding the President's visit to Bitburg and I for one feel very uncomfortable about that visit. I would urge my colleagues to also consider another visit, a visit by Daniel Ortega to Moscow to Mr. Gorbachev to talk about $200 million in Soviet assistance; this coming on the heels of the rejection of this House of $14 million to those who would oppose totalitarian communism in Central America.

I ask my colleagues who voted against that $14 million, are they disappointed with Ortega's visit? Do they feel the least bit betrayed? Is the time perhaps ripe to revisit the issue of aiding the Contras, the freedom fighters in Nicaragua, in the light of Ortega's visit to Moscow? Would it not be correct for the United States to give freedom fighters $14 million after totalitarian Communists receive $200 million from Moscow?

A DIPLOMATIC WAR ON WORDS

(Mr. PACKARD asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. PACKARD. Mr. Speaker, this morning's Washington Post carried a very disturbing headline. Nicaraguan leader Daniel Ortega reportedly secured $200 million in aid from the Soviets less than a week after this body refused to send assistance to the democratic resistance.

How many times does this scenario have to be reenacted before we open our eyes? In recent years the Soviets have strengthened their hand around the world while we conduct ourselves as if we existed in a vacuum. The dubious honor roll of the last few years includes Poland, Afghanistan, Angola, Cuba, Grenada—and now the Sandinista regime in Nicaragua.

When our forces obtained the working papers of Maurice Bishop's gang in Grenada, we discovered some very interesting facts. The Grenadian Communists had dealt with Soviet officials for the financial and military assistance their group needed to solidify power. One Grenadian official thanked a Soviet general for giving so generously to the cause of communism in the Caribbean. The Soviet general responded, "Oh, but you must understand—we give you nothing."

The implication was obvious. Our Soviet counterparts expect their beneficiaries to toe a very strict ideological line. I wonder what reforms Gorbachev will demand from Ortega now—more press restrictions? More rationing of food and scarce resources? More propaganda directed against the United States?

When we fight the diplomatic war of words, we have got to put our money where our mouths are.

ANOTHER OPPORTUNITY TO CORRECT INJUSTICE IN THE EIGHTH DISTRICT OF INDIANA

(Mr. COBEY asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.)

Mr. COBEY. Mr. Speaker, today we have another moment of truth, an opportunity to correct a great injustice to the people of the Eighth District of Indiana. It only takes close to 40 of the Members of the majority party to just simply say that we have made a mistake. We want to correct the situation.

I plead with the Members on the other side, my colleagues, to have the courage to oppose their leadership and do what they know in their hearts is right and vote to vacate the seat in the Eighth District of Indiana and allow the people of Indiana a special election to select the Member they want here in the House of Representatives.

DEMOCRATS NO LONGER THE PARTY OF FAIRNESS

(Mr. ARMEY asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.)

Mr. ARMEY. Mr. Speaker, it is with a sense of bitter disappointment that I find myself still here again today speaking about the situation in the Eighth District of Indiana.

The Democrat Party has long prided itself on being the party of fairness, the party of minority rights, and they speak about their stand on these issues outside this House a great deal.

Mr. Speaker, they cannot speak about that in this House. There is nothing fair about using the raw power of your numbers to override the minority party's right to take a seat that they lawfully won in an election decided by the people of Indiana.

Mr. Saul Alinsky is a great tactician, many of the Democratic Members would agree with me, and the tactics that he advised the minority to use when they thought their rights were being trod upon when employed in this House are no more dilatory than they are when employed to fight for justice outside of this House.

INDIANA ELECTION, A QUESTION OF RIGHT OR WRONG

(Mr. COMBEST asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. COMBEST. Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of the resolution which will call for the vacation of the seat in the Eighth District of Indiana.

This issue has been debated and discussed on this floor for many, many hours. It has been referred to many times as a partisan issue, and actually I do not feel that it is. While it is true we will be seating a Member of the majority or the minority party in this body to fill that seat, I think this is an issue based on right or wrong.

I would hope that this body never yields to partisan politics on issues which have to be based on right or wrong.

BOTTOM LINE IS THAT HOUSE HAS NEVER FAILED TO SEAT A STATE-CERTIFIED MEMBER-ELECT ABSENT FRAUD OR OTHER IRREGULARITIES

(Mr. EMERSON asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.)

Mr. EMERSON. Mr. Speaker, I have read the 96-page report relating to "Election of a Representative from the Eighth Congressional District of Indiana." I find that the real bottom line that emerges in the precedents is that the House has never failed to seat a duly certified Member-elect from a State, absent fraud or other irregularities.

It seems to me that when faced with difficult situations in our efforts to live and practice the Constitution of these United States, we often find ourselves turning to our forebears for their wisdom. This is good, because while Anglo-Saxon common law and those traditions which emerged from it are the basis of our political and judicial systems, through their theories and philosophies our ancestors amplified common law into the fine-tuned system that we adhere to and live under today.

Mr. Speaker, just over 150 years ago, on February 13, 1835, John C. Calhoun stated:

> The very essence of a free government consists in considering offices as public trusts, bestowed for the good of the country, and not for the benefit of an individual or a party.

How true this point rings today.

WHEN YOU ARE GOING TO STEAL, CREATE AN ALIBI

Mr. WALKER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and, under rule XXX, to read some papers.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

Mr. WALKER. Mr. Speaker, under our system of criminal justice, we have learned as observers of that system that the best crooks know that when you are going to steal, you better create an alibi.

□ 1330

That seems to be also the case if you are going to steal a House seat here in the Congress, because what we have seen done over the last several months is the creation of alibies or myths about how this process has taken place.

One of the major myths has been that the count that is to be brought before the House was conducted by an independent, outside source; namely, the General Accounting Office. That is belied by the chief counter in this morning's Washington Post. When interviewed by the Washington Post, Mr. Shumway, that chief counter, was asked about the 32 votes that the task force ended up not counting. He said that that was not up to him, that it was up to the task force to make the decision, that it was not an independent decision.

He says about the task force, "They're the rulemaking body. They were from the outset." In other words, there was no independent count. There was only a count done by a 2-to-1 Democratic majority in the task force. It was not fair. It was not independent. It was wrong.

WILL OUR CHILDREN FIND THE AMERICAN DREAM?

(Mr. PORTER asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. PORTER. Mr. Speaker, I have five children in their late teens and early twenties. Over the next 10 years, I expect that all of them may want to buy a house of their own.

In the late 1950's, when I was their age, it was easy for young families to buy a house—nothing fancy, mind you, but we all felt we had a piece of the American dream.

That dream lasted through the 1960's, but that was it. Since 1970, the cost of home ownership—adjusted for inflation—has more than doubled. Back then, a family with an income 26 percent below the national median could buy an average house. Today, a family has to have an income 29 percent above the median to buy the same house.

Many of today's young people will be renters all their lives. Others are faced with an all-too-real choice between buying a house and being able to afford to have children.

On top of this already sad situation we add, year after year, $200 billion of public debt to our children's burden.

What happened to the American dream? Will our children ever see it?

INTRODUCTION OF THE TRUTH IN SAVINGS ACT

(Mr. LEHMAN of California asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. LEHMAN of California. Mr. Speaker, savers, consumer advocates, and Members of Congress could not help but notice the barrage of advertisements for individual retirement accounts that hit the media shortly before the April 15 tax deadline. The almost limitless variables associated with figuring interest yields on these accounts result in upward of 10 million different yields that can be calculated from the same interest rate. The lack of meaningful information in many of these advertisements left potential savers frustrated and confused.

In an effort to assist consumers to make some sense of these advertisements, I am introducing the Truth in Savings Act. This bill will direct the Federal Reserve Board to develop guidelines for depository institutions to calculate the yields they advertise on deposit accounts. The Fed would also be responsible for developing uniform terminology for use in these advertisements.

The Truth in Savings Act will remove the mystery and gobbledegook from financial advertisements.

The act will require banks to disclose, not disguise the fees and charges associated with their accounts.

The act will provide consumers with the information they need to make meaningful decisions about which savings accounts suit their needs.

The act will not impose any costs on the Federal Treasury.

I am grateful to the more than 65 Members of the House who have joined me as original cosponsors of this legislation. I invite other Members who are interested in bringing a sense of fairness to savings advertisements to join us as cosponsors of the Truth in Savings Act.

GOVERNMENT CONFUSION

(Mr. SMITH of New Hampshire asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. SMITH of New Hampshire. Mr. Speaker, the Congress has been spending more money than it has been taking in for the last 30 or 40 years.

Recently it voted to deny $14 million to freedom fighters in Nicaragua, practically in our own backyard. And now we are standing by watching that leader go to Russia to get $200 million.

We are just about now to deny an individual who was rightfully elected to the U.S. Congress; we are about to deny him his seat.

I spent 8 years as a government and history teacher, and I would point out to all of those students out there that are failing, there is hope for you. You might get elected to the U.S. Congress.

WHAT THE PEOPLE OF INDIANA'S EIGHTH CONGRESSIONAL DISTRICT THINK

(Mr. COATS asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. COATS. Mr. Speaker, perhaps the most frequent question I am asked as a Member of Congress from Indiana is what is the reaction of the people of Indiana to the McIntyre-McCloskey situation. I think the reactions fall in two categories, and having just spent 4 days in Indiana, I have some fairly fresh information on the subject.

One category consists of people who feel that Indiana's laws were trampled on, that the rights of the State of Indiana were trampled on, that Rick McIntyre won the election, won the recount, and now he is seeing his justly won and deserved seat stolen out from under him.

Into the other category fall the people that feel that, with all of the confusion and with the counts and recounts, perhaps we ought to have a special election and let the people of Indiana decide who their Representative should be.

No one that I talked to in the past 4 days, Republican, Democrat, Independent, or not affiliated with any political persuasion, no one came up and said, "We think McCloskey ought to be seated."

"At the very least," they said, "let us have a special election and let the people decide. Do not let the House of Representatives take this election away from the people of the Eighth District of Indiana."

ANALOGOUS SITUATIONS IN NICARAGUA AND INDIANA

(Mr. CAMPBELL asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. CAMPBELL. Mr. Speaker, we have heard a great deal of discussion about the election in the Eighth District of Indiana. It is interesting to me we have also heard a great deal of discussion today about Nicaragua.

Last year there was an election in Indiana and the State did certify a winner and that winner will not be seated today because the majority in this House refused to accept the certified winner even though that person was certified under State law.

A few years ago there was a revolution in Nicaragua and the people threw out a dictator. Then much to their horror their victory was taken away from them by those who had more might.

I wonder if the two situations are analogous.

REPORT ON ACTIONS BY U.S. GOVERNMENT IN PURSUIT OF NATIONAL GOAL OF RETURNING SERVICEMEN HELD CAPTIVE, OR MISSING IN ACTION IN SOUTHEAST ASIA AND REPATRIATION OF ALL RECOVERABLE REMAINS OF THOSE WHO DIED—MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. MURTHA) laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States; which was read and, together with the accompanying papers, without objection, referred to the Committee on Armed Services and the Committee on Foreign Affairs:

(For message, see proceedings of the Senate of today, Tuesday, April 30, 1985.)

ANNUAL REPORT OF NATIONAL SCIENCE FOUNDATION—MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES

The SPEAKER pro tempore laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States; which was read and, together with the accompanying papers, without objection, referred to the Committee on Science and Technology:

(For message, see proceedings of the Senate of today, April 30, 1985.)

PRIVILEGES OF THE HOUSE—RESOLUTION TO DECLARE VACANCY IN THE EIGHTH CONGRESSIONAL DISTRICT OF INDIANA

Mr. FRENZEL. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a question of the privileges of the House, and I offer a resolution (H. Res. 148) and ask for its immediate consideration.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. MURTHA). The Clerk will report the resolution.

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

H. RES. 148

Resolved, That this House of Representatives hereby determines that there is a vacancy in the Ninety-ninth Congress from the Eighth Congressional District in the State of Indiana.

SEC. 2. That the Speaker of the House is hereby directed to notify the Governor of the State of Indiana of this action so that appropriate measures to fill the vacancy may be undertaken by the Governor pursuant to article I, section 2 of the Constitution of the United States.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The resolution does state a privilege of the House.

The gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. FRENZEL] is recognized for 1 hour.

Mr. FRENZEL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that 2 hours of debate may be allotted to the resolution pending before the House, one-half of which will be controlled by myself, and one-half by the gentleman from California [Mr. PANETTA].

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Minnesota?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. FRENZEL] is recognized for 1 hour.

Mr. FRENZEL. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself 2 minutes.

Mr. Speaker, nobody in the House is unfamiliar with the question before us. The Republican candidate, Rick McIntyre, was certificated by the State of Indiana as the winner in the November 6 election.

He was reaffirmed as the winner by a recount under that State's laws. His opponent lost a court case in which he asked the Federal district court to declare him the winner.

Notwithstanding those facts, the House decided not to seat McIntyre and instead referred the matter to the Committee on House Administration.

The committee's task force, created to review the election repudiated the laws of the State of Indiana, wrote its own election laws, and conducted a count until it found enough votes for its man, McCloskey, to win. At that point it stopped counting. With votes still uncounted, it quit. It quit notwithstanding the fact that it had given itself the charge that it would count every vote to determine the voter's intent where it could, and try to see that no clerical errors stood between the voters and the result of the election.

Mr. Speaker, the Republican minority in this House has been incensed since January 3 when the Democratic majority surprised us by not seating a lawfully elected and duly certificated Member of the House.

We have tried to attract the attention of what seems to be an insensitive majority to questions that we think are fundamental to the basis of representative democracy.

The only argument against us seems to be that we do not have enough votes in the House. We are going to try again today by going through this whole case to show you why McIntyre is the properly elected person who should now be seated. It looks like we do not have enough votes, but we are not going to give up, because we believe that somewhere there are some members of the majority who will look this issue right in the eye, and will decide not to take it away from the people of Indiana.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from California [Mr. PANETTA] is recognized for 1 hour.

Mr. PANETTA. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself 10 minutes.

Mr. Speaker, all of us today face, I think, one of the most serious responsibilities that we have under the Constitution, under article I, clause 5, which is, and I quote, "to be the final judge of elections, returns and qualifications of our own Members."

By the very nature of that responsibility under the Constitution, we must render a decision on the facts presented to the House of Representatives.

And, indeed, the Solicitor General of the United States in a brief in the case that was filed by the State of Indiana requesting the seating of Mr. McIntyre, stated that the House should be left to continue its recount and judge the elections and returns of its own Members, and basically supported the position of the House in terms of deciding the issue under the Constitution.

This is a complex and controversial and highly partisan issue. It involves Federal and State laws. It involves Federal and State court decisions. It involves Federal and State precedents and practices. It involves by its very nature deep emotions on both sides of the aisle. It involves some 23 sessions of the task force that was formed to decide this issue in the Eighth District over a 10-week period, involving hours of testimony and public hearings.

But as difficult and controversial as all of this may be, none of these reasons justify not making a decision or walking away from our responsibility to be the final judge.

Yes, the people made the choice and they should make the choice in elections. But where there is a contest, make no mistake about it, the final judgment under the Constitution is given to the House.

So I ask you in light of that very important responsibility to please look at and read the report that has been provided, and the hearings and the testimony that were involved in this issue.

You owe it not just to Mr. McCloskey or Mr. McIntyre or to the people of the Eighth District. We owe it to this House and we owe it to ourselves to make a decision based on the facts that have been presented to you; not on the basis of intimidation, not on the basis of personal attack, not on the basis of innuendoes or distortions or even editorial writers, none of whom had access to this report before writing their editorials.

You owe it to the institution based on the facts.

As chairman of this task force I have lived with this issue over the last 10 weeks. It is my honest view that the procedures established by the task force were fair, that the GAO and the director of elections implemented those rules in a consistent and equitable manner, and that as a result of that we should seat the legitimate winner of the seat.

I think all Members need to ask three basic questions in approaching this issue: Were the procedures fair that were established by the task force? Second, was the count that was done a credible count? And third, were the decisions of the task force reasonable and based on House precedent?

The first question is were the procedures fair? These procedures, let me make clear, were largely agreed to by the majority and minority members of the task force. These were not procedures that in every instance were voted 2 to 1 to be put into effect by the majority. We worked hand in hand with Mr. THOMAS, with his cooperation in trying to develop the procedures and counting rules and the counting procedures that were ultimately implemented.

The majority and the minority agreed as to how we would approach the securing of the ballots in the Eighth District. The majority and minority agreed as to the organizational memorandums, the operating principles and rules that would guide the task force and, indeed, agreed that we would make our decisions grounded on precedent in the House and explained openly to the public.

We also agreed on procedures for claims of irregularity. We also agreed on a schedule for the proceedings to try to meet our deadline that was provided by the House.

The majority and the minority also agreed on 20 of 22 counting rules. It was clear, by law, that the House has the power to establish the rules, the just and equitable rules that need to be established for a count. But our approach here was to go to the State of Indiana, to give deference to the law in Indiana, and to examine the statutes that were applied, to examine the court decisions that were applied; to examine the instructional manuals that were provided to each of the precincts in the 15 counties.

The problem was that we had conflicting decisions and procedures in all of the 15 counties.

This was particularly true in the recount which ultimately resulted in the disenfranchisement of almost 4,800 voters whose votes had been counted on election night. Unfortunately there was no uniform or consistent standard to be applied. And for that purpose we established a consistent set of rules to apply in this instance, using Indiana law, using Federal precedents, with the main purpose to maximize the counting of all valid ballots. Let me emphasize that, the main purpose here was to emphasize the counting of all valid ballots, including those that could be set aside because of technical errors of officials, and also to avoid as much as possible the massive disenfranchisement of voters that had occurred during the recount.

The only disagreement was on 2 of the 22 rules in which the minority said that ballots that do not have precinct numbers, or an election official's initials ought not to be counted.

□ 1350

The problem with that is that would have resulted again in hundreds of voters in Indiana being disenfranchised; voters whose votes had actually been counted on election night.

So on that basis, on a 2-to-1 vote, we agreed that we would count those particular ballots so as not to disenfranchise voters if the error is on the part of the election officials.

We then decided that we would take those rules and apply them to all votes. I want to refer the Members to pages 27 and 30 of the report in which you will see that every rule we decided was grounded in House precedent and supported in large measure by Indiana law.

The majority and minority agreed to apply these rules to all votes. The majority and the minority agreed to a director of elections, Mr. Shumway. We also agreed that GAO auditors would conduct the actual count; 14 of them, to work in conjunction with the director of elections.

We also agreed, indeed, the minority did the basic drafting on the counting procedures that would be applied, the teams that would be there, the presence of the representatives from the various candidates, the public and the press; all of that, all of those procedures were established unanimously.

So let me make clear that in establishing all of these preliminary procedures, this was done in large measure in tandem with the minority working together to try to lay some groundwork for the ultimate count that would take place.

On March 26 the vote count began, and it continued for 3½ weeks in 15 counties. It was not easy because the counties in the Eighth District vary. There are six counties that have machine counting. There are six counties that have punchcard counting. There were three that have paper ballots, which involve a great deal of time in terms of a recount.

They went through all of that, working 17 hours a day and weekends, to complete their chore.

The next question is, was their count credible? Was the work of Mr. SHUMWAY and the GAO auditors a credible count based on the rules? No one, no one that I know of has questioned the credibility of Mr. Shumway or the work of the GAO auditors. They had to count almost 234,000 votes. Many had to be counted hand by hand. They were watched by both Democratic and Republican teams as they went through these counts, and they did it in full view of the press and the public.

No count that I am aware of in recent history was done with as much care, or as well managed. The primary difference, let me point out, in the vote change occurred not because of votes on the task force, 2 to 1. That was not the case at all.

The primary difference occurred because of tabulation errors that were found in each of the precincts by the GAO auditors.

In Daviess County, 10 votes that should have gone to McCloskey were wrapped in a pile that was in a McIntyre box. That resulted in and of itself in a shift of almost 20 votes. In Crawford County, they found a tabulation error, in which they couldn't read a number behind a staple; five votes went to McCloskey.

In Knox County, a tally sheet error; another five votes gained by McCloskey. In Vanderburgh County, the same. In Monroe County, because of a misreading of the machine, McCloskey picked up an additional two votes.

In the last week, McIntyre led by three votes, until they went to Posey County and found six votes that had not been counted for McCloskey. That is where this vote turned around. Not in the decisions of the task force, but in the tallies that were made by the GAO auditors and teams that were out there counting these votes in the precincts.

Now if you believe that the procedures that were implemented here were fair and that the count indeed was credible, then you must also ask the questions about the decisions of the task force.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. PANETTA. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself 5 additional minutes.

Were they reasonable? Were they justifiable? Were they based on clear legal precedent? That is the test. Sure they can be close. Sure reasonable Members can disagree on the particulars here, but was the final judgment reasonable and justified and could it be defended based on House precedent?

During the course of the recount, we had several questions to deal with. One was the area of segregated ballots, those ballots that were set aside by the various teams; 78 of those were set aside because of distinguishing marks, because of other questions raised under our rules; 54 of those were decided unanimously—not on a 2-to-1 vote—unanimously, with all members of the task force agreeing. Two-thirds of those ballots were judged unanimously by all members of the task force.

Five involved a judgment in which Mr. THOMAS and I made a judgment against Mr. CLAY. The remainder, in the very last session, were judged on a 2-to-0 vote because of abstentions by Mr. THOMAS.

These decisions in every case were based on the recommendations of Mr. SHUMWAY. Every one of them.

Second, on reconciliation, the issue of trying to compare the number of people who signed in at a poll with the number of votes that had taken place there; 40 of the 527 precincts involved problems with reconciliation. The argument by the McCloskey forces is that we ought to go to those particular areas, those particular precincts, and because there was this difference, provide a proportional reduction.

They were largely in Republican precincts, and therefore that would have resulted obviously in favor of Mr. McCloskey.

But the precedents, in my view, state that you only do that where there is evidence of illegal votes. Nowhere in our testimony, nowhere in the evidence is there any indication that there were any illegal votes that were cast here.

Therefore, it was our judgment that we would not proportionally reduce those, but accept the votes that were taking place within those precincts; that they were well within the margin of error that is usually used in these kinds of recounts.

Absentee military ballot issue. Another issue that was raised. This issue was not raised until the very last session. At no time, at no time did any member of the task force during the 10 weeks prior to that last session, argue that we ought count ballots that arrive late, that arrive beyond the election day.

Our basic approach was that all valid ballots up to election day would be counted, and that we would abide by Indiana law that those that go beyond election day would not be counted. That is the general rule that is applied by most States in this country.

So it was the decision of the task force that we ought to abide by their rules not to count those ballots that arrived beyond election day.

Now if you agree that we were justified and reasonable up to this point, and let me argue the final point which has been raised, the issue relating to unnotarized and unsigned ballots.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. PANETTA. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself 5 additional minutes.

Let me make clear that the task force never intended, nor does House precedent allow for the counting of illegal ballots. Illegal ballots are ballots which are unnotarized and unsigned. That is not the result of an election official making an error. That is the problem of the voter not getting the proper notary and not being able to tie that individual to that particular ballot. That is an illegal ballot, when it is not notarized and it is unsigned.

The rule that we followed was that we would not count those illegal ballots. They were not counted in election night; they should not be counted.

The problem was that during the course of the recount, we found that some of the counties in fact had sent those ballots out to the precincts; some 62; 52 were counted in the precincts, and the result was that we had already, by virtue of some of those counties having sent those ballots out to the district, counted some of those illegal ballots.

But six counties did not do it. They did their job. They held onto those ballots; they did not refer them to the precincts; they did what they were supposed to do under Indiana law.

□ 1400

It was our view we were dealing with two classes, one class of votes that had been sent to the precincts, the other class that had been retained by the county clerks. It was our view that in order to avoid mischief out in the precincts, in which a precinct official could look at that name and decide, "Well, we will count this one," or "we won't count this individual," we would count all of those ballots at the precinct level, but that those that were held by the county clerks as they should have been ought not to be counted, we ought to respect their performance of duty in that situation and not compound the error.

This was not a sudden or last-minute decision. This was a decision that we discussed on April 10, in which a majority of the task force at that time framed the issue on the basis of two classes and that we ought not to count one class but we ought to count those that were at the precinct level.

The problem now is, obviously, after having played nine innings under the rules, following the procedures, the final vote came out 4 to 0 in favor of McCloskey. And now the minority is arguing that the game was not fair, that we ought to go another 10 innings, that we ought to in fact play a fourth out, that instead of playing the game by the rules as we played it, somehow we ought to go beyond this now and have a new election.

If you believe that this was a valid and credible count, if you believe that Mr. SHUMWAY and the GAO auditors did a fair job, there is no rule here that says when you win by four you have a playoff or you have a runoff. We operate on the basis of majority vote, and that is what we ought to abide by here.

Second, make no mistake about it, had McIntyre won by two votes or three votes or four votes, there is no question what we would be doing here today. We would be seating Mr. McIntyre without any of these arguments, without any of these objections, without any of these efforts to try to reach out and now count illegal votes. None of that would have taken place. We would have seated Mr. McIntyre. Is not Mr. McCloskey entitled to the same kind of treatment?

They have argued every side of every issue. The first position was to disenfranchise 4,800 voters in Indiana. "Let's follow the recount procedures." Now they are arguing, "Let's count illegal ballots." Then they argued they are for Indiana law, "Let's go straight down the line with Indiana law." Now they are arguing that we ought to ignore Indiana law when it comes to counting illegal ballots.

When it came to the question of the special election, Mr. THOMAS was quoted as saying that somehow this was sinister, and now they argue that it really is simple justice.

I want you to make a judgment based on the facts here. I know that there are tactics here that threaten the institution and threaten individuals, and I know the personal attacks that have been made. That does not bother me. We have had those kinds of attacks in this institution before, and the institution has survived. What bothers me is the conscientious Member who knows what is right and who, because of those tactics, and out of fear, takes a position contrary to that individual's conscience. That is what can undermine this institution. And that is what we have to avoid.

So make your judgment on the facts, adhere to the rules. And I think there is no alternative but to reject the motion to vacate and to seat Mr. McCloskey.

Mr. FRENZEL. Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from California [Mr. THOMAS], the sole Republican member of the elections task force.

Mr. THOMAS of California. Mr. Speaker, I think some Democrats do not understand how strongly Republicans feel about this issue. It is not just one seat in the House of Representatives. The depths of our feelings and the doubts of honor that have been present are not based on that one seat. They are based on the principles, the very foundations, of our free society, and we think they are being challenged.

We agree with Rousseau, who said that those who treat politics and morality apart will never understand the one or the other.

The one fundamental political morality in this system, as Alexander Hamilton once said, is, "Here, sir, the people govern."

The House of Representatives, since the first day of our Republic, has been the people's House. Its membership is, according to article I in the Constitution, to be composed of Members chosen every second year by the people of the several States—by the people.

This entire sordid affair started on January 3, with "the big lie," that there was a question over who the people had chosen in Indiana's Eighth Congressional District election night. There was no contest, there has never been a contest over that question. A picture was painted of disenfranchisement, unfairness and "ballots bearing identical minor flaws are counted or not counted, depending on the individual county involved. The Democrat majority voted to a person to deny the people's choice, the certified winner, his rightful seat."

Honorable men and women can be led astray through errors of passion or pressure, but honorable men and women admit their errors. "The big lie" was never investigated by the task force. Instead, it was accepted as the truth by a 2-to-1 partisan vote, and the task force created its own rules to count the votes and correct the errors claimed in "the big lie."

Much has been said about black voters not being counted, but when the task force on a 2-to-1 partisan vote said it was ready to quit counting, it was white votes that remained on the table. Honorable men and women are colorblind. They do not defend the rights of blacks and then remain silent when others are disenfranchised. All the ballots for Indiana's Eighth Congressional District that should have been counted have not been counted. The chairman of the task force, I think, has established for you my credibility in terms of a willingness to participate in the process. It is quite true that I tried to participate as a willing member of the task force to resolve the question, even though I did not think that the election night returns were in any way tainted or that the wrong person held the certificate. It was an assignment that I attempted to carry out with credibility and integrity.

For example, on the military votes, that was a question we did not decide at the outset. It was not one of our early permanent rules. It was decided in the field when we discovered we had those ballots. I lost that vote 2 to 1. But all of the military ballots were treated in the same fashion. I can live with those kinds of defeats. I can understand that the majority would win those kinds of arguments. And I will not go through the other arguments that I lost on partisan votes 2 to 1. Those I accept. It reflects more on the way a task force should be constructed to investigate special elections than on any of those individuals participating in this task force.

This House should never again consider a task force with a 2-to-1 partisan advantage, whether it be Democrat or Republican. If we are going to be honest about investigating elections over which we have a question, those task forces should be constructed, as is the committee to investigate questions of ethics about our Members. There ought to be an equal number of Members from each side.

My concern is about those votes that should have been counted but were not. Those groups in which some were counted but not all. I am talking about those unnotarized absentee ballots, which, through officials' errors, were sent to the precincts. We opened and counted some of those ballots that had never been opened or counted election night or recount night. And we discovered that we had additional ballots in the same category. But the argument was made, as the chairman indicated, that there was a distinction between those so-called illegal ballots that were sent to the precincts and the illegal ballots that were retained by the county clerks.

It was discovered, after much examination, that the distinction that was attempted was without a difference.

The next argument was one of security, that those ballots retained by the county clerks were ipso facto different in their security than those ballots that were sent to the precinct. The trip to the precinct, incidentally, is 1 day out of 6 months in which the county clerk retained possession of those ballots.

And so the task force unanimously agreed to send out affidavits to the county clerks for them to mark in such manner as they would, under penalty of perjury and their signature, the way in which they held those ballots. Why would the task force unanimously send staff out to the counties to fill out the affidavits over questions of security if we were not going to examine the way in which those ballots were held? The answer is, we did not, because by a 2-to-1 partisan vote it was decided not to examine the security question, when in fact rule 9 of the task force agreed upon many weeks earlier said "count ballots in bags or cases, even if they are not properly sealed."

□ 1410

Security was not a concern then, it was the intent of the voter. But when we came to the last night with the knowledge of a four-vote McCloskey win, security was the concern.

Let me tell you, on page 589 of the task force transcripts, Mr. SHUMWAY, the recount director, when asked about the security on those ballots said, "Based on the security and handling, I guess we would have counted them."

Mr. SHUMWAY, the project director, who Mr. PANETTA says we relied on in every instance in terms of his professional statements, said, on page 589 that, "Based on the security and handling, I guess we would have counted them."

Well now, in the latest explanation for not counting these absentee ballots, whose security was the same as those not counted, the majority report on page 35 argues, "The counting rules do not suggest that ballots clearly invalidated by the voter should be counted."

Indeed, Mr. PANETTA, in his "Dear Colleague" of April 29 argues:

In one main area of controversy, establishing counting rules, the goal of the majority was to count ballots that would have otherwise been disqualified because of mistakes of election officials.

What do we do with the task force's rules Nos. 10, 11, and 22? Those rules involve the individual voters marking their ballot in a way to make it invalid or illegal if you choose, under Indiana law. But we said in rule 10, count it anyway, even though it was the voter that made their ballot illegal. We said in rule 11, count it anyway, even though it was the voter who made that ballot illegal.

In rule 22, in dealing with absentee ballots, we say: "Count an otherwise absentee ballot which was returned by the voter without the identification stub."

That ballot is illegal under Indiana law. But rule 22 said even though it was the voter that took the tab off, count it. The latest argument offered by the majority is that we never intended to count those ballots invalidated by the individual voter. Then why are three of the rules specifically written to count the ballot made illegal under Indiana law anyway?

Ballots bearing identical minor flaws, and they were counted or not counted depending upon the individual county involved.

That was the statement of the majority leader on the floor of this House on January 3. That was the reason the task force had to go in and count the ballots themselves.

"Ballots bearing identical minor flaws were counted or not counted." Honorable men and women do not change their arguments when their initial ones are found weak and resort to distortion or misrepresentation to maintain their untenable position.

Mr. Speaker, those who watch and report on our actions do so with less partisanship and passion than those of us in the arena. I invite Members' attention before they vote to the more than two dozen major newspapers who all agree that the only honorable thing to do in this instance is to vacate the Eighth District seat and let the people decide.

On one point the chairman is absolutely correct: One week before we finished counting, this gentleman from California said: "Do not talk about a special election. Our job is still before us. Our job is to count the ballots."

This gentleman, after the last day, when he saw that all of the ballots that were of a like kind were not to be counted, said the only honorable thing to do is to have a special election.

Let us keep this House the People's House. There is no question that based upon the way in which the task force handled its job, the fact that there are ballots laying on the table identical to ones that we counted, that have not been counted, has put a cloud over the outcome in the Eighth Congressional District.

Honorable men and women would vote to vacate the district so that the people might choose. I call on you to be honorable men and women.

Mr. PANETTA. Mr. Speaker, I yield 8 minutes to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CLAY].

Mr. CLAY. I thank the gentleman for yielding me this time.

Mr. Speaker, I rise in opposition to the motion. Before I begin my remarks, I want to say that I once again am shocked at my colleague from California [Mr. THOMAS], who, in his opening remarks, talked about honorable men and women, and then immediately resorted to a questionable act that could be considered by some as racist.

For him to stand in this well and say the concern of the Democrats on the task force at first was for black voters not being denied the right to have their votes cast, and then now to say we are denying white voters the right to have their votes counted I think raises some very serious questions.

What we are talking about here is the right of every voter in the Eighth District of Indiana to have his votes counted. I assume, Mr. Speaker, that those black voters, and that was 20 percent of the total black vote in that district, that were disenfranchised under the recount, the Republican-controlled recount, in that district, I assume they had paid their poll taxes or they would not have been allowed to vote in the first instance.

I assume they had passed literacy tests. I also assume that the Supreme Court struck down the all-white primaries. What was attempted in that district was to establish an all-white general election, in my opinion.

Mr. Speaker, what is the basis for the argument that those now supporting a special election are contending?

Three weeks ago, they stood on this floor proclaiming that the people of the Eighth District were being unduly penalized because they had no representative to cast a vote on the sensitive MX missile question. They argued then that representation was the most crucial matter before us and 4 months without it was a miscarriage of justice. Today, they propose to delay representation for an additional 3 months while the two contestants engage in another special election process. Three weeks ago, when the Republican candidate was leading by a comfortable margin, the Republican on the election task force, stated, "proponents of a special election were being unfair and had a sinister motive." Today, Mr. THOMAS leads the charge for a special election.

Mr. Speaker, 3 weeks ago Republicans argued that Mr. McIntyre should be seated because he was awarded a certificate by a Republican secretary of state after a recount of ballots in only 1 of the 15 counties in the district showing McIntyre ahead by 34 votes. They abruptly stopped the vote count. After a total recount of all 233,000 ballots by an impartial team from the General Accounting Office, they now claim "sinister motives" because 32 votes were not counted. I have listened intently to their hypocritical pleadings not to disenfranchise 32 voters. Yet, each of them argued profusely to seat Mr. McIntyre because he had a certificate which was granted him after a partial recount disenfranchised 4,800 voters. Denying 4,800 voters the right to have their votes counted somehow loses credibility when compared to 32 illegal votes. What they do not mention, Mr. Speaker, is that the 4,800 votes were discarded because of mere technicalities and errors on the part of Indiana election officials. Polling clerks paid by the State of Indiana to perform in a professional manner either through carelessness or negligence failed to intitial ballots, failed to stamp precinct numbers on them, failed to meet other minor technical requirements. The Indiana Supreme Court in the 1951 Brown case held that only fraud, corruption, irregularity or intimidation of voters, should be the basis for overturning an election in this country, not technical rules, or alleged defects.

Mr. Speaker, there have been no allegations of fraud, corruption, intimidation or irregularity. The vote recount conducted by the election task force, in spite of the rantings and ravings of a few misguided agitators who have attempted to politicize the process by distorting the truth, that count was fair, thorough, and open to the public and press.

The first act of the task force was to establish a set of rules for counting with consistency the number of votes properly cast on election day. Twenty-two rules were agreed upon. Twenty of those rules were accepted unanimously by the task force. The motion to accept most of them was offered by the minority member.

Next, an impartial, professional team was assembled to count the votes. The General Accounting Office was engaged for that purpose. Then one of the most reputable election experts in the country was hired to supervise the operation. He was recommended to the task force by the Republicans and concurred in by the Democrats.

Mr. Speaker, this House has been bombarded by 4 months of partisan, vilifying rhetoric, accusing Democrats on the task force of skewing the rules in favor of Mr. McCloskey. Nothing could be further from the truth. The final outcome, showing Mr. McCloskey the winner, was the result of tabulation corrections. GAO auditors found 10 votes in Daviess County cast for McIntyre that should have been counted for McCloskey. In Crawford County they found five. In Martin County, McCloskey gained four votes due to counting errors. In Monroe County he gained two and in Knox County he gained another four. Republican staff members overseeing the GAO auditors did not then and do not now challenge these corrections. Yet, it is primarily these votes that gave the victory to Mr. McCloskey, not the rules of the task force.

Now, Mr. Speaker, let's analyze the 32 votes the task force decided not to count. They were absentee ballots retained at the county level. unprotected by certain basic measures of ballot security, held in unlocked file cabinets, some openly sitting on desks of county clerks for as long as 2 months. All of the ballots in dispute were illegal under Indiana law, illegal under House precedent and illegal under all court decisions. These 32 ballots that proponents for a special election say should have been counted were either unnotarized, unsigned, unwitnessed or arrived after election day. These ballots now being used to make the case for a new election were not counted on election night by Democrat or Republican clerks, were not counted in the Republican-controlled recount, were not ordered counted by the Federal court decision and were not counted by the task force.

Mr. Speaker, a close election is a good reason to conduct a recount. A close result after an open and fair recount is not justification for a new election. Our count rules were reasonable and uniformly applied. Mr. McCloskey won this election by four votes and should be seated.

□ 1420

Mr. FRENZEL. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3½ minutes to the distinguished gentleman from California [Mr. LEWIS], the chairman of the House Republican Research Committee.

Mr. LEWIS of California. I thank the gentleman for yielding this time to me.

Mr. Speaker, I would hope today to be able to communicate with colleagues on both sides of the aisle regarding this, a very fundamental question before us.

The first thing that I try to keep in mind, and I believe most of my friends do as well who are involved in public service, is that the most critical thing for us to determine is that which we are not willing to do in public life, to win. The fundamental moral fiber that allows us to reach the sort of accommodation and bipartisan work that are basic to our ability to govern is at stake in that question. What are you not willing to do to win.

It was on January 3 when an almost unprecedented circumstance took place in which the House asked Rick McIntyre of Indiana to step aside that a light went off in my mind. For as you live and work in public affairs, you cannot help but get a feeling and a sense for hard-ball politics. The light that went off said, "Wait a minute. Maybe you better take a look at the circumstances under which a Member who is certified by the State from which he would serve is not seated by the House of Representatives."

This was an unprecedented action. Rick McIntyre has been elected by 39 votes and was duly certified by the secretary of state. The House chose to have him step aside pending a recount. That had never occurred before except in circumstances where there were such extensive irregularities and charges of fraud that the fraud itself dominated the decision.

In this case, Rick McIntyre won by 39 votes. Nonetheless—a process was set in motion to set aside Indiana law and establish a new set of rules. Procedures moved forward whereby a recount did take place, carried out by a commission in Indiana that was 2-to-1 Democrat. As a result of that recount, Rick McIntyre was once again elected by, this time, 418 votes and he was recertified by the secretary of state. Nonetheless, the House of Representatives chose to exercise the power of the majority, take over the law of the citizens of Indiana, decide those laws were invalid, and play by their own rules.

So we have done a couple of things in this circumstance. First, we decided the rules of the game that were the election process in Indiana did not meet with the majority's objectives and goals. So we decided to change those rules before the process was finished. Then continuing down that pattern, the light that went off said, "If we establish the rules effectively, is it conceivable, counting the ballots in a different fashion, that the result will be changed, and by counting the votes in that fashion that our guy McCloskey will win rather then McIntyre?"

Under the new rules the election remained very, very close but Rick McIntyre remained ahead. Then we got to the remaining absentees. My colleagues if you really care about this House, if you really believe in fairness in elections—especially close ones—at least read this part of the committee report.

My colleagues, there was a pool of absentee ballots that technically did not meet Indiana law. That pool of identical ballots was handled in three different ways.

In some counties the clerk, apparently not understanding Indiana law, or ignoring it—sent the absentee ballots to the precincts where they were unsealed and counted. In other counties, the clerks sent identical absentee ballots to the precincts—but the officials in those precincts noted the technical legal problems with the ballots and did not unseal and count them. In a third instance the county clerks in six counties clearly understood the law, kept the flawed absentees, left them sealed, and did not count them.

When the House task force which had chosen to put aside Indiana law got down to those absentees in their count—the rules changed. And my colleagues, pay careful attention at this point—if you were in a close election you would not want this to happen in your district.

The task force could do nothing about those absentees that were technically out of conformity with Indiana law that had already been counted in the precincts. But as they addressed themselves to those in the precincts that had not been counted, the task force decided to unseal and count those ballots. At that point Mr. McCloskey moved ahead of Mr. McIntyre by four votes. Then the task force decided not to count the remaining absentees that had been kept in the county clerks' offices in those counties where the clerks followed the law. They decided to stop counting ballots that were identical to the above, distinct only because they were kept in the clerk's office. A distinction without a difference as Mr. THOMAS has said.

My colleagues read the report; look into your conscience and ask yourself if we cannot do better. For the sake of our institution, with respect for the Constitution I urge you to vote for this resolution and declare the Eighth District of Indiana vacant.

Mr. FRENZEL. Mr. Speaker, I now yield 2½ minutes to another distinguished gentleman from California [Mr. LAGOMARSINO], an officer of the Republican Conference.

Mr. LAGOMARSINO. I thank the gentleman for yielding this time to me.

Mr. Speaker, the attitude of the majority throughout this dispute has been one of "if you can't win by the rules, then change the rules."

The worst example of this attitude is the task force's decision to completely ignore Indiana law. The counting rules adopted by the task force simply throw out State laws designed to prevent fraud and stolen elections. In fact, none of the fraud prevention procedures specified in Indiana law were retained by the task force, despite the fact that Mr. McCloskey's own proposed rules for the Gibson County recount contained those very safeguards.

To take two examples, Mr. McCloskey said each ballot, "must have the initials of two poll clerks on it, even in the absence of any hint of fraud or mistake," Mr. McCloskey continued, "the absence of one or both sets of initials renders the ballot void." Similarly, Mr. McCloskey demanded that, "each punch card ballot must have written on it a designation of the precinct in which it was cast. If the poll clerks failed to write the precinct designation, the ballot is void."

There are in fact very good reasons for these two safeguards, as Mr. McCloskey pointed out. They are perhaps most succinctly stated in a finding of the Indiana Supreme Court which states:

> Poll clerks' initials are important not only to show that only valid ballots go into the ballot box but (are) also needed so that the valid ballots can be identified when taken from the ballot box. The importance of having the poll clerks' initials on the ballots insures the integrity of the voting system . . . there is no other way to distinguish an official ballot from a faudulent one at this point.

In other words, the initials are needed to prevent ballot box stuffing. Similarly, the requirement for precinct numbers on punchcard ballots. I might add, Mr. Speaker, that the election laws of 15 other States contain similar requirements.

Yet when he lost that recount, using those rules, Mr. McCloskey jettisoned his argument that Indiana law should apply. And the task force, without any justification, decided to count ballots that contained none of these authentication requirements which Mr. McCloskey had argued were essential.

Again, if you can't win by the rules, or in this case, the law, then throw out the law. Are we going to endorse this tyranny of the majority?

□ 1430

Mr. PANETTA. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentlewoman from Ohio [Ms. OAKAR].

Ms. OAKAR. Mr. Speaker, I thank the distinguished task force chairman for yielding this time to me.

Mr. Speaker, there were two things that the gentleman from California [Mr. THOMAS] said, among other things—and I am sorry he is not on the floor—that I would like to challenge him on. First of all, he absolutely quoted Mr. Shumway out of context in terms of talking about his specific delineation of specific ballots. Here is what Mr. Shumway, the election supervisor, said in a letter to our chairman dated today:

> Following the meeting of the Committee on House Administration on April 23, I received numerous press inquiries regarding responses which I gave to a series of questions, some of which were hypothetical. Those responses have apparently been combined in such a way as to suggest that it would be my recommendation to count all unnotarized absentee ballots. I would like to have the record accurately reflect my position. As a rule, I would say invalid ballots, whether absentee or otherwise, should not be counted."

And he goes on further. I would like to submit this letter for the RECORD, as follows:

> DEAR CONGRESSMAN PANETTA: Following the meeting of the Committee on House Administration on April 23, 1985, I received numerous press inquiries regarding the responses which I gave to a series of questions, some of which appeared to be hypothetical, which were posed by members of the Committee.
>
> Those responses have apparently been combined in such a way as to suggest that it would be my recommendation to count all unnotarized absentee ballots. I would like to have the record accurately reflect my position.
>
> As a general rule, I would say invalid ballots, whether absentee or otherwise, should not be counted.
>
> In Spencer County, there was a commingling of properly witnessed valid absentee ballots with unnotarized, unwitnessed invalid absentee ballots, all of which were sent to the precincts by the clerk. Some precincts opened and counted both kinds of ballots while a few precincts returned some invalid absentee ballots to the clerk's office.
>
> Since one could not identify and separate the invalid ballots that were counted in Spencer Country, the Task Force during its meeting of April 10, 1985 directed the counting of the remainder of the invalid unnotarized absentee ballots. The Task Force decision was thereafter uniformly applied wherever election officials erroneously placed invalid unnotarized absentee ballots in the ballot box which could not be identified and removed.
>
> With respect to other invalid unnotarized absentee ballots, such as those retained in the clerk's office in six counties, the same rationale didn't appear to the task force to be applicable since there were never any of those ballots sent to the precinct for counting never commingled with valid ballots and never a situation where the precinct board counted some invalid absentees and returned others to the clerk. There was an appearance of similarity but at the same time, circumstances indicated this was another category or another way in which unauthorized absentee ballots were handled.
>
> The Task Force directed me to determine whether the invalid ballots held by the clerks in six counties were, as a class, treated uniformly and in a manner identical to those which had been sent to the precincts for counting election night. An affidavit was developed for such purpose. The six affidavits revealed that the treatment was not uniform in all counties and my observations of one aspect of their treatment was different than on the affidavit of one of the clerks. Several clerks qualified their responses rather than a simple true or false. While there may be one or two counties who have indicated they provided identical treatment to invalid absentee ballots retained at the clerk's office and never forwarded such ballots to the precincts for counting. I never intended to say we should or should not have counted all such ballots.
>
> In the recount procedures, item 1.A.2.b. reads: "The director shall not have the authority to determine the disposition of ballots." The Recount Rules were established without my input and was never asked to be a participant in the rule-making process. I declined on several occasions, based on my previous exclusions, not to recommend a particular rule nor make a decision for the Task Force since my role was defined as the director to see that the rules, as established, were applied uniformly and consistently. I believe that has been accomplished; we counted ballots as directed by the rules of the Task Force.
>
> JIM SHUMWAY,
> Recount Director.

Ms. OAKAR. Mr. Speaker, the other point that I would like to make——

Mr. THOMAS of California. Mr. Speaker, will the gentlewoman yield?

Ms. OAKAR. I would be happy to yield.

Mr. THOMAS of California. I thank the gentlewoman for yielding——

Ms. OAKAR. Mr. Speaker, let me make my other point first, and then hopefully I will have some time.

I would like you to respond to this. The other point—and I would like you to respond to this also—is that I would like to ask how you know what the outcome is of the 32 votes that you allege were not counted. These apparently are supposed to be sealed votes. How do you know that they are black votes versus white votes or, as you said, white votes versus black votes?

I would be curious to know how you know that information since these are sealed, and it was my understanding that no one knows what the outcome of those 32 votes was. So I really question why you wanted to inject race into this whole situation, as my colleague, the gentleman from Missouri, pointed out.

Mr. THOMAS of California. Mr. Speaker, will the gentlewoman yield? Will the gentlewoman yield on those points?

Ms. OAKAR. I will yield as soon as I finish one other point.

Mr. THOMAS of California. Sure.

Ms. OAKAR. Mr. Speaker, the task force on elections, under the gentleman from California [Mr. PANETTA], operated fairly and with great integrity. The gentleman from California is known for his scrupulosity and his fairness. The count was done by GAO, appointed by the President. It was also done by the director of elections recommended by the Republicans. Mr. McCloskey won by four votes. We believe in one man for one vote. He won fairly, and this is in accordance with the Constitution.

The other point I would like to make is that my friend, the gentleman from California, also indicated that he questioned the size of the task force. I chaired a task force on elections in the last Congress as to whether or not to have Mr. PACKARD, a Republican, retain his seat. Mr. THOMAS was on that task force. He knows that there were illegal markings on ballots. There was voter intimidation.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentlewoman from Ohio [Ms. OAKAR] has expired.

Ms. OAKAR. Mr. Speaker, I ask the gentleman for 1 additional minute.

Mr. PANETTA. Mr. Speaker, I yield 30 additional seconds to the gentlewoman from Ohio [Ms. OAKAR].

Ms. OAKAR. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from California [Mr. THOMAS] knows that indeed there were very questionable activities. When I recommended that the——

Mr. THOMAS of California. Mr. Speaker, will the gentlewoman yield in her last 30 seconds so I could respond to her points?

Ms. OAKAR. I ask for order, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentlewoman from Ohio [Ms. OAKAR] controls the time.

Ms. OAKAR. Mr. Speaker, when I recommended that the Republican retain his seat, I voted for that; it was my own proposal. The gentleman from Washington [Mr. SWIFT], a Democrat, voted for it, and certainly so did the gentleman from California [Mr. THOMAS]. It was 3 to 0.

We Democrats have the ability to be fair, and I think impugning the reputation of the House Administration Committee is very, very unfair.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentlewoman from Ohio [Ms. OAKAR] has expired.

Ms. OAKAR. Mr. Speaker, I hope that the gentleman gets some time because I would like him to answer those questions.

POINT OF PERSONAL PRIVILEGE

Mr. THOMAS of California. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a point of personal privilege.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state his point of personal privilege.

Mr. THOMAS of California. Mr. Speaker, the gentlewoman from Ohio in fact, made a series of allegations and charges. I requested time to respond to them. She indicated she had no time. I would like to respond to them.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will state that the gentleman cannot be recognized for that purpose while the question of privilege is before the House.

Mr. THOMAS of California. I thank the Chair.

Mr. FRENZEL. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the distinguished gentleman from California [Mr. THOMAS].

Mr. THOMAS of California. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman from Minnesota, my distinguished ranking member, Mr. FRENZEL.

The simple answer to the question of who those voters are is that we are dealing, I will tell the gentlewoman from Ohio, with absentee ballots. The names of those voters are written on the ballots, and, as the gentlewoman knows, in the final House Administration Committee meeting we had one of those real voters stand up. We had one of those individuals indicate he was one of the individuals disenfranchised. We know most of the names of those individuals whose votes were not counted.

I would also tell the gentlewoman that I did participate in her task force, and there was no other conclusion that could have been arrived at, and this gentleman believes if there could have been, there would have been. There is no question that when you are confronted with the preponderance of the evidence so that you cannot bring it about, you do not. In this instance it was close enough to do it.

Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. FRENZEL. Mr. Speaker, I yield 4 minutes to the distinguished minority whip, the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. LOTT].

Mr. LOTT. Mr. Speaker, I had thought I would speak to the distinctions between this case and past election cases. In reviewing the precedents, I think there is no doubt that this is a most unusual if not unprecedented case. Even the committee report acknowledges that the House has only initiated its own investigation into an election on three other occasions in the last 50 years. And the preponderance of precedents also come down on the side of temporarily seating the duly certified winner of an election pending the outcome of an investigation. None of the precedents is on all fours with this case, and I fear we are moving in a dangerous, partisan direction by the new rules we have established with this case.

I don't want to dwell on those precedents, as compelling as they might have been for taking a different course. The fact is, the House did initiate this investigation, the House did refuse to seat a certified candidate, and the House did decide, by a 2-to-1 partisan majority, to superimpose its own rules on the State election laws and procedures. And yes, we do have broad latitude to do such things under our constitutional charge to be the sole judge of House elections and returns.

But now that we have asserted that constitutional right to be the final judge of the election in the Eighth Congressional District of Indiana, we must consider just what that awesome responsibility entails. We are being asked to render a judgment that will widely be interpreted as substituting our judgment for that of Indiana State law and the electorate of the Eighth Congressional District. Consider that carefully.

It seems to me we have to consider today and tomorrow just what criteria we will use in rendering that judgment. Is it a cut-and-dried case now that more facts are available or is it even more clouded and confused now than before our intervention? I would suggest that if the latter is the case, and I think it has to be given the reversal of the results and the remaining questions about uncounted ballots, then this should be a hung jury and we should be asking for a retrial. For if we cannot say that the preponderance of evidence points to Frank McCloskey as the new winner beyond a reasonable doubt, then we do a disservice to our constitutional responsibility, to the House as an institution, to the American people, and especially to the people of the Eighth District of Indiana. That's really what these votes in the House come down to.

And when you consider the variation in the vote results, the questions which have been raised during the course of your own investigation, and the number of outstanding issues which have yet to be resolved to everyone's satisfaction, then there is no way that we can confidently render a judgment either way and hope it will somehow sit well with the American people. It just won't, because a cloud hangs over this contest that will never go away, and we are all tainted by it.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, we have to consider what kind of message we are sending to the young people of this Nation who aspire to hold elective office some day. Are we instilling confidence for them in our electoral processes by our actions today, or are we causing them to have second thoughts—to wonder whether it's worth it all if their election might be invalidated by a partisan majority of either party? I think these are the important questions we must be asking ourselves at this juncture, and I think they all point to the need for a new election. I urge adoption of the Frenzel resolution.

□ 1440

Mr. FRENZEL. Mr. Speaker, I yield 4 minutes to the distinguished chairman of the House Republican Policy Committee, the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. CHENEY].

Mr. CHENEY. Mr. Speaker, we've heard a lot of discussion in recent weeks about the counting process for the election in the Indiana Eighth. I think it is important for the Members to take a few minutes to focus on the details of how Rick McIntyre's election night victory, and victory in the recount, was converted into a defeat by the procedures used by the House Administration Committee's Task Force.

The majority suggests in its report that "The primary difference between the State's certified election result of 34 votes and the House recount process is attributable to tabulation errors from election night * * *" I've taken the time to analyze the results and I believe that to be an inaccurate and misleading statement. If we look at the task force results we find the following:

Mistabulations only altered the outcome by a total of four votes. During the task force recount, McIntyre gained 75 votes and McCloskey gained 79, as a result of correcting tabulations.

The real difference in the outcome was generated by counting ballots that had not been counted election night or during the Indiana recount and by chad picking—reinterpreting what the voter really meant when they cast their punch card ballot.

Ballots not counted election night or during the Indiana recount—but counted by the task force produced 60 additional votes for McIntyre and 82 for McCloskey. This included ballots found in the spoiled ballot envelope and unopened absentees.

Chad picking—deciding whether or not a particular ballot had been punched for a particular candidate—gave McIntyre an additional 12 votes and McCloskey an additional 25 votes.

Other changes such as counting absentee ballots without stubs, finding five ballots accidentally discarded, two for McIntyre and three for McCloskey, and dropping out ballots with distinguishing marks accounted for the remainder of the difference.

The relevant point is that the task force did everything it could to find additional ballots to count and to count ballots that had not been counted because of Indiana law—until Mr. McCloskey pulled four votes ahead. Then faced with a number of uncounted absentee ballots—ballots virtually identical to others that had been counted, the task force decided not to proceed further, but rather to declare Mr. McCloskey the winner.

The question that has not been answered satisfactorily, is why, after making such an effort to ascertain the true will of the voters, to set aside Indiana law to dig out every vote, even some that had been discarded, why was the decision made not to count the remaining 32 absentee ballots. If I were a member of the Democratic Party—preparing to vote on this matter I would want to know the answer to that question.

Frankly, it would be easier to accept the claims of the Democratic leadership and the task force that this was indeed a fair recount if it weren't for the fact that on two previous occasions the majority had denied a seat in this House to Mr. McIntyre, the duly certified winner of the original election and of the recount conducted by the State of Indiana. If on January 3, the House had followed precedent and seated the certified winner of the race, it would be easier to argue the case of the majority. But that is not the case.

I ask my friends and colleagues on the Democratic side of the aisle to put yourselves in our place for just a minute. Ask yourselves how you would feel were our positions reversed. What would you think if we Republicans on nearly straight party line votes had twice voted to deny a seat to the duly certified winner of the race, had then established a task force which set aside Indiana law and imposed its own rules for counting the ballots. And finally stopped, 32 ballots short, when our man had pulled ahead by four votes. I believe your sense of outrage would be every bit as great as ours.

Mr. Speaker, I wonder how you feel about this whole matter. Do you want to have your last term tainted by the charge that you permitted your party to abuse its power and ride roughshod over the traditions of this great institution?

And you, Mr. WRIGHT, our distinguished majority leader and quite probably our next Speaker—do you really believe the interests of the House and of your party are best served by forcing us to accept the questionable verdict of the task force? If you are elected Speaker in the 100th Congress will you remember this as one of your finer moments?

And what of Mr. McCloskey? Does he really want to take a seat in this body under the cloud of mistrust and suspicion that permeates this Chamber today?

And finally, what of my friends and colleagues on the Democratic side of the aisle? Do you really think we in the minority have been treated fairly in this matter? Are you at all concerned about the depth of anger and frustration expressed by some of our least partisan Members? Is this a moment you will remember with pride in the years ahead? Or is a vote to seat Mr. McCloskey, in light of all that has transpired, one of those votes you wish you didn't have to cast?

There is an alternative. Few on our side of the aisle have been or are today, enthusiastic about a special election. Many of us feel that any option which sets aside Rick McIntyre's election night victory is unjust. But in light of the circumstances it may be the only graceful way to restore the sense of comity that is so important to the functioning of this body.

And I would suggest that it is the only honorable course for those who want to see justice done for the voters of the Eighth District of Indiana. Think about it—and ask yourselves if it isn't the best way to show our respect for one another and for the great traditions of the House of Representatives.

Mr. PANETTA. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Washington [Mr. SWIFT].

Mr. SWIFT. Mr. Speaker, the question that hangs over this body today is, Is there going to be life for the House of Representatives after the Indiana Eighth? Are we going to be able to have the quality necessary to make the compromises, to work together, that are required of a legislative body if it is to function?

I know there are some Democrats, people on my side of the aisle, that believe that the GOP is feigning outrage, that what we are hearing today are only crocodile tears. I can tell you from talking to my Republican colleagues that that is not true, that there is deep sincerity to their feeling of outrage.

But I also believe there are some Republicans who believe that over on my side of the aisle all of us Democrats are gleeful in knowing that we have stolen a seat in the Eighth District of Indiana. And I can assure you that that is not true. I can assure you that most of the Democrats on my side of the aisle are just as sincere in believeing that the process was fair. We will misjudge each other very badly if we do not acknowledge the sincerity that exists on both sides of this aisle, no matter how strongly we may disagree with each other, because we have much work to do: on the budget, on the deficit, on tax reform.

This debate is not going to change votes on this issue of the Indiana Eighth. But we must retain the ability to work together on issues that are coming down the line or we will all,

Republicans and Democrats alike, so outrage the public that they will put a pox on both our Houses.

All the task force members, members whom I have worked with, are honorable, intellectually honest men—who disagree.

The questions I think each individual in this House must ask themselves as they vote are four.

First. Do you believe in the sanctity of a single vote?

The second question is, Do you believe that the process was fair?

And here let me interject that in the full House Administration Committee, I asked Mr. SHUMWAY, who was the recount director, I said, "This has been a long and complex process and there have been judgments made where reasonable people might disagree; but given that, do you believe the process was fair?"

And Mr. SHUMWAY said, "Yes."

The third question is, would you have voted to seat Mr. McIntyre had he come out ahead in this process by even one vote? If you would answer yes, I believe in the sanctity of an individual vote, if you, as I do, believe that the process was fair and if you believe you would have seated Mr. McIntyre had he won by even one vote, then the final question is, Would you not then seat Mr. McCloskey who won in that process by four votes?

Mr. FRENZEL. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the distinguished gentlewoman from Illinois [Mrs. MARTIN], the vice chairman of the Republican Conference of the House.

Mrs. MARTIN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, for those Members of the House facing difficult decisions and with the questions that have arisen about what Mr. SHUMWAY said or did not say, may I suggest that on their own they may read page 589, and they will find the answers I think will be interesting.

It is after all the Democrats who have a more difficult time today because the responsibilities of the majority are many.

□ 1450

And I cannot help but agree with the previous speaker that every vote must count, also as the chairman of the task force said. If the voters meant a valid ballot, it should count. And that is why we ask why not the forgotten 32?

These were 32 Indiana residents who went to the trouble, and it is trouble, to file an absentee ballot.

There are certain things we already know about them. We can generally tell from the names if they are male or female. We can tell, I think, if you have a sense of imagination, that perhaps some are young voters, some are older voters.

We do not know, at least I certainly do not, if they are black or white or brown or yellow, because the vote does not have color or, ultimately sex, or age. It must be counted, and you cannot argue on one hand to count some and then to deny the vote to 32 voters.

I imagine Ida Blankenship is an older American who has voted in every election. We know that Mark Barkley went to Ball State and cannot understand why his vote will not be counted.

We do not know about Tanya Ballinger; and what about Darryl Harris, or Robert Bradford, who probably gets teased because his name sounds like Robert Redford. Or Lana Elrod, who may have been named for Lana Turner. Or Tim Panksley. Who is Kamal Girgis? Who is Amanda Heath, with that very beautiful name, or Clarence Nelson, or Camilla Sowder? And the answer is they are all of us. They are 32 Americans who, and I quote directly the chairman of the task force, "should not have valid ballots disenfranchised, and if the error is not in the voter the vote should be counted."

We ask that these 32 be counted. We do not know for whom they would vote. These are secured ballots. They might make the Democrat win by 32 more votes. That will be their right.

Half of them might be for the Republican. We do not know.

But when a House makes a committee 2 to 1 and then stops counting, we believe that these 32 are disenfranchised, all America has been disenfranchised.

Mr. PANETTA. Mr. Speaker, I yield 4 minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DURBIN].

Mr. DURBIN. Mr. Speaker, in reference to the comment just made by the gentlewoman from Illinois, I would like to stand here and read the 4,808 names of Indianans who were disqualified by the Indiana recount process. These people were neither counted nor eulogized by my Republican colleagues, because the result went the other way. No tears were shed for those uncounted voters. Because at that point the recount led to the victory of the Republican candidate.

To read the names of the 32 absentees I do not believe does justice without reflecting on the fact that your Republican Party had a different position on uncounted votes when the outcome favored your candidate.

I think the point made by the gentleman from Mississippi earlier really brings into question why we stand today in the House and why we are being asked to have a special election. He said, and the record will reflect it, that Frank McCloskey must win by a preponderance of the evidence, beyond a reasonable doubt.

What he said, Mr. Speaker, is that one vote is not enough in this country, that candidates must do more than just win an election. Candidates must beat a point spread to serve in the House of Representatives, and 4 points is not enough.

I remind that gentleman and other Members that there are Members seated in this Chamber, in the 99th Congress, who were elected by 170 votes, 300 votes, 400 votes. Do we now cast a cloud over the results in their races? Did they really beat the point spread that the gentleman from Mississippi suggested? Should we expand the motion for a special election to include them?

When I reviewed this recount task force and its procedures I have to tell you I was not totally pleased with some of their votes, and some of the decisions which they made. I would have voted a different way. I would have discounted the 40 ghost voters by proportionate reduction that favored Mr. McIntyre. I would have basically said that we should have proportional reduction when in fact ballots were overcast, and more ballots were cast than voters turned up at the polls.

But the decision by the task force was not heavy-handed, was not partisan, was in fact in favor of Mr. McIntyre. And yet I do not hear any protestations about that.

When it comes to these absentee ballots, 52 of them, in the words of the gentleman from California [Mr. THOMAS], they were scrambled with the rest of the votes and they cannot be extricated. There was no suggestion of proportional reduction because the final vote total with those 52 included favored Mr. McIntyre.

The 10 votes, the 10 votes that were finally counted, the absentee ballots, six for Mr. McIntyre, 3 for Mr. McCloskey, and 1 not voting. Now does that show a partisan, heavy-handed decision? I think not.

To discount these 32, in my mind, is only rational and reasonable and in fact the task force reached the right conclusion.

The gentleman from California [Mr. THOMAS] stated earlier we Democrats underestimate the strong feelings of the minority side on this issue. We do not, and I hope he does not underestimate our strong feelings. But we do not serve our Nation or districts or our solemn oath to uphold the Constitution if we are guided by the strength of our feelings. We cannot and should not be guided by threats of civil disobedience in this Chamber, threats of guerrilla tactics, threats of physical restraint, of chaining ourselves to the podium, of rhetoric accusing the Democrats of being thugs, thieves, and in the words of one minority Member, slime.

Is that what should motivate this Chamber? I think not.

We are burdened and liberated by the traditions of orderly process in this institution, and that process has been well served by this recount task force. Neither Frank McCloskey nor any of us is required to beat the point spread to serve in this great institution. Our responsibility today and tomorrow is to stand with the orderly process and traditions of this institution and to seat Frank McCloskey.

Mr. FRENZEL. Mr. Speaker, I yield 4½ minutes to the distinguished chairman of the House Republican Conference, the gentleman from New York [Mr. KEMP].

Mr. THOMAS of California. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KEMP. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. THOMAS of California. I thank the Gentleman from New York [Mr. KEMP] our distinguished Conference chairman for yielding.

Briefly, I think it is extremely interesting that the gentleman who just left the well, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DURBIN], prior to the result being known, argued passionately in the well that we ought not to let 40 ghost votes make the difference. Yet today he certainly abides by the decision and in fact those 40-plus ghost votes were added by a 2-to-1 partisan vote, 2 Democrats, 1 Republican.

Interestingly enough, he said we ought not to have a preponderance of the evidence make the decision in this case. It is the Contested Elections Act, the Federal Contested Elections Act that uses just that as the criterion. And if the fellow who lost the race election night, and on recount night Mr. McCloskey had utilized that vehicle the House has provided: the Federal Contested Elections Act, he would have been required to show a preponderance of the evidence.

Instead we have been brought here by a straight majority vote and there is no need to show any evidence because if the majority has one more vote they win.

I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. DURBIN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KEMP. Let me make my statement and then I will be glad to yield.

Let me say to my colleagues on behalf of our conference there has been no civil disobedience. There has been no one chaining themselves to anything around here and while all of us were deeply outraged and upset our Members have conducted themselves with dignity and grace under pressure.

We are all bound on both sides of the political aisle by our respect for the law. This government of laws is precious to all of us. A great English philosopher one time said that the purpose of law is not to restrict freedom or to restrain freedom; the purpose of the law is to enhance and enlarge freedom because, he went on to say, where there is no law there can be no freedom because anarchy is the result of an absence of law.

The not seating of Rick McIntyre on January 3 was an act of anarchy, the absence of law.

We Republicans offer this Frenzel motion to vacate the seat in Indiana's Eighth Congressional District in the hope that fairness, honor, and the law will prevail on this issue. The actions that we as a conference have undertaken this past week were not taken lightly. We have been forced to these actions to disrupt the agenda of the House and the legislative process in order to slow down and hopefully stop the inexorable march to an injustice that the majority seeks to impose in seating Mr. McCloskey.

There are unanswered questions, confusing arguments and ambiguities that require a special election.

The proposal of the House Administration Committee to seat McCloskey confirms all the worst fears the people of our country have had since the 99th Congress first met on January 3. Acting like a kangaroo court, the Democratic members of the task force have abrogated Indiana State law, and now it appears that they want to throw out the Constitution, too.

Through a series of special rules, admittedly applied differently, and we argue inconsistently, the task force counted votes until Mr. McCloskey was four votes ahead. Everyone agrees they then stopped counting and left 32 ballots uncounted. Reasonable people can disagree but there is no precedent for what happened and what has gone on these past few months. Nothing but arrogance and Lord Acton's adage that absolute power corrupts absolutely can explain the actions taken by the majority.

□ 1500

This Frenzel resolution to vacate the seat is the only alternative to a motion tomorrow to seat the loser of a fair election over the winner of a fair election.

One can understand that close elections present a great temptation. But for 200 years majorities in this country have resisted the temptation to cut down all the laws and establish their own standards in order to ensure the desired results.

Some words to the wise: In Robert Bolt's masterful play, "A Man for All Seasons," there is an exchange between Sir Thomas More and young Will Roper his son-in-law who tells More that he would cut down every law in England to get to the Devil.

Sir Thomas More reproaches him and says, "And when the last law was down, and the Devil turned round on you, where would you hide, Roper, the laws all being flat? * * * d'you really think you could stand upright in the winds that would blow then?" I ask my Democratic colleagues to think carefully before they cut down the laws that protect all of us, equally majority and minority alike.

Please consider the atmosphere you create by this act of injustice and greed, the goodwill necessary for men and women who differ to work together is irreparably torn. In a Government like ours, the rights of the minority must not be sacrificed. When the mutual trust and respect for the rules of the game are destroyed the understanding needed to work together is destroyed. And then not only Rick McIntyre's constituents but all the people will suffer.

My colleagues on the Democratic side of the aisle have a chance to restore justice and honor to this body. Let us vote to vacate the seat and have a special election.

Mr. PANETTA. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. LEVIN].

Mr. LEVIN of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I am a friend of Frank McCloskey's, and it was because of that when I approached the report, I tried to do so with special care and special objectivity.

Among the questions I asked were these: If Mr. McIntyre had won by four votes, would I have voted to seat him? The answer is yes. And I am confident the majority party would have done so.

I asked a second question: Did the minority suggest before the end of the court, before the end of the count, that if there were a razor-thin vote for Mr. McIntyre, there should be a special election? And the answer is no; quite the contrary. Here is what the minority member of the task force early on had to say about a special election:

> I think that anyone who says we are not going to be able to seat someone and therefore we ought to start talking about special elections is to my mind not only being unfair to the difficult task we have in front of us, but I would attribute some sinister motives to that kind of talk.

So, two things in terms of that statement. It was not until the count was completed that there was talk on the minority side of a special election.

Second, and very importantly, throughout there has been a comment from the minority side that those on the majority side are beset by sinister motivations.

In my judgment, there is reason for argument here, for a decent difference of opinion, but not for vilification or vituperation.

I am concerned with the tone of this debate, what it could mean for issues that lie ahead, where bipartisanship is needed.

I am confident of my position. I have a belief in the integrity of the members of the task force. Therefore, those who throw stones at the majority are throwing them instead at this institution and its prospects for effectiveness in the months ahead.

If there is going to be anarchy, it is going to be coming from this side, the minority side, not from us Democrats.

Mr. Speaker, I say to all Members, vote your conscience the way you would have if Mr. McIntyre would have won. I think we should vote tomorrow to seat Mr. McCloskey and we should vote today against the motion from the minority side.

Mr. FRENZEL. Mr. Speaker, I now yield such time as he may consume to the only Member of the House who has been in these similar circumstances, the distinguished gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. MOORE].

Mr. MOORE. Mr. Speaker, I find this case very special to me, so special that it causes me to get up and say something today for the first time in this rancorous debate that has been going on for some time.

As the gentleman who yielded time to me said, I am the only sitting Member of the House of Representatives who has been through something like this. I believe I understand better than anybody here what it is like for the two gentlemen involved to go through it. In 1974, I won by 44 votes, the closest Federal election in history until this one.

My opponent found that a voting machine apparently did not work. We wound up in court. The court was faced with, "What do you do in a case like that?" Were all the votes counted? There was no way to tell.

So the court ordered that election be rerun, the first Federal election in history ever to be rerun.

It was done so in January 1975, and I was lucky to have won by better than 11,000 votes at that time.

But that decisive action of letting the people decide where there was a great question over what the vote outcome actually was absolved this House and the entire election process, of any problem or cloud of wrongdoing. The cloud was lifted, the election was clear, and that was the end of the issue.

I perceive that Democrats believe Republicans did not count the ballots right out in Indiana; and Republicans feel the Democrats have not counted the ballots correctly in the elections subcommittee.

There is now a cloud over this process that is never going to be resolved, I am afraid, a cloud that can go on to confuse future decisions this body must make.

In my opinion, the only way you can lift that cloud is to go ahead and call another election; let the people of Indiana decide who they wish to have represent them.

The other body, in 1975, did a very similar thing, using my case as precedent.

Therefore, it has been done in both bodies before. I am greatly concerned that the issues of a balanced budget, reducing spending, tax simplification, and all the other issues facing this Congress are going to find themselves derailed by very strong feelings emanating from this matter of fear that the very integrity of this body will be questioned because of its inability to resolve without suspicion the lingering questions as shown in this debate.

So I would urge a new election to help these two gentlemen that cannot be helped any other way, and to also help this body get on with the work it has to do.

Mr. PANETTA. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2½ minutes to the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. GEJDENSON].

Mr. GEJDENSON. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. Speaker, I asked the gentleman, Mr. Shumway, who oversaw this operation, a very simple question. All of us in the committee and here in Congress have gotten good at asking the "Perry Mason" type questions that can just put everything in the right light to get the answer we want. But I asked a very basic question, and that question was: Was the process essentially fair? I did not tell him who I wanted to win or who I thought should win or whether each vote that was cast was absolutely perfect.

Some of the questionable votes may have benefited one of these gentlemen and some may have benefited the other.

I said: Was the process basically fair? Mr. Shumway said it was, that overall this process was not designed to give advantage to either of these two individuals.

I think that is the most important thing we start with.

Then I asked him: If the process was fair, was it executed in a fair manner? Again he answered in the affirmative.

So that the conclusion of the gentleman that both the Democrats and the Republicans chose to run this operation was that the process by which the ballots were rechecked was a fair one and that in the final analysis, it was implemented in a fair manner. What strikes me as unconscionable from my friends on the Republican side of the aisle is to have sat there when there were 4,800 ballots not counted and said, "That is it; these 4,800 people are excluded from the electoral process; we do not have to touch that process anymore."

Now, for a handful of ballots, they tell us that the process is a failure, that their man did not win so we are going to walk out of the Chamber, we are going to end the process, we are going to participate because our guy did not win—that's changing the rules at the end of the game.

If you had come to this gentleman, at the beginning of the process and said, "Let's have a special election," that is something we could have taken a look at. But I will tell you this, I cannot support a special election, I cannot support a change in the process once you have set the rules and everybody has worked by them.

Mr. Shumway says this process is fair. The process itself was executed in a fair manner and we ought to go forward with the vote and seat the gentleman that won.

I thank the Speaker.

□ 1510

Mr. FRENZEL. Mr. Speaker, I yield 4½ minutes to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. MYERS].

Mr. MYERS of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, Indiana has not received this much attention since Bobby Knight offered his chair to a little lady on the other side of the assembly hall.

There have been thousands of words and thousands of pages printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD about this problem in southern Indiana, and I suppose there is little that can be said today to add to that.

I am troubled very much by some of the discussions that have gone on here. The fact that it has become so political, because it really is not a partisan issue, contrary to the evidence displayed here today.

I am often asked, "What do people in Indiana really feel? How do they feel about the way the House has handled this?"

I think I can best reflect this by a statement made by a very prominent Democrat last Saturday when I was speaking in Indiana, about 150 miles from the Eighth Congressional District, a previous officeholder when he said: "I hope Frank McCloskey is seated, but he should be seated after a special election." This reflects the sentiments of most Hoosiers, Democrat or Republican.

There has been a lot of dialog here. I remember changing my position here on this floor in the dialog with the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. FRANK] when he said that every ballot should be counted, where the intent of the voter could be determined.

I thought Indiana law should prevail, but he convinced me that day, and I finally conceded and agreed that, yes, Mr. FRANK, you are right; every ballot should be counted when it is determined the intention of that voter, even though they violated Indiana law. He convinced me.

Later, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. LELAND] said that 4,800 had been disenfranchised, and it was wrong to disenfranchise. He is right, but it is just as wrong to disenfranchise 32, 40, or 100 voters.

The issues today seem to be several: First, the constitutional wrong. We cannot correct some of those, but we can correct one today, and that is, that there are 32 ballots out there that were cast absentee.

Now an absentee ballot can be generated in Indiana from three sources. First, the individual writes or asks for an absentee ballot, to be voted in absence away from the polling place, or away from the county courthouse. That ballot is then mailed. It must be mailed back.

An antifraud provision requires that the voter signature is notarized just the same as the precinct election clerk's initials are required by Indiana law. The task force determined they were not necessary here.

There are two other ways an absentee ballot can be generated in Indiana. One, shut-ins. There is a roving voter group, appointed election officials, paid election officials, that go out and vote these people. Same ballot in the same brown envelope as other absentee ballots. They must be witnessed, not notarized. Those two election officials, a Democrat and Republican clerk, must witness them. The other is voted in presence, in the courthouse. They also are witnessed.

Of the 32 not counted absentee ballots, can anyone on this task force tell me if those 32 absentee ballots that they say were not notarized did not originate from the roving election officials not requiring notary validation, but witnessed by the paid election officials?

The reason given for not counting those is the fact that they were not notarized which is the responsibility of the voter. However, those ballots that could have been cast by a roving clerk, hire, a Democrat and Republican, require witnesses. They would be required to be witnessed. Those ballots might well have been ballots that were not witnessed and the voter was not aware that the election officials had not done their job.

So I say, I take my hat off to the task force. Yes, they worked hard; they spent a lot of hours, but they did not finish. This is where I have strong objection.

The statement was made that we would have voted to seat McIntyre with a majority of four votes, or we would not vote because our candidate did not win. I say this: We voted to seat the gentleman from Idaho [Mr. STALLINGS]

I would vote for Frank McCloskey, he is a friend of mine; if every ballot had been counted and he had won the election that way, I would vote to seat Frank. We would have voted to seat Frank if he had a certificate back on January 3. I think every Republican would have voted for that.

The Governor of Indiana this morning has told me that if this House decides that seat is vacant, even though he does not want to put the State of Indiana to the expense, we all have opposed it, but if we cannot decide for sure who won because all the ballots have not been counted, the Governor says he will call for a special election immediately.

Mr. PANETTA. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentlewoman from Illinois. [Mrs. COLLINS]

Mrs. COLLINS. Mr. Speaker, I think it is ironic that we are sitting here today discussing this at all.

I was reminded this morning by television that we are celebrating the 10th anniversary of our getting out of Vietnam. For several years prior to that time we were in Vietnam, fighting in that country, because we wanted everybody there to have the right to be able to have a say in their government, to participate in their government, to vote for those who govern their lives.

Just last week we in this House were voting on Nicaragua so that people in Central America could have a right to discuss and participate in their government. Yet today we are sitting here discussing this issue, possibly denying the voters of Indiana the right to determine the people they want to participate in our Government.

Somebody mentioned a few minutes ago that they wondered what message was going out to young people. You know, Mr. Speaker, contrary to what most people might think, I was once young, and I went to schools in the United States of America where I was taught that one vote has a great deal of validity; that one vote is all you need to determine the will of the people. And I know that everybody in this Chamber, who is a Member, has said to one potential voter or another, at one time or another: Vote for me, because every vote counts.

All of a sudden we find ourselves here today discussing whether in fact every vote does count. I believe it does. I believe we should throw out this resolution and seat McCloskey.

Mr. FRENZEL. Mr. Speaker, I now yield 5 minutes to the distinguished minority leader, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MICHEL].

Mr. MICHEL. We have heard constitutional, Federal, congressional, political, and procedural arguments about the issue.

But it gets down to one question—What is the fair way of treating the people of the Eighth District of Indiana?

It is a question of fairness.

That word may sound weak but it is as strong as the honor of this House.

When you have gone through such a bitter debate, such a contested issue, no one in this House can be said to be impartial.

No one.

We all have our ax to grind.

So why not let the people decide?

We have nothing to fear from the people. If the people believe the majority has a fair and honest case, then Mr. McCloskey will be returned.

If the people think that we in the minority have made a fair and honest case, then they will return Mr. McIntyre.

But if the majority pushes its power to its extreme limits, if it demands its pound of flesh—the ramifications will go well beyond this issue.

Might does not make right. It never has. It never will.

Raw power alone does not—or should not—decide this or any other case.

The McIntyre case is but one example of a consistent abuse and misuse of power by the majority.

It is the most notorious example of raw political power disguised as mere parliamentary procedure.

Even the majority's claim that it has the constitutional power to do what it is doing is not at all clear.

We simply have no precise precedents to go on. The House has never been tested in quite this way. We face a unique constitutional situation. But the majority wants to treat it as if it were a dispute about pork barrel politics.

There is an old saying: Power is shown not by striking hard or by striking often, but by striking truly.

The majority seems not to have learned that lesson. It appears to believe that if it hits hard enough or often enough, it is showing true power.

But it is only showing weakness. It is only showing fear. It is only showing how desperately unsure it is of its own ability to govern wisely.

An unfortunate pattern has developed in this House. The majority threatens, it bellows, it puts pressure on its members—and it calls this its right.

But what does all this have to do with what is really right?

At long last, has the majority, after a generation of unadulterated power in this House, lost the ability to remember what we are here for?

We are here to serve people—not the majority in the House.

The voice of the people of the Eighth District has been smothered by legislative maneuvering.

If the majority has its way today, it will demonstrate its power. But it cannot win a victory.

Victory in a democracy belongs to the people.

If the majority persists in this folly, they will have poisoned the wells of civility in the House. Things will never be the same. Let it be upon your heads if this is the case.

For the honor of this House, for the idea that in our Nation the people decide—join with us who want to leave this question to the people of the Eighth District of Indiana.

It is the only just, the only honorable, the only decent choice this House can make.

□ 1520

If what I hear from the other side is correct, that there will be a move at the end of this debate to table the motion, I think it underscores all the more the concern I have about what is happening in this House. Can you not let your Members be free to vote their conscience once again on this issue?

I think it is abominable to think that you are going to take that course of action at the end of this kind of debate. From the very first day we wanted a straight up or down vote on the issue of seating the gentleman from Indiana. It has been denied every time by preferential motion of one kind or another. Now we come to this juncture, when, by agreement between both sides, there is a motion on this floor to vacate the seat, and suddenly we are given to understand you are not even going to allow a clean vote on the real issue, but offer a motion to table. That underscores the exact folly of the whole process we have been going through.

Mr. PANETTA. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. TAUZIN].

Mr. TAUZIN. Mr. Speaker, the issue today is not whether we ought to seat a Republican Member of this House or whether we ought to seat a Democratic Member of this House. The issue is not even whether the task force headed by Mr. PANETTA has come to the correct conclusion on the vote count. The issue is, in our own hearts and minds, do we honestly know who won the election in the Eighth District in Indiana?

Has the task force done its job in bringing the facts to us so that we can individually make a judgment over who should be seated to serve that district in our Nation's Capitol?

Mr. PANETTA and his task force were charged primarily with ensuring that the voters in Indiana who had been disenfranchised because of errors made by clerks and election officials in Indiana were given a chance to have their votes counted. I believe sincerely that Mr. PANETTA and his task force have done that.

Mr. PANETTA and his task force went further than that. They got into the issue of absentee ballots, absentee ballots which, by their nature, were illegal ballots because they were defective by virtue of an error created by the voter, not by the election clerk or official.

I think that Mr. PANETTA and the task force erred in counting 10 of those ballots which should not have been counted. But that is irrelevant to the decision we make today as to who won the election in Indiana. When I look to the results of the task force's work, I learn that another 52 of those illegal absentee ballots had been counted by the election officials in Indiana, and those ballots were "like ballots" to the ones that could be found in the clerk's office and which had gone uncounted.

When I looked at that, I initially thought, "Hey, we better call a special election to let the people decide how those 52 votes should be counted." And then I did some research and I found out we had some legal precedent on the issue. In Oliver against Hale, a Maine decision and in a precedent established in New York in another case, Macy against Greenwood, the courts were faced with a similar question, and in those cases decided that the proper way to handle it was to proportionately reduce the illegal absentee ballots counted in the precincts. A proportional reduction of the 52 absentee ballots that were illegally counted, discounting the 10 ballots that I think Mr. PANETTA and the task force should not have counted, yields you the answer I think we need to know, and that is who won the election.

In my opinion, it is quite clear from the facts developed by our task force that, although it was an awfully close election, Mr. McCloskey won it.

Let me tell my friends on the other side of the aisle that I think the easiest thing in the world would be to call a special election. It would please a lot of you. It would please, certainly, a lot of people. But I think our obligation is to do our duty here on the House floor. If Mr. McCloskey has won that election by a fair report of our task force and if in our hearts we know that in fact he was ahead by one vote, our obligation, regardless of the political consequence, is to seat the gentleman.

Mr. FRENZEL. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the distinguished gentleman from Iowa [Mr. LEACH].

Mr. LEACH of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, perhaps the greatest religious thinker of our time, Reinhold Niebuhr, once commented that:

> The temper and the integrity with which the political fight is waged is more important for the health of our society than any particular policy.

It is the temper of the House and the integrity of our democratic system which is at stake today. The outcome of this election is less important than the process followed. Fundamentally, this is a law and order issue. Citizens can't respect laws if they can't respect the lawmaking process.

Hence, it is the duty of the House to set a precedent of conscience that will underscore rather than undermine the laws we make and the order we ask be maintained.

We have, in this election, the legislative equivalent of a hung jury. To ensure our Government remains of, by and for the people, the verdict should be remanded from the Halls of Congress to the people of Indiana.

Mr. FRENZEL. Mr. Speaker, I yield 6 minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. VANDER JAGT], the distinguished chairman of the Republican National Congressional Committee.

Mr. VANDER JAGT. Mr. Speaker, I believe that there are members of the majority who are genuinely puzzled about the deep disillusionment and the intensity of the outrage of the minority, because I do believe that there are members of the majority who honestly believe that on election night Frank McCloskey was ahead by 72 votes and then on the basis of a partial recount a partisan secretary of state of Indiana quickly certified McIntyre the winner and that, therefore, on January 3, that they voted to wait until there was a completed recount to make a determination. Unfortunately, those are not the facts.

One of the most disillusioning, frustrating, and tragic things about this whole sorry spectacle is that the facts are so clear, so convincing, and so undisputed by anybody who will focus on them for longer than 10 minutes.

On election night, Rick McIntyre, not Frank McCloskey, was ahead by 260 votes. That lead did not mean a cotton-picking thing because under Indiana law the secretary of state is required to wait at least 10 days before he certifies a winner so as to give the counties an opportunity to make any corrections of mistakes that might have been made. And the next day it was discovered that two counties had indeed made significant mistakes. When the one county, Vanderburgh County, made its correction, McCloskey then went ahead by 72 votes. When the second county, Gibson County, that had counted two precincts two times made its correction, then on the basis of completed and corrected and final and certified election-night vote totals, Rick McIntyre was a winner by 39 votes. And at that point the secretary of state did the only thing he could do under Indiana law, and that was certify McIntyre a winner.

Even the most partisan among us would have certified McIntyre a winner at that point because to have done anything other than that would have made that individual guilty of a felony.

So Rick McIntyre arrived here with a certificate that had no cloud over it in its issuance and there was no allegation of illegality or fraud. And under those circumstances, in 81 out of 81 cases for two centuries this House has honored that valid certificate pending the outcome of a recount or some other dispute.

Now, when the recount was completed, the majority has made much today that it was tainted recount. But that is beside the point. Rick McIntyre was entitled to be seated not on the basis of a recount but on the basis of the original certification where the majority leader has said there is a prima facie case of validity and a presumption that it is indeed valid and duly certified, and nothing had overcome that presumption when that recount, tainted or not tainted, was completed.

So the task force begins its work, and if you use a strict construction of Indiana law or a liberal construction of Indiana law, McIntyre wins.

So the task force set aside—and they have told us they did so, in the debate today—Indiana law and constructed its own set of rules, a third set of rules, by which the votes were then counted.

□ 1530

In the next-to-the-last meeting in Evanston on April 10, the task force voted to count 10 unnotarized absentee ballots that had been held at the precinct level. At that point, the task force made a fateful decision: It decided to send out investigative and affadavit teams to the county clerks to see if there were similar ballots that had been afforded similar security. And at that point, when the task force made that fateful decision, a McCloskey supporter said, "I wanted to cry, because I knew there were similar ballots and I knew when they were counted, that was the ball game."

Little did that supporter dream that the task force would then, inconsistent with its own rules, suddenly resurrect the Indiana law that had been ignored up until then, and stop counting 32 votes away from the finish line with their man 4 votes ahead.

Mr. SHUMWAY, the director of elections, in testimony before the task force here said, because of the same circumstances, "I guess I would have counted those ballots." Even the chairman of the task force has said, "It was an extremely close call."

An extremely close call, with a 4-vote victory out of 233,000 votes with 32 yet to be counted, is not establishing by the preponderance of the evidence that that official certificate, which has never been impeached, should be set aside.

The Speaker has said he did not want Rick McIntyre seated on January 3, in spite of the certificate, because he believed that rubbing shoulders with us would establish a comradery over a 6-month time that would give us a predisposition in favor of Rick McIntyre. He may be right, but I hope that there is a deeper predisposition in the hearts of every Member of this body. A predisposition to uphold the Constitution which gives primacy to State law in determining State election. A predisposition in favor of two centuries of precedents which says that a valid certificate must be overcome by the preponderance of the evidence and a predisposition on behalf of the people of the Eighth District of Indiana, who by more than 2 to 1 say there ought to be a special election.

That is why the minority and the American people are outraged that the majority would superimpose its will on the people of the Eighth District who are naive enough to believe that in America they ought to determine who represents them.

Mr. PANETTA. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2½ minutes to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. HUBBARD].

Mr. HUBBARD. I thank the gentleman for yielding me this time.

Mr. Speaker, I rise to defend the count of the General Accounting Office, and to speak in favor of former Congressman McCloskey, with whom I have served and many of us served in the 98th Congress.

My Kentucky district just happens to be across the Ohio River from southern Indiana. The Evansville television stations saturate much of my congressional district. I am well aware of the hot contest in that race; this is my sixth term in Congress, and I have already served with four gentlemen who have represented the Eighth District of Indiana.

On election night, McIntyre was in the lead, and the TV stations in Evansville were saying that a recount was very possible because of the close vote. Many of us in this body would have asked for a recount if we had been behind by 39 votes in a multicounty race, such as this was.

During the recount, the Republican secretary of state of Indiana declared and certified Rick McIntyre the winner. Now we have an account from the GAO, the General Accounting Office, an arm of Congress, an agency that is nonpartisan, headed by the Comptroller General of the United States, namely, Charles Bowsher, appointed by President Ronald Reagan in October 1981, a fair count was held.

It has been determined by the General Accounting Office that Frank McCloskey, a Democrat, won by four votes. I have asked some of my Republican friends today, and I think you Republican friends, and my dear friend who spoke before me, know that I do not stand always as a partisan Democrat; that I stand here as a person who tries to tell it like it is; call it like it is, and vote like I think is best for our country rather than our party.

Several Republicans have told me today, have shared with me the fact that yes, if the General Accounting Office vote had gone in favor of Rick McIntyre by four votes, that naturally we would not want a recount. Nor would we want, at this point, a special election, or to have the seat vacated.

In all fairness, this seat should go to Frank McCloskey, the Democrat from Indiana, who was declared the winner by the General Accounting Office.

● Mr. ROSE. Mr. Speaker, recently the minority leader was good enough to send me a transcript of the speech made a few days previously by our colleague from Michigan, the chairman of the National Republican Congressional Committee, and one little touch in the letter and in the transcript brought back memories.

It wasn't the wailing and moaning about the Indiana election being stolen. I don't buy it, and I don't think anyone who knows all of the facts and is impartial, buys it.

No, Mr. Speaker; it wasn't the word stolen.

It was the word Democrat, and, strange as this is going to seem, it brought back memories of a man named Joe McCarthy, and the terrible stain he left not only on his political party, the Republican Party, but on the entire political process.

Some of the younger Members of the House weren't even born when Joe McCarthy was riding high, but I hope he hasn't been forgotten. I won't go into what he was extensively, Mr. Speaker—we deal in misery more often than we want to of necessity in politics and government. But I think I should remind the House, and especially the minority leadership, about something Joe McCarthy is given credit for doing.

McCarthy is the one who started calling the Democratic Party the Democrat Party. I guess he thought it didn't sound as positive his way, so with his often displayed lack of regard for truth and accuracy, he repeatedly used the expression Democrat Party.

Well, sometimes out of ignorance, maybe sometimes out of malice, other Republicans, and—truth be told—a few Democrats who didn't know better, began using the expression Democrat Party and Democrat leadership, instead of the correct version, Democratic Party and democratic leadership.

I'm sure the minority leader and the gentleman from Michigan know that.

But there, in black and white, on the minority leader's letterhead, and in the gentleman from Michigan's speech, was Democrat where it should have said democratic.

Now, there's an old political expression that goes—"I don't care what you say about me—just spell my name right."

Mr. Speaker, that is all I'm saying.

Just spell my name right.

You can moan and groan about the outcome of the General Accounting Office recount of the Indiana election all you want to—regardless of how false your charges of stolen ballots are, but don't be totally inaccurate. At least state the name of the party you are falsely accusing correctly.

I don't accept what you are saying and I don't believe the public does either. Of course, some people think all elections are stolen and all politicians are crooks. If you want to further that erroneous belief—if you want to add tarnish to this House, why just go ahead.

Just get the name right.

Mr. Speaker, there's always the temptation to reciprocate in kind, but as a former President and member of the Republican Party once said, "That would be wrong."

I'm not going to call it the Republican Party, because that's not its name.

I'm not even going to call it the Pub Party, even though some of its Members seem to be drunk on the dream that they can hurt the Democrats and the Democratic Party with a device dreamed up by Joe McCarthy.

Maybe some of us have forgotten how low he stooped.

But, when his actions got so far beyond the pale, his fellow Senators, Democrats and Republicans, voted to censure him. They were outraged at the blemishes and the stains he had left on the Senate, as well as on his political party.

Mr. Speaker, if some Members of the minority party want to follow in his footsteps, there's nothing I can do about it.

But they ought to remember that Tail Gunner Joe, as he named himself even though he never flew a minute in combat, probably holds the record as a smear artist.

I guess, Mr. Speaker, he would be proud of them for keeping his flame burning, which is something, come to think of it, he really doesn't need, assuming he went to his just reward.●

● Mr. WISE. Mr. Speaker, as I support the resolution to hold a special election in the Eighth District of Indiana, I want to explain why I take this difficult position.

First, let me explain what reasons have not moved me to this position. It is not because vocal members of the minority have called my party "thugs" and "slime." It is not because members of the minority have threatened some sort of civil disobedience on the floor. That only delays the people's business. It is not because there is something suspect about the manner in which task force Chairman PANETTA conducted the recount. What I have seen is him reaching out to be fair.

Nor do either the personalities or the political parties involved determine my position. I hope eventually Frank McCloskey is seated in the Congress. He is an excellent member.

What is important to me is the actual election process itself. It is the main contact the public has with this body—sometimes the only contact. The public must have faith in the process. Should it become cynical then a vital underpinning of our governmental system is weakened.

That is why I support a special election. Because there are such questions. Because the final result is determined by a handful of votes whose eligibility is determined by subjective decisions—no matter how fairly arrived at.

Some say this position attacks the credibility of Chairman PANETTA and his task force. To the contrary, the early position of the Democratic Party in challenging the election results and declining to seat the Republican candidate has been upheld. A fair recount has shown not only that the Republican candidate did not win by 418 votes, he probably did not win at all. But that's the key word—"probably." The recount shows there is too much margin of difference when one count has the Republican winning by 418 and another shows a Democratic victory by 4. There is uncertainty—and because there is, the people of the Eighth District should have the final word in a special election where hopefully the recount rules are determined in advance.

Mr. Speaker, what's important here is not the two people involved; not the political parties—but the process. And the process is upheld in a special election.●

● Mrs. LLOYD. Mr. Speaker, I must rise today in support of the motion to declare the Eighth District of Indiana vacant and proceed to a special election.

Mr. Speaker, from the outset, I have supported the creation of the task force and of withholding action pending its findings. This task force has tried, I have no doubt, to resolve the dispute fairly and it has found the winner to be Mr. McCloskey. And while I do not question their integrity, I am not fully satisfied by their determination. Those 32 ballots keep coming into my mind and for that reason the voters of that district should be given the opportunity for a special election.

I have confined my attention to the voting irregularities of which there are many and not to the individual's party affiliation. It has been my intent from the outset that this should be resolved in a judicious manner and I am supporting the motion to declare this seat vacant pending a vote tomorrow to seat Mr. McCloskey. The Constitution gives to the Congress responsibility for judging elections. The House of Representatives has absolute power, therefore, to determine its own membership. If this body, using that authority, chooses not to call for a special election then it follows that the House will seat Mr. McCloskey as the task force recommended. It is time to put this matter behind us and proceed to the Nation's business but only if the citizens of Indiana's Eighth District have a voice.●

● Mr. YOUNG of Florida. Mr. Speaker, the situation with regard to the Eighth Congressional District of Indiana has produced just one winner and many, many losers.

Even the winner, in this case Rick McIntyre who was twice certified by the Indiana secretary of state as the winner of his congressional seat, has turned out to be a loser as he repeatedly has been denied his constitutional right to become a member of the U.S. House of Representatives.

The real losers, though, in this case have been the people of Indiana's Eighth District who have been without representation in this body for 4 months. These people last November exercised their constitutional right to elect their Congressman, but the majority leadership has refused to seat their choice. As a result, their views were not represented here when it came time to cast votes on many issues during this session. Almost half a million people have been left without a voice in the day-to-day work of the House.

Perhaps, in the end, the biggest loser in this entire situation will be the sacred constitutional process by which our Nation has functioned as a model of freedom and democracy for almost 200 years. If the leadership is successful in its efforts to deny Rick McIntyre his rightful seat, we have no assurance that this will not happen again.

The Evening Independent, published in St. Petersburg, FL, recognizes that this is not an issue of concern just in Indiana or Washington, DC, but one that has an impact on all States. In an editorial published this afternoon, which follows my remarks, the Independent's editors emphasize the point we should be most concerned about today, that "elections are too important to be determined by politicians."

Elections are to be determined by the voters. In this case, let's allow the voters to determine the winner in Indiana's Eighth District. If the leadership refuses to seat Rick McIntyre, the voters should have an opportunity to make the decision. As the Independent recommends, return the question to the unrepresented people of Indiana. An orderly and expeditious special election can finally resolve this matter.

Mr. Speaker, we cannot compensate the voters of Indiana for the 4 months they have been without representation in the U.S. House of Representatives, but we can allow them to settle this particular issue by means of a special election.

We can also attempt to avert any harm that has been done to our constitutional system by the partisan political tactics exerted by the leadership.

If we allow the leadership to ignor the decision of the voters in the Eighth District of Indiana, then there is reason to believe future elections will be in jeopardy.

The question resting squarely on our shoulders today have grave implications for our future electoral due process.

RETURN ELECTION DILEMMA TO THE PEOPLE

Elections are too important to be determined by politicians.

The latest example flashes like fireworks in a midnight sky over the U.S. House of Representatives. There, partisans are trying to pick the winner of the 8th District Indiana House election. Incumbent Democrat Frank McCloskey was narrowly defeated by Republican Richard McIntyre, but the vote was challenged.

The debate has all the trademarks of Americana. In this district, most ballots are of the paper variety, and, under Indiana law, must bear the initials of a pollwatcher from each party. That's the way ballots have been counted in precinct after precinct across the decades, giving partisans all sorts of opportunities to invoke high rhetoric. They speak of voters being disenfranchised; they mean their parties may lose an outpost.

After a recount in Indiana, four votes have been held in the House to seat McIntyre. The motions were defeated on partisan voting lines 168–167, 238–177, 211–180 and 241–183. A special committee is expected to recommend to seating of McCloskey this week.

The debate has short-circuited normal relations between the Democratic majority and the Republican minority. The GOP minority has charged that Democrats are making the House "look like the partisan playpen of an arrogant majority."

Everyone has his or her best hold and seems bent on hanging on.

McIntyre filed one lawsuit, alleging he had been denied constitutional due process. A federal judge tossed it out saying the House had the right to judge its membership.

But by three standards, it can be argued effectively that McIntyre should be seated.

If measured by the U.S. Constitution, he should be seated because the election is a state right and the Indiana secretary of state, after a special review, certified McIntyre. Meanwhile, though challenging the outcome, McCloskey has never alleged fraud.

If weighed by the Indiana Constitution, McIntyre should be seated because under the laws of Indiana he was declared the winner, twice, including a special recount of all ballots by Indiana elections officials.

If judged by precedent, McIntyre should be seated because, in about 500 cases of contested House elections, the House has always seated the state-certified winner, except on one occasion when fraud was alleged and a second when New York's Adam Clayton Powell was alleged to be unfit to serve.

But by the political power of the House itself, McCloskey is likely to be seated, the beneficiary of club rule and of the friendship of the leaders of the House, Tip O'Neill of Massachusetts and Jim Wright of Texas.

At the root are issues crucial to the U.S. form of government. A republic in a democracy is functioning. Ironically, in this case, the republican function works against the Republicans and the democratic function works against the Democrats. In a pure republic, McCloskey would win. In a pure democracy, McIntyre would win.

By official tally and by precedent, McIntyre probably should be seated. Even by some of the rules that a three-member subcommittee of the House adopted (by 2–1 partisan votes), McIntyre should be seated, but Democrats on the review committee made exceptions to the rules that disallowed some McIntyre ballots of the same character and standing as those allowed for McCloskey.

If the House votes to seat McCloskey, then McIntyre will have excellent constitutional questions to raise. Can the House ever be wrong in its judging of its membership? If it transgresses its own rules unfairly, is its ultimate decision unconstitutional?

But it seems to us this case demands only one decision—the return of the question to the people of the 8th district of Indiana for a federally supervised, new election. That happens to be the same position taken by Florida's Republican congressmen, but the principle transcends parties.

When republican and democratic functions are jammed by party power plays, the nation will be safer and better served by the people, than by 435 partisans.

Elections are too important to be determined by politicians.●

CALL OF THE HOUSE

Mr. PANETTA. Mr. Speaker, I move a call of the House.

A call of the House was ordered.

The call was taken by electronic device, and the following Members responded to their names:

[Roll No. 81]

ANSWERED "PRESENT"—415

Ackerman
Addabbo
Akaka
Alexander
Anderson
Andrews
Annunzio
Anthony
Applegate
Archer
Armey
Aspin
Atkins
AuCoin
Badham
Barnard
Barnes
Bartlett
Bateman
Bates
Bedell
Beilenson
Bennett
Bentley
Bereuter
Berman
Bevill
Biaggi
Billrakis
Billey
Boehlert
Boggs
Boner (TN)
Bonior (MI)
Bonker
Borski
Bosco
Boucher
Boulter
Boxer
Breaux
Brooks
Broomfield
Brown (CA)
Brown (CO)
Broyhill
Bruce
Bryant
Burton (CA)
Burton (IN)
Bustamante
Byron
Callahan
Campbell
Carney
Carper
Carr
Chandler
Chappell
Chappie
Cheney
Clay
Clinger
Coats
Cobey
Coble
Coelho
Coleman (MO)
Coleman (TX)
Collins
Combest
Conte
Conyers
Cooper
Coughlin
Courter
Coyne
Craig
Crane
Crockett
Daniel
Dannemeyer
Darden
Daschle
Daub
Davis
de la Garza
DeLay
Dellums
Derrick
DeWine
Dickinson
Dicks
DioGuardi
Dixon
Donnelly
Dorgan (ND)
Dornan (CA)
Dowdy
Downey
Dreier
Duncan
Durbin
Dwyer
Dymally
Dyson
Eckart (OH)
Eckert (NY)
Edgar
Edwards (CA)
Emerson
English
Erdreich
Evans (IA)
Evans (IL)
Fascell
Fawell
Fazio
Feighan
Fiedler
Fields
Flippo
Florio
Foglietta
Ford (MI)
Ford (TN)
Fowler
Franklin
Frenzel
Frost
Fuqua
Gallo
Garcia
Gaydos
Gejdenson
Gekas
Gephardt
Gibbons
Gilman
Gingrich
Glickman
Gonzalez
Goodling
Gordon
Gradison
Gray (IL)
Gray (PA)
Green
Gregg
Guarini
Gunderson
Hall (OH)
Hall, Ralph
Hamilton
Hammerschmidt
Hansen
Hartnett
Hatcher
Hawkins
Hayes
Hefner
Heftel
Hendon
Henry
Hertel
Hiler
Hillis
Holt
Hopkins
Horton
Howard
Hoyer
Hubbard
Hughes
Hunter
Hutto
Hyde
Ireland
Jacobs
Jenkins
Johnson
Jones (NC)
Jones (OK)
Jones (TN)
Kanjorski
Kaptur
Kasich
Kastenmeier
Kemp
Kennelly
Kildee
Kindness
Kleczka
Kolbe
Kolter
Kostmayer
Kramer
LaFalce
Lagomarsino
Lantos
Latta
Leach (IA)
Leath (TX)
Lehman (CA)
Lehman (FL)
Leland
Lent
Levin (MI)
Levine (CA)
Lewis (CA)
Lewis (FL)
Lightfoot
Lipinski
Livingston
Lloyd
Loeffler
Long
Lott
Lowery (CA)
Lowry (WA)
Lujan
Luken
Lundine
Lungren
Mack
MacKay
Madigan
Manton
Markey
Marlenee
Martin (IL)
Martin (NY)
Martinez
Matsui
Mavroules
Mazzoli
McCain
McCandless
McCollum
McCurdy
McDade
McEwen
McGrath
McHugh
McKernan
McKinney
McMillan
Meyers
Mica
Michel
Mikulski
Miller (CA)
Miller (OH)
Miller (WA)
Mineta
Mitchell
Moakley
Molinari
Mollohan
Monson
Montgomery
Moody
Moore
Moorhead
Morrison (CT)
Morrison (WA)
Mrazek
Murphy
Murtha
Myers
Natcher
Neal
Nelson
Nichols
Nielson
Nowak
O'Brien
Oakar
Oberstar
Obey
Olin
Ortiz
Owens
Oxley
Packard
Panetta
Parris
Pashayan
Pease
Penny
Pepper
Perkins
Petri
Pickle
Porter
Price
Pursell
Quillen
Rahall
Rangel
Ray
Regula
Reid
Richardson
Ridge
Rinaldo
Ritter
Roberts
Robinson
Rodino
Roe
Roemer
Rogers
Rose
Rostenkowski
Roth
Roukema
Rowland (CT)
Rowland (GA)
Roybal
Rudd
Russo
Sabo
Savage
Saxton
Schaefer
Schneider
Schroeder
Schuette
Schulze
Schumer
Seiberling
Sensenbrenner
Sharp
Shaw
Shelby
Shumway
Sikorski
Siljander
Sisisky
Skeen
Skelton
Slattery
Slaughter
Smith (FL)
Smith (IA)
Smith (NE)
Smith (NH)
Smith (NJ)
Smith, Denny
Smith, Robert
Snowe
Snyder
Solarz
Solomon
Spence
Spratt
St Germain
Staggers
Stallings
Stangeland
Stenholm
Stokes
Strang
Stratton
Studds
Stump
Sundquist
Sweeney
Swift
Swindall
Synar
Tallon
Tauke
Tauzin
Taylor
Thomas (CA)
Thomas (GA)
Torres
Torricelli
Towns
Traficant
Traxler
Valentine
Vander Jagt
Vento
Visclosky
Volkmer
Vucanovich
Walgren
Walker
Watkins
Waxman
Weber
Weiss
Wheat
Whitehurst
Whitley
Whittaker
Whitten
Williams
Wilson
Wirth
Wise
Wolf
Wolpe
Wortley
Wright
Wyden
Wylie
Yates
Yatron
Young (FL)
Young (MO)
Zschau

□ 1550

The SPEAKER pro tempore. On this rollcall, 415 Members have recorded their presence by electronic device, a quorum.

Under the rule, further proceedings under the call were dispensed with.

PRIVILEGES OF THE HOUSE—RESOLUTION TO DECLARE VACANCY IN THE EIGHTH CONGRESSIONAL DISTRICT OF INDIANA

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from California [Mr. PANETTA] has 9 minutes remaining and the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. FRENZEL] has 4½ minutes remaining.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from California [Mr. PANETTA].

Mr. PANETTA. Mr. Speaker, I yield the balance of the time on this side to the distinguished majority leader, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. WRIGHT].

Mr. WRIGHT. Mr. Speaker, I very much regret that the outcome of this recount turns upon only four votes. I think any of us would be much happier if one or the other of the contestants had won by 40 votes or 400 votes or 4,000 votes; then we would not be faced with this very difficult decision that we have to make.

Unfortunately, the Constitution places upon us, as the Congress, the clear responsibility to be the judge of elections. That is what we have to do. Maybe, like Pontius Pilate, we would like to wash our hands of it. Maybe we would like to let the cup pass from us.

It is not pleasant, it is not comfortable, it is indeed quite painful to hear the allegations that have been made through this Chamber in the last 4 months. In the years I have served in Congress I have never known anything to have created such a degree of emotionalism. I deeply regret that. I regret very much that hour after hour time in this Chamber has been taken up with allegations condemning the motives of other Members. I do not think that is necessary. I do not think it is constructive. It is not helpful to the parliamentary process that makes laws for this country.

One of the most fundamental precepts that I was taught when I came here and one of the most sacred things about this institution is that we can disagree without being personally disagreeable, that we can recognize another's honesty and sincerity even when that other person disagrees with us.

□ 1600

I regret very much that some have fallen into the use of such terms as "theft," accusing one another of stealing, using such terms as "steamroller tactics."

I regret very much that this morning one of the Members thought it cute or clever to say, "The Speaker wins elections by the old-fashioned way, he steals them." I do not think that is funny. I regret that anybody would applaud that statement, because it is beneath the dignity of the House and surely all of us know, whether you agree with Speaker TIP O'NEILL or not, he is an honest man. He is a decent man. He is a fair man. He has given his entire life to serving this Nation of ours in an honorable way. He has called them as he has seen them. He certainly deserves better than that verbal crudity. In fact, no Member should be subjected to such an allegation on the House floor.

Only a few weeks ago while returning from a bipartisan trip to Russia with the minority leader, the distinguished gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MICHEL], whose integrity I fully respect and extol at every opportunity, the Honorable William Pitts who assists Mr. MICHEL, came to the Speaker and reported to him his understanding that the result of the election recount had favored Mr. McIntyre, the Republican candidate by a few votes.

Speaker O'NEILL said to Mr. Pitts at that time, in Mr. MICHEL's presence, "If that is the case, Billy, then Mr. McIntyre will be seated."

I do not think there is a person here who honestly wonders if that would not have been done. On fewer than three occasions I have stood on the floor of this House and made this pledge publicly, that the count which we were bound by the Constitution to conduct would be conducted expeditiously, that it would be conducted fairly and by objective principles, and that at the end whoever emerged the victor, whether he be the Democrat or the Republican, would be seated. There are many of you here who remember my saying that in this Chamber.

Only the other day the Republican leadership came at the behest of the Republican Conference to talk with the Speaker and with me and with Mr. FOLEY and Mr. GEPHARDT, and they were expressing the anguish and the frustration that was felt on the Republican side. I can understand that, truly believe me, I can understand that. I think I might feel that frustration if the situation were reversed.

I asked BOB and the others, TRENT and JACK, I said, "Well, gentlemen, look, if it had turned out the other way and Mr. McIntyre had emerged victorious by four votes, would you be asking for another election?"

They said, "No. We would expect him to be seated."

So the question is, did the House do the right thing in having a recount? Someone said yesterday in debate that the only reason for the constitutional provision that we be the judge of our own elections is to guard against extraordinary circumstances, and this gentleman concluded there had been no extraordinary circumstance in the Indiana case.

Well, I suggest that there was truly an extraordinary circumstance when almost 5,000 American citizens were disenfranchised on technicalities and their votes were not counted.

The Legislature of the State of Indiana itself, judging this year an election of one of its own members, ruled exactly as we ruled, that those technicalities of initialing by a clerk should not apply so as to disenfranchise an otherwise qualified voter from having his or her vote counted. The Indiana House ruled just exactly the way that we did, that the underlying criterion should be and must be what that voter wanted, that voter's intention, if it is clear. So we set that as a ruling guide.

Now, was it a fair election? I know of no reason to say it was not a fair recount and I believe honestly from the depths of my heart that it was. That is what we charged the three-Member commission with conducting.

The person selected to head the actual counting was Mr. James H. Shumway of Arizona. He was not recommended by the Democratic Members. He was recommended by the Republican Member, by Mr. THOMAS, and the Democratic Member agreed to it. Under his direction, the counting was done by accountants, nonpartisan people in the General Accounting Office.

Twenty of the twenty-two decisions with respect to the rules of counting were unanimous among the three. We have heard a lot of talk here about, oh, 2-to-1 party-line votes. Now, whenever you have three members on a commission and it is not unanimous, you have to have 3-to-1 vote, obviously. But they were not all party-line votes by any means. On several of those vital 2-to-1 votes, the chairman of the committee task force, Mr. PANETTA, voted with Mr. THOMAS and the result of those votes tended to favor the Republican contender, Mr. McIntyre. Some of the people on our side, hearing of this, were angry with Mr. PANETTA. The Speaker was not angry with him. I was not angry with him, because he had been charged with having a fair, honest count, and we would be satisfied with nothing less than that.

Please, gentlemen, do you not understand, we are not so hard up for an extra seat in the House that we would want to deprive someone of it by theft. I really think it is beneath our dignity to engage in that kind of aspersion or that kind of allegation or that kind of consideration.

LEON PANETTA is as honorable a person as sits in this Chamber. BILL

CLAY is as honorable a person as sits in this Chamber. To question their judgment is one thing, but to question their honor and their integrity I think is quite something else and beneath us. We ought not to do it.

Now, some decisions had to be made. Thirty-two votes, absentee votes, were illegal votes. They were not notarized. They would not be counted in any State that I know. They were held, properly, at the clerk's desk, were not sent out to the precincts to be counted in the first place. Some of them had arrived late. In every State that I know, those votes are not counted. They were not counted here.

Now, 10 such votes had been accidentally sent out and folded in with others in the precincts and were counted initially. They were identifiable and a judgment was made as to whether they should be counted in the recount. Maybe they should not have been counted; but Mr. PANETTA voted with Mr. THOMAS that they be counted and the result of their being counted, even though they were illegally cast, gave 6 of those 10 votes to Mr. McIntyre, 3 of them to Mr. McCloskey. One had not voted in the congressional contest. So as a result of that decision, counting those votes, favored the Republican. Maybe they should not have been counted, but they were; I am not contending one way or the other. I think it was an honest count, that is all I am saying, that we bent over backward to make an honest count.

I am sorry it was four votes. I wish it were 4,000 votes either way. I do not care which way. Whatever the people of that district of Indiana want, they are entitled to have.

But let me ask you this. I am not going to make a motion, none of us are going to make a motion to table your motion. We are going to give you an up or down vote on it. You are entitled to that. Well, you want it that way, do you not? OK, fine. We are going to give you an up or down vote on your motion.

We have given you abundant time. There have been something like 200 hours of debate and talking time given over to this one subject since the beginning of this year. Surely we have had enough time to talk about it.

Democracy is a system that exists to guarantee that each of us will have his say. It does not guarantee that any of us necessarily will get his way. If you prevail on this vote, so be it. We Democrats have not made a party-line vote of it over here. I think you probably have on the Republican side; so be it. It is all right. We will just see how it is. We are not accusing you of dishonor. We are not accusing you of theft. We are not accusing you of sharp practice. We are trying to give you the same respect that we believe every Member of the Congress is entitled to from every other Member of the Congress.

We call upon you now to abide by the result, whatever it is. I call upon my Members to abide the result, our friends on this side, in good honor, good humor, good conscience, up or down and we will find out.

I think the result of the exhaustive recount has to be honored, if it is only four votes. Events have turned on fewer votes than that. In the United States today we speak English as the official language rather than German because of one vote, a one-vote margin in the Continental Congress.

Queen Elizabeth II is the ruling monarch in Great Britain today because of a one vote margin in the House of Commons 2½ centuries ago to declare the House of Hanover the royal house.

Texas is in the Union because of one vote in the Senate in 1845, and whether you like that or not, we have to abide by it, fellows; so I suggest that we abide by the result in good faith.

□ 1610

Mr. FRENZEL. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself the remaining time on our side.

Mr. PASHAYAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FRENZEL. I yield to the gentleman from California [Mr. PASHAYAN].

Mr. PASHAYAN. Mr. Speaker, what the task force did wrong in Indiana stabs the very heart of the Constitution. Article I, section 2, says: "The House of Representatives shall be composed of Members chosen * * * by the People * * * and the Electors of each State shall have the Qualifications requisite for Electors of the most numerous Branch of the State Legislature", and in article I, section 4, the Constitution says: "The Times, Places and Manner of holding Elections for * * * Representatives, shall be prescribed in each State by the Legislature thereof * * *," unless Congress shall by law regulate elections.

When the task force refused to count 32 absentee ballots that were the same as other absentee ballots which they did count, it acted in a manner repugnant and obnoxious to article I. It certainly acted contrary to what the Supreme Court in a whole series of cases has held. Perhaps there is no more clear and brilliant articulation by the Court of what article I stands for than its pronouncement in 1941 in U.S. versus Classic: "Obviously included within the right to choose, secured by the Constitution, is the right of qualified voters within a State to cast their ballots and have them counted at congressional elections. This court has consistently held that this is a right secured by the constitution * * *. And since the constitutional command is without restriction or limitation the right * * * is secured against the action of individuals as well as of states."

The precious right to vote, as so eloquently pronounced by the Court in Classic, was the philosophy behind the Voting Rights Act of 1965. Section 11(a) of the act states, "No person acting under color of law shall fail or refuse to permit any person to vote who * * * is * * * qualified to vote, or willfully fail to refuse to tabulate, count and report such person's vote." I find a cruel irony indeed that the majority of the task force composed of the majority party of this Chamber refused to follow the dictates and spirit of the law that its party fought so hard for so many years to realize. I find it a cruel irony that the very party that was responsible for passing this legislation is responsible for violating its most precious tenants: that of denying the right to vote of people equally situated as the same class of voters.

I wonder how grievously disappointed that the people in America whom the Voting Rights Act was designed to protect will be when they shall come to understand that it was members of the Democratic Party who violated the very tenant of the Voting Rights Act: "Equal people, equal vote."

The task force was acting under its own rules, not under Federal law. What is worse, they applied their own rules inconsistently. In the task force's counting rules, No. 9, the task force provides that it will count ballots that "* * * may not have been properly sealed election night." In other words, rule 9 contemplates counting votes that were not necessarily perfectly secured.

Why then, but for latent political reasons, did the majority of the task force refuse to count 32 absentee ballots that 4 Indiana county clerks swore under perjury had been secured? There is no consistency in a task force whose written rule proclaims counting unsecured ballots and whose later ad hoc rule proclaims not counting of secured ballots.

Article I, section 5, says, "Each House shall be the judge of the Elections, Returns, and Qualifications of its own Members * * *," but is the power absolute? In Powell versus McCormack, the case of Adam Clayton Powell, the Supreme Court in 1969 said that the House's power to be the judge was not absolute but rather qualified by other provisions of the Constitution, and I agree. I think it unconstitutional for a committee or for even the House itself sitting as a judge of the election not to be bound by other provisions of the Constitution.

Indeed, the right and power claimed by the majority side of this issue if expressed in constitutional principle would be absolute. It would absolutely permit them, on January 3, 1987, to refuse to accept the certification of the secretary of state of any State, to order another task force to recount the ballots, to have the task force issue written rules, and then within the proceedings to have the task force issue ad hoc rules inconsistent with the written, and then to unseat a properly elected Republican by recounting. Surely our Constitution cannot mean that.

The grand principle of the Constitution is that the people shall choose. Once the task force decided to supplant Indiana law by counting votes that would not be counted under Indiana law, it was bound to do so evenly. To preclude 32 absentee ballots from being counted while actually counting other absentee ballots exactly alike but for a supposedly lesser degree of security is fatuous in face of rule 9 that contemplates counting ballots not necessarily secured.

The refusal to count all like ballots of the same substantive class is arbitrary and unreasoned.

If this House shall act to seat McCloskey, then this House will endorse a dark absolute power to determine elections, and the entire Constitution will fall under a despotic shadow. Let us take the only enlightened course: let us order another election, open, clean, and unbloodied by politics.

Mr. MAZZOLI. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FRENZEL. I yield to the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. MAZZOLI. I thank my friend for yielding. I rise with my heart in my throat, more nervous than I have ever been in this House to say I have to rise in behalf of the proposition which I consider to be fair and correct, which is that the Indiana seat be declared vacant and there be a special election.

I do not do so to impugn my friend from California [Mr. PANETTA] who is an excellent and respected man, nor to endorse what I consider to be totally disrespectful statements toward our Speaker from the other side of the aisle today, nor to hurt my friend Frank McCloskey, who is my friend and who, if he wishes, I would be very happy to campaign for any time, any place.

But I rise, instead, to tell my friends on this side that the race does appear to be tainted, it does appear to have a cloud hanging over it, which I think can only be dispelled if there were a special election.

I hope that that is done, for Frank's sake and for the country's sake.

I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. FRENZEL. I thank the gentleman from Kentucky for his courageous statement.

Mr. Speaker, the House has seen today the first debate since I have been in the House in which everyone of the elected Members of the Republican leadership participated vigorously and effectively. It was a debate without rancor, based on rational and compelling argumentation, despite the fact that they felt deeply about the issue.

To the majority leader, who told us that when all the votes are in, then we ought to seat the winner, we say: Why were you afraid to count the last 32 votes?

Actually, we have two basic questions. The first one is: Why did you not accept Indiana's certification in the first instance.

The second one is: After you were willing to trash Indiana law and write your own rules to count the votes, why in heaven's name would you not count all of the votes under your own rules? After counting some identical ballots, why did you suddenly change your colors, and rely on the Indiana law you earlier rejected, so that these votes would not be counted.

The majority leader again said of certain votes, "They are not going to be counted in any State I know." He is right. They should not be. But they were countable under the rules that the task force established by a straight 2-to-1 party line vote.

And forget references to bipartisan votes on the task force. It was 2 to 1. There was a 2-to-1 party-line vote when it set its rules, and the Republican Representative, the gentleman from California [Mr. THOMAS] tried to walk out. I asked him to stay in there and try to defend our interests as best he could.

And now the task force has delivered its party-line vote. The committee has delivered its party line vote. I am now making one more appeal to Democrats to stand up for the Constitution and for representative government.

You do not have to vote no on this motion, to be a good Democrat, in my judgment. It is our last chance. It is a vote for a new election. You are not repudiating a committee motion. In voting for my motion you can follow the more than 30 editorialists. You can even follow Common Cause who has sent telegrams, I am told, to every Member of this House suggesting a special election. So far as I know there is not a majority of closet Repubicans in that crowd.

You can also follow the League of Women Voters of the State of Indiana which says "the ideal course" would be to have another election.

No, you do not have to vote "no" to be a good Democrat.

The gentleman from California [Mr. PANETTA] has told us that the House is to be the judge. I can read the Constitution. But I go back to article I, section 2 where it says the House of Representatives will be chosen by the people. I do not think that is such a bad idea, either.

If the House is take the peoples' rights away, it must be on absolutely certain grounds. The burden of proof is on the majority Democrats and they have produced none.

No hearings preceded the January vote. No hearings preceded the task force's counting rules. Both were exercises in raw political power.

So I am only talking to the people who have a real affection and respect for this House. And to those people who love the House, I ask them to do the very hard job of deciding.

Let representative government work. Let the people decide. Take the poison out of the shallow well of confidence that nourishes this House, which is much too often divided.

You can do that by simply voting for a new election, which will wash away the tainted results of this process.

One editorialist says there is a bit of a smell about the results. I am pledged not to say anything inflammatory today for fear that I will frighten away some prospective friends. So I shall not say that. Suffice it to say that this matter has been my greatest disappointment in all of my public life.

I remind you—you can crush us today as you did in January. You can crush us today as you did after the recount. You can crush the people of Indiana as you have trashed their law in the task force's rules, and you did when you quit counting.

But I still think it is possible for thoughtful people who love this House to be able to stand up and be counted for a new chance for the people of Indiana:

I would hate to think that when the story of this Congress was written, it would be said that the only item on which the Democrats could be united was to take an election away from the people of the State of Indiana. The House has had little trouble with the budget, a little with tax policy, a little with Nicaragua, and other things. But let us not say that the only party-line vote was one of doubtful qualifications in which most observers, editorially and otherwise, have decided is at least questionable and requires a new election.

Mr. Speaker, there have been a lot of hot words, and the reason is that this is a profoundly important question of constitutional law and representative government. It is easy to make harsh words, especially when the majority is insensitive to minority concerns.

If I have offended anyone, I apologize. But, for that last time I ask those who are considering taking the franchise away from the people to vote instead for the Constitution. I hope you will think twice, and I hope you will vote in support of the motion now pending.

I yield back the balance of my time.

The SPEAKER. All time has expired.

Without objection, the previous question is ordered on the resolution.

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the resolution.

The question was taken; and the Speaker announced that the noes appeared to have it.

Mr. FRENZEL. Mr. Speaker, on that I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The vote was taken by electronic device and there were—yeas 200, nays 229, not voting 4, as follows:

[Roll No. 82]

YEAS—200

Applegate	Hall, Ralph	Olin
Archer	Hall, Sam	Oxley
Armey	Hammerschmidt	Packard
Badham	Hansen	Parris
Barnard	Hartnett	Pashayan
Bartlett	Hendon	Penny
Barton	Henry	Petri
Bateman	Hiler	Porter
Bentley	Hillis	Pursell
Bereuter	Holt	Quillen
Bilirakis	Hopkins	Ray
Bliley	Horton	Regula
Boehlert	Hunter	Ridge
Boulter	Hutto	Rinaldo
Broomfield	Hyde	Ritter
Brown (CO)	Ireland	Roberts
Broyhill	Jeffords	Rogers
Burton (IN)	Johnson	Roth
Callahan	Kasich	Roukema
Campbell	Kemp	Rowland (CT)
Carney	Kindness	Rudd
Chandler	Kolbe	Saxton
Chappie	Kramer	Schaefer
Cheney	LaFalce	Schneider
Clinger	Lagomarsino	Schuette
Coats	Latta	Schulze
Cobey	Leach (IA)	Sensenbrenner
Coble	Leath (TX)	Shaw
Coleman (MO)	Lent	Shumway
Combest	Lewis (CA)	Shuster
Conte	Lewis (FL)	Siljander
Coughlin	Lightfoot	Skeen
Courter	Livingston	Slaughter
Craig	Lloyd	Smith (NE)
Crane	Loeffler	Smith (NH)
Daniel	Lott	Smith (NJ)
Dannemeyer	Lowery (CA)	Smith, Denny
Daub	Lujan	Smith, Robert
Davis	Lungren	Snowe
DeLay	Mack	Snyder
DeWine	Madigan	Solomon
Dickinson	Marlenee	Spence
DioGuardi	Martin (IL)	Stallings
Dornan (CA)	Martin (NY)	Stangeland
Dreier	Mazzoli	Stenholm
Duncan	McCain	Strang
Eckert (NY)	McCandless	Stump
Emerson	McCollum	Sundquist
English	McDade	Sweeney
Evans (IA)	McEwen	Swindall
Fawell	McGrath	Tauke
Fiedler	McKernan	Taylor
Fields	McKinney	Thomas (CA)
Fish	McMillan	Vander Jagt
Frank	Meyers	Vucanovich
Franklin	Michel	Walker
Frenzel	Miller (OH)	Weber
Gallo	Miller (WA)	Whitehurst
Gekas	Molinari	Whittaker
Gilman	Monson	Wise
Gingrich	Montgomery	Wolf
Goodling	Moore	Wortley
Gradison	Moorhead	Wylie
Green	Morrison (WA)	Young (AK)
Gregg	Myers	Young (FL)
Grotberg	Nielson	Zschau
Gunderson	O'Brien

NAYS—229

Ackerman	Ford (TN)	Oberstar
Addabbo	Fowler	Obey
Akaka	Frost	Ortiz
Alexander	Fuqua	Owens
Anderson	Garcia	Panetta
Andrews	Gaydos	Pease
Annunzio	Gejdenson	Pepper
Anthony	Gephardt	Perkins
Aspin	Gibbons	Pickle
Atkins	Glickman	Price
AuCoin	Gonzalez	Rahall
Barnes	Gordon	Rangel
Bates	Gray (IL)	Reid
Bedell	Gray (PA)	Richardson
Beilenson	Guarini	Robinson
Bennett	Hall (OH)	Rodino
Berman	Hamilton	Roe
Bevill	Hatcher	Roemer
Biaggi	Hawkins	Rose
Boggs	Hayes	Rostenkowski
Boland	Hefner	Rowland (GA)
Boner (TN)	Heftel	Roybal
Bonior (MI)	Hertel	Russo
Bonker	Howard	Sabo
Borski	Hoyer	Savage
Bosco	Hubbard	Scheuer
Boucher	Hughes	Schroeder
Boxer	Jacobs	Schumer
Breaux	Jenkins	Seiberling
Brooks	Jones (NC)	Sharp
Brown (CA)	Jones (OK)	Shelby
Bruce	Jones (TN)	Sikorski
Bryant	Kanjorski	Sisisky
Burton (CA)	Kaptur	Skelton
Bustamante	Kastenmeier	Slattery
Byron	Kennelly	Smith (FL)
Carper	Kildee	Smith (IA)
Carr	Kleczka	Solarz
Chappell	Kolter	Spratt
Clay	Kostmayer	St Germain
Coelho	Lantos	Staggers
Coleman (TX)	Lehman (CA)	Stark
Collins	Lehman (FL)	Stokes
Conyers	Leland	Stratton
Cooper	Levin (MI)	Studds
Coyne	Levine (CA)	Swift
Crockett	Lipinski	Synar
Darden	Long	Tallon
Daschle	Lowry (WA)	Tauzin
de la Garza	Luken	Thomas (GA)
Dellums	Lundine	Torres
Derrick	MacKay	Torricelli
Dicks	Manton	Towns
Dingell	Markey	Traficant
Dixon	Martinez	Traxler
Donnelly	Matsui	Valentine
Dorgan (ND)	Mavroules	Vento
Dowdy	McCurdy	Visclosky
Downey	McHugh	Volkmer
Durbin	Mica	Walgren
Dwyer	Mikulski	Watkins
Dymally	Miller (CA)	Waxman
Dyson	Mineta	Weiss
Early	Mitchell	Wheat
Eckart (OH)	Moakley	Whitley
Edgar	Mollohan	Whitten
Edwards (CA)	Moody	Williams
Erdreich	Morrison (CT)	Wilson
Evans (IL)	Mrazek	Wirth
Fascell	Murphy	Wolpe
Fazio	Murtha	Wright
Feighan	Natcher	Wyden
Flippo	Neal	Yates
Florio	Nelson	Yatron
Foglietta	Nichols	Young (MO)
Foley	Nowak
Ford (MI)	Oakar

NOT VOTING—4

Edwards (OK)	Udall
Huckaby	Weaver

□ 1630

Mr. YOUNG of Missouri changed his vote from "yea" to "nay."

So the resolution was not agreed to.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. FRENZEL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days in which to revise and extend their remarks on House Resolution 148, the resolution just rejected.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Minnesota?

There was no objection.

PERMISSION TO VACATE SPECIAL ORDER

Mr. DORNAN of California. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to strike my request for a 10-minute special order for today.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

PRIVILEGES OF THE HOUSE—PROVIDING FOR AUDIO AND VISUAL BROADCAST COVERAGE OF CHAMBER DURING VOTES

Mr. LOTT. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a question of the privileges of the House, and I send to the desk a privileged resolution (H. Res. 150) and ask for its immediate consideration.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the resolution.

H. RES. 150

Whereas, clause 9(b)(1) of Rule I of the Rules of the House of Representatives requires that the Speaker "devise and implement a system subject to his direction and control for complete and unedited audio and visual broadcasting of the proceedings of the House of Representatives."; and

Whereas, voting in the House is an integral part of the proceedings of the House; and

Whereas, the audio and visual broadcast coverage of House proceedings is currently being discontinued while Members are voting; and

Whereas, the interruption of audio and visual broadcast coverage of House proceedings while Members are voting affects the integrity of the proceedings of the House and thus raises a question of privilege of the House; Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That the Speaker is hereby authorized and directed, pursuant to his responsibilities under clause 9(b)(1) of Rule I of the House, to provide for the audio and visual broadcast coverage of the Chamber while Members are voting.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman's resolution as to the issue raised does state a question of privilege.

● Mr. LOTT. Mr. Speaker, under House rule 9 and the precedents, a question of privilege is anything which affects the integrity or our proceedings, including the impact of the House television system on those proceedings. This resolution alleges that the blackout of the House TV system while the House is voting both violates our rules and adversely affects the integrity of our proceedings.

The resolution goes on in the resolved clause to authorize and direct the Speaker to enforce House Rule I, clause 9(b)(1) by providing broadcast coverage of the Chamber while Members are voting. That rule requires the "complete and unedited audio and visual broadcasting of the proceedings of the House of Representatives." And voting certainly is an integral part of our proceedings.

At present our proceedings are interrupted and blacked-out while Members are voting. Instead of the audio and visual broadcast coverage of the Chamber while Members are voting, the broadcast coverage is replaced by a visual representation of the ongoing vote—a card which periodically updates the vote count by party every 13 seconds or so.

Mr. Speaker, there can be no doubt from the legislative history behind this broadcast rule that it was the intention of the Rules Committee and the House that the American people should receive a complete, unedited, and uninterrupted broadcast account of our proceedings, gavel to gavel. To quote from the Rules Committee report of February 15, 1978, on which the House broadcast rule is based:

In our view the principal and overriding purpose is to provide a complete, uninterrupted and accurate record of the official proceedings and business of the House—a kind of visual and audio parallel to the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

And yet, when it comes to voting, Mr. Speaker, our House broadcast system is actually a less accurate account of our proceedings than the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, since the RECORD at least indicates who changed their votes after time has expired.

On many close votes, such as the one last week on the Michel amendment to the Nicaragua Contra aid bill, the American people are left completely in the dark by our present vote blackout and have no understanding as to why that vote seems to change after the time has expired. Such 13th hour vote switching provides some of the highest drama and excitement our democratic process has to offer and should be shown in full view of the public on the TV screen, and not as if it were taking place behind closed doors in some smoke-filled room.

Mr. Speaker, I don't think anyone would dispute that voting is a central aspect of our proceedings. To deny the American people the right to view the House while voting is to blindfold them at democracy's most climactic moment.

Mr. Speaker, I would submit that there is nothing in this resolution and what it seeks that is intended to embarrass any Member. A television overview of the Chamber would suffice for the purpose of enforcing our broadcast rules. The running vote count, which is all that we now see, could still be superimposed on that picture of the Chamber without doing any violence to the rule. This would certainly be a more accurate portrayal of our voting behavior and activities than the card that is now displayed on the TV screen.

Mr. Speaker, the resolution which I have offered is quite simple and self-explanatory. It recognizes that House rules now call for complete and unedited broadcast coverage of our proceedings, that voting is an integral part of those proceedings, and authorizes and directs the Speaker to enforce that rule by providing broadcast coverage of the Chamber while Members are voting. Without that coverage, the integrity of our proceedings surely suffers in the eyes of the American people. Every vote becomes a 15-minute gap in our democracy.

Mr. Speaker, I urge adoption of this resolution as a means of enforcing our present broadcast rule and restoring the dignity and integrity of our proceedings. A vote for against this resolution is a vote against sunshine in the House. A vote this resolution is a vote to completely throw open the TV window on this Chamber, let the sunshine in, and let the American people see their elected Representatives at work: speaking, legislating, and, yes, perhaps most importantly, voting.

For voting is, after all, the very essence and the culmination of our democratic processes, both electorally and legislatively. To deny the American people a view of their Members of Congress voting does serious damage to this House by casting a cloud of doubt and suspicion over the integrity of our proceedings. I therefore urge adoption of this resolution.●

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the resolution is agreed to.

There was no objection.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

ANNOUNCEMENT BY THE SPEAKER

The SPEAKER. Pursuant to clause 5, rule I, the Chair will now put the question of each motion on which further proceedings were postponed on Monday, April 29, in the order in which that motion was entertained.

Votes will be taken in the following order: S. Con. Res. 37, by the yeas and nays; and H. Con. Res. 130, by the yeas and nays.

The Chair will reduce to 5 minutes the time for the second electronic vote.

ACCEPTING A STATUE OF JEANNETTE RANKIN

The SPEAKER. The unfinished business is the question of suspending the rules and concurring in the Senate concurrent resolution (S. Con. Res. 37), as amended.

The Clerk read the title of the Senate concurrent resolution.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion offered by the gentlewoman from Ohio [Ms. OAKAR] that the House suspend the rules and concur in the Senate concurrent resolution (S. Con. Res. 37), as amended, on which the yeas and nays were ordered.

The vote was taken by electronic device, and there were—yeas 424, nays 4, not voting 5, as follows:

[Roll No. 83]

YEAS—424

Ackerman	Coleman (MO)	Fuqua
Addabbo	Coleman (TX)	Gallo
Akaka	Collins	Garcia
Alexander	Combest	Gaydos
Anderson	Conte	Gejdenson
Andrews	Conyers	Gekas
Annunzio	Cooper	Gephardt
Anthony	Coughlin	Gibbons
Applegate	Courter	Gilman
Armey	Coyne	Gingrich
Aspin	Craig	Glickman
Atkins	Crockett	Gonzalez
AuCoin	Daniel	Goodling
Badham	Dannemeyer	Gordon
Barnard	Darden	Gradison
Barnes	Daschle	Gray (IL)
Bartlett	Daub	Gray (PA)
Barton	Davis	Green
Bateman	de la Garza	Gregg
Bates	DeLay	Grotberg
Bedell	Dellums	Guarini
Bellenson	Derrick	Gunderson
Bennett	DeWine	Hall (OH)
Bentley	Dickinson	Hall, Sam
Bereuter	Dicks	Hamilton
Berman	Dingell	Hammerschmidt
Bevill	DioGuardi	Hansen
Biaggi	Dixon	Hartnett
Bilirakis	Donnelly	Hatcher
Bliley	Dorgan (ND)	Hawkins
Boehlert	Dornan (CA)	Hayes
Boggs	Dowdy	Hefner
Boland	Downey	Heftel
Boner (TN)	Dreier	Hendon
Bonior (MI)	Duncan	Henry
Bonker	Durbin	Hertel
Borski	Dwyer	Hiler
Bosco	Dymally	Hillis
Boucher	Dyson	Holt
Boulter	Early	Hopkins
Boxer	Eckart (OH)	Horton
Breaux	Eckert (NY)	Howard
Broomfield	Edgar	Hoyer
Brown (CA)	Edwards (CA)	Hubbard
Brown (CO)	Emerson	Hughes
Broyhill	English	Hunter
Bruce	Erdreich	Hutto
Bryant	Evans (IA)	Hyde
Burton (CA)	Evans (IL)	Ireland
Burton (IN)	Fascell	Jacobs
Bustamante	Fawell	Jeffords
Byron	Fazio	Jenkins
Callahan	Feighan	Johnson
Campbell	Fiedler	Jones (NC)
Carney	Fields	Jones (OK)
Carper	Fish	Jones (TN)
Carr	Flippo	Kanjorski
Chandler	Florio	Kaptur
Chappell	Foglietta	Kasich
Chappie	Foley	Kastenmeier
Cheney	Ford (MI)	Kemp
Clay	Ford (TN)	Kennelly
Clinger	Fowler	Kildee
Coats	Frank	Kindness
Cobey	Franklin	Kleczka
Coble	Frenzel	Kolbe
Coelho	Frost	Kolter

Kostmayer
Kramer
LaFalce
Lagomarsino
Lantos
Latta
Leach (IA)
Leath (TX)
Lehman (CA)
Lehman (FL)
Leland
Lent
Levin (MI)
Levine (CA)
Lewis (CA)
Lewis (FL)
Lightfoot
Lipinski
Livingston
Lloyd
Loeffler
Long
Lott
Lowery (CA)
Lowry (WA)
Lujan
Luken
Lundine
Lungren
Mack
MacKay
Madigan
Manton
Markey
Marlenee
Martin (IL)
Martin (NY)
Martinez
Matsui
Mavroules
Mazzoli
McCain
McCandless
McCollum
McCurdy
McDade
McEwen
McGrath
McHugh
McKernan
McKinney
McMillan
Meyers
Mica
Michel
Mikulski
Miller (CA)
Miller (OH)
Miller (WA)
Mineta
Mitchell
Moakley
Molinari
Mollohan
Monson
Montgomery
Moody
Moore
Moorhead
Morrison (CT)
Morrison (WA)
Mrazek
Murphy
Murtha
Myers
Natcher
Neal
Nelson
Nichols
Nielson
Nowak
O'Brien
Oakar
Oberstar
Obey
Olin
Ortiz
Owens
Oxley
Packard
Panetta
Parris
Pashayan
Pease
Penny
Pepper
Perkins
Petri
Pickle
Porter
Price
Pursell
Quillen
Rahall
Rangel
Ray
Regula
Reid
Richardson
Ridge
Rinaldo
Ritter
Roberts
Robinson
Rodino
Roe
Roemer
Rogers
Rose
Rostenkowski
Roth
Roukema
Rowland (CT)
Rowland (GA)
Roybal
Rudd
Russo
Sabo
Savage
Saxton
Schaefer
Scheuer
Schneider
Schroeder
Schuette
Schulze
Schumer
Seiberling
Sensenbrenner
Sharp
Shaw
Shelby
Shumway
Shuster
Sikorski
Siljander
Sisisky
Skeen
Skelton
Slattery
Slaughter
Smith (FL)
Smith (IA)
Smith (NE)
Smith (NJ)
Smith, Denny
Smith, Robert
Snowe
Snyder
Solarz
Solomon
Spence
Spratt
St Germain
Staggers
Stallings
Stangeland
Stark
Stenholm
Stokes
Strang
Stratton
Studds
Stump
Sundquist
Sweeney
Swift
Swindall
Synar
Tallon
Tauke
Tauzin
Taylor
Thomas (CA)
Thomas (GA)
Torres
Torricelli
Towns
Traficant
Traxler
Valentine
Vander Jagt
Vento
Visclosky
Volkmer
Vucanovich
Walgren
Walker
Watkins
Waxman
Weber
Weiss
Wheat
Whitehurst
Whitley
Whittaker
Whitten
Williams
Wilson
Wirth
Wise
Wolfe
Wolpe
Wortley
Wright
Wyden
Wylie
Yates
Yatron
Young (AK)
Young (FL)
Young (MO)
Zschau

NAYS—4

Archer
Crane
Hall, Ralph
Smith (NH)

NOT VOTING—5

Brooks
Edwards (OK)
Huckaby
Udall
Weaver

□ 1650

Mr. SMITH of New Hampshire changed his vote from "yea" to "nay."

So (two-thirds having voted in favor thereof) the rules were suspended and the Senate concurrent resolution, as amended, was concurred in.

the result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. LOTT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days in which to revise and extend their remarks on House Resolution 150, as previously passed by the House, and that my own remarks appear in the RECORD just prior to this vote.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. OBEY). Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi?

There was no objection.

ANNOUNCEMENT BY THE SPEAKER PRO TEMPORE

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to the provisions of clause 5, rule I, the Chair announces that he will reduce to a minimum of 5 minutes the period of time within which a vote by electronic device may be taken on the additional motion to suspend the rules on which the Chair has postponed further proceedings.

SENSE OF CONGRESS WITH RESPECT TO PRESIDENT'S VISIT TO THE FEDERAL REPUBLIC OF GERMANY IN MAY 1985

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The unfinished business is the question of suspending the rules and agreeing to the concurrent resolution (H. Con. Res. 130).

The Clerk read the title of the concurrent resolution.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion offered by the gentleman from Florida [Mr. FASCELL] that the House suspend the rules and agree to the concurrent resolution (H. Con. Res. 130), on which the yeas and nays are ordered.

The vote was taken by electronic device, and there were—yeas 390, nays 26, answered "present" 10, not voting 7, as follows:

[Roll No. 84]

YEAS—390

Ackerman
Addabbo
Akaka
Alexander
Anderson
Andrews
Annunzio
Anthony
Applegate
Archer
Aspin
Atkins
AuCoin
Barnard
Barnes
Bartlett
Bates
Bedell
Bellenson
Bennett
Bentley
Bereuter
Berman
Bevill
Biaggi
Bilirakis
Billey
Boehlert
Boggs
Boland
Boner (TN)
Bonior (MI)
Bonker
Borski
Bosco
Boucher
Boxer
Breaux
Brooks
Broomfield
Brown (CA)
Brown (CO)
Broyhill
Bruce
Bryant
Burton (CA)
Bustamante
Byron
Callahan
Campbell
Carney
Carper
Carr
Chandler
Chappell
Chappie
Cheney
Clay
Clinger
Coats
Cobey
Coble
Coelho
Coleman (MO)
Coleman (TX)
Collins
Combest
Conte
Conyers
Cooper
Coughlin
Courter
Coyne
Craig
Crockett
Daniel
Darden
Daschle
Daub
Davis
de la Garza
Dellums
Derrick
Dicks
Dingell
DioGuardi
Dixon
Donnelly
Dorgan (ND)
Dornan (CA)
Dowdy
Downey
Dreier
Duncan
Durbin
Dwyer
Dymally
Dyson
Early
Eckart (OH)
Eckert (NY)
Edgar
Edwards (CA)
Emerson
English
Erdreich
Evans (IA)
Evans (IL)
Fascell
Fawell
Fazio
Feighan
Fish
Flippo
Florio
Foglietta
Foley
Ford (MI)
Ford (TN)
Fowler
Frank
Franklin
Frenzel
Frost
Fuqua
Gallo
Garcia
Gaydos
Gejdenson
Gekas
Gephardt
Gibbons
Gilman
Gingrich
Glickman
Gonzalez
Goodling
Gordon
Gradison
Gray (IL)
Gray (PA)
Green
Grotberg
Guarini
Gunderson
Hall (OH)
Hall, Ralph
Hall, Sam
Hamilton
Hammerschmidt
Hatcher
Hawkins
Hayes
Hefner
Heftel
Hendon
Henry
Hertel
Hopkins
Horton
Howard
Hoyer
Hubbard
Hughes
Hunter
Hutto
Ireland
Jacobs
Jenkins
Johnson
Jones (NC)
Jones (OK)
Jones (TN)
Kanjorski
Kaptur
Kasich
Kastenmeier
Kemp
Kennelly
Kildee
Kleczka
Kolbe
Kolter
Kostmayer
Kramer
LaFalce
Lagomarsino
Lantos
Leach (IA)
Leath (TX)
Lehman (CA)
Lehman (FL)
Leland
Lent
Levin (MI)
Levine (CA)
Lewis (CA)
Lewis (FL)
Lightfoot
Lipinski
Livingston
Lloyd
Loeffler
Long
Lott
Lowery (CA)
Lowry (WA)
Lujan
Luken
Lundine
Lungren
Mack
MacKay
Madigan
Manton
Markey
Marlenee
Martin (IL)
Martin (NY)
Martinez
Matsui
Mavroules
Mazzoli
McCain
McCollum
McCurdy
McDade
McEwen
McGrath
McHugh
McKernan
McKinney
McMillan
Meyers
Mica
Mikulski
Miller (CA)
Miller (WA)
Mineta
Mitchell
Moakley
Molinari
Mollohan
Monson
Montgomery
Moody
Moore
Moorhead
Morrison (CT)
Morrison (WA)
Mrazek
Murphy
Murtha
Natcher
Neal
Nelson
Nichols
Nowak
O'Brien
Oakar
Oberstar
Obey
Olin
Ortiz
Owens
Packard
Panetta
Parris
Pashayan
Pease
Penny
Pepper
Perkins
Pickle
Porter
Price
Pursell
Quillen
Rahall
Rangel
Ray
Regula
Reid
Richardson
Ridge
Rinaldo
Ritter
Roberts
Robinson
Rodino
Roe
Roemer
Rogers
Rose
Rostenkowski
Roth
Roukema
Rowland (CT)
Rowland (GA)
Roybal
Rudd
Russo
Sabo
Savage
Saxton
Schaefer
Scheuer
Schneider
Schroeder
Schuette
Schulze
Schumer
Sensenbrenner
Sharp
Shaw
Shelby
Shuster
Sikorski
Siljander
Sisisky
Skeen
Skelton
Slattery
Slaughter
Smith (FL)
Smith (IA)
Smith (NE)
Smith (NH)
Smith (NJ)
Smith, Robert
Snowe
Solarz
Solomon
Spence
Spratt
St Germain
Staggers
Stallings
Stangeland
Stark
Stenholm
Stokes
Strang
Stratton
Studds
Sundquist
Sweeney
Swift
Swindall
Synar
Tallon
Tauke
Tauzin
Thomas (CA)

Thomas (GA)	Watkins	Wise
Torres	Waxman	Wolf
Torricelli	Weber	Wolpe
Towns	Weiss	Wortley
Traficant	Wheat	Wright
Traxler	Whitehurst	Wyden
Valentine	Whitley	Yates
Vento	Whittaker	Yatron
Visclosky	Whitten	Young (AK)
Volkmer	Williams	Young (FL)
Walgren	Wilson	Young (MO)
Walker	Wirth	Zschau

NAYS—26

Armey	Hansen	Myers
Badham	Hartnett	Nielson
Barton	Hillis	Petri
Boulter	Holt	Shumway
Burton (IN)	Hyde	Smith, Denny
Crane	Jeffords	Stump
Dannemeyer	Kindness	Vucanovich
DeLay	Michel	Wylie
Gregg	Miller (OH)

ANSWERED "PRESENT"—10

Bateman	Hiler	Snyder
DeWine	Latta	Taylor
Dickinson	McCandless
Fields	Oxley

NOT VOTING—7

Edwards (OK)	Selberling	Weaver
Fiedler	Udall
Huckaby	Vander Jagt

□ 1700

So (two-thirds having voted in favor thereof), the rules were suspended and the concurrent resolution was agreed to.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

EXPLANATION OF VOTE ON BITBURG CONTROVERSY

● Mr. McCANDLESS. Mr. Speaker, I rise to support the President's scheduled trip to Europe, including his planned visit to the cemetery in Bitburg, Germany.

One by one I have watched my colleagues and other Americans denounce the President's decision to make the visit to a wartime cemetery containing the graves of 2,000 German soldiers, including 49 members of the Waffen SS.

As a veteran of World War II, I hold the Nazis and the Holocaust with the same loathing and revulsion as all those who oppose the trip to the cemetery.

But I also see the President's trip as an opportunity, 40 long years later, to heal the wounds between our people and the Germans. I view his trip as courageous and farsighted. The President will not be saluting dead Nazis. He will be saluting live, free Germans, who have denounced the terrible sins of Hitler. He is a President who is strong enough to make the proper, though extremely difficult, symbolic gesture in surroundings that frankly acknowledge the past, and look forward to the future.

The President's visit is not an American exoneration of the German people. They need no exoneration from us, as they have exonerated themselves. After the war, they set about becoming strong American allies. In the face of fierce domestic opposition, Chancellor Kohl accepted the placement of our Pershing missiles. His nation stands guard against another terrible enemy—rampant communism, as insidious a killer as the Nazis. Only the techniques vary, and the Communist's target is every free person worldwide.

Germans have paid the price of world shame for 40 years. I believe it's time we put the past to rest. We can remember, but not make Germany relive it day after day. The time for reconciliation is now, and I believe we are fortunate to have a strong President who sees his duty, and is prepared to do it.●

PRIVILEGES OF THE HOUSE—RESOLUTION DIRECTING COMMITTEE ON RULES TO UNDERTAKE INVESTIGATION CONCERNING PROXY VOTING

Mr. DAUB. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a question of privilege under rule IX of the House rules, and I offer a privileged resolution (H. Res. 151).

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. OBEY). The Clerk will report the resolution.

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

H. RES. 151

Whereas, Rule XI(2)(f) of the House of Representatives authorizes committees to adopt rules which allow voting by proxy;

Whereas, the practice of voting by proxy is contrary to the principles of representative democracy and create an aura of secrecy in legislative proceedings, where none should exist in a truly representative body;

Whereas, voting by proxy increases the possibility and incidences of inaccurate representations of individual Members' votes thereby imparing, the individual rights and duties of Members of the House of Representatives in their representative capacity.

Whereas, such inaccuracies further infringe upon the integrity of the legislative process and the accuracy of official House records and documents. Now, therefore, be it.

Resolved, That the House Committee on Rules shall:

(1) Undertake an investigation concerning the matter of proxy voting;

(2) Determine whether procedures including, but not limited to, eliminating proxy voting should be established and

(3) Report back to the House within 45 legislative days with recommendations on how to ensure the accuracy of official House records and documents, and ensure the integrity of House committees.

MOTION TO TABLE OFFERED BY MR. FOLEY

Mr. FOLEY. Mr. Speaker, I move to lay the resolution on the table.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion to lay on the table the resolution offered by the gentleman from Washington [Mr. FOLEY].

The question was taken; and the Speaker pro tempore announced that the ayes appeared to have it.

Mr. DAUB. Mr. Speaker, on that I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The vote was taken by electronic device, and there were—yeas 231, nays 187, not voting 15, as follows:

[Roll No. 85]

YEAS—231

Ackerman	Frank	Oakar
Addabbo	Fuqua	Oberstar
Akaka	Garcia	Obey
Alexander	Gaydos	Olin
Anderson	Gejdenson	Ortiz
Andrews	Gephardt	Owens
Annunzio	Gibbons	Panetta
Anthony	Glickman	Pease
Applegate	Gonzalez	Penny
Aspin	Gordon	Pepper
Atkins	Gray (IL)	Perkins
AuCoin	Gray (PA)	Pickle
Barnard	Guarini	Price
Barnes	Hall (OH)	Rahall
Bates	Hall, Sam	Rangel
Beilenson	Hamilton	Reid
Bennett	Hatcher	Richardson
Bereuter	Hawkins	Robinson
Berman	Hefner	Rodino
Bevill	Heftel	Roe
Biaggi	Hertel	Rose
Boggs	Howard	Rostenkowski
Boland	Hoyer	Rowland (GA)
Boner (TN)	Hubbard	Roybal
Bonker	Hughes	Russo
Borski	Hutto	Sabo
Bosco	Jacobs	Savage
Boucher	Jenkins	Scheuer
Boxer	Jones (OK)	Schroeder
Breaux	Jones (TN)	Schumer
Brooks	Kanjorski	Sharp
Bruce	Kaptur	Shelby
Bryant	Kennelly	Sikorski
Burton (CA)	Kildee	Sisisky
Bustamante	Kleczka	Skelton
Byron	Kolter	Slattery
Carper	Kostmayer	Smith (FL)
Carr	LaFalce	Smith (IA)
Chappell	Lantos	Solarz
Clay	Lehman (CA)	Spratt
Coelho	Lehman (FL)	St Germain
Coleman (TX)	Leland	Staggers
Collins	Levin (MI)	Stallings
Cooper	Levine (CA)	Stark
Coyne	Lipinski	Stokes
Darden	Lloyd	Stratton
Daschle	Long	Studds
de la Garza	Lowry (WA)	Swift
Dellums	Luken	Synar
Derrick	Lundine	Tallon
Dicks	MacKay	Thomas (GA)
Dingell	Manton	Torres
Dixon	Markey	Torricelli
Donnelly	Martinez	Towns
Dorgan (ND)	Matsui	Traficant
Dowdy	Mavroules	Traxler
Downey	Mazzoli	Valentine
Durbin	McCurdy	Vento
Dwyer	McHugh	Visclosky
Dymally	Mica	Volkmer
Dyson	Mikulski	Walgren
Early	Miller (CA)	Watkins
Eckart (OH)	Mineta	Waxman
Edwards (CA)	Mitchell	Weiss
English	Moakley	Wheat
Erdreich	Mollohan	Whitley
Evans (IL)	Montgomery	Whitten
Fascell	Moody	Williams
Fazio	Morrison (CT)	Wilson
Feighan	Mrazek	Wirth
Flippo	Murphy	Wise
Florio	Murtha	Wolpe
Foglietta	Natcher	Wright
Foley	Neal	Wyden
Ford (MI)	Nelson	Yates
Ford (TN)	Nichols	Yatron
Fowler	Nowak	Young (MO)

NAYS—187

Archer	Badham	Barton
Armey	Bartlett	Bateman

Bedell	Henry	Porter
Bentley	Hiler	Pursell
Bilirakis	Hillis	Quillen
Bliley	Holt	Ray
Boehlert	Hopkins	Regula
Boulter	Horton	Ridge
Broomfield	Hunter	Rinaldo
Brown (CO)	Hyde	Ritter
Broyhill	Ireland	Roberts
Burton (IN)	Jeffords	Roemer
Callahan	Johnson	Rogers
Campbell	Kasich	Roth
Carney	Kastenmeier	Roukema
Chandler	Kemp	Rowland (CT)
Chappie	Kolbe	Rudd
Cheney	Kramer	Saxton
Clinger	Lagomarsino	Schaefer
Coats	Latta	Schneider
Cobey	Leach (IA)	Schuette
Coble	Leath (TX)	Schulze
Coleman (MO)	Lent	Sensenbrenner
Combest	Lewis (CA)	Shaw
Conte	Lewis (FL)	Shumway
Coughlin	Lightfoot	Shuster
Courter	Livingston	Siljander
Craig	Loeffler	Skeen
Crane	Lott	Slaughter
Daniel	Lowery (CA)	Smith (NE)
Dannemeyer	Lujan	Smith (NH)
Daub	Lungren	Smith (NJ)
Davis	Mack	Smith, Denny
DeLay	Madigan	Smith, Robert
DeWine	Marlenee	Snowe
Dickinson	Martin (IL)	Snyder
DioGuardi	Martin (NY)	Solomon
Dornan (CA)	McCain	Spence
Dreier	McCandless	Stangeland
Duncan	McCollum	Stenholm
Eckert (NY)	McDade	Strang
Emerson	McEwen	Stump
Evans (IA)	McGrath	Sundquist
Fawell	McKernan	Sweeney
Fiedler	McKinney	Swindall
Fields	McMillan	Tauke
Fish	Meyers	Tauzin
Franklin	Michel	Taylor
Frenzel	Miller (OH)	Thomas (CA)
Gallo	Miller (WA)	Vander Jagt
Gekas	Molinari	Vucanovich
Gilman	Monson	Walker
Goodling	Moore	Weber
Gradison	Moorhead	Whitehurst
Green	Morrison (WA)	Whittaker
Gregg	Myers	Wolf
Grotberg	Nielson	Wortley
Gunderson	O'Brien	Wylie
Hall, Ralph	Oxley	Young (AK)
Hammerschmidt	Packard	Young (FL)
Hansen	Parris	Zschau
Hartnett	Pashayan
Hendon	Petri

NOT VOTING—15

Bonior (MI)	Edwards (OK)	Jones (NC)
Brown (CA)	Frost	Kindness
Conyers	Gingrich	Seiberling
Crockett	Hayes	Udall
Edgar	Huckaby	Weaver

□ 1720

Mr. ATKINS changed his vote from "nay" to "yea."

So the motion to lay the resolution on the table was agreed to.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

LEGISLATIVE PROGRAM

Without objection, Mr. WRIGHT, was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.

Mr. WRIGHT. Mr. Speaker, I regret very much that it has been impossible to achieve an agreement with the other side that there would be no further votes. We had made commitments to Members on both the Democratic and Republican sides that there would be no more votes this evening in order that they might fulfill their commitments.

The gentleman from Florida [Mr. MICA] was standing up prepared to move ahead with something that the administration very much wants to see done and it had been cleared on both sides of the aisle that we might have had general debate today on the State Department authorization. We were prepared with that to go ahead, but there was an agreement made and I am sure it was entered into in perfectly good faith by the people on the other side that intended to see it kept, that there would be no additional motions. This motion that we have just voted on violated that agreement.

I have made unsuccessful efforts to get assurances that I thought would be kept or would be enforced by the responsible leaders on the other side that there would not be any further votes tonight and that we could proceed in this fashion. I have been unable to get those assurances, because while they might want to give them, they cannot give them.

Under those circumstances, in order to protect Members of the Democratic and the Republican sides who have made commitments made to them that they might attend other affairs this evening, it being 5:30, really there is no other recourse except to move to adjourn.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

By unanimous consent, permission to revise and extend remarks was granted to:

Mr. ALEXANDER, and to include therein extraneous material, notwithstanding the fact that it exceeds two pages of the RECORD and is estimated by the Public Printer to cost $3,347.50.

JOINT RESOLUTION PRESENTED TO THE PRESIDENT

Mr. ANNUNZIO, from the Committee on House Administration, reported that that committee did on this day present to the President, for his approval a joint resolution of the House of the following title:

H.J. Res. 33. Joint resolution designating the Month of May 1985, as "National Child Safety Awareness Month."

ADJOURNMENT

Mr. WRIGHT. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion offered by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. WRIGHT].

The question was taken, and the Speaker pro tempore announced that the ayes appeared to have it.

Mr. WALKER. Mr. Speaker, on that I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The vote was taken by electronic device, and there were—yeas 239, nays 174, not voting 20, as follows:

[Roll No. 86]

YEAS—239

Ackerman	Fuqua	Oakar
Addabbo	Garcia	Oberstar
Akaka	Gaydos	Obey
Alexander	Gejdenson	Olin
Anderson	Gephardt	Ortiz
Andrews	Gibbons	Owens
Annunzio	Glickman	Panetta
Anthony	Gonzalez	Pease
Aspin	Gordon	Penny
Atkins	Gray (IL)	Pepper
AuCoin	Gray (PA)	Perkins
Barnard	Guarini	Pickle
Barnes	Hall (OH)	Price
Bates	Hall, Ralph	Rahall
Bedell	Hall, Sam	Rangel
Bellenson	Hamilton	Ray
Bennett	Hatcher	Reid
Berman	Hawkins	Richardson
Bevill	Hefner	Robinson
Biaggi	Heftel	Rodino
Boggs	Hertel	Roe
Boland	Holt	Rose
Boner (TN)	Howard	Rostenkowski
Bonior (MI)	Hubbard	Rowland (GA)
Bonker	Hughes	Roybal
Borski	Hutto	Russo
Bosco	Jacobs	Sabo
Boucher	Jenkins	Savage
Boxer	Jones (NC)	Scheuer
Breaux	Jones (OK)	Schroeder
Brooks	Jones (TN)	Schumer
Brown (CA)	Kanjorski	Sharp
Bruce	Kaptur	Shelby
Bryant	Kasich	Sikorski
Burton (CA)	Kastenmeier	Sisisky
Bustamante	Kennelly	Skelton
Byron	Kildee	Slattery
Carper	Kleczka	Smith (FL)
Carr	Kolter	Smith (IA)
Chappell	Kostmayer	Solarz
Clay	LaFalce	Spratt
Coelho	Lantos	St Germain
Coleman (TX)	Leath (TX)	Staggers
Collins	Lehman (CA)	Stallings
Cooper	Lehman (FL)	Stark
Coyne	Leland	Stenholm
Daniel	Levin (MI)	Stokes
Darden	Levine (CA)	Stratton
Daschle	Lipinski	Studds
de la Garza	Lloyd	Swift
Dellums	Long	Synar
Derrick	Lowry (WA)	Tallon
Dicks	Luken	Tauke
Dingell	Lundine	Tauzin
Dixon	MacKay	Thomas (GA)
Donnelly	Manton	Torres
Dorgan (ND)	Markey	Torricelli
Dowdy	Martinez	Towns
Downey	Matsui	Traficant
Durbin	Mavroules	Traxler
Dwyer	Mazzoli	Valentine
Dymally	McCurdy	Vento
Dyson	McHugh	Visclosky
Early	Mica	Volkmer
Eckart (OH)	Mikulski	Walgren
Edwards (CA)	Miller (CA)	Watkins
English	Mineta	Weiss
Erdreich	Mitchell	Wheat
Evans (IL)	Moakley	Whitley
Fascell	Mollohan	Whitten
Fazio	Montgomery	Williams
Feighan	Moody	Wilson
Flippo	Morrison (CT)	Wirth
Florio	Murphy	Wise
Foglietta	Murtha	Wolpe
Foley	Natcher	Wright
Ford (MI)	Neal	Wyden
Ford (TN)	Nelson	Yatron
Fowler	Nichols	Young (MO)
Frank	Nowak

NAYS—174

Archer	Badham	Barton
Armey	Bartlett	Bateman

Bentley	Hansen	Petri
Bereuter	Hartnett	Porter
Bilirakis	Hendon	Pursell
Bliley	Henry	Quillen
Boehlert	Hiler	Regula
Boulter	Hillis	Ridge
Broomfield	Hopkins	Rinaldo
Brown (CO)	Horton	Ritter
Broyhill	Hunter	Roberts
Burton (IN)	Hyde	Roemer
Callahan	Ireland	Rogers
Campbell	Jeffords	Roth
Carney	Johnson	Roukema
Chandler	Kemp	Rowland (CT)
Chappie	Kindness	Rudd
Cheney	Kolbe	Saxton
Clinger	Kramer	Schaefer
Coats	Lagomarsino	Schneider
Cobey	Latta	Schuette
Coble	Leach (IA)	Schulze
Coleman (MO)	Lent	Sensenbrenner
Combest	Lewis (CA)	Shaw
Conte	Lewis (FL)	Shumway
Coughlin	Lightfoot	Shuster
Courter	Loeffler	Siljander
Craig	Lott	Skeen
Crane	Lujan	Slaughter
Dannemeyer	Lungren	Smith (NE)
Daub	Mack	Smith (NH)
Davis	Madigan	Smith (NJ)
DeLay	Marlenee	Smith, Denny
DeWine	Martin (IL)	Smith, Robert
Dickinson	Martin (NY)	Snowe
DioGuardi	McCain	Snyder
Dornan (CA)	McCandless	Solomon
Dreier	McCollum	Spence
Duncan	McEwen	Stangeland
Eckert (NY)	McGrath	Strang
Emerson	McKernan	Stump
Evans (IA)	McKinney	Sundquist
Fawell	McMillan	Sweeney
Fiedler	Meyers	Swindall
Fields	Michel	Taylor
Fish	Miller (OH)	Thomas (CA)
Frenzel	Miller (WA)	Vander Jagt
Gallo	Molinari	Vucanovich
Gekas	Monson	Walker
Gilman	Moore	Weber
Gingrich	Moorhead	Whitehurst
Goodling	Morrison (WA)	Whittaker
Gradison	Myers	Wolf
Green	Nielson	Wortley
Gregg	Oxley	Wylie
Grotberg	Packard	Young (AK)
Gunderson	Parris	Young (FL)
Hammerschmidt	Pashayan	Zschau

NOT VOTING—20

Applegate	Hayes	O'Brien
Conyers	Hoyer	Seiberling
Crockett	Huckaby	Udall
Edgar	Livingston	Waxman
Edwards (OK)	Lowery (CA)	Weaver
Franklin	McDade	Yates
Frost	Mrazek

□ 1740

Mr. KRAMER and Mr. COUGHLIN changed their votes from "yea" to "nay."

So the motion to adjourn was agreed to.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

Accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 46 minutes p.m.), under its previous order, the House adjourned until tomorrow, Wednesday, May 1, 1985, at 12 o'clock noon.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of rule XXIV, executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

1144. A letter from the Deputy Secretary of Defense, transmitting three reports of violation of administrative control of appropriations, pursuant to 31 U.S.C. 1517(b); to the Committee on Appropriations.

1145. A letter from the Deputy Secretary of Defense, transmitting four reports of violation of administrative control of appropriations, pursuant to 31 U.S.C. 1517(b); to the Committee on Appropriations.

1146. A letter from the Deputy Secretary of Defense, transmitting notification of three violations of the statute prohibiting the obligation or expenditure of funds in excess of amounts available in an appropriation or fund in advance of an appropriation, pursuant to 31 U.S.C. 1351; to the Committee on Appropriations.

1147. A letter from the Acting Director, Defense Security Assistance Agency, transmitting notice of the Navy's proposed letter of offer to Korea for defense articles estimated to cost $50 million or more (Transmittal No. 85-25), pursuant to 10 U.S.C. 133b (96 Stat. 1288); to the Committee on Armed Services.

1148. A letter from the Acting Director, Defense Security Assistance Agency, transmitting notice of the Army's proposed letter of offer to Saudi Arabia for defense articles estimated to cost $50 million or more, pursuant to 10 U.S.C. 133b (96 Stat. 1288); to the Committee on Armed Services.

1149. A letter from the General Counsel, Department of Defense, transmitting a draft of proposed legislation to amend titles 10 and 37, United States Code, and other authorities to extend certain expiring laws; to the Committee on Armed Services.

1150. A letter from the Under Secretary of Labor, transmitting the Department's annual report on the administration and enforcement of the Fair Labor Standards Act, pursuant to the act of June 25, 1938, chapter 676, section 4(d)(1) (69 Stat. 711; 88 Stat. 72, 73); to the Committee on Education and Labor.

1151. A letter from the Secretary of Energy, transmitting a report on targets for net imports, domestic production and end-use consumption of energy for calendar years 1985, 1990, 1995, and 2000, pursuant to 42 U.S.C. 7361(a); to the Committee on Energy and Commerce.

1152. A letter from the Acting Director, Defense Security Assistance Agency, transmitting notice of the Navy's proposed letter of offer to Korea for defense articles and services estimated to cost $50 million or more (Transmittal No. 85-25), pursuant to 22 U.S.C. 2776(b); to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

1153. A letter from the Acting Director, Defense Security Assistance Agency, transmitting notice of the Army's proposed letter of offer to Saudi Arabia for design and construction services estimated to cost $450 million (Transmittal No. 85-24), pursuant to 22 U.S.C. 2776(b); to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

1154. A letter from the Chief Justice of the Supreme Court, transmitting amendments to the Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure prescribed by the Court, pursuant to 28 U.S.C. 3771 (H. Doc. No. 99-64); to the Committee on the Judiciary and ordered to be printed.

1155. A letter from the Chief Justice of the United States, transmitting amendments to the Federal Rules of Bankruptcy Procedure prescribed by the Court, pursuant to 28 U.S.C. 2075 (H. Doc. No. 99-62); to the Committee on the Judiciary and ordered to be printed.

1156. A letter from the Chief Justice of the United States, transmitting amendments to the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure prescribed by the Court, pursuant to 28 U.S.C. 2072 (H. Doc. No. 99-63); to the Committee on the Judiciary and ordered to be printed.

1157. A letter from the Secretary of Transportation, transmitting the annual report of the Maritime Administration for fiscal year 1984, pursuant to the act of June 29, 1936, chapter 858, section 208 (90 Stat. 380), section 804 (84 Stat. 1033; 94 Stat. 2241; 95 Stat. 164), and section 809(a) (89 Stat. 680; 94 Stat. 2241; 95 Stat. 164); to the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries.

1158. A letter from the Acting Assistant Secretary for Conservation and Renewable Energy, Department of Energy, transmitting the ninth annual report of the Interagency Geothermal Coordinating Council for fiscal year 1984, pursuant to Public Law 93-410, section 302(a); to the Committee on Science and Technology.

1159. A letter from the Comptroller General of the United States, General Accounting Office, transmitting a report on the implementation of the Farm Credit Act Amendments of 1980 (GAO/GGD-85-32; April 8, 1985), pursuant to 12 U.S.C. 2260(a); jointly, to the Committees on Government Operations and Agriculture.

1160. A letter from the Secretary of Transportation, transmitting two drafts of proposed legislation to amend section 506 of the Airport and Airway Improvement Act of 1982, as amended, to improve cost recovery for Federal Aviation Administration programs and to amend 26 U.S.C. 9602(b)(1) to provide that amounts in the Airport and Airway Trust Fund not be invested, nor obligations held by such fund earn interest, for a limited period; jointly, to the Committees on Public Works and Transportation and Ways and Means.

1161. A letter from the Comptroller General of the United States, General Accounting Office, transmitting a report on the Nuclear Regulatory Commission's program for inspecting operating nuclear powerplants (GAO/RCED-85-5; April 24, 1985); jointly, to the Committees on Government Operations, Interior and Insular Affairs, and Energy and Commerce.

1162. A letter from the Director, Central Intelligence Agency, transmitting a draft of proposed legislation to authorize appropriations for fiscal year 1986 for intelligence and intelligence-related activities of the U.S. Government, the Intelligence Community Staff, and the Central Intelligence Agency Retirement and Disability System, and for other purposes; jointly, to the Committees on the Permanent Select Committee on Intelligence, Armed Services, and the Judiciary.

PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS

Under clause 5 of rule X and clause 4 of rule XXII, public bills and resolutions were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. BREAUX (for himself, Mr. ANDERSON, Mr. SHUSTER, Mr. TAUZIN, Mr. WILSON, and Mr. FIELDS):

H.R. 2269. A bill to amend the Interstate Commerce Act to reform and improve regulation of the transportation of oil by pipeline, and for other purposes; jointly, to the Committees on Energy and Commerce and Public Works and Transportation.

By Mr. CALLAHAN:

H.R. 2270. A bill to amend tile 38, United States Code, to direct the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs to develop and carry out a pilot program to determine the most cost effective methods of acquiring medical facilities to meet the needs of the Veterans' Administration and otherwise to promote additional health care for eligible veterans, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Veterans' Affairs.

By Mr. CARPER:

H.R. 2271. A bill to promote energy conservation by providing for daylight saving time on an expanded basis, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Energy and Commerce.

H.R. 2272. A bill to amend the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 to modify the amount of the expenses for household and dependent care services necessary for gainful employment which may be taken into account for computing a tax credit; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. COOPER:

H.R. 2273. A bill to make permanent the free rate of Customs duty on imported hatters' fur, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. DUNCAN:

H.R. 2274. A bill to amend the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 relating to the method of payment of taxes on distilled spirits; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. ECKERT of New York:

H.R. 2275. A bill to authorize the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs to release a limitation on the conveyance of certain real property previously conveyed by the Administrator to the city of Batavia, NY; to the Committee on Veterans' Affairs.

By Mr. FISH:

H.R. 2276. A bill to authorize appropriations for the purpose of carrying out the activities of the Department of Justice for fiscal year 1986, and for other purposes; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. LIGHTFOOT:

H.R. 2277. A bill to amend the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 to provide an exemption from the minimum tax for capital gains on sales of farm property by insolvent farmers; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. HEFTEL of Hawaii:

H.R. 2278. A bill relating to the tariff classification of salted and dried plums, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. LAGOMARSINO (for himself, Mr. RITTER, Mr. RANGEL, Mr. WILSON, Mr. KEMP, and Mr. MCEWEN):

H.R. 2279. A bill to provide for the distribution within the United States of two USIA films relating to Afghanistan; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

By Mr. ROYBAL (for himself, Mr. PEPPER, and Mr. BIAGGI):

H.R. 2280. A bill to amend the Public Health Service Act to provide assistance for education, research, and treatment programs for Alzheimer's disease and related disorders, and for other purposes; jointly, to the Committees on Energy and Commerce and Ways and Means.

By Mr. MITCHELL (for himself and Mr. MCDADE) (by request):

H.R. 2281. A bill to amend the Small Business Investment Act of 1958 to create the Corporation for Small Business Investment and to transfer certain functions of the Small Business Administration to the Corporation; to the Committee on Small Business.

By Mr. LEHMAN of California (for himself, Mr. ST GERMAIN, Mr. GONZALEZ, Mr. ANNUNZIO, Mr. MITCHELL, Mr. FAUNTROY, Mr. NEAL, Mr. LAFALCE, Mr. LUNDINE, Ms. OAKAR, Mr. VENTO, Mr. GARCIA, Mr. ROEMER, Mr. COOPER, Ms. KAPTUR, Mr. TORRES, Mr. MANTON, Mr. FUSTER, Mr. WORTLEY, Mr. MCKINNEY, Mr. ACKERMAN, Mr. BATES, Mrs. BOXER, Mr. BERMAN, Mr. BONIOR of Michigan, Mr. BRYANT, Mr. BROWN of California, Mrs. BURTON of California, Mrs. BYRON, Mr. CONTE, Mr. CONYERS, Mr. COELHO, Mr. DE LUGO, Mr. DYMALLY, Mr. DIXON, Mr. DOWNEY of New York, Mr. DURBIN, Mr. DWYER of New Jersey, Mrs. COLLINS, Mr. DELLUMS, Mr. EDWARDS of California, Mr. FOGLIETTA, Mr. FAZIO, Mr. FROST, Mr. GUARINI, Mr. HAWKINS, Mr. HAYES, Mr. HEFTEL of Hawaii, Mr. KOSTMAYER, Mr. LELAND, Mr. LEVINE of California, Mr. MARTINEZ, Mr. MACKAY, Mr. MARKEY, Mr. MILLER of California, Mr. MINETA, Mr. MOAKLEY, Mr. MOODY, Mr. MRAZEK, Mr. MURPHY, Mr. OWENS, Mr. PANETTA, Mr. PRICE, Mr. RANGEL, Mr. ROYBAL, Mr. SAVAGE, Mr. SAXTON, Mr. SCHEUER, Mr. SEIBERLING, Mr. STARK, Mr. STOKES, Mr. STUDDS, Mr. TOWNS, Mr. WAXMAN, Mr. WEISS, Mr. WHEAT, Mr. WISE, and Mr. YOUNG of Alaska):

H.R. 2282. A bill to provide for the uniform disclosure of the rates of interest which are payable on savings accounts; to the Committee on Banking, Finance and Urban Affairs.

By Mr. MOLLOHAN (for himself, Mr. APPLEGATE, and Mr. RAHALL):

H.R. 2283. A bill to designate United States Route 22 By-Pass in Weirton, WV, as part of the Interstate System under section 139(b) of title 23, United States Code; to the Committee on Public Works and Transportation.

By Mr. PEASE (for himself and Mr. FAUNTROY):

H.R. 2284. A bill to amend the Social Security Act to make health insurance widely available to individuals, based on income and assets, under a competitive system; jointly, to the Committees on Ways and Means and Energy and Commerce.

By Mr. PEPPER (for himself, Mrs. BURTON of California, Mr. STOKES, Mr. OWENS, Mr. TOWNS, Mr. MITCHELL, Mr. SOLARZ, Ms. OAKAR, Mr. COLEMAN of Texas, Mr. FORD of Tennessee, Mrs. COLLINS, Mr. FASCELL, Mr. DERRICK, and Mr. BIAGGI):

H.R. 2285. A bill to provide for an intra-HMO competition demonstration project; jointly, to the Committees on Ways and Means and Energy and Commerce.

By Mr. RODINO (by request):

H.R. 2286. A bill to amend the refugee assistance authorities of the Immigration and Nationality Act and for other purposes; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. ST GERMAIN:

H.R. 2287. A bill entitled: the "Preborn Children's Civil Rights Act of 1985"; jointly, to the Committees on Energy and Commerce, the Judiciary, Post Office and Civil Service, and Education and Labor.

By Mr. SILJANDER (for himself, Mr. WALKER, Mr. BURTON of Indiana, and Mr. DEWINE):

H.R. 2288. A bill to express the opposition of the United States to the apartheid policies of the Government of South Africa and to implement certain measures to encourage South Africa to change such policies; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

By Mr. SOLOMON:

H.R. 2289. A bill to amend title VII of the Social Security Act to provide for off-budget treatment of the Federal old-age and survivors insurance trust fund beginning with fiscal year 1987; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. WAXMAN (for himself and Mr. MADIGAN):

H.R. 2290. A bill to amend the orphan drug provisions of the Federal Food, Drug, and Cosmetic Act and related laws; to the Committee on Energy and Commerce.

H.R. 2291. A bill to amend the Public Health Service Act to revise and extend the programs of assistance for health maintenance organizations and primary health care centers; to the Committee on Energy and Commerce.

By Mr. WORTLEY:

H.R. 2292. A bill to amend the National Housing Act to authorize the Secretary of Housing and Urban Development to carry out a demonstration program of insurance of home equity conversion mortgages for elderly homeowners; to the Committee on Banking, Finance and Urban Affairs.

By Mr. WYDEN:

H.R. 2293. A bill to amend title XVIII of the Social Security Act with respect to the establishment of standards for long-term health care insurance; jointly, to the Committees on Ways and Means and Energy and Commerce.

By Mr. BENNETT:

H.J. Res. 268. Joint resolution to prevent foreign powers from colonizing or controlling countries and peoples in the Western Hemisphere; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

By Mr. CARPER:

H.J. Res. 269. Joint resolution proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States to provide for a single 6-year term of office for the President and the Vice President, to provide that no Member of the House of Representatives may serve for more than three 4-year terms, to provide that no Senator may serve for more than two terms, and for other purposes; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. GREEN:

H.J. Res. 270. Joint resolution urging the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics to allow Dr. Semyon Gluzman and his family to emigrate to Israel; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

By Mr. HORTON:

H.J. Res. 271. Joint resolution to designate August 18, 1985, as "National Flowers-by-Wire Day"; to the Committee on Post Office and Civil Service.

By Mr. HYDE:

H.J. Res. 272. Joint resolution expressing the sense of the Congress that a complete cessation of nuclear test explosions must be related to the ability of the United States to maintain credible deterrent forces and that any test ban agreement must be verifiable and must be made in the context of deep and verifiable arms reductions; jointly, to the Committee on Armed Services and Foreign Affairs.

By Mr. O'BRIEN:

H.J. Res. 273. Joint resolution to propose an amendment to the Constitution of the United States to provide for terms of 2 and 4 years for Members of the House of Representatives; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. SHUMWAY:

H.J. Res. 274. Joint resolution designating October 20, 1985, as "Leyte Landing Day"; to the Committee on Post Office and Civil Service.

By Mr. FUQUA:

H. Con. Res. 134. Concurrent resolution commending the Regents of the Smithsonian Institute for their decision to expand the National Air and Space Museum at Washington-Dulles International Airport as a repository for the space shuttle Enterprise and other significant aircraft and spacecraft of the national collection; to the Committee on House Administration.

By Mr. FRENZEL:

H. Res. 148. Resolution to declare vacant Indiana Eighth Congressional District; considered and not agreed to.

By Mr. MICHEL:

H. Res. 149. Resolution condemning the Marxist-Leninist regime in Nicaragua; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

By Mr. LOTT:

H. Res. 150. Resolution raising a question of privilege of the House; considered and agreed to.

By Mr. DAUB:

H. Res. 151. Resolution directing the House Committee on Rules to undertake an investigation concerning the matter of proxy voting; laid on the table.

MEMORIALS

Under clause 4 of rule XXII, memorials were presented and referred as follows:

94. By Mr. RUDD: Memorial of the Legislature of the State of Arizona, relative to official government relations with the Republic of China; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

95. Also, memorial of the senate of the State of Arizona, relative to the civil liberties of Orthodox Christians living in Turkey; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

96. Also, memorial of the Legislature of the State of Arizona, relative to postal service subsidies for the blind and handicapped; to the Committee on Post Office and Civil Service.

PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS

Under clause 1 of rule XXII,

Mr. DUNCAN introduced a bill (H.R. 2294) for the relief of John W. Ruth, Sr.; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

ADDITIONAL SPONSORS

Under clause 4 of rule XXII, sponsors were added to public bills and resolutions as follows:

H.R. 7: Mr. HAYES and Mr. SWIFT.

H.R. 8: Mr. BOEHLERT.

H.R. 26: Mr. ATKINS, Mr. HAYES, and Mr. MRAZEK.

H.R. 75: Mr. BADHAM, Mr. DANNEMEYER, and Mr. CHENEY.

H.R. 76: Mr. BADHAM, Mr. DELAY, and Mr. DANNEMEYER.

H.R. 97: Mr. DANNEMEYER.

H.R. 229: Mr. DWYER of New Jersey, Mr. SUNIA, and Mr. FORD of Tennessee.

H.R. 423: Mr. CLINGER, Mr. SMITH of New Jersey, Mr. LEVIN of Michigan, Mrs. BURTON of California, and Mr. KRAMER.

H.R. 442: Mr. MORRISON of Washington, Mr. MANTON, and Mr. BLAZ.

H.R. 502: Mr. CONYERS.

H.R. 532: Mr. GINGRICH, Mr. SIKORSKI, Mr. KOLTER, Mr. STANGELAND, and Ms. MIKULSKI.

H.R. 533: Mr. STANGELAND, Mr. KOLTER, and Mr. GINGRICH.

H.R. 602: Mr. BILIRAKIS and Mr. ARMEY.

H.R. 665: Mr. LANTOS.

H.R. 797: Mr. FROST, Mr. GEKAS, Mr. WHITEHURST, Mr. ANDREWS, Mr. FOGLIETTA, Mr. FAZIO, Mr. KOLTER, Ms. MIKULSKI, Mr. WORTLEY, Mr. DELLUMS, Mr. LUNGREN, Mr. MURPHY, Mr. MONSON, Mr. AUCOIN, Mrs. COLLINS, Mr. SHUMWAY, Mr. BARTON of Texas, Mr. LAFALCE, Mr. SAVAGE, Mr. ARMEY, Mr. DORNAN, and Mr. LEVIN of Michigan.

H.R. 816: Mr. PACKARD.

H.R. 864: Mr. MCCURDY, Mr. BUSTAMANTE, and Mr. PANETTA.

H.R. 1006: Mr. MOORHEAD, Mr. DWYER of New Jersey, Mr. BRYANT, Mr. TORRES, Ms. OAKAR, Mr. KASICH, Mr. SLAUGHTER, Mr. QUILLEN, Mr. LELAND, Mr. PACKARD, and Mr. SMITH of New Hampshire.

H.R. 1022: Mr. ROSE, Mr. PERKINS, Mr. BEVILL, Mr. CLAY, Mr. JONES of North Carolina, Mr. GORDON, Mr. ECKART of Ohio, Mr. DANIEL, Mr. SUNIA, Mr. FAZIO, Mrs. SCHNEIDER, Mr. WOLPE, Mr. SEIBERLING, Mr. FUQUA, Mr. NEAL, Mrs. LLOYD, Mr. WEISS, Mr. MRAZEK, Mr. MARTINEZ, Mr. KOLTER, Mr. HAMILTON, and Mr. HEFTEL of Hawaii.

H.R. 1100: Mr. BONKER, Mr. CLINGER, Mr. CALLAHAN, Mr. RICHARDSON, Mr. CHANDLER, Mr. BARNARD, Mr. WYDEN, Mr. MCKINNEY, Mr. DARDEN, Mr. MILLER of Washington, Mr. ROGERS, Mr. DUNCAN, Mr. SWIFT, Mr. SKEEN, and Mr. CHENEY.

H.R. 1108: Mr. YOUNG of Missouri.

H.R. 1140: Mr. IRELAND and Mr. GIBBONS.

H.R. 1188: Mr. BROWN of Colorado, Mr. CHAPPIE, Mr. FISH, Mr. GEKAS, Mr. MCKERNAN, Mr. SUNDQUIST, Mr. BARNARD, Mr. MCHUGH, Mr. MOORHEAD, Mr. DANIEL, Mr. DIXON, Mr. WATKINS, Mr. DAVIS, Mr. KOLTER, Mr. WOLF, Mr. SKELTON, Mr. JONES of Oklahoma, Mr. BLILEY, Mr. FUQUA, Mr. HERTEL of Michigan, Mr. BROOMFIELD, Mr. BRYANT, and Mr. LOEFFLER.

H.R. 1190: Mr. WALGREN, Mr. COELHO, Mr. MARLENEE, Mr. MCCAIN, and Mr. MCHUGH.

H.R. 1205: Mrs. LLOYD, Mrs. COLLINS, Mr. BARTON of Texas, Mr. BLILEY, Mr. SOLOMON, Mr. CONYERS, Mr. LEVIN of Michigan, and Mr. MCGRATH.

H.R. 1213: Mr. WALGREN, Mr. SMITH of New Jersey, Mrs. ROUKEMA, and Mr. FORD of Michigan.

H.R. 1217: Mr. ARCHER and Mr. VANDER JAGT.

H.R. 1263: Mr. MCCOLLUM, Mr. DEWINE, Mrs. BENTLEY, Mr. COMBEST, Mr. PACKARD, and Mr. BOULTER.

H.R. 1339: Mr. LIGHTFOOT.

H.R. 1392: Mr. FIELDS and Mr. PRICE.

H.R. 1345: Mr. DANNEMEYER.

H.R. 1348: Mr. KASTENMEIER, Mr. DELLUMS, Mr. HAYES, Mr. BERMAN, Mr. DYMALLY, Mr. YOUNG of Missouri, Mr. FAUNTROY, Mr. STUDDS, Mr. MILLER of California, Mr. JACOBS, Mr. FOGLIETTA, Mr. GARCIA, Mr. WEISS, Mr. LELAND, Mr. BEDELL, Mr. RANGEL, Mr. ACKERMAN, Mr. EVANS of Illinois, Mrs. BOXER, Mrs. COLLINS, Mr. EDWARDS of California, Mr. SAVAGE, Mr. STOKES, Mr. MRAZEK, and Mr. MINETA.

H.R. 1369: Mr. DONNELLY.

H.R. 1399: Mr. WOLPE, Mr. SENSENBRENNER, Mr. CARPER, Mr. MCCAIN, Mrs. LLOYD, Mr. ROSE, Mr. WYDEN, Mr. WEBER, and Mr. SUNIA.

H.R. 1400: Mr. BUSTAMANTE, Mr. CROCKETT, Mrs. BYRON, Mr. ORTIZ, Mr. STOKES, and Mr. HEFTEL of Hawaii.

H.R. 1481: Mr. COMBEST.

H.R. 1523: Mr. WIRTH, Mr. GUARINI, Mr. HAMILTON, Mr. RAHALL, Mr. FAZIO, Mr. DURBIN, Mr. HOWARD, Mr. COYNE, Mr. OBERSTAR, and Mr. MRAZEK.

H.R. 1534: Mr. SOLARZ.

H.R. 1569: Mr. LEHMAN of Florida, Mr. SEIBERLING, Mr. FAUNTROY, Mr. RAHALL, Mr. JEFFORDS, Mr. MINETA, Mrs. BURTON of California, Mr. LEVIN of Michigan, Mr. LELAND, Mr. MILLER of California, Mr. OWENS, Mr. FRANK, Mr. TOWNS, Mr. SABO, Mr. MORRISON of Connecticut, Mr. MARTINEZ, Ms. KAPTUR, Mr. BEDELL, Mr. WIRTH, Mr. RANGEL, Mr. MATSUI, Mr. DYMALLY, Mr. VENTO, Mr. FAZIO, Mr. COELHO, Mr. RUSSO, Mrs. BOXER, Mr. PANETTA, Mr. BONIOR of Michigan, Mr. KILDEE, Mr. EDWARDS of California, Mr. HOWARD, and Mr. FORD of Michigan.

H.R. 1650: Ms. KAPTUR, Mr. STOKES, Mr. ROYBAL, Mr. STUDDS, and Mr. JEFFORDS.

H.R. 1663: Mr. FRANK.

H.R. 1665: Mr. DASCHLE, Mr. OLIN, and Mr. MORRISON of Connecticut.

H.R. 1672: Mr. OWENS, Mr. RAHALL, Mr. HEFTEL of Hawaii, Ms. KAPTUR, Mr. KOLTER, Mr. SAVAGE, Mr. REGULA, Mr. TOWNS, Mr. MORRISON of Connecticut, and Mr. MITCHELL.

H.R. 1673: Mr. KOLTER, Ms. KAPTUR, Mr. OWENS, Mr. RAHALL, Mr. MORRISON of Connecticut, Mr. MITCHELL, Mr. REGULA, Mr. WORTLEY, Mr. VENTO, Mr. HAWKINS, Mrs. COLLINS, Mr. GEJDENSON, and Mr. MRAZEK.

H.R. 1679: Mr. OXLEY.

H.R. 1690: Mr. ROSE, Mr. MILLER of California, Mr. NOWAK, Mr. FUSTER, Mr. DELLUMS, Mr. DYMALLY, Mr. VENTO, Mr. BARNES, Mrs. COLLINS, Mr. DYSON, Mr. STOKES, Mr. BERMAN, Mr. FRANK, Mr. EVANS of Illinois, Mr. ANDREWS, Mr. RITTER, Mr. FAZIO, and Mr. ECKART of Ohio.

H.R. 1715: Mr. WHEAT, Mr. MITCHELL, Mr. SAVAGE, Mr. FORD of Tennessee, Mr. LELAND, and Mr. FAZIO.

H.R. 1720: Mr. SKEEN, Mr. PENNY, Mr. HEFTEL of Hawaii, and Mr. GEPHARDT.

H.R. 1722: Mr. RANGEL, Mr. FORD of Michigan, Mr. FOGLIETTA, and Mr. MORRISON of Connecticut.

H.R. 1730: Mr. JONES of North Carolina, Mr. BOUCHER, Mr. BARNARD, Mr. WHITTAKER, Mr. FISH, Mr. NIELSON of Utah, Mr. YOUNG of Missouri, Mr. DORGAN of North Dakota, Mr. MCKINNEY, and Mr. DOWDY of Mississippi.

H.R. 1739: Mr. ARMEY, Mr. YATRON, and Mr. MURPHY.

H.R. 1844: Mr. LELAND, Mr. SAVAGE, Mr. BONKER, Mr. GUNDERSON, Mr. FRANK, Mr. NOWAK, Mr. CLAY, Mr. SOLARZ, Mr. OBERSTAR, Mrs. COLLINS, Mrs. BOXER, Mr. CONYERS, Mr. TOWNS, Mr. BERMAN, Ms. KAPTUR, Mrs. BURTON of California, Mr. KOLTER, Mr. MITCHELL, Mr. MARTINEZ, Mr. OWENS, Mr. FORD of Tennessee, and Mr. RANGEL.

H.R. 1868: Mr. FRENZEL, Mr. STENHOLM, Mr. FISH, Mr. MORRISON of Connecticut, Mr. DONNELLY, Mr. WOLPE, Mrs. SCHNEIDER, Mr. FLORIO, Mr. BUSTAMANTE, Mr. TORRES, Mr. FORD of Tennessee, Ms. OAKAR, and Mr. SOLOMON.

H.R. 1905: Mr. PERKINS, Mr. MILLER of Ohio, Mr. OBERSTAR, and Mr. KOLTER.

H.R. 1906: Mr. FUSTER, Mr. SAVAGE, Mr. SMITH of New Jersey, Mr. HAYES, Mrs. COLLINS, Mr. MCGRATH, Mr. LEHMAN of Florida, Mr. LEVIN of Michigan, Mr. WEISS, Mr. KOLTER, Mr. STARK, Mr. FOGLIETTA, Mr. YOUNG of Missouri, Mr. BONIOR of Michigan, Mr. HOWARD, Mr. RANGEL, Mr. MITCHELL, Mr. MRAZEK, Mr. WOLPE, Mr. MARTINEZ, Mr. CHAPPIE, Mr. GILMAN, Mrs. BOXER, Mr. MURPHY, Mrs. BURTON of California, Mr.

CHANDLER, Mr. DUNCAN, Mr. MCKERNAN, Mr. SKELTON, and Mrs. JOHNSON.

H.R. 1910: Mr. APPLEGATE, Mrs. BOXER, Ms. KAPTUR, Mr. EDWARDS of California, Mr. HAYES, Mr. MOODY, and Mr. BERMAN.

H.R. 1917: Mr. BEVILL, Mr. FUQUA, Mr. DANIEL, Mr. QUILLEN, Mr. LENT, Mr. ROE, Mr. LELAND, Mr. OWENS, Mr. MONTGOMERY, Mr. WALGREN, Mrs. COLLINS, Mr. COELHO, Mr. PERKINS, Mrs. LLOYD, Mr. SWINDALL, Mr. RANGEL, Mr. DASCHLE, Mr. EVANS of Illinois, and Mr. HOWARD.

H.R. 1940: Mr. SPRATT, Mr. SYNAR, Mr. DWYER of New Jersey, Mr. SCHUMER, Mr. MURPHY, Mr. BUSTAMANTE, Mr. FASCELL, Mr. MATSUI, Mr. MITCHELL, and Mr. BEDELL.

H.R. 1960: Mr. CROCKETT, Mr. STOKES, Mr. MRAZEK, Mr. FISH, Mr. MITCHELL, Mr. GLICKMAN, and Mr. KILDEE.

H.R. 1965: Mr. BROWN of Colorado, Mr. CONYERS, Mr. HILLIS, Mr. MURPHY, Mr. QUILLEN, Mr. SCHAEFER, Mr. SUNDQUIST, Mr. VANDER JAGT, Mr. WHITEHURST, and Mr. WYLIE.

H.R. 2024: Mr. MARTINEZ and Mr. RANGEL.

H.R. 2034: Mr. ROE, Mr. FAUNTROY, Mr. LEVINE of California, Mrs. COLLINS, and Mr. KOLTER.

H.R. 2098: Mr. NICHOLS and Mr. PARRIS.

H.R. 2108: Mr. ROWLAND of Georgia.

H.R. 2137: Mr. TOWNS, Mr. FAUNTROY, and Mr. KOLTER.

H.R. 2247: Mr. DOWNEY of New York, Mr. DIXON, and Mr. MURPHY.

H.R. 2263: Mr. DYMALLY, Mr. ROE, Mr. KLECZKA, Mr. WILSON, Mr. FRANK, Mr. LAGOMARSINO, Mr. MARTINEZ, Mr. FAZIO, Mr. MRAZEK, Mrs. COLLINS, Mr. SUNIA, Mr. MCGRATH, Ms. KAPTUR, and Mr. LEVINE of California.

H.R. 2266: Mr. FLORIO and Ms. MIKULSKI.

H.J. Res. 1: Mr. SCHEUER.

H.J. Res. 27: Mr. HAMMERSCHMIDT, Mr. LEWIS of California, Mr. MCCOLLUM, Mr. GEKAS, Ms. SNOWE, Mr. DICKINSON, Mr. LEACH of Iowa, Mr. BROOMFIELD, Mr. LATTA, and Mr. WYLIE.

H.J. Res. 46: Mr. TALLON, Mr. PASHAYAN, Mr. UDALL, Mr. KANJORSKI, Mr. OBERSTAR, Mr. ROBINSON, Mr. ACKERMAN, Mr. RICHARDSON, Mr. SABO, Mr. STOKES, Mr. MCHUGH, Mr. KEMP, Mr. GIBBONS, Mr. STANGELAND, Mr. DIOGUARDI, Mr. HAMILTON, Mr. CRAIG, Mr. KASTENMEIER, Mr. JACOBS, Mr. MARTIN of New York, Mr. LEWIS of Florida, Mr. SCHAEFER, Mr. BRUCE, Mr. SIKORSKI, Mr. TRAFICANT, Mr. GILMAN, Mr. GRAY of Pennsylvania, Mr. STAGGERS, Mr. ROGERS, Mr. DENNY SMITH, Mr. YATRON, Mr. REGULA, Mr. STALLINGS, Mr. DORGAN of North Dakota, Mr. SHAW, Mr. DERRICK, Mr. COURTER, Mr. SOLOMON, Mrs. MEYERS of Kansas, Mr. BOUCHER, Mr. WIRTH, Mr. HENRY, Mr. SCHUMER, Mr. STRATTON, Mr. LUKEN, Mr. MRAZEK, Mr. PANETTA, Mrs. JOHNSON, Mr. MORRISON of Washington, and Mr. MARKEY.

H.J. Res. 105: Mr. BEREUTER, Mr. GEKAS, Mrs. JOHNSON, Mr. NELSON of Florida, Mr. CHANDLER, Mr. FUQUA, and Mr. BOULTER.

H.J. Res. 112: Mrs. BURTON of California, Mr. DERRICK, Mr. DORGAN of North Dakota, Mr. GEPHARDT, Mr. HUGHES, Mr. KOSTMAYER, Mr. LOWERY of California, Mr. SCHAEFER, and Mr. WYDEN.

H.J. Res. 151: Mr. GEKAS, Mr. MINETA, and Mr. LELAND.

H.J. Res. 154: Mr. BOEHLERT, Mr. LIGHTFOOT, Mr. RANGEL, Mr. HOWARD, Mr. SMITH of New Jersey, Mr. ROEMER, Mr. SAXTON, Mr. SOLOMON, Mr. SCHEUER, Mr. SKELTON, Mr. SUNDQUIST, Mr. WALGREN, Mr. SNYDER, Mr. OBERSTAR, Mr. LEVINE of California, Mr. MACK, Mr. ORTIZ, Mr. YATRON, Mr. DIXON, Mr. WILSON, Mr. HEFTEL of Hawaii, Mr. ROGERS, Mr. LEVIN of Michigan, Mr. SHELBY, and Mr. SPENCE.

H.J. Res. 158: Mr. ACKERMAN, Mr. ADDABBO, Mr. AKAKA, Mr. ANDERSON, Mr. ANDREWS, Mr. ANTHONY, Mr. ARCHER, Mr. BARNARD, Mr. BARNES, Mr. BATEMAN, Mr. BEDELL, Mr. BERMAN, Mr. BEVILL, Mr. BIAGGI, Mr. BILIRAKIS, Mr. BLAZ, Mr. BLILEY, Mr. BOLAND, Mr. BONER of Tennessee, Mr. BONIOR of Michigan, Mr. BORSKI, Mr. BOSCO, Mr. BOUCHER, Mrs. BOXER, Mr. BROOKS, Mr. BROWN of California, Mrs. BURTON of California, Mr. BUSTAMANTE, Mr. CARNEY, Mr. CARPER, Mr. CARR, Mr. CHANDLER, Mr. CHAPPELL, Mr. CHAPPIE, Mr. CLAY, Mr. COELHO, Mr. CONTE, Mr. CONYERS, Mr. COOPER, Mr. COUGHLIN, Mr. COURTER, Mr. COYNE, Mr. CROCKETT, Mr. DANIEL, Mr. DARDEN, Mr. DASCHLE, Mr. DAUB, Mr. DE LA GARZA, Mr. DELLUMS, Mr. DE LUGO, Mr. DICKINSON, Mr. DINGELL, Mr. DIXON, Mr. DONNELLY, Mr. DOWDY of Mississippi, Mr. DURBIN, Mr. DWYER of New Jersey, Mr. DYMALLY, Mr. EARLY, Mr. EDGAR, Mr. EMERSON, Mr. ERDREICH, Mr. EVANS of Iowa, Mr. FASCELL, Mr. FAUNTROY, Mr. FAZIO, Mr. FEIGHAN, Mr. FISH, Mr. FLIPPO, Mr. FLORIO, Mr. FOGLIETTA, Mr. FRANK, Mr. FRENZEL, Mr. FROST, Mr. FUSTER, Mr. GALLO, Mr. GEJDENSON, Mr. GEKAS, Mr. GEPHARDT, Mr. GONZALEZ, Mr. GORDON, Mr. GRAY of Pennsylvania, Mr. GREEN, Mr. GROTBERG, Mr. GUARINI, Mr. GUNDERSON, Mr. SAM B. HALL, JR., Mr. HALL of Ohio, Mr. HAMMERSCHMIDT, Mr. HANSEN, Mr. HATCHER, Mr. HAWKINS, Mr. HAYES, Mr. HEFNER, Mr. HEFTEL of Hawaii, Mr. HENRY, Mr. HERTEL of Michigan, Mrs. HOLT, Mr. HORTON, Mr. HOWARD, Mr. HOYER, Mr. HUGHES, Mr. HUTTO, Mr. IRELAND, Mr. JACOBS, Mr. JEFFORDS, Mrs. JOHNSON, Mr. JONES of North Carolina, Ms. KAPTUR, Mr. KASICH, Mr. KEMP, Mrs. KENNELLY, Mr. KILDEE, Mr. KOLTER, Mr. KOSTMAYER, Mr. LAFALCE, Mr. LAGOMARSINO, Mr. LANTOS, Mr. LATTA, Mr. LEACH of Iowa, Mr. LEHMAN of Florida, Mr. LELAND, Mr. LENT, Mr. LEVIN of Michigan, Mr. LEVINE of California, Mr. LIGHTFOOT, Mrs. LLOYD, Mr. LOWRY of Washington, Mr. LUJAN, Mr. LUKEN, Mr. LUNDINE, Mr. LUNGREN, Mr. MCCOLLUM, Mr. MCDADE, Mr. MCGRATH, Mr. MCMILLIAN, Mr. MACK, Mr. MADIGAN, Mr. MANTON, Mr. MARKEY, Mr. MARTIN of New York, Mr. MARTINEZ, Ms. MIKULSKI, Mr. MILLER of Washington, Mr. MINETA, Mr. MITCHELL, Mr. MOAKLEY, Mr. MOLLOHAN, Mr. MONTGOMERY, Mr. MOODY, Mr. MRAZEK, Mr. MURPHY, Mr. MURTHA, Mr. NEAL, Mr. NELSON of Florida, Mr. NICHOLS, Ms. OAKAR, Mr. OBERSTAR, Mr. OBEY, Mr. ORTIZ, Mr. OWENS, Mr. PEPPER, Mr. PERKINS, Mr. PRICE, Mr. PURSELL, Mr. QUILLEN, Mr. RAHALL, Mr. RANGEL, Mr. REGULA, Mr. REID, Mr. RICHARDSON, Mr. RINALDO, Mr. ROBERTS, Mr. RALPH M. HALL, Mr. RODINO, Mr. ROE, Mr. ROEMER, Mr. ROSE, Mr. ROWLAND of Georgia, Mr. ROYBAL, Mr. SABO, Mr. SAVAGE, Mr. SCHAEFER, Mr. SHARP, Mr. SHAW, Mr. SIKORSKI, Mr. SKELTON, Mr. SMITH of Florida, Mr. SMITH of Iowa, Mr. SNYDER, Mr. SOLARZ, Mr. STOKES, Mr. STRATTON, Mr. SUNIA, Mr. SWIFT, Mr. SYNAR, Mr. TALLON, Mr. TAUKE, Mr. TAUZIN, Mr. THOMAS of Georgia, Mr. TORRES, Mr. TORRICELLI, Mr. TOWNS, Mr. TRAXLER, Mr. VALENTINE, Mr. VENTO, Mr. VOLKMER, Mr. WALGREN, Mr. WAXMAN, Mr. WEISS, Mr. WHEAT, Mr. WHITTAKER, Mr. WHITTEN, Mr. WIRTH, Mr. WOLF, Mr. WOLPE, Mr. WORTLEY, Mr. WRIGHT, Mr. WYDEN, Mr. YATRON, Mr. YOUNG of Alaska, and Mr. YOUNG of Missouri.

H.J. Res. 161: Mr. LANTOS, Mr. THOMAS of California, Mr. LEHMAN of Florida, Mr. DIOGUARDI, Mr. SHUMWAY, Mr. SHELBY, Mr. SAM B. HALL, JR., Mr. LIVINGSTON, Mr. CONYERS, Mrs. BOGGS, Mr. AKAKA, Mr. MCKINNEY, Mr. RUDD, Mr. COOPER, Mr. HATCHER, Mr. BADHAM, Mr. LOWERY of California, Mr. UDALL, Mr. FORD of Michigan, Mr. SKELTON, Mr. COELHO, Mr. MCGRATH, Mr. TRAXLER, and Mr. WATKINS.

H.J. Res. 182: Mr. DAVIS, Mr. YOUNG of Alaska, Mr. DICKINSON, Mr. HOPKINS, Mr. KILDEE, Mrs. LLOYD, Mr. MAVROULES, Mr. RAY, Mr. RUDD, Mr. SKELTON, Mr. STRATTON, Mr. EMERSON, Mr. HUBBARD, Mr. SPENCE, Mr. LEATH of Texas, Mr. SPRATT, Mr. MADIGAN, Mr. EVANS of Iowa, Mr. MARTIN of New York, Mr. TAUKE, Mr. KRAMER, and Ms. OAKAR.

H.J. Res. 193: Mr. WAXMAN, Mr. SAXTON, Mr. HYDE, Mr. BURTON of Indiana, Mr. CARNEY, Mr. CARPER, Mr. COELHO, Mr. BORSKI, Mr. FAUNTROY, Mr. REID, Mr. SUNIA, Mr. CONYERS, Mr. SOLARZ, Mr. COURTER, Mr. ARMEY, Mr. HOWARD, Mr. GREEN, Mr. TRAXLER, Mr. HAMMERSCHMIDT, Mr. FLORIO, Mr. DYSON, Mr. STANGELAND, Mrs. JOHNSON, Mr. BOEHLERT, Mr. DYMALLY, Mr. FOGLIETTA, Mr. PRICE, Mr. HANSEN, Mr. HORTON, Mrs. MARTIN of Illinois, Mr. HUTTO, Ms. KAPTUR, Mr. KEMP, Mr. KINDNESS, Mr. LATTA, Mr. LEWIS of California, Mr. MCDADE, Mr. MCHUGH, Mr. SMITH of New Jersey, Mr. FROST, Mrs. HOLT, Mr. MACK, Mr. MOODY, Mr. O'BRIEN, Mr. COATS, Mr. SUNDQUIST, Mr. PACKARD, Mr. BARNES, Mr. PEPPER, Mr. ROEMER, Mr. TAUKE, Mr. THOMAS of Georgia, Mr. VALENTINE, Mr. DARDEN, Mr. WORTLEY, Mr. WYLIE, Mr. JONES of North Carolina, Mr. LUNDINE, Mr. WOLPE, and Mr. VANDER JAGT.

H.J. Res. 204: Mr. ROE, Mr. MURPHY, Mrs. BOXER, Mr. SUNIA, and Mr. SAVAGE.

H.J. Res. 245: Mr. KILDEE.

H.J. Res. 258: Mr. BEVILL, Mr. CONTE, Mr. DE LA GARZA, Mr. LOWERY of California, Mr. RODINO, and Mr. CROCKETT.

H. Con. Res. 41: Mr. SHARP, Mr. MCEWEN, Ms. FIEDLER, Mr. SIKORSKI, Mr. YOUNG of Florida, Mr. SOLOMON, Mr. LOTT, and Mr. FROST.

H. Con. Res. 69: Mr. GREGG and Mr. MCCAIN.

H. Con. Res. 93: Mr. FROST, Mr. PRICE, Mrs. COLLINS, Mr. STOKES, Mr. LEVIN of Michigan, and Mr. MARTINEZ.

H. Con. Res. 99: Mr. CARR, Mr. BUSTAMANTE, and Mr. LUNGREN.

H. Con. Res. 117: Mr. SENSENBRENNER, Mr. RUDD, Mr. RINALDO, Mr. SMITH of Florida, Mr. WEBER, and Mr. HENDON.

H. Con. Res. 124: Mrs. BOXER, Mr. SAVAGE, Mr. FROST, Mr. BARNES, and Mr. LEVINE of California.

H. Con. Res. 125: Mr. ROE, Mr. BROWN of California, Mr. HAWKINS, and Mr. MCGRATH.

H. Res. 31: Mrs. BURTON of California, Mr. ROSE, Mr. MANTON, Mr. RANGEL, Mr. FUSTER, Mr. FOGLIETTA, Mr. FAUNTROY, Mr. COLEMAN of Texas, Mr. VENTO, Mr. CLAY, Mr. FORD of Michigan, Mr. KOLTER, Mr. LEHMAN of Florida, Mr. TORRES, Mr. YOUNG of Missouri, Mr. SAVAGE, and Mrs. VUCANOVICH.

H. Res. 122: Mr. EVANS of Illinois, Mr. MORRISON of Connecticut, Mr. YATRON, and Mr. BONIOR of Michigan.

H. Res. 130: Mr. WHEAT, Mr. DELLUMS, Mr. STOKES, Mr. MCMILLAN, Mr. YOUNG of Missouri, Mr. ROE, Mr. SAXTON, Mr. RAHALL, Mr. EVANS of Illinois, Mr. KASTENMEIER, Mr. RANGEL, Ms. KAPTUR, Mr. JACOBS, Mrs. COLLINS, Mr. BONIOR of Michigan, Mr. LAFALCE, Mr. HAYES, Mr. FOGLIETTA, Mr. MITCHELL, Mr. GARCIA, and Mr. OWENS.

H. Res. 132: Mr. GALLO, Mr. KINDNESS, Mr. FRANK, Mr. WHITEHURST, Mr. BRYANT, Mr. FISH, Mr. BEDELL, Mr. HEFTEL of Hawaii, Mr.

RUDD, Mr. BUSTAMANTE, Mr. DREIER of California, Mr. SMITH of Florida, Mr. LOWERY of California, Mr. APPLEGATE, Mr. BARTON of Texas, Mr. DAUB, Mr. WEBER, and Mr. KOLBE.

H. Res. 135: Mr. MITCHELL and Mr. MOLLOHAN.

PETITIONS, ETC.

Under clause 1 of rule XXII, petitons and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk and referred as follows:

90. By the SPEAKER: Petition of the city council, San Angelo, TX, relative to Federal funding for the Emergency Food Assistance Program; to the Committee on Agriculture.

91. Also, petition of First Allied Corp., Rochester, NY, relative to the corporation's bid for Conrail; to the Committee on Energy and Commerce.

92. Also, petition of the city council, Commerce, CA, relative to the administration's proposed budget cuts in State and local assistance programs in fiscal year 1986; to the Committee on Government Operations.

AMENDMENTS

Under clause 6 of rule XXII, proposed amendments were submitted as follows:

H.R. 1555

By Mr. DYMALLY:

—Page 70, line 13, strike out "and"; line 24, strike out the period and insert in lieu thereof "; and"; and after line 24, insert the following:

(9) it is also in the interest of the United States, as well as peaceful cooperation in the Western Hemisphere, that particular attention be given to the students of the Caribbean region.

Page 71, line 6, after "developing countries" insert "(including countries of the Caribbean region)".

By Mr. GEJDENSON:

—Page 30, line 17, strike out "$3,900,400,000" both places it appears and insert in lieu thereof "$3,895,400,000".

Page 36, strike out lines 15 through 23 and insert in lieu thereof the following new section:

SEC. 206. HUMANITARIAN ASSISTANCE FOR THE NONCOMMUNIST CAMBODIAN PEOPLE.

(a) AUTHORIZATION.—The President may make available funds authorized to be appropriated to carry out the provisions of chapter 1 of part I and chapter 4 of part II of the Foreign Assistance Act of 1961 for the provision of food, medicine, or other humanitarian assistance to the noncommunist Cambodian people, notwithstanding any other provision of law.

(b) EFFECTIVE DATE.—This section shall take effect on the date of enactment of this Act and shall remain in effect until October 1, 1987.

H.R. 2068

By Mr. LAGOMARSINO:

—Page 33, after line 2, add the following new section:

SEC. 206. DISTRIBUTION WITHIN THE UNITED STATES TWO USIA FILMS RELATING TO AFGHANISTAN.

Notwithstanding the second sentence of section 501 of the United States Information and Education Exchange Act of 1948 (22 U.S.C. 1461)—

(1) the Director of the United States Information Agency shall make available to the Archivist of the United States a master copy of the films entitled "Afghanistan 1982: the Struggle for Freedom Continues" and "We Are Afghanistan"; and

(2) upon evidence that necessary United States rights and licenses have been secured and paid for by the person seeking domestic release of such a film, the Archivist shall reimburse the Director for any expenses of the Agency in making the master copy of such film available, shall deposit such film in the National Archives of the United States, and shall make copies of such film available for purchase and public viewing within the United States.

Any reimbursement to the Director pursuant to this section shall be credited to the applicable appropriation of the United States Information Agency.

SENATE—Tuesday, April 30, 1985

(Legislative day of Monday, April 15, 1985)

The Senate met at 9 a.m., on the expiration of the recess, and was called to order by the President pro tempore [Mr. THURMOND].

PRAYER

The Chaplain, the Reverend Richard C. Halverson, D.D., offered the following prayer:

Let us pray.

* * * I show unto you a more excellent way. Though I speak with the tongues of men and angels and have not love, I am as sounding brass, or a clanging cymbal.—I Corinthians 12:31, 13:1.

God who is Love, teach us to love. Forgive us when we downgrade love as weak or sentimental or irrelevant. You have said that love fulfills all the law. You have commanded us to love our enemies and those who "despitefully use us." You have told us that love outlasts everything. Teach us to love. Government cannot love, but people in government can and ought. Teach us to love. In times of stress when we grow impatient with one another and emotions flare, help us to love one another and to love those whom we serve. Under pressure, dear Lord, give us cool heads and warm hearts. Teach us to love. In His name Who is Incarnate Love. Amen.

RECOGNITION OF THE ACTING MAJORITY LEADER

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The distinguished acting majority leader is recognized.

A GRAND SLAM

Mr. SIMPSON. Mr. President, again our Chaplain strokes a grand slam home run with his prayer this morning on the issue of love, from Corinthians, which is really one of the most extraordinary parts of that remarkable text. I always have gravitated toward it, but it is difficult to think of love when we scrap as we do on issues in this Chamber. Nevertheless, without it we would find ourselves slipping into anarchy and discord and that has never happened in this country because of comity and caring and love of our fellow man. So it is a tough message. We do not hear it sometimes and it would be well for us to heed it as we head into what will be a very spirited few days—and exhausting ones, too. So, again, we thank him for his prayer—one so very timely and very much appreciated.

SCHEDULE

Mr. SIMPSON. Mr. President, today we have recognition of the two leaders under the standing order for 10 minutes each, of course, and special orders not to exceed 15 minutes each for Senator SYMMS, Senator COCHRAN, Senator PROXMIRE, and Senator BAUCUS, and then, if time permits, routine morning business not to extend beyond 10 a.m. with statements limited therein to 5 minutes each.

Following morning business, the Senate will resume Senate Concurrent Resolution 32, the budget resolution. The Senate will stand in recess between 12 noon and 2 p.m. today for the party caucuses. When the Senate does reconvene at 2 p.m., the Senate will resume consideration of Senate Concurrent Resolution 32, the budget resolution and all that that entails. Rollcall votes can be expected during the session today.

RESERVATION OF LEADERSHIP TIME

Mr. SIMPSON. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to reserve the remainder of the time for the minority and majority sides of the aisle.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. RUDMAN). Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. SIMPSON. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

RECOGNITION OF SENATOR COCHRAN

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that I be permitted to proceed at this time under the special order that was provided for me by unanimous consent.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Under the previous order, the Senator from Mississippi is recognized.

SENATOR COCHRAN REPORTS ON CONGRESSIONAL DELEGATION TO NATO COUNTRIES

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. President, it was a pleasure to be a member of the delegation to Europe led by our majority leader. I was glad we had a chance to express our appreciation, in behalf of the U.S. Senate, for the unity and support within the NATO alliance for the arms reduction efforts of the U.S. Government and the defense policies which have led to the negotiations in Geneva.

I am convinced that without solid support in Europe, the negotiations that are now underway would not be taking place, and the chances for reaching an agreement with the Soviet Union would not be nearly as good as they are.

At the center of these policies is the research that has been authorized and is being conducted into the possibilities for defending against nuclear attack. Much interest was expressed during our meetings with European leaders about the work being done in this area. I detected a firm belief among those with whom we talked that the strategic defense initiative was largely responsible for causing the Soviet Union to participate in the negotiations.

It was also apparent to me that the Europeans do not want anyone to be under the illusion that SDI and the research effort it includes will eliminate in the near future the need for the deterrence that only a credible nuclear capability provides. This sentiment was expressed to us in one way or the other, but always with strong conviction, by every government.

Another impression I have from the visit is the hope in Europe for friendly resolution of differences that exist in the trade area. We are very important to each other economically. That is fully realized in Europe.

As a prelude to the economic summit in Bonn which begins today, I think the meetings we had were very useful in focusing attention on American concerns over agricultural trade subsidies and the deteriorating trade balance of the United States. Our friends in Europe go to the summit with a much keener sense of the economically unhealthy situation on many American farms and the pressure that is building to take more aggressive action to gain a bigger share of world markets for agricultural products of the United States.

Europe does not want to engage in a trade war with us. We do not want that, either. Much effort will be needed to bring about a relationship based on fairness and mutual respect for the economic interests on both sides of the Atlantic.

In connection with the trade problems, Mr. President, the circumstances we face today with the imbalance is very troublesome and I am sure will occupy a place that is high on the agenda of the topics to be discussed among the Western leaders in Bonn. These are the circumstances as they apply to our agricultural trade.

Just a few months ago, it was being projected by the Department of Agriculture that we would sell in overseas markets this year some $36.5 billion worth of U.S.-produced agricultural commodities. Last month, however, that projection was changed to $35.5 billion, and now it is being projected by the Department of Agriculture that U.S. trade in agricultural commodities will amount to only $34.5 billion this year.

It is easy to see that in a very short period of time, our expectations with respect to what we will be able to sell in overseas markets, including the European market, have been reduced dramatically. Some are suggesting that this is a symptom of the total illness that is affecting U.S. trade, because agriculture historically has been the strongest part of U.S. trade capability.

What are we to do about it? I hope Senators will review legislation that I introduced a few weeks ago that would include a provision in the new farm bill that has to be written this year, called a marketing loan.

In essence, this would permit the Government to advance a nonrecourse loan to farmers, similar to the loan that is permitted under current farm policies. But instead of just forfeiting that loan at the end of the harvest season, the farmer, even though it is a nonrecourse loan, could redeem that loan at either the loan rate provided in the law or the market price, whichever is lower.

What this will permit, or, rather, what it will force, is the sale in international markets of U.S.-produced agricultural commodities. No longer will foreign competitors be able to peg their prices just below the U.S. loan rate and expect an automatic advantage in competition with us in international markets. We are losing market share, and this is damaging—some may say even destroying—the ability of U.S. farmers to compete overseas.

Mr. President, I have compiled a list of questions that I have been asked by persons who have looked at this proposal and who are interested in it, with answers to these questions, in the hope that this will help explain what this marketing loan is, what it seeks to do, how it will help improve our competitive position in agricultural trade, how much it could cost the U.S. Government, so that other Senators can be better advised about this proposal.

Mr. President, at this point I ask unanimous consent that a list of questions and answers concerning the market loan proposal be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the list was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS

1. What is a "marketing loan"?

It is the name used to describe a new kind of CCC loan which the farmer would be allowed to repay based on the original value or market price, whichever is less. It is different from the current system of loans, which must be either repaid in full or the commodity is forfeited to the government.

2. How would it work?

As with the current system, these loans would be offered to farmers at harvest with the crop as collateral. Interest would accrue on the loan, and the farmer could repay the loan at any time before or at loan maturity (9–11 months).

3. How would it be administered?

There are several options. The simplest might be to have ASCS make non-recourse, marketing loans available to farmers at harvest and then have USDA determine the repayment level based on market prices each week. Price data from the Agricultural Marketing Service and Statistical Reporting Service could be used to determine repayment. During the first month after the loan is taken out, the producer could be required to repay the full face value of the loan in order to encourage orderly marketing. Interest would be charged, but could be reduced as needed to allow repayment and avoid government takeover of commodities.

4. How much would this program cost?

There would be savings to the taxpayer, rather than costs, compared to current programs.

5. Why would it be more cost effective than the current programs?

Current programs lead to government takeover of surplus stocks which are costly to store and difficult to dispose. The cost to the taxpayer of acquiring and storing these stocks is greater than simply discounting the amount of loan repayment. Thus, the marketing loan avoids costly government takeovers.

In fact, by encouraging loan repayment even at a discounted level, USDA receives working capital which can immediately be reinvested or used to reduce the Federal deficit.

Beyond that, the marketing loan offers farmers an additional incentive to participate in acreage reduction programs, which makes the programs more cost-effective.

6. How would the safety net for farmers be maintained under this program?

Farmers would receive the protection of the initial value of the loan, plus whatever target price is in place. If market prices go down, farmers would still have the assurance of the loan value which provides a certain minimum safety net to provide needed cash flow.

7. If this is in addition to target prices, is the marketing loan discount a kind of "double-dip" for farmers?

No, not any more than the current program which provides the farmer both deficiency payments and unlimited forfeitures of CCC loans. In fact, under the marketing loan the government actually receives money back from farmers instead of receiving commodities which are difficult to dispose of and costly to store.

8. Would the payment limitation apply to the discounted loan?

No, unless Congress specifies that it would in the new farm bill. The payment limitation has never been applied to loan proceeds. If it were, that would certainly limit the effectiveness of the loan as a marketing tool.

9. What about farmer-owned reserves, set-asides, and so forth?

These current program elements could be retained and used in various combinations. However, if the U.S. is going to cut production through set-asides or acreage reduction programs, then the marketing loan is especially needed.

10. Why?

Currently when the U.S. cuts production of a crop, other exporting countries tend to expand their acreage of the same crop, knowing that prices for those commodities will stay up because of U.S. price supports. However, with the marketing loan the U.S. farmer is protected but prices are allowed to move downward, which removes the price umbrella from foreign competitors and causes them to assume market risks.

11. What are the choices a farmer has with the marketing loan?

Basically, three. Here are some examples:

(1) Settle and sell at settlement price

Under this situation the farmer would get a loan of $4.00 per unit and settle with USDA at $3.70. If he immediately sold at $3.70, he would be guaranteed the $4.00:

Loan	$4.00
Pay back	3.70
Gain at settlement	+.30
Sale price of the commodity	+3.70
Realized price	4.00

(2) Settle and hold with price going up to $3.90

Under this situation the farmer would get a loan of $4.00 and settle at $3.70 per unit. If he holds and the price goes to $3.90, the following is the realized price:

Loan	$4.00
Pay back	3.70
Gain at settlement	+.30
Sale of the commodity	+3.90
Realized price	4.20

(3) Settle and hold with price going down to $3.50

Under this situation the farmer would get a loan of $4.00 and settle at $3.70 per unit. If he holds and the price goes down to $3.50, the following would be the realized price:

Loan	$4.00
Pay back	3.70
Gain at settlement	+.30
Sale of the commodity	+3.50
Realized price	3.80

These examples illustrate that under the program outlined above a farmer would be assured a support level but the option is still available for him to consider a marketing strategy. In other words, he can make money above the loan with good marketing. Of course, poor marketing could result in a realized price below the loan. As a last resort, however, a farmer can simply forfeit the non-recourse loan. If this option is chosen, the farmer's realized price is the loan rate.

12. Is this an export subsidy that will get us in trouble with GATT?

No, this is no more an export subsidy than the current target price and loan system. Products would be priced at the same level for domestic and export use, unlike those countries which do subsidize exports. However, it will allow us to have competitive prices which should allow us to export.

13. Does the marketing loan idea have support from anyone else?

Yes—and it is picking up support all the time. The idea has been endorsed in various forms by the National Association of Wheat Growers, National Corn Growers Association, some rice interests, the National Farmers Organization, and at least one State Farm Bureau.

14. Some people think the proposal is a potential budget buster. Can budget exposure be limited?

Yes. A limit can be established on the amount the Secretary can discount loans. This would create, however, a new floor for world prices and limit the effectiveness of the effort to make U.S. products competitive in world markets. Another option is to limit participation in the program, and a number of different ways to do this are being considered.

Mr. President, I yield the floor and suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

Mr. SYMMS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

RECOGNITION OF SENATOR SYMMS

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Idaho is recognized under the previous order.

THE 10TH ANNIVERSARY OF THE FALL OF SAIGON

Mr. SYMMS. Mr. President, 1985 is a year of great anniversaries. Forty years ago, in May, the United States and our allies destroyed Nazi Germany and rescued the people of Europe from Hitler's savage occupation. Forty years ago, in August, the United States and our allies crushed the military empire of Japan and liberated the people of Asia. These anniversaries are cause for celebration.

But 1985 is also a year of remorse. Ten years ago, today, the United States watched helplessly as Saigon fell and North Vietnam defeated and subjugated the people of Indochina.

Regrettably, the 40th anniversary celebration of V-E Day [victory in Europe] and V-J Day [victory over Japan] is tarnished by the 10th anniversary of D-V [defeat in Vietnam].

It is important for the American people, and vital for us in Congress, to understand the reason for this tragedy.

Ten years ago, as a Member of the House of Representatives, I was one of the last U.S. Congressmen in South Vietnam and Cambodia. I saw the determination of those brave people to fight for their freedom—and their very lives—right up until the end. I saw also the hopelessness of their task.

The question which plagues America on this 10th anniversary of the fall of Saigon is: "How did we lose; why did we fail?" Some explanations for America's defeat are shamefully wrong.

For example, in discussing the end of the Vietnam war, the narrator of the recently produced PBS series, "Vietnam: A Television History" declares: The Americans "counted nearly 60,000 dead and more than 300,000 wounded. It was America's first defeat." But, like most of the national media, PBS does not reveal the real reason for America's first defeat. We are led to believe that North Vietnam's victory was inevitable; that America's and South Vietnam's cause was doomed.

But, North Vietnam's victory was not preordained. The reason for America's loss in Vietnam is not found in the nobility of the Communist cause or the superiority of the Communist soldier, because, Mr. President, we did not lose on the battlefield.

Col. Harry Summers recalls a conversation with Colonel Tu of the North Vietnamese Army in Hanoi in 1975:

Colonel SUMMERS. You know, you never defeated us on the battlefield.

Colonel TU [pondering this remark for a minute]. That may be so, but it is also irrelevant.

Colonel Tu, of course, was correct. In finally deciding the outcome of the Vietnam war, America's unbroken string of battlefield victories became irrelevant. The war was not lost on the battlefield; the war was lost here, in Congress.

Colin Gray, then assistant director of the prestigious International Institute for Strategic Studies in London, fixed the real reason for America's loss in Vietnam, explaining:

For good reason, most Americans appear convinced that their country lost the war in Vietnam. That is not quite true. The facts are that the United States and the Republic of Vietnam had effectively won the war by mid or late 1972, and then—in America's case at least—proceeded to discard that victory.

John Colvin, counsel general at the British Mission in Hanoi during the war, agrees with Gray, declaring:

Victory—in American hands, was not so much thrown away as shunned.

How and why did America discard and shun victory in Vietnam? As a Member of Congress during the last Vietnam years, it is difficult and unpleasant for me to tell the blunt truth: America lost the war in Vietnam on the floor of the Senate and the House of Representatives. The Congress of the United States legislated defeat in Vietnam.

To prove this painful thesis, I must remind you of events in Vietnam in 1972, when, Colin Gray believes, America had effectively won the war and before we shunned victory.

On March 31, 1972, North Vietnam's Defense Minister, General Giap, called on "the Vietnam people's armed forces to march forward to complete victory." The Communists hurled 14 combat divisions spearheaded by 600 Soviet tanks across the 17th parallel in the biggest attack of the war.

The Easter offensive was South Vietnam's moment of truth. President Thieu told his countrymen, "this is the final battle to decide the survival of our people."

Unlike the Tet offensive 4 years earlier, U.S. military support was now limited. Only about 60,000 troops were in Vietnam at the time, and none of them participated in ground combat other than in an advisory capacity. The main U.S. support came from the air. President Nixon unleashed tremendous tactical and strategic air strikes to help crush the Communist offensive.

Along with the massive air strikes, President Nixon ordered the mining of North Vietnam's ports—a bold move which was long overdue. Seventy-five percent of North Vietnam's imports from Russia and Eastern Europe entered from the sea, 95 percent at Haiphong. Almost all of North Vietnam's gasoline, diesel fuel, ammunition and weapons reached North Vietnam from the sea.

Predictably, the President's firm action was denounced by a storm of criticism in liberal media and by the hand-wringers in Congress. Senate doves voted to condemn Nixon's decision to mine Haiphong. One Senator exclaimed, "we must act at once to reverse this fateful error. Armageddon may be only hours away."

But, the American people overwhelmingly backed President Nixon. A Sindlinger poll showed that 76 percent of the American people supported Nixon's initiatives in Vietnam. A Harris survey found that 64 percent supported the mining of Haiphong, and 74 percent thought it important that South Vietnam did not fall into the hands of the Communists.

The U.S. bombing and mining were vital, but if the Communist drive was to be stopped the ARVN had to stop it on the ground. As General Westmoreland explained.

Here, apparently, was the ultimate test of the long years of American effort to create a viable South Vietnamese armed force. Even as the test developed, the last American battalions began to move, not to help in the fight, but to complete American withdrawal. As the results eventually demonstrated, the ARVN for all of its many errors in plans and execution, no longer required the assistance of American ground troops.

As President Nixon said:

U.S. mining of Haiphong Harbor and the use of our air power against targets in North Vietnam helped save the day, but the fighting on the ground was done exclusively by South Vietnam forces. The South Vietnamese demonstrated in 1972, that they could effectively stop the invasion on the ground if they were adequately armed and provided with air support.

By September, North Vietnam's forces had retreated. A captured Communist document conceded that "We failed to accomplish our spring-summer plan. Objectives have not been achieved." Four hundred of North Vietnam's tanks had been knocked out; close to 100,000 Communist regulars had been killed.

Finally, after 10 years of fighting, a successful formula had been found to deny South Vietnam to the Communists. Severely tested by the Easter offensive, this formula required several segments for success:

First, American military advisers were still needed to aid the ARVN.

Second, American air support was required to destroy enemy positions and to discourage future invasions.

Third, mining Haiphong was necessary to discourage Communist offensives by preventing a sustained military attack in the South.

Fourth, most importantly, because the ARVN's ground troops proved they could challenge North Vietnam's best units, American combat troops were no longer needed in Vietnam.

Under these promising conditions, Congress proceeded to legislate defeat in Vietnam—first, by preventing any future U.S. military action in Indochina, and later, in 1975, by denying South Vietnam and Cambodia the military aid necessary for their self-defense.

After numerous unsuccessful efforts, congressional liberals finally pushed through the Case-Church amendment on June 29, 1973, preventing U.S. military involvement in Southeast Asia. The terms of Case-Church were categorical:

Notwithstanding any other provision of law, on or after August 15, 1973, no funds herein or heretofore appropriated may be obligated or expended to finance directly or indirectly combat activities by United States military forces in or over from off the shores of North Vietnam, South Vietnam, Laos, Cambodia.

President Nixon had vetoed previous bills to cut off American military action in Indochina, and he denounced Case-Church vigorously, but the bill was veto proof. It passed 278 to 124, 69 percent, in the House and 64 to 26, 71 percent, in the Senate.

Not satisfied with preventing any future military support to our allies, Congress proceeded to deny South Vietnam and Cambodia the basic weapons and supplies needed for their defense.

In 1972–73, U.S. military aid to South Vietnam was $2.1 billion.

In 1973–74, aid to South Vietnam was cut to $964 million.

In 1974–75, the year of the final communist offensive, U.S. military aid to South Vietnam totaled only $700 million.

Such drastic cuts in military supplies crippled the ARVN. Helicopter missions dropped from 16,000 a month to 3,000 a month because of a shortage of spare parts and gasoline. In the final battle in 1975, the ARVN desperately lacked all types of weapons and equipment.

I remember very vividly a ride in a Huey helicopter that was in such poor shape that I was certain no American troops would have used it. It was literally a stripped down version of a Huey. I thought to myself at the time that the situation must be very bad, indeed, or these people would not be using equipment that was in this poor condition. There were no spare parts to repair the equipment. There was nothing they could do but make do with what they had.

Tran Van Lam, South Vietnam's Foreign Minister, came to Washington to plead for a $300 million supplementary appropriation, but he was told by several Congressmen that the ARVN was not fighting effectively. Tran Van Lam replied:

We fought well in 1968 and 1972, and these are the same people. They held An Loc for years. The North Vietnamese have ten times more shells than we have. If our troops have ten bullets and know that they will get ten more when they need them, then they will fight. But inevitably, when soldiers have no bullets, no equipment, no means of transportation, it is only natural that morale will suffer.

At the time that Congress was cutting South Vietnam's military aid, Soviet supplies to North Vietnam quadrupled in 1974–75. Communist supplies were so abundant in the north that vast storehouses were left unhidden. To move men and equipment rapidly to the south, portions of the Ho Chi Minh Trail were paved with limestone and packed dirt. Obviously, the Communists had no reason to fear U.S. air strikes.

In the spring of 1975, Congress also denied military aid to Cambodia, where Pol Pot's Khmer Rouge was locked in fierce combat with government troops. English journalist William Shawcross, a severe critic of U.S. policy in Cambodia, reveals that—

In these final three months, each side fought with extraordinary bravery and each suffered losses that would have been intolerable for most armies.

According to Shawcross:

Ammunition decided the outcome of the war. Within days of the start of the offensive, Hanoi was no longer withholding arms. The Khmer Rouge had far more weapons and ammunition than ever before.

But government troops depended on Congress for aid, and by April 11 no more funds were available to the desperate Cambodian Army.

It was a tragic situation, but I was truly impressed with the discipline of the Cambodian troops and the spirit that they demonstrated in their defense of that very small perimeter around Phnom Penh.

Of course, it saddens me to remember that all the people that I met and dealt with are now dead, victims of the Cambodian genocide in which two out of seven of the citizens of that country were killed by the Khmer Rouge after the fall of Phnom Penh.

In imploring Congress for aid to Cambodia, President Ford warned of "an unbelievable horror story" if the Khmer Rouge won. American Ambassador to Cambodia, Gunther Dean, told Congress that "the Communists would impose a brutal revolution" if they controlled Cambodia.

But Senate doves rejected Cambodia's plea; they knew better. Many Senators dismissed predictions of large scale Communist atrocities as "political rhetoric" and "scare tactics about Indochina." Some agreed with the Senator who believed: "It's up to those people to settle their differences themselves in their own way, and that includes Cambodia." According to the New York Times of March 13, 1975, two leading antiwar Senators "cited statements by Prince Norodom Sihanouk, the exiled Cambodian leader, that only the lives of President Lon Nol and his immediate entourage would be in jeopardy when the Communists took over."

On April 17, Cambodia surrendered to Pol Pot, paving the way for one of the most barbaric acts in human history—the genocide of the Cambodian people.

Predictably, the Case-Church amendment and cuts in military aid encouraged North Vietnam to invade South Vietnam in 1975. Graham Martin, U.S. Ambassador to South Vietnam, revealed that the Soviet Union told North Vietnam to "go for broke" because "support for honoring the American commitment to South Vietnam had been irretrievably eroded in Congress."

Gen. Van Tien Dung, chief of staff of the North Vietnamese Army and commander of the final offensive, in his book "Our Great Spring Victory," written in 1977, describes how the North Vietnamese Politburo "raised and heatedly discussed" America's response "if we launched large scale battles that would lead to the collapse of the puppet troops." According to General Dung, North Vietnam's leaders concluded that:

The United States was meeting difficulties at home and abroad, and its ability to give political or military aid was declining every day. Not only had the United States decreased its aid to Saigon, it also faced increasing opposition to any effort to "jump back" into the South.

General Dung decided that South Vietnam would be forced to fight a poor man's war.

The Case-Church amendment and cuts in military aid assured the Communist victory in 1975. As General Westmoreland explained:

> We were paralyzed by the Case-Church amendment which prohibited the use of funds for Southeast Asia combat activities. That action by Congress not only tied the hands of President Ford, but also removed our only deterrent to large scale attack.

Westmoreland added:

> It's too bad we couldn't again mine Haiphong Harbor and the President did not have the authority to use tactical air and B-52 strikes to hit Communist supply lines.

As the Communist army swept south, President Ford watched helplessly and lamented:

> Unfortunately the United States did not carry out its commitment in the supplying of military hardware and economic aid to South Vietnam. If we had carried out the commitments we had made, the tragic sacrifices that were made by so many would not have been in vain.

Thus, after enduring 360,000 casualties and spending more than $140 billion, the U.S. Congress left the field to the Communists. Senator Hiram Fong of Hawaii dared to tell his Senate colleagues the hard truth:

> There is no question but what we have betrayed the Cambodians and we have betrayed the South Vietnamese. In my mind, there is no question that we have reneged on our commitments; we have not lived up to our commitments.

The American people and the Vietnam veterans agree with Senator Fong. In 1980, the polling firm of Lou Harris & Associates conducted a lengthy indepth study of the attitudes of the public and the veterans about the Vietnam war.

Harris asked for a reactions to this statement:

> The trouble in Vietnam was that our troops were asked to fight a war which our political leaders in Washington would not let them win.

Seventy-three percent of the American people and 92 percent of the Vietnam veterans agreed with that statement.

The consequences of the Communist victory to the people of Indochina are well known. The area has become an Asian Auschwitz. George McGovern said the genocide in Cambodia "made Germany's operation look tame by comparison."

Alexander Solzhenitzen indicts American doves for their role in the Communist victory in scathing language. Solzhenitzen told the Harvard graduating class in 1978:

> Members of the U.S. anti-war movement wound up being involved in a betrayal of Far Eastern nations, in a genocide and in the suffering today of 30 million people there. Do these convinced pacifists hear the moans coming from there? Do they understand their responsibility today? Or do they prefer not to hear?

The dread consequences of America's defeat in Vietnam are not limited to the suffering millions of Indochina. Today the "Vietnam syndrome" influences U.S. policy in Central America. A popular bumper sticker proclaims that "El Salvador is Spanish for Vietnam." Some Senators often compare U.S. policy in Central America to Vietnam, declaring that in Central America we must not fail to "learn the lessons of Vietnam."

Last week we were faced with the decision of providing the Nicaraguan freedom fighters with 14 million dollars' worth of military aid. Both the Senate and the House rejected that proposal. We were the victims of the "Vietnam syndrome." We lacked the wisdom, the resolve and the foresight to take the steps necessary to promote democracy in Central America.

Fortunately, we still have time in Central America, time which we can use to correct last week's mistake.

The institutional memory of this body is short. Consequently we must, from time to time, force ourselves to remember the unpleasant past so that we may avoid an even more unpleasant future.

Congress' action in legislating defeat in Vietnam was reprehensible. It would be tragic if we failed to learn from that mistake.

The explanation I have just given for "American's first defeat" does not conform to the "liberal" thesis that American involvement in Vietnam was immoral from the beginning, that under Ho Chi Minh's enlightened leadership a Communist victory was justified and inevitable, and that South Vietnam was a brutal and corrupt nation undeserving of American aid.

Mr. President, discussion of the "lessons of Vietnam" has recently flooded the national media. These "lessons" are often irresponsibly invoked in these Chambers.

But what are these "lessons?" Some are complex and controversial, but five of the most important "lessons of Vietnam" are clear and basic.

President Nixon in his recent book, "No More Vietnams," explains one important lesson:

> In Vietnam we tried and failed in a just cause. 'No More Vietnams' can mean we will not try again. It should mean we will not fail again.

President Reagan expressed another crucial "lesson of Vietnam" when he declared that:

> We should never again ask men to fight and die for their country unless we intend to win.

A third clear "lesson of Vietnam" is: Don't get bogged down in a prolonged war. General MacArthur's fundamental truism must always be observed:

> War's very object is victory—not prolonged indecision.

A painfully plan, but fundamental "lesson of Vietnam" is: Don't lose.

When the greatest power in the world commits its material and human resources to war and loses, grave consequences are suffered by millions whose very existence depends upon our pledges and support. Defeat erodes the very spirit of our country.

Finally, the most tormenting "lesson" of all: Don't abandon victory.

When history finally sorts out the Vietnam controversy, some time in the next century, I believe it will relate that:

The United States of America pledged its honored word, spent its valuable treasure, and sacrificed the sacred lives of its sons in a noble cause to save millions of innocent people from tyranny.

Finally, after 10 years of agonizing struggle, America achieved—then abandoned—victory and allowed the people of Indochina to fall into "that bottomless pit of human degradation" called communism.

The Vietnam war was, as Gen. Omar Bradley proclaimed n 1967:

> A right war, at the right place, at the right time, and with the right enemy.

But, this noble cause was lost by error, indecision and timidity. The courage of Congress did not match the courage of the vast majority of the American people, the courage of the American fighting forces in the field, or the courage of the Cambodian, Laotian, and South Vietnamese people.

We were defeated, as North Vietnam's leaders predicted in 1968 that we would be: "On the political front right in the United States."

Mr. President, we Americans have inherited much: A beautiful country, a proud heritage, and an unprecedented measure of freedom and opportunity. But, we have also inherited the solemn responsibility to lead the free world through these dangerous times.

I have unbounded confidence in America and her people. But if we are to remain a great nation, America's leaders in Congress, to whom is entrusted the Nation's destiny, must accept Winston Churchill's simple axiom: "The price of greatness is responsibility."

RECOGNITION OF SENATOR PROXMIRE

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Wisconsin is recognized.

Mr. PROXMIRE. Mr. President, it is my understanding I have a 15-minute special order; is that correct?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator is correct.

STAR WARS: THE DANGEROUS ESCAPE FROM REALITY

Mr. PROXMIRE. Mr. President, as the Presiding Officer will recall, Dr. Robert Jastrow testified on April 22 before the Defense Appropriations Subcommittee that the so-called star wars antimissile defense could be made highly effective for an expenditure of as little as $60 billion. Dr. Jastrow contended that such a defense would be able to intercept 75 percent and perhaps virtually all incoming ICBM's. Both his estimates of the efficiency of star wars and his cost estimates were far more optimistic than anything the Defense Department has previously claimed. On the other hand, on the same day, Dr. Richard Garwin told the committee that star wars will be unlikely to work at all. He estimated the cost at half a trillion dollars or more. How are members of the Senate to determine which of these two expert witnesses, if either, is right? Is the answer somewhere in between the two estimates of the cost of the program? Will this strategic defense initiative's capacity to intercept incoming missiles even with as little as $60 billion of expenditure range somewhere between 100 percent success to no success? Many of us when confronted with this kind of sharply conflicting testimony from expert witnesses are inclined to split the difference. Would this give us a roughly right answer on "Star Wars." The answer is "no."

There are two big reasons why Dr. Garwin is likely to be right and Dr. Jastrow is likely to be wrong. First, consider what it will take to support the Jastrow position. The United States will have to secure a system that will work almost perfectly the first time it is challenged by a Soviet attack. This Senator cannot recall any weapon system which worked perfectly or even well the very first time it was put to the challenge. I can recall many that failed and others that failed at first but gradually became effective weapons systems. It takes trial and error to work out the bugs. The more complex the system, the more errors and mistakes. And for a system as brand new, as untried as a comprehensive antimissile system replete with an untried technology, the prospect that it would work perfectly or even very well the first time are about as close to nil as you can get.

Second, and even more importantly, this newly deployed star wars system would not go up against the present technology of offensive missiles. It would not be the present Russian nuclear offensive arsenal that star wars would have to intercept with virtual perfection and defeat. This country would face a far more advanced offensive nuclear arsenal than anything in being today. But even today's technology would enable the Soviets to equip their giant missiles cheaply with several times more warheads, plus warheads with a hardened skin that would aid penetration, and with thousands of decoys and chaff that could cheaply and easily flood into the defensive zone. Most difficult of all, the star wars system would have to meet and frustrate new developments, not yet on the drawing board—as new as the star wars defensive system itself.

Mr. President, we have great and understandable faith in the capacity of our scientists to achieve miracles, including the miracle of constructing a defense against intercontinental ballistic missiles equipped with nuclear warheads. Many highly competent experts say this cannot be done. Some say it can. And if those who think American scientific ingenuity can build a perfect or near perfect missile defense are right, that achievement could be the beginning of a defense against at least one kind of nuclear attack. Possibly a defense against other kinds of attacks—by cruise missile, by low flying bomber, by submarine, by terrorists—can also be achieved. Perhaps we can mount a marvelous new defense that can win on every front. Would not such a defense be worthwhile? The answer is "No."

Here is why: We can make great scientific advances that might very possibly stop the 1985 offensive nuclear arsenal and stop it cold. But by the time we get such an arsenal researched, produced and deployed, it will not be 1985 or 1986, it will be at least the year 2000. By that time the same kind of scientific ingenuity that developed miraculous defenses against a 1985 technology will face a year 2000 offensive technology.

Mr. President can any sane and reasonable person argue that the scientific ingenuity that works for the antimissile defense will not work at least as well for the nuclear offense? I say "at least as well" because in the history of warfare, the offense has enjoyed a consistent advantage for obvious reasons. The offense can select the time of attack, the mode of attack, the place of attack. It can concentrate its offensive power on the targets it selects. That principle has not changed in thousands of years. The technique of warfare has changed. It has changed with ever-increasing rapidity. We seem to have a virtual revolution now every 10 or 15 years. But the dream that either a defense or offense would somehow develop a permanent advantage, or indeed an advantage that could persist for more than a very few years is an empty, vain and dangerous flight into unreality.

So what do we do? The answer is to stop this star wars gambit. Stop it cold, and then divert some of this marvelous scientific genius into the development of verification systems that will provide credible enforcement of arms control. We simply must stop the arms race. To do that we need constantly improving verification. Certainly comprehensive, verifiable arms control will never give us the full and perpetual assurance of peace. If we are honest with ourselves, we will admit nothing will do that. But arms control that stops the arms race can give us far and away the best chance of peace and survival.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that an excellent article on this subject by Walter Clemens of Boston University, and a member of the International Institute for Strategic Studies in London, be printed at this point in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

GOOD OFFENSE BEATS A GOOD (STAR WARS) DEFENSE

(By Walter C. Clemens, Jr.)

President Reagan justifies his Strategic Defense Initiative as a kind of gas mask—a precaution to be taken even though certain weapons have been banned. But a long look at history reveals a more basic lesson: It is folly to depend upon moats, walls, forts or interception to keep an attacker at bay. From Jericho to Troy to Corregidor and Dien Bien Phu the record is replete with tales of "impregnable" bastions that fell to the cunning, endurance or concentrated power of determined foes. China's Great Wall was repeatedly breached by "barbarians." Alexander the Great used a mole and barges to take Tyre. Richard the Lion-Hearted, improving on Byzantine forts seen on the Crusades, built Europe's stoutest castle in Normandy. Philip II won it in less than two years.

Medieval fortresses rose ever higher contesting against battering rams, catapults and assault towers. If superior force or stratagem did not overwhelm the defenders, starvation often did the trick. As castles became vulnerable to artillery in the 15th century, moats were deepened and broadened; walls were slanted and rounded to make projectiles ricochet. Still, the defense usually lost out to offensive technology.

Proponents of defense alibi in each case that "something went wrong." Jericho's walls might not have fallen to the shouts and trumpets of Joshua's troops if a prostitute had not hidden two Israelite spies within the town. The Trojans should have heeded Cassandra's warnings not to pull the wooden horse within their walls. The kaiser's armies could not have raced into France in 1914 if trenches had linked Belgium's mighty forts. Singapore would have repulsed the Japanese had its guns aimed toward land instead of the sea. Czechoslovakia's "little Maginot line" could have stalled the Germans had it not been surrendered to Hitler at Munich. France's Maginot line would have halted the Wehrmacht had French fortifications continued to the North Sea instead of stopping at Belgium.

Why does every defense have an Achilles' heel? Because human ingenuity—especially the attacker's—is so great. Belgium's forts in 1940 were much improved over 1914, but they fell in hours when Nazi troops descended by glider one night and began systematically to destroy each turret. Three hundred German paratroopers jumped down at daybreak and compelled 800 surviving Belgian defenders to surrender before noon. Belgium's collapse permitted German armor to run through the Ardennes Forest (said by French strategists to be "impassable"), outflanking the Maginot pillboxes, railroads and underground cinemas.

France, like Mr. Reagan, hoped that its defense line would inspire confidence in its allies. The opposite occurred. Belgium, Poland and Czechoslovakia looked elsewhere for support as their patron dug in for its own protection.

Not only have defense systems spurred overconfidence at home and discord among allies but they have also triggered the very attack they were meant to inhibit. Like boxers, nations fear that if their adversary combines a powerful defense with a long reach, it may seek a knockout. So it was after Athens and Sparta troops returned home following their victory over Persia and organized rival alliances. Athens, like the U.S. today, was strong at sea; Sparta, like the U.S.S.R., on land. When Athens started to erect two long walls to its port, Sparta and other rivals complained. They saw the Athenian defense as a provocation and asked that it be halted. Athens, in the same way, ordered its tributary states not to build walls that could lessen their vulnerability to Athenian influence. Wall building added to the psychosis that produced the Peloponnesian Wars in which all sides were wasted and Athens defeated.

Worried lest the Soviet anti-ballistic missiles of the early 1960s provide the backup for a Soviet first strike, the Pentagon devised multiple warheads to pierce Russia's defenses. Now each superpower accuses the other of violating the ABM treaty to buttress its long reach. If Moscow believes its deterrent is failing, this could produce a desperate act.

Like France in the 1930s, Mr. Reagan exaggerates the enemy's strength, saying we are outmanned and outgunned. Like War Minister Andre Maginot, the president seeks a technological fix to end our vulnerability. He too turns a deaf ear to warnings that a partial shield is not enough. As Paris renounced the offensive posture it used in the early 1920s to enforce the Versailles Treaty, Mr. Reagan talks of eliminating nuclear weapons and internationalizing defenses, even sharing them with the U.S.S.R.

All this is sheer fantasy. The president would squander the modicum of strategic stability we have acquired in quest of pie in the sky. Defenses can impede but not prevent an attack. If we cannot protect a solitary embassy against a jihad truck driver, how can we defend a continent from assault by ballistic, cruise and other weapons, some as yet undreamed of? How can we assure the Soviets—still laboring under their Avis complex—that we will not exploit our technological superiority to create a defense that disarms them?

Despite their anxieties the Soviets could doubtless invent means to punch through any U.S. defense. It is easier to destroy than protect, cheaper to penetrate than keep out. If a leakproof astrodome cannot be attained, there is no justification for the Strategic Defense Initiative unless our deterrent is at risk. Our triad—or most of it—is quite secure for the foreseeable future. If our land-based missiles become vulnerable, we can build 100 ABM launchers without violating our 1972-74 accords with Moscow. We can make our submarines and bombers more difficult to destroy in a first strike. While maintaining a persuasive deterrent, we must find ways to ease tensions with the Kremlin, reduce prospects of a surprise attack, and lower for all peoples the burdens and dangers of arms racing. Meanwhile we should avoid any "initiative" that alienates our allies, provokes our foe and leads to self-deception. We must never believe that we are safe when we are not, indeed, when our actions could goad our foe to attack. Best safety, as Laertes said, lies in fear.

A HELPING HAND

Mr. PROXMIRE. Mr. President, for more than 50 years, the Selfhelp Community Services Organization has been helping New York area survivors of the Holocaust. This organization was founded by a group of Quakers and immigrant Jews to help victims of Nazi persecution. In the early days of its existence, Selfhelp provided a place for those fleeing the Germans. It was a place to come and seek shelter in a strange, new country. At Selfhelp, these refugees found people with whom they could communicate. The social workers not only spoke German, but also Yiddish, Russian, Hungarian and Polish. The Selfhelp Community Organization provided badly needed services to those fleeing the Holocaust.

The end of the war and the end of the Holocaust did not end the need for the services of Selfhelp. Selfhelp still provides services to those whose emotional scars are still open. Many survivors are still haunted by nightmares and often a persistent feeling of guilt exists within them. They feel guilty because they survived when so many did not. There are many institutions and daily events that bring back memories of Nazi Germany. As one of Selfhelp's social workers put it, "illness triggers feelings of helplessness that they had in Germany. Sickness meant immediate death at the hands of the Nazis." As these survivors grow older, Selfhelp provides them assistance with government documents. Government documents in Germany could have meant deportation or death.

There are people who live with this tragedy of history every day, with the emotional scars that will last the rest of their lives. Because the disease is gone does not mean we are immune to it. Genocide could raise its ugly head at any time. Just as the Selfhelp Community Service Organization continues to respond to the effects of the Holocaust, so must we respond. The need is still there. I urge quick action on the long overdue Genocide Convention.

Mr. President, I yield the floor.

RECOGNITION OF SENATOR BAUCUS

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under the previous order, the Senator from Montana [Mr. BAUCUS] is recognized for not to exceed 15 minutes.

SENATE RESOLUTION 151—SENSE OF SENATE RESOLUTION REGARDING BONN ECONOMIC SUMMIT

Mr. BAUCUS. Mr. President, I rise to introduce a resolution for myself, Senator BENTSEN, and Senator MOYNIHAN, calling on the President to initiate discussion of the exchange rates at the Bonn Economic Summit.

This resolution is designed to send a message to the President of the United States. A message I and my colleagues hope he hears as he goes into the Bonn Economic Summit.

It is a message drawn from pain—pain caused by this administration's policies. It is a message about moving to stop the pain from getting worse.

Wednesday night President Reagan spoke to the American people about the costs imposed by skyrocketing budget deficits—deficits contained in his budgets. But he ignored one cost: the cost imposed by his deficits' impact on the dollar.

Perhaps I should not have been surprised. After all, for 4 years—as the dollar has risen ever higher—the President has seen no problem. He has even said we should be proud of the dollar's high value!

Well, we stand here today to say to the President of the United States: "You are living in a dream world—removed from the reality that confronts most Americans."

Take off your rose-colored glasses! Leave the oval office and go among the American farmers—good people, hardworking people and the most productive people in the world. They will tell you an overvalued dollar is a source not of pride but of pain and bankruptcy.

Go to a Caterpillar plant. Talk to the men and women who have spent their lives making the best tractors in the world. Ask them if watching the overvalued dollar drive their jobs overseas, has made them proud.

Ask the American worker who has foregone a rise or taken a paycut to protect his job, only to see it disappear offshore. Ask him if he feels pride in an overvalued dollar.

Or ask Eastman Kodak Co. if achieving a 13-percent increase in productivity in 1 year and then watching a rise in the dollar swamp that gain makes them feel proud.

Ask the millions of Americans who have lost jobs to imports if they feel pride in the overvalue of the dollar.

The answer, Mr. President, would be a resounding "No."

The American farmer, the American manufacturer, and the American worker all cry out in pain. The pain of lost sales, lost profits, lost jobs—lost not because of inefficiency or rising costs, but because this President's policies have put a tax on the products they try to ship overseas.

Yes, a tax. President Reagan talks a great deal about cutting taxes. But his policies have imposed an insidious, a hidden, and unfair tax—a disguised tax. The overvalued dollar is a tax on exports just as surely as any direct levy.

We say to the President: You shall not crucify the American worker on the cross of an overvalued dollar.

Mr. President, this administration's attitude toward the dollar has imposed costs beyond our borders as well.

This administration spends time and energy arguing for military aid to encourage democracy in Latin America. It should spend some time worrying about the destabilizing effect of a 4-year rise in the dollar. As the dollar's value rises, so does the cost of oil, the size of their debt, and the interest burden of the LDC's. We want democracy to flourish, but we impose dreadful economic costs which in turn cause political tensions. This makes no sense.

Mr. President, this is not the time for a smile or a wink; it is not the time to pretend the problem will take care of itself.

Just 2 weeks ago, Secretary of State Shultz discussed the disadvantages of the high dollar—both to us and to our trading partners. He attributed half the deterioration of our trade position to the overvalued dollar. He did not think the problem would go away by itself.

Last week, the Senate Finance Committee held hearings on the exchange rate question. We heard economists, labor leaders, and business leaders talk about the problems caused by exchange rate volatility and currency misalignment. We heard from a great many people, but none of them believed the problem would just go away by itself.

This is a time to face reality. Reducing the budget deficit is a necessary and crucial step—but it is not the only step. It is time to recognize we live in a global economy. It is time to recognize that massive capital flows swamp and in fact may drive trade flows. It is time to cooperate with our allies.

That is why my colleagues and I offer this resolution. We call on the President to attend the Bonn summit committed to beginning a discussion about reducing currency misalignments and exchange rate volatility.

To use a favorite quote of the President's: "If not now, when. If not us, who."

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the text of the resolution be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the resolution was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. RES. 151

Whereas the President's Council of Economic Advisers has reported that the real rate of exchange of the dollar increased by almost 60 percent between 1980 and 1984;

Whereas the Congressional Budget Office and the President's Council of Economic Advisers have stated that the large budget deficit has been a major cause of the high interest rates which they report have been a major cause of this increase in the real rate of exchange of the dollar;

Whereas this overvaluation of the dollar acts as a tax on American exports and a subsidy for foreign imports;

Whereas this overvaluation has resulted in the loss of an estimated two million American jobs since 1980—approximately 1.5 million of them in the manufacturing sector;

Whereas America's traditional strength in agricultural exports has been seriously eroded by the overvaluation of the dollar, with the result that the President's Council of Economic Advisers estimates that American agricultural exports have declined by about $8.5 billion from the levels of three years ago;

Whereas currency misalignments, including the overvaluation of the dollar, have led to major competitive dislocations in the United States and world economies and have increased trade tensions between the United States and its trading partners; and

Whereas those critical currency issues have been largely ignored in the Administration's approach to international discussions of economic and trade policy: Now, therefore be it

Resolved, That it is the sense of the Senate that a decrease in the Federal deficit is a necessary but not a sufficient condition to bring down the value of the dollar and that the President should at the Bonn Summit initiate a preliminary discussion on the problem of currency misalignments, exchange rate volatility, and possible cooperative approaches to these problems.

Mr. BAUCUS. Mr. President, I yield the floor.

ROUTINE MORNING BUSINESS

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There will now be a period for the transaction of routine morning business with statements therein limited to 5 minutes each, not to extend beyond 10 a.m.

ORDER OF PROCEDURE

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I understand at 10 o'clock we are back on Senate Concurrent Resolution 32 and the pending amendment. There are 2 hours on that pending amendment. If no one yields time, time will run on the amendment, is that correct?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator is correct.

Mr. DOLE. Then, from 12 o'clock until 2 o'clock will be the Republicans and Democrats having their Tuesday policy luncheons.

At approximately 2 o'clock we will lay down the final amendment. There is 1 hour on that amendment, is that correct?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator is correct.

Mr. DOLE. As I understand, on that amendment it makes no difference who would yield time. I would not be in a position of having less time than the minority side. That would not be relevant at that point. Is that correct?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator is correct.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, it would be my hope that sometime in the late afternoon we could have a vote. But, obviously, if someone wants to use time on the resolution, we would not vote today or tomorrow. As I have indicated, in those circumstances we are using time so at least that is getting us to the goal of using up the 50 hours. I had hoped that we might vote today.

I have been asked by a number of my colleagues about the schedule for the remainder of the week. I think it will probably be fairly hectic, probably coming in early in the morning—8:30 or 9 o'clock—and staying late at night, speaking of Wednesday, Thursday, and Friday. I am not certain about Saturday. It depends upon whether we are nearing the end or not.

I have not discussed this with either Senator DOMENICI or Senator CHILES, but I do not think there is any likelihood to finish by Friday. We could if we stayed all night a couple of nights, but I am not certain that would be productive. In any event, it is the hope of the majority leader that we could have a vote and that will be followed, I assume, by 60-some amendments with one or two votes in the next 2 days followed by maybe 30 or 40 votes.

I would also thank my colleagues for their willingness to let us take care of the Ortega resolution last evening, condemning the visit to Moscow. We have seen some reference to it in the newspapers and on television.

We think it is of great concern, which is the important thing. The resolution was sponsored by myself, the distinguished minority leader, and others. It passed with a voice vote without dissent, so far as I am aware. In my view, it is an important resolution. It indicates that the Senate, Democrats and Republicans, are concerned about Ortega's visits, are concerned about additional bailouts by Moscow, are concerned about the activities in Central America. Whether or not it is reported, downplayed, or ignored by most of the media is probably insignificant.

ORDER OF PROCEDURE

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, was the order recognizing the minority leader for 10 minutes under the standing order reserved for me?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It was.

Mr. BYRD. I thank the Chair.

HERB LITTLE STATEHOUSE DEAN

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, the dean of the West Virginia statehouse press corps, Herb Little, will be retiring next month after covering the West Virginia Legislature for almost 35 years.

Herb Little began covering the West Virginia Legislature in 1951, the year that I began serving in the West Virginia Senate. After 35 years of reporting on the legislature, Herb is the senior mind of statehouse journalists, and a natural resource for reporters looking for guidance on parliamentary procedure or legislative history.

We will miss Herb's statehouse reports, but we wish him well in his retirement.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that an article from the Charleston Gazette on Herb Little's career be reprinted in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows;

STATEHOUSE "DEAN" LEAVING MARBLE HALLS

(By Bill Case)

Herb Little says he's a "low blood pressure type guy." Apparently, that's the only kind of person who could survive 35 years at the West Virginia Capitol and live to laugh about it.

Little, head of The Associated Press bureau at the Capitol, strolled into the marble halls of the state Supreme Court for the first time in 1950 on assignment from the wire service. "I had never been in any kind of court before, not even a J.P. (justice of the peace) court," he recalls. "I didn't have the foggiest idea what was going on."

The dean of the Statehouse press corps will retire May 4, leaving behind a trail of cigar smoke and a score or so of younger media types who now do the jobs he and three others held down in the 1950s.

Only a few longtime staff people who were there for Little's first days remain on the job. "I'm covering the sons of the senators and delegates who were here, and the sons of the lawyers at the Supreme Court," he said. "But when the third generation started showing up, I decided it was time to hang it up."

Little got a job with his hometown newspaper, the Parkersburg Sentinel, after he was discharged from the Army in 1946. Later that year, AP hired him to staff a one-man bureau in Bluefield.

He was transferred to Charleston in 1950, and has attended every legislative session since 1951 as an AP writer.

It wasn't easy to write about what the Legislature was doing in the 1950s, because almost every important decision was made behind closed doors. Little says,

"All the committee hearings were closed, and you couldn't get minutes or a roll call. The only way to find out what was going on was to find someone who would leak it to you, and hope they would tell you the truth. It wasn't an ideal way to cover a legislature."

Little says it was easy to find people to claim credit for legislation which was reported out of committees. But when a bill was killed in secret, "It was pretty hard to pin down who did it."

The legislators, in general, are better informed about what they are doing than in the past, in part due to better staff support, he says. But the last-minute crunch is still the same. "People pass legislation on the basis of sketchy oral information provided by a member of the conference committee. It's not uncommon to find mistakes a week or two weeks later."

Despite this year's budget fiasco, Little says, "It's a lot less harried than usual around here."

While some find the sessions interminable, Little says he enjoys the Legislature. "I'll miss it. I've generally had a pretty good relationship with the legislators, although it's been a basically adversarial one. A lot of them seem to me to be hypersensitive to what's being written about them."

Several times, he adds, new members of the House or Senate have sought him out for background information about issues. But unlike some who would jump at the chance to tell a legislator how they saw things, the encounters apparently made Little uneasy. "I always would lean over backward to avoid taking positions," he says.

The Statehouse press corps in Little's early days consisted of one reporter each from AP, United Press, and the two Charleston papers. Today, each of those organizations sends two or more people to the Capitol, joined by representatives of several other newspapers and a number of radio and television stations.

The competition between the two wire services has been unabated over his 35 years, Little says. "The only advantage I might have over younger reporters is what I have in my head," he says. "I might not be able to get a story they couldn't get, but I could get it faster because I'd know where to look."

But he says the competition, and the hectic pace which often develops at the Capitol, doesn't get to him. "It's a matter of temperament. I'm kind of a low-blood-pressure type guy. Stress doesn't bother me," he says. "It would be really unfortunate if we shook down in just one wire service. The competition is part of the job."

Little plans to spend the summer reading, traveling, and "spending more time than anybody should watching baseball on television."

"But I'm not going to spend my retirement on the porch in a rocking chair," he adds. "Next fall I'm going to look for some part-time work. I don't think I'd enjoy staying fully retired."

MIKHAIL GORBACHEV'S FUTURE OPTIONS CONSIDERED

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, even before Mr. Chernenko's demise, some members of the Western media corps were fulsome in their praise and admiration of the Soviet heir-apparent, Mikhail Gorbachev. Reporters and newspeople were not alone in their twitteration. One Tory member of the British House of Commons went so far as to compare Gorbachev and his wife to President and Mrs. John Kennedy.

Now that Mr. Gorbachev has been officially elevated to the apex of the Soviet state apparatus, global conjecture about the directions he will take in domestic and foreign affairs continues. As in his preselection period, most of those conjectures are based on Mr. Gorbachev's perceived charm, much of which is, in turn, based on his talents in manipulating his hosts and joking with reporters. Rare as those qualities have been in recent Soviet leaders, they do not, in fact, justify some of the more sanguine assessments of future Soviet-American relations that have been offered in some quarters. So far, Mr. Gorbachev has proved primarily again that style can temporarily obscure substance.

America's dealings with the new Soviet leader should be founded on reality, however, not on fantasy, wishful thinking, or public relations. Mr. Hoyt Purvis contributes significantly to that reality in a recent article of his that appeared in the Springdale News of Springdale, AR. His article is entitled "Gorbachev: Soviet Change More Style Than Substance." The director of the Fulbright Institute of International Relations at the University of Arkansas, Hoyt Purvis has had long prior service as a Senate staff member—as a matter of fact, having been on the Democratic Policy Committee staff for quite a long time—and as an adviser and participant in defining and shaping foreign policy issues.

I recommend Mr. Purvis' article on Mikhail Gorbachev for its comprehensive, lucid, and analytic thought, and I ask unanimous consent that the article be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows

GORBACHEV: SOVIET CHANGE MORE STYLE THAN SUBSTANCE

(Hoyt Purvis)

No sooner had Mikhail Gorbachev emerged as the new general secretary of the Soviet Communist Party than he was being described in the Western media and by some analysts as a "moderate."

Such a description seems to be based partially on wishful thinking, partially on Gorbachev's comparatively youthful appearance and style, and much less on the basis of any hard data about Gorbachev's views or the likely direction of his policies.

It is possible that Gorbachev may prove to be a moderate, at least in relation to his predecessors. He does represent a new generation of Soviet leadership and there are reasons to believe that this generation may try to do some things differently. But these instantaneous assessments of Gorbachev are more indicative of how style is often given as much or more weight than substance, how much depends on personal and public relations in international affairs as well as in domestic politics.

In many ways international politics and the arms race have become a public relations contest. That doesn't make these matters any less critical, it doesn't reduce the potential destructiveness of nuclear weapons—it simply means that packaging sometimes counts for as much as the product. It also means that the Soviets may be doing better for a while in the international public relations competition. Gorbachev is off to a good start in this regard, but at this stage it is relatively easy for him to look good, primarily because he is being contrasted to those who have gone before him in recent years—that tired, tottering parade of Soviet senior citizens.

Gorbachev received rave notices when he made his Western debut in London in December. Accustomed to bland Soviet leaders,

British Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher and others were much impressed with Gorbachev, and almost equally, it seemed, by his svelte spouse, Raisa, who was so different from the stereotype of the Russian woman. Last week, one British politician, a conservative member of Parliament, went so far as to compare the Gorbachevs to John and Jackie Kennedy, in what must rank as one of the least profound analyses of the season.

Gorbachev's trip to London before becoming the top man is likely to be only the first of several major visits to the West. He has reportedly accepted invitations to both France and West Germany, and can be expected to intensify the Soviet effort to win points with America's allies and to pull them toward a somewhat more neutral position between the two superpowers, or at least a position less obviously anti-Soviet. There might well be a renewal of the Soviet peace offensive of the early 1980s—depending upon what is happening at the Geneva arms talks—but perhaps the public relations offensive will be handled more adroitly this time. The Soviets badly overplayed their hand in the previous effort to drive a wedge between the United States and Western Europe. Ultimately, of course, there is likely to be a summit meeting between Gorbachev and Reagan when both sides believe there are clear benefits to be gained.

The atmospherics, the political and public relations environment, have to be right, and there are indications that such an environment is gradually developing. When President Reagan says, "The Soviet Union is in a different frame of mind than it was in the past," he might also be indicating that he is in a different frame of mind that he was in the past.

But Gorbachev has many problems to worry about besides summit meetings, and unless he is able to deal effectively with some of those and to consolidate his hold within the country, he won't be in much of a position to engage in high-stakes diplomacy. He will have his hands full dealing with domestic problems and with neighboring countries.

It is not at all clear how much flexibility and autonomy Gorbachev will have. Andrei Gromyko seems certain to remain a major foreign policy influence for awhile. Other Politburo members will obviously be closely scrutinizing the new leader's moves.

His first speech as top man was generic, but is probably an accurate indicator of where his emphasis must be. He stressed economic development and "law and order," and he must deal with the stagnation and corruption that have plagued the nation. For all the progress that the Soviets have made in developing their strategic capability, and the advances in certain scientific and technological areas, the Soviet economy is badly lagging. Perhaps Gorbachev is the man who can at least provide the leadership to grab hold of the aging Soviet infrastructure and shake it into a more modern state.

Certainly it will be interesting to contrast what Gorbachev and company attempt and accomplish in the Soviet Union in comparison to the remarkable changes being attempted under Deng Xiaoping and his team in China. Another question is how long the Soviets can keep the lid on in Eastern Europe, where in several spots the desire for more economic freedom simmers, and how this will affect the U.S.S.R. And there is the Afghanistan quagmire.

Gorbachev may bring some new crispness to the way Soviet government runs, and it will be especially interesting to see the extent to which other "younger" figures will move into the Politburo and into other key positions.

It is clear that, for awhile at least, Gorbachev will put a new gloss on Soviet pronouncements and public relations, but dramatic changes, particularly in foreign policy, seem unlikely. The Soviet policy on arms control, for example, is rather clearly established, and Gorbachev has already fired a few salvos against President Reagan's proposed "Star Wars" system.

Gorbachev is, after all, a product of the Soviet system and he did not earn his stripes by being unorthodox. But perceptions, personal style and atmospherics can be important in international affairs, and because they are, Gorbachev is potentially well positioned to bring about internal and external change.

THE INSPIRATION OF ABRAHAM LINCOLN

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, 120 years ago this month, on April 15, 1865, President Abraham Lincoln died from an assassin's bullet. It is just and honorable that we take a few minutes today to remember the man and the President, and what he meant to America.

We remember President Lincoln for his compassion: "With malice toward none, with charity for all," he declared.

We remember the awesome burden that fell upon this gentle man during the darkest days in the history of our Nation: "We shall nobly save, or meanly lose, the last best hope of Earth," he lamented.

We remember the torturous dilemmas that President Lincoln encountered as he sought to preserve this "last, best hope." "Don't it seem strange," he remarked, "that I, who could never so much as cut off the head of a chicken, should be elected * * * into the midst of all this blood." During the last year of the Civil War, while the North and South were still locked in mortal combat, Lincoln pondered the irrationality of such a conflict: "Both (sides in the conflict) read the same Bible and pray to the same God, and each invokes His aid against the other."

We remember Lincoln for the complex man that he was. The poet and Lincoln biographer Carl Sandburg commemorated Lincoln as "a man * * * both steel and velvet * * * hard as rock and soft as drifting fog."

"Honest Abe," we call him now—the "Great Emancipator" who preserved the union and freed the slaves, and whose example still inspires and directs us.

But we also should remember that the "Great Emancipator" was not always regarded in such glowing, appreciative terms. For example, like most politicians, the 16th President had his troubles with the press. "Most of America's leading newspapers," wrote historian David Donald, "were anti-Lincoln in 1860, and they remained anti-Lincoln till April 15, 1865. They berated Lincoln in a way that makes even the anti-Roosevelt campaigns of our own day seem mild."

I point out that Lincoln was not universally admired in his day in order to remind my colleagues that Lincoln was indeed a mortal. He was a human being who had his faults and problems. Still, he is remembered as the great man who rose out of poverty to accomplish so many noble deeds, including recognizing the establishment of my own State of West Virginia.

Today, Lincoln is all around us, not only in spirit, but in physical testimonies to his greatness. At the other end of the mall stands the Lincoln Memorial. A few blocks away is Lincoln Park. Statues and busts and portraits of Lincoln saturate this city, the seat of the most powerful Government on Earth, and this building, the Capitol of the United States.

The life and work of this man have inspired more writings than any other American.

Fortunately, thanks in considerable measure to the efforts of President Lincoln, the Union is still intact. But we face problems today that are just as challenging and significant, and in some cases deadly. And we, like Lincoln, are only human. As we confront them, we will not do wrong by following his example, and heeding his warning to Congress: "Fellow citizens, we cannot escape history. We will be remembered in spite of ourselves."

We, too, in our own time and in our own way, will "nobly save, or meanly lose, this last, best hope." In the manner in which we approach this grave but wonderful challenge, to paraphrase the words of Phillip Brooks: "May God make us worthy of the memory of Abraham Lincoln."

STATEMENTS BY AFGHAN LEADERS

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, the April 1985 issue of the Journal of Defense and Diplomacy includes an interview with three Afghan resistance leaders. I call my colleagues' attention to this article because it offers a good deal of insight into the motives and strategy of the brave Afghan resistance fighters. As one officer says:

> We do not ask the British, French, Americans, or anybody else to take rifles and fight. . . . We are asking for material, moral, and political aid.

The commitment of the Afghan people is evident from the words of their leaders. They rely on our help in pressuring the Soviet Union to the bargaining table. We can do no less than to pay attention to their plea for help. I encourage my colleagues to read this interview. It is an inspiration and a solemn reminder of the price of freedom. I ask unanimous consent that the interview be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the interview was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

AFGHAN FREEDOM FIGHTERS

Hassan Gailani is the chief military commander of the freedom fighters of the National Islamic Front of Afghanistan. Gailani has been credited with launching the first anti-Communist armed resistance in Afghanistan. Brig. Rahmatullah Safi and Wali Khan are his right-hand men.

Brig. Rahmatullah Safi is the military adviser to the National Islamic Front of Afghanistan under the leadership of Pier Sayad Gailani, Hassan Gailani's uncle. The staff officer in charge of military plans and training, Brig. Safi was a leader of the 1983 to 1984 offensive in the border provinces of Paktia and Paktika, southwest of Kabul. Part of his military training was received with U.S. Army Special Forces at Fort Bragg and with Britain's Special Air Services. He has also had commando training in the Soviet Union.

Prior to the 1979 Soviet invasion, Brig. Safi was Chief of Special Forces of the Royal Afghan Army. After the Communist coup, he was imprisoned for two years and was tortured two to three times a week. Upon his release, he joined the Afghan resistance movement.

Under Brig. Safi's direction, the combat readiness of the Afghan freedom fighters has been substantially increased. Specializing in small unit hit-and-run tactics, his men have succeeded in severely punishing the Soviet and Afghan armies.

Wali Khan is a general commander of the Mohaz freedom fighters in Kabul. After graduating from the University of Kabul, he became an administrator for the U.N. Refugee Program in Afghanistan. Khan and his brother, Hassan Khorohkel, were both instrumental in Operation Blackout, the largest sabotage operation by the freedom fighters against the Soviets since the war began. Operation Blackout left two-thirds of the city of Kabul without power.

JODD. What is the current state of affairs in Afghanistan?

Brig. SAFI. Things in Afghanistan are generally miserable, though we have had some success militarily. From the military point of view, our freedom fighters gain more experience; with time, they reduce their losses. We have been able to give good economic and psychological damage to the Soviets, and the Soviets are still not able to control the heart of the Afghan people. The government takes everybody—the old, the young—into the army, but once they are in, they run away and join the mujahideen. That is the mark of our success.

As the Soviets have not been able to find the strongholds of the freedom fighters, they have changed their tactics. Now they attack all over the country—they kill civilians, burn crops—which makes life impossible for the people. I believe that is because the biggest ally of the freedom fighter is always the local people. Food from the local people, intelligence from them, accommodation from them, so many things. Always the local people. Because of this the Soviets want to make life difficult for the freedom fighters. As the Soviets kill children, women, the elderly, destroy villages and force the survivors to be refugees, there is no more support. As time goes by, the result becomes clear.

JODD. As the Soviets continue this policy of "scorched earth," how can your movement combat this? How can you survive against this kind of tactic?

Brig. SAFI. This is the main reason we have come to the United States. We are not here to enjoy Washington. Our minds are still in Afghanistan. We are here to see if we have allies, to see if there is a free world ready to defend democracy and freedom. We believe we are not only fighting Afghanistan but for you, too. If you also believe this, then this is the time. We don't ask the British, French, Americans or anybody else to take rifles and fight. That is our job.

We are not being suicidal. We are happy to be alive. But now is the time for Washington to make decisions. If Afghanistan is to be a political gift to the Soviets, then the killing is for nothing, the genocide for nothing. If not, let them take it seriously—militarily and politically. People [in the West] say they give military aid. We do not see the aid. Is the West afraid of the Soviets? We are asking for material, moral and political aid. Now is the time to tell the Soviets, "You are savages. Stop." If somebody wants to stop the Soviets, it is in Afghanistan that it can be done.

JODD. How will the West's supplying of arms halt the Soviets' scorched earth atrocities from driving out the population?

Brig. SAFI. Let the Soviets continue to come. We will continue to fight them. We have never said that if you give us the weapons we will throw the Soviets out. But we will surely give you the chance to force them to the negotiating table. If they continue to lose men, to lose equipment as we continue to fight, they can be forced to talk. In London in 1979 I was there, and all the British experts thought we would collapse in a fortnight. We are still fighting.

JODD. You are saying, then, that the longer you can prolong the fight, the more political and moral support you can muster to force them to the table?

Brig. SAFI. First, the Soviets have been told more than 15 times by the majority of western nations that they must pull out. This happens because we fight, because there is still a national will in Afghanistan. That is the proof. If we don't fight, how can we win support? Secondly, yesterday, all over the world everyone was saying that the U.S. was imperialist and that the Soviets were the great peace-lovers. Today, after Afghanistan, after we fight and people see what the Soviets really are, it's the other way around.

KHAN. We are not able to push out the Soviets by the use of direct force due to the geographical position of the two countries and other factors. Nor can we claim that if we receive sufficient weapons and food we can stop them from destroying villages and so forth. But if we can get sufficient support, those Soviet activities will get very expensive. We could limit their invulnerabilities—get into a better position to put pressure on them and bring them to the table. If they know they would lose one fighter for every house they take, they will not do it. If they are sure that if they destroy a particular village they would lose 50 tanks and 10 or even five fighters, then they won't do it. They are counting and worrying about losses, too.

JODD. How many Cubans are there in Afghanistan?

KHAN. Cubans were seen in the north and southwest of Afghanistan back in 1982. Currently they are mainly advisers to Kabul commando units, as well as to some other special forces units—not so much to the regular army. There is also one division of Bulgarians. There are groups from several of the Soviet ethnic nations within the Soviet empire.

JODD. After the cutting of power to Kabul by your forces during Operation Blackout, what is the current state of availability of electrical power to Kabul?

KHAN. Kabul had 220,000 kilowatts of hydroelectric power from three plants. The lines from these three plants were cut as a result of Operation Blackout. According to our sources, the government has only temporarily repaired one line in the past six months. As they were finishing repairs, one of our groups attacked again. It will be some time before Kabul has all its electrical power.

JODD. How effective is the Afghan army?

BRIG. SAFI. It is not trusted by the Soviets.

KHAN. The army of the Karmal regime is only for show. Government soldiers are seen by day in Kabul as sentries and watchmen, but the army is not used for much else. Even in combat situations they are usually only used because they are familiar with the terrain, as just a buffer to the front line. They are not even really trusted in Kabul city. Even on patrol in the streets they must have the Soviets behind them. The soldiers in the Afghan army have been taken from villages and the streets and put into the army by force. They are always seeking an opportunity to escape—to join the freedom fighters or just get away.

JODD. What is your level of recruitment? How many men do you have coming in?

BRIG. SAFI. We don't need to recruit. This is not a war of ideology where we have to make people come to fight with us to convince them that we are the right side. It is a war of national resistance. There is always a shortage of weapons. This is the real problem, not manpower. We can always get the men, but we must give them weapons with which to fight.

JODD. What kinds of weapons do you need? And how many?

BRIG. SAFI. It is very difficult to say how many. That depends on how quickly you want the Soviets to take us seriously. But we terribly need effective antiaircraft weapons, useful weapons. Not merely machine guns and assault rifles. They are not very effective against jets and attack helicopters.

JODD. You appeared before a committee of the U.S. Congress. What do you want from the U.S. Congress particularly?

Brig. SAFI. First, if they believe in freedom, they should seriously call on the Soviet Union to withdraw its troops from our country. Then, we want food, medicine and weapons to continue the fight to stop the bombardment, to stop the genocide. What we are asking for are American antiaircraft missiles. We are asking for American medicine. We are asking for American guns. We are asking for American doctors and medical equipment. We are asking for American food.

JODD. There are concerns in the United States that some of the equipment meant for your forces doesn't get through. If the United States makes a commitment but the pipeline remains unchanged, that will be a serious problem.

Brig. SAFI. Our job is to better organize, hurt the enemy and train our freedom fighters. But we are not in a position to know how much aid is coming in the first place. Is the aid really here, or is it KGB propaganda? We receive much "help," but we have nothing—just the sandals on our feet. It is psychological warfare against our organization. You should not start from our end—you must start at the suppliers' end and follow from there.

JODD. Are you satisfied with the aid and level of support from other Muslim nations, considering that you have declared your struggle to be a jihad? There does not seem to be an enormous degree of help from any of them. Does this concern you?

Brig. SAFI. I have heard that some aid is coming from the fundamentalists to some mujahideen fundamentalist groups because of the ideological ties. They want to export their ideology. Our ideology is based on the ideology of the people of Afghanistan, on nationalism. If you ask refugees in the camps, "What do you want?" they reply the same as we commanders do: we want our country back, we want to go home. We are adding one more goal besides getting rid of the Soviet Union: the future of the state of Afghanistan must be in the hands of the people of Afghanistan. We don't want to import and impose on them any foreign ideology.

JODD. So, the fundamentalists in the Muslim world are not giving aid to the whole resistance movement?

Brig. SAFI. No, unfortunately for us.

GAILANI. They don't consider all of us to be true Muslims.

JODD. Has the coordination between the various freedom fighter groups improved?

GAILANI. You could say that in Afghanistan all the freedom fighters are cooperating with each other. There were some problems among some groups, but they have decreased a lot. It is not that much of a problem. They are united and fighting the same enemy.

JODD. Are there combined operations, or do the groups each work in their own general area?

GAILANI. Mostly, if they have a plan, they do it themselves. If we have a plan, we do it ourselves. But when the enemy attacks somewhere we are not aware of, then everybody stands together against it.

JODD. But there is no actual coordination.

GAILANI. At the present time, that is true.

JODD. What about sharing of supplies?

KHAN. There are some instances of sharing. If one group runs out of ammunition, we supply what we can. As far as the overall politics are concerned, the groups fighting in Afghanistan will be united whenever the source of aid is united. The aid is scattered now.

JODD. If a supplier makes a condition that all aid be distributed equally to all the groups, would that be feasible and workable?

KHAN. If there is to be a unification of all the groups, then it will happen overnight. In the past, some donors have stated that if some of the major resistance groups join together, they would cut off the assistance. So the groups were forced to reject that assistance. We complain that the aid is sometimes used to keep us divided. If this is relaxed, we could get together very easily.

Brig. SAFI. We are brothers. We are Afghans. We have one enemy.

JODD. Is this a struggle you can win?

Brig. SAFI. We must win. We have no alternative. This is our land—it belongs to us. We have no choice.

NATIONAL SEWER GRANTS REDUCED FOR GREAT LAKES STATES

Mr. KASTEN. Mr. President, yesterday I was shocked to learn of a proposal to drastically reduce the Federal funds that will be made available to Great Lakes States for the construction of sewage treatment facilities.

I have been informed that the average Great Lakes State will receive 18 percent less from our National Sewer Grants Program. This comes at a time when many municipalities are in the middle of major construction programs.

For my home State, Wisconsin, the Environment and Public Works Committee proposal would reduce sewer grant funds by 20 percent.

This proposal is totally unacceptable. It is yet another case of where the Federal Government is treating the Great Lakes like an ugly stepchild.

I hope that during the Environment and Public Works Committee markup of the Clean Water Act tomorrow that this proposal is not adopted, and that a more equitable allocation of these essential dollars prevails.

Unfortunately, this failure of the Federal Government to give adequate attention to the Nation's most important freshwater resource is not unique. The United States has failed to live up to its obligations under the water quality agreement with Canada, and failed to provide essential management on several other fronts.

In 1982 the General Accounting Office issued a strong document calling for the Environmental Protection Agency and Congress to take major steps to improve U.S. efforts to clean up the Great Lakes and live up to our obligations under the water quality agreement.

The report cited three key failures of our efforts to manage the Great Lakes. Those three shortcomings are: First, the lack of an effective overall strategy for dealing with Great Lakes water quality problems, second, the lack of knowledge about the extent of pollution problems and the impact of control programs, and third, the need for improved management of Great Lakes pollution cleanup activities.

One of the major reasons for our not meeting the obligations under the Water Quality Agreement is the slow progress on the completion of municipal sewage treatment facilities. While virtually all of the Canadian municipalities have adequate sewage treatment facilities, progress on completing U.S. municipal sewer programs has been totally inadequate.

The amendment the Environment and Public Works Committee will consider tomorrow is a giant step backward. At a time when we are facing tremendous challenges in protecting the Nation's most important freshwater resource we should not be reducing the funds for sewer programs, but should be moving ahead to take a comprehensive approach to the management of the Great Lakes.

I hope the committee will reject this new formula at tomorrow's meeting.

Mr. President, I would like to have printed at this point in the RECORD the section from the GAO report entitled "A More Comprehensive Approach Is Needed to Clean Up the Great Lakes," describing the shortcomings of our progress in completing work on municipal sewers around the lakes.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

U.S. GREAT LAKES WATER QUALITY OBJECTIVES ARE NOT BEING FULLY MET

Although in 1978 the United States committed itself to a comprehensive program to control Great Lakes pollution, the lakes continue to experience eutrophication (aging) and toxic pollution problems because:

Controlling municipal pollution sources continues to lag behind schedule;

Phosphorous, a major factor in controlling lake eutrophication, is not being completely controlled and control efforts may not be properly focused;

Little attention has been directed to nonpoint sources of lake pollution;

The extent and sources of toxic pollution remain undefined, and an overall toxic control strategy has not been developed; and

Comprehensive, effective surveillance and monitoring activities needed to determine water quality conditions and trends and assess pollution control efforts have not been developed and implemented.

Although progress is being made in cleaning up the Great Lakes, the United States has experienced many difficulties in attempting to meet its water quality agreement commitments. The lack of information about the nature, source, and extent of lake pollution from some substances, funding constraints, and other factors have all hindered U.S. efforts. If the United States is to meet its commitments to protect the Great Lakes, however, greater and more comprehensive efforts will be needed.

CONTROLLING MUNICIPAL POLLUTION SOURCES CONTINUES TO LAG BEHIND SCHEDULE

From 1972 to February 1981, the United States spent about $4.9 billion in Federal, State, and local funds to construct and upgrade municipal sewage facilities to treat wastewater discharges to the lakes, but more remains to be done. The Nation will not meet the December 31, 1982, agreement goal for adequate treatment of all municipal sewage discharges to the lakes. In addition, discharges from combined sewers (sewers that carry municipal wastewater along with storm runoff) continue to be a major source of lake pollution, but little funding or effort has been directed to controlling these discharges. Ambitious agreement timetables, difficulties in obtaining funding, and treatment plant operational problems, among other factors, have all contributed to the difficulties in controlling municipal pollution sources.

SEWAGE TREATMENT GOALS WILL NOT BE MET

The Water Quality Agreements require the United States to (1) construct and operate waste treatment facilities to provide adequate treatment for the sewered population in the U.S. portion of the Great Lakes Basin, (2) provide financial resources to ensure prompt construction of needed facilities, and (3) establish pretreatment requirements for industrial plants discharging waste into municipal systems. We reported in March 1975 that the United States had made substantial progress with its municipal point source control program, but that much remained to be done. That continues to be the case today.

A goal of the 1972 agreement was that the municipal point source control programs in both Canada and the United States would be either completed or in process by December 31, 1975. We reported in 1975 that the United States would not realize this goal. We further reported that, at that time, only about 60 percent of the U.S. sewered population had adequate treatment compared with about 98 percent for Canada.

When the Governments negotiated the 1978 agreement, they established December 31, 1982, as the new goal for completion of municipal point source control programs, including the requirement for providing adequate treatment. In the United States, the Clean Water Act, as amended, requires publicly owned treatment works to provide a minimum of secondary treatment with more stringent treatment to be provided if secondary treatment would be insufficient to protect water quality. Meeting the requirement for secondary treatment satisfies [1] the 1978 agreement requirement for adequate municipal treatment.

In its Seventh Annual Report on Great Lakes Water Quality, issued October 1980, IJC reported that only 64 percent (compared with 60 percent in 1975) of the sewered population in the U.S. portion of the basin has adequate sewage treatment, compared to 99 percent for Canada. In that report, EPA estimated that completion of treatment facilities under construction should provide 99 percent of the U.S. sewered population with adequate treatment by 1983. We found, however, that a significant number of municipal plants on the Great Lakes will not be completed in time to meet the agreement goal of December 31, 1982. EPA's own estimates (see app. III) show that 31 percent of all major municipal treatment facilities on the lower Great Lakes will not be completed until 1983 or later. At the same time, however, EPA points out that the unfinished facilities represent only about 15 percent of the total municipal sewage flow from major facilities into the lower lakes.

In addition, the completion of municipal treatment plants does not in itself guarantee that adequate treatment will be provided. For example, in a 1980 report [2] on wastewater treatment plants, we found that municipal facilities nationwide were experiencing severe problems limiting their ability to treat waste. These problems included plant design and equipment deficiencies, defective sewer systems allowing infiltration of ground water that overloads existing facilities, industry waste that is not compatible with the plant's treatment system process, and operation and maintenance deficiencies. We reported that inadequate operation and maintenance of the 242 municipal plants sampled nationwide resulted in such repeated violations of discharge permits [3] that the violations constituted the norm rather than the exception. Using the sampling data in that report, we determined that 22 (85 percent) of the 26 sampled municipal dischargers in the Great Lakes Basin violated their discharge permits at least 1 month during the 12-month study period. Further analysis showed that 35 percent of the 26 sampled plants were, in our opinion, in serious violation of the permit discharge limits for biochemical oxygen demand, total suspended solids, or total phosphorus.

According to the GLNPO director and staff, several reasons exist for the delays in completing adequate treatment facilities in the United States. They stated that (1) unrealistic timetables were set to pressure the Governments to take action, (2) larger, more complex facilities are needed in the United States than in Canada because of greater population and industrialization, thereby necessitating a longer time frame, and (3) lack of expertise among State and local recipients in handling construction grant funds impeded efforts to assess treatment needs and design the types of facilities needed to correct pollution problems. An official with the Ohio EPA cited several reasons for the program slippage in Ohio, including the time required to obtain Federal construction grants, construction problems, and the lack of support by municipal officials for the construction of treatment facilities at a time when other pollution sources are not being controlled.

While many factors have limited the pace of construction for waste treatment facilities, EPA believes that funding limits have also slowed construction. For example, when a large Federal grants program made funds available to local communities to use in completing construction of waste treatment facilities, the communities were no longer willing to construct facilities using only local funds. In addition, faced with limited funds, States were not funding low-priority projects—typically the large number of small plants that will fail to meet the December 31, 1982, deadline.

From 1972 through February 1981, almost $4.9 billion in Federal, State, and local funds was provided for municipal sewerage construction in the Great Lakes Basin. (App. IV shows municipal wastewater treatment plant construction funding by State.) Actions being taken to reduce the Federal budget, however, could affect the already extended dates for completing municipal projects in the Great Lakes Basin. For fiscal year 1980, actual funding for the construction grants program nationwide was $3.4 billion, $1.6 billion less than the $5 billion authorized. Furthermore, as part of his economic recovery program, the President proposed, and the Congress agreed, to rescind $1.7 billion in previously appropriated but unobligated construction grant funds. Also, on December 29, 1981, the President signed Public Law 97-117, the Municipal Wastewater Treatment Construction Grant Amendments of 1981. This act amended the construction grant provisions of the Clean Water Act to, among other things, authorize appropriations of $2.4 billion for fiscal years 1982-85 for the grants program. EPA's fiscal year 1982 appropriation does not include funding for the program, but the administration requested $2.4 billion for fiscal year 1982. How much of this money, if appropriated, will go for Grant Lakes projects is not known.

The 1978 agreement also requires the United States to establish pretreatment requirements for industrial wastes being discharged into municipal treatment systems where such wastes are not amenable to adequate treatment or removal using conventional waster treatment processes. In a 1982 report [4] on EPA's industrial pretreatment program, we reported that although the program was authorized in 1972, it has yet to be fully implemented. We found that the overall scope and impact of the program remains undefined; the program may result in costly, inequitable, and/or redundant treatment which may not address critical pollution problems; and the program will be a further drain on scarce Federal, State, and local pollution control resources. In addition, we found that the program is undergoing a regulatory review analysis and EPA has proposed that the effective date for program implementation be postponed indefinitely.

LIMITED PROGRESS IN CONTROLLING COMBINED SEWER DISCHARGES

To avoid overloading treatment facilities, combined sewer systems divert part of the storm flows directly into waterways. Combined sewers have caused pollution resulting in beach closures; health hazards; fish kills; and unsightly conditions in rivers, harbors, and bays. Although both the 1972 and 1978 water quality agreements addressed the need to control this problem, limited progress has been made, primarily because the structural solutions proposed are very expensive and EPA has not emphasized alternatives control techniques. In addition, according to EPA, any funds available for controlling combined sewer discharges have instead been spent on waste treatment facilities for treatment of the more concentrated portion of wastewaters.

In 1976 IJC reported that overflows from combined sewers were reaching serious proportions and that accelerated control efforts were needed. In November 1980 IJC's Great Lakes Water Quality Board reported that, of 51 specific problem areas (hot spots) on the Great Lakes, 20 had serious combined sewer overflows. Our analysis of these 20 areas showed that the overflows were most severe on Lakes Erie and Ontario.

One reason for the limited progress made in controlling combined sewer problems is that structural solutions to the problems, such as catchment basins, are costly. EPA estimates that the Great Lakes Basin States will need $8 billion to control combined sewer overflows—$2 billion just in the Chicago area. In the past, little funding was directed to correcting overflow problems largely because States gave combined sewers low priority compared to other municipal treatment needs.

The adequacy of future funding to control combined sewer overflows is highly questionable. Beginning in fiscal year 1983, $200 million a year is authorized for combined sewer projects nationwide, but the Great Lakes are ineligible for this funding as it only applies to projects which address water quality problems of marine bays and estuaries. Funding to address combined sewer problems in the Great Lakes will not be available until October 1, 1984, at which time the EPA Administrator is authorized to use construction grant funds for combined sewer overflow projects but only when such projects are major State priorities and the State Governor specifically requests the funding. Although a funding level of $2.4

[1] The agreement also requires phosphorus effluent limitations for municipal wastewater treatment plants. Phosphorus control efforts are discussed on pp. 15-26.

[2] "Costly Wastewater Treatment Plants Fail To Perform as Expected" (CED-81-9, Nov. 1980).

[3] All dischargers are required to have a permit issued by EPA or an EPA-approved State which specifies the pollutants that may be discharged and the limits on such discharges. The discharge permit is the principal enforcement mechanism for the water pollution program.

[4] "A New Approach Is Needed for the Federal Industrial Wastewater Pretreatment Program" (CED-82-37, Feb. 19, 1982).

billion annually is expected for the construction grants program, it is important to note that this money will be competed for on a national basis. Consequently, the amount of money that will become available for combined sewer problems in the Great Lakes is uncertain.

In controlling pollution from combined sewers, the 1978 agreement emphasizes the adoption of practical solutions, but, as noted previously, the solutions usually proposed are costly, large-scale structural projects. In a 1979 report we noted that a number of innovative or alternative control techniques which promise in helping control overflows are available. These techniques include storing rainwater on rooftops, parking lots, and elsewhere; disconnecting downspouts; cleaning streets; and using devices to increase sewage flow and to regulate and treat sewage at overflow points. While no technique alone provides the same degree of improvement offered by structural changes, a number of techniques together could minimize overflows and reduce the size of the construction projects. In our report we recommended that EPA emphasize the use of inexpensive techniques and require communities to make maximum use of lower cost alternatives.

Until additional emphasis is placed on abating pollution from combined sewer overflows, the United States will not meet a major provision of the 1978 agreement. Furthermore, uncontrolled overflows from combined sewers will diminish the effectiveness of existing municipal sewage treatment programs in those metropolitan areas in the Great Lakes Basin experiencing overflow problems.

Mr. KASTEN. Finally, Mr. President, I would like to add three new cosponsors to S. 765, "The Great Lakes Management Act of 1985." This is legislation that provides for comprehensive environmental management of the Great Lakes. It corrects the piecemeal approach to efforts to manage the Nation's most important water resource by establishing an agency with the responsibility for assuring comprehensive management of the resource and defining specific responsibilities of the Federal agencies that participate in lakes management. I would like to add as cosponsors to S. 765 Senators STEVENS, MATHIAS, and DURENBERGER.

GREAT LAKES MANAGEMENT ACT OF 1985

Mr. DURENBERGER. Mr. President, today I am pleased to add my name as a cosponsor to S. 765, Senator KASTEN's bill, the Great Lakes Management Act of 1985.

This bill is vital to the integrity and future of the Great Lakes. The Great Lakes—Erie, Huron, Michigan, Ontario, and Superior—and the connecting channels from the Earth's largest fresh water lake system.

The lakes contain about 20 percent of the world's fresh surface water and over 95 percent of the U.S. fresh surface water supply for the contiguous 48 States.

The Great Lakes basin includes all of Michigan, parts of Illinois, Indiana, Minnesota, New York, Ohio, Pennsylvania, Wisconsin, and the Province of Ontario. It contains 20 percent of the total U.S. population and supports economic activity that accounts for 25 percent of the annual national income for the United States.

Twenty percent of all U.S. manufacturing occurs in the eight State region, including 70 percent of total U.S. steel production. In 1983 23.7 billion kilowatthours of hydroelectric power was generated from Great Lakes water and 70 powerplants depend on the Great Lakes as their energy supply. International shipping provides $3 billion of economic activity to the region.

The Great Lakes provide 36 percent of the municipal water supply for the eight Great Lake States; 26 million people depend on the Great Lakes for their drinking water. $8 to $12 billion are generated through recreation and tourism in the Great Lakes States, plus $1.5 billion is generated through sports fishing. Approximately 8 million people visit one of the 12 national parks, either in the United States or Canada. Plus 55 million visit one of the 98 State parks established on the shores of one of the Great Lakes.

The Great Lakes have been viewed as a virtually inexhaustible supply of high-quality water. A water supply that is key to the economic development, stability and growth in the Great Lakes States. But like all great natural resoures, the basin has a vulnerable and fragile ecosystem.

The lakes are an environmental "sink." Inflowing rivers and streams gather and deliver pollutants from the entire basin to the finite bodies or water. Toxic chemicals—released from long-buried and rusting containers, from fertilizers, and from improperly processed industrial and human waste—all find their way to one of the Great Lakes. Further, the very flow of the system, from Lake Superior to Michigan and Huron, and thence to Erie and Ontario, has gathered and concentrated the debris of society. Scientists are able to measure the changes as the waters flow from the nearly pristine Superior to heavily burdened Ontario.

During the last 200 years the lakes have been used for food, fresh water, for homes, farms, and industry, transportation, power generation, recreation and waste disposal. The region has felt the impacts of intensive agriculture, heavy industry and tourism.

The heavy demands have taken their toll. The water quality of the lakes has declined sharply over the years, and in some instances the damage is beyond repair. The natural ecological unity of the lake system is overlaid by local, State, and national boundaries which has made it difficult, at best, to implement an environmental protection and recovery program to restore and enhance Great Lakes water quality.

In 1972 and again in 1978, the United States and Canada signed a Great Lakes water quality agreement. This agreement has gone a long way to heighten the awareness that a coordinated management approach is needed to protect and preserve the natural resources of the Great Lakes basin. Through this agreement, the Governments of Canada and the United States have held each other accountable for actions which affect the water quality of the Great Lakes as well as requiring that specific steps be taken to improve the water quality.

The Clean Water Act is the key vehicle to meet national and international water quality goals for the Great Lakes basin. The construction grant formula proposed by the Committee on Environment and Public Works is unduly biased against the Great Lakes region, and poses a serious threat to efforts to restore and enhance Great Lakes water quality.

This is just one example of the difficulties we face in providing for the management of the natural resources of the Great Lakes basin and with more than a dozen U.S. Federal agencies and eight States sharing management responsibilities, clearly, there is room for improvement. What is needed is a coordinated approach to Great Lakes management instead of the existing bureaucratic maze.

And Senator KASTEN's bill does that by establishing the Environmental Protection Agency as the lead agency with the responsibility for the environmental health of the Great Lakes. It also establishes a basin-wide approach to surveillance and monitoring of the water quality as well as mandating interagency cooperation in efforts to manage the resources of the Great Lakes basin.

This legislation represents a major initiative to provide for the comprehensive management of the Great Lakes. I commend Senator KASTEN for his foresight and efforts in developing this legislation. It is an idea whose time has come.

HIGH MARKS FOR STANFORD UNIVERSITY PRESIDENT DONALD KENNEDY

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, today's Boston Globe contains an excellent and informative article about an outstanding public servant and educator, President Donald Kennedy of Stanford University.

Many of us in the Senate worked closely with Don Kennedy and admired his talented leadership as Commissioner of the Food and Drug Administration in the 1970's. Mr. Kennedy was one of the best and most effective Commissioners the FDA has ever had, and all of us will be pleased to see that Don today is bringing the same extraordinary combination of intellectual ability and personal commitment to his challenging duties at Stanford University.

I commend Don Kennedy for his brilliant and many-sided record of achievement. Today's article in the Boston Globe will be of interest to all of us who know and respect Don Kennedy, and I ask unanimous consent that the article be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the Boston Globe, Apr. 30, 1985]

STANFORD UNIVERSITY'S PRESIDENT GETS HIGH MARKS FOR LEADERSHIP

(By Jeff Biddulph)

STANFORD, CA.—When San Francisco columnist Herb Caen recently wrote that Donald Kennedy is being talked about in Democratic circles as a candidate for the U.S. Senate in California in 1986, Stanford University students weren't surprised.

The Stanford University president, a former commissioner of the Food and Drug Administration in the Carter Administration, is always asked about the issue when he gives interviews. And when the Stanford Daily, the student newspaper, printed in its traditional April Fool's issue three years ago that Kennedy had declared his candidacy for the U.S. Senate, readers thought the story was genuine.

To all the speculation, Kennedy has the same answer: He is enjoying himself as Stanford's president and will remain in that position at least until after Stanford's centennial in 1991.

Besides Kennedy's involvement with the Carter Administration, there are other reasons for wondering about his political future. While he has been president, the university has dealt with an unusual number of volatile issues, and Kennedy is generally regarded to have made astute decisions, defusing crises and remaining popular among students and many faculty members. At the same time, Stanford's reputation as a university has, according to many accounts, risen tremendously in the almost five years that Kennedy has been president.

COMPARED TO REAGAN

Kennedy's political skills have caused some professors and students here to compare him to President Ronald Reagan. They say Kennedy, like Reagan, has a "Teflon coating" that allows him to make unpopular decisions and remain personally popular.

"I think he has been good at maintaining an image of somebody who, like Reagan, is always in the right," said Ronald Rebholz, an English professor.

"With some people, who don't know what goes on behind the scenes, there's the impression that he's such a nice guy and there must be some Teflon to him," said Mark Wilson, a senior and a political cartoonist for the Stanford Daily. Kennedy offers to go running at 6:30 a.m. twice a week with any student or faculty member who is interested, and Wilson is a regular on those runs.

"He's incredibly charismatic. I don't know anybody who's ever met him who wasn't immediately charmed," said Wilson.

SOME NOT CHARMED BY HIS DECISIONS

But Rebholz and many other faculty members are not charmed by some of Kennedy's decisions and many of his tactics.

Rebholz and political science Professor John Manley have led a campaign to investigate the ties between the university and the Hoover Institution, a conservative think tank on campus that boasts among its members some prominent advisers to the Reagan Administration. Edward Teller, a leading proponent of the Strategic Defense Initiative and a senior research fellow at Hoover, has advised Reagan on some scientific issues, and Martin Anderson, a senior fellow at Hoover, has advised the President on the economy. Reagan himself is an honorary fellow at Hoover.

"As long as the university maintains its present relationship with the Hoover Institution, the perception will grow that Stanford is associated with the right wing of the Republican Party," Rebholz said. "Here we have a major unit of the university that is engaged in partisan political activity—there is a distinction between individuals in the university and an entire unit of the university."

Kennedy counters that the charges of Hoover's political bias are exaggerated.

"I think the institution has been identified with a particular ideology, and quite strongly and quite voluntarily, but if you actually look at its composition, I think it's more diverse now than it was 15 years ago, and I think it will continue to evolve in that direction," he said in a recent interview.

Kennedy was forced to steer between many members of the faculty and members of the Hoover Institution in the controversy over the Ronald Reagan Presidential Library. Reagan indicated he wanted a library containing his presidential memorabilia, a museum and a public affairs center run by the Hoover Institution on the Stanford campus. Stanford faculty members were lukewarm on the idea, and many said Stanford should delay a decision until Reagan's 1984 presidential campaign was over.

Kennedy's position, articulated after intensive discussions with faculty members and the White House, was that the university would welcome a library in a small attached museum, but a public affairs center would have to be subject to academic governance by the university. The Stanford trustees accepted this position in the spring of 1984, and the White House eventually agreed to the compromise. Construction of the library is set to begin in 1987.

Many students, including members of the Black Student Union, have also criticized Kennedy's opposition to blanket divestiture of Stanford holdings in US companies active in South Africa. The trustees decided in February to divest the university's 124,000 shares of Motorola stock but only if it could be proved that the company continued to sell equipment to the South African police or military after 1983. The Stanford Coalition Against Apartheid estimates that Stanford has investments worth $215 million in companies that are involved in South Africa.

INVOLVED WITH SCHOOL, STUDENTS

Still, many Stanford students see Kennedy as a youthful, active and accessible president who is involved with Stanford and its students. A rabid football fan, he is known to get apoplectic when people mention the 1982 football game with rival University of California at Berkeley, which Stanford lost when Berkeley made a highly disputed kick return with only a few seconds left in the game.

Kennedy lectures on biology many times a year, advises five freshmen every other year and visits just about every dormitory on campus.

He says simply: "I love Stanford students . . . I want them to have the sense that if there is something they want to unload, there's a fair chance that at some time during the year they'll get me in a position where I can hear."

Kennedy also has taken a number of stances that are popular with students. He has criticized government controls on the publication of unclassified research, called for the Soviet government to release dissident citizen Andrei Sakharov and strongly opposed government cuts in student financial aid.

Stanford's academic reputation has certainly grown during the 1980s. Many polls have rated Stanford as the best or near the best in many departments, especially in the sciences and engineering. The holdings of the university's libraries have increased manyfold, as has fundraising and the number of undergraduate applicants.

Still, Kennedy seems to think the university's achievements aren't good enough. He frequently talks about areas for improvement—restructuring the residential education system, which he compares unfavorably to Harvard's and Yale's, and garnering more cultural resources, such as special collections and museums—and laments what he perceives to be an eastern bias against Stanford.

"From the more gothic and somber eastern institutions with which we are often compared, the view is that Stanford is a little happy-go-lucky—academically intense enough, but intellectually lazy, as though somewhat addled by the sun," Kennedy told this year's freshman class in September.

He said the reputation has been accepted, instead of fought by Stanford students, and he urged them to become more serious about intellectual pursuit both in and out of the classroom.

"If seriousness becomes a casualty of student discourse on this campus, then surely controversy will also: and that will impoverish us all." he said.

POPE JOHN PAUL II SPEAKS OUT ABOUT DRUGS

Mrs. HAWKINS. Mr. President, the most influential human being on Earth recently addressed the seriousness of the worldwide problem of drug abuse.

In a recent address before a gathering of Catholic bishops in Thailand, Pope John Paul II discussed the problem posed for youth, and others, by drugs. This saintly man, seen and heard by more of the world community than anyone, and paid attention to by more of the world community than anyone, remarked in this address that "the whole human community must be mobilized to confront this issue. But here the church has a specific task of educating to human dignity, to the respect of self, to the values of the spirit."

The Pontiff displayed his usual courage by delivering these remarks to

Catholic prelates in a drug-producing nation, and thus their effect was strongly felt. In these widely published remarks, he also stressed the benefits of educating youth to the dangers of drug use. The Pope stated that Catholic schools, in particular, are "in a position to make an excellent contribution to the solid education needed by the young to overcome the temptation of drugs."

Mr. President, as he does in every one of his pilgrimages, Pope John Paul II went to Thailand to spread the message of the power of the love of God. This holy man, in every nation he visits, celebrates the love of God, and the presence of Christ in every people on Earth. In thus serving the world community, he recognizes the terrible destructive force of drugs, and the emotional and physical devastation they cause. In speaking to the people of Thailand about the problems of illicit narcotics, the Pope also brought a message of hope and love by accentuating the positive: that the treasure of faith is ever present in every man, and for the joy this brings to be fully realized, the intrusion of drugs is unnecessary. As the Pope said so beautifully in his address "* * * The search (is) for that true joy which abides in the heart and not in the passing exhilaration of the senses."

Mr. President, I am excited that this great and good man has joined us in our war against drug abuse. He is an ally of power beyond measure as we fight to control this most serious of world problems.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that a copy of Pope John Paul II's speech before Catholic bishops in Thailand, entitled "The Formidable Problem of Drugs," be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

THE FORMIDABLE PROBLEM OF DRUGS

(The problem posed for youth and others by drugs was discussed May 11 by Pope John Paul II when he addressed the bishops of Thailand in Bangkok. "The whole human community must be mobilized to confront this issue. But here the church has a specific task of educating to human dignity, to the respect of self, to the values of the spirit," the pope stated. Catholic schools are "in a position to make an excellent contribution to the solid education needed by the young to overcome the temptation of drugs," he added. It is young people who are assailed most by the problems of the modern world, the pope told the Thai bishops. Young people "need the pastoral support of their bishops, together with their priests, in order to develop and persevere in their Christian vocation." The pope's address, given in English, follows:)

1. My heart is filled with gratitude in this hour of collegial unity. I am grateful to the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, who has given me the opportunity to make this pastoral visit to Thailand and to proclaim the paschal mystery in your midst. And I am grateful to you, venerable and dear brothers, for having desired my presence among you and for having welcomed me with such warmth and fraternal love.

Through the power of Christ's death and resurrection we are experiencing in a special way the unity of the church, and in this ecclesial unity we are living the life of Christ. Yes, Jesus Christ, the Son of God and the redeemer of mankind, is with us and in us. As we celebrate our unity in him, the mystery of his risen life unfolds in us. Jesus Christ is alive in his church, and his church is alive in him. As pastors of the flock, we are gathered to celebrate this mystery of Christ's living presence in his church.

Indeed, I have come to Thailand to pay homage to the Christ who lives in your people, to the Christ who in your people has himself become Thai.

2. The Christian communities that we are called to serve, dear brother bishops, are the communities that live the life of Christ in all its dimensions. In your people Christ continues his life of prayer. Through the members of his body, the church, he adores his Father, thanks him and offers expiation and supplication for the world.

The mystery of Christ's redemptive suffering is renewed in the community to which you minister day after day. Through suffering humanity, Christ brings to completion the measure of suffering that belongs to him (cf. Col. 1:24).

In the community of the faithful the risen Christ works incessantly for the salvation of the world. In his zeal he offers himself to his Father for the conversion of sinners. He exercises his power to forgive sins, he touches consciences, he heals hearts. He stands in the midst of the community as the suffering servant of the Lord and of humanity, inviting everyone to take on his dispositions of humility and meekness.

In the church Christ continues to proclaim the Gospel of God's kingdom. He himself catechizes. He himself reveals his Father and the Holy Spirit. Moreover, the very life of the most Holy Trinity is accomplished in the Church. Through his members, indeed acting in his members, Jesus loves his Father to the point of saying in all truth: I love the Father (Jn. 14:3). And the Father, in loving the church, fulfills Christ's own words: "The Father loves me" (Jn. 10:17).

Dear brothers: the mystery of the church is the mystery of the life of Christ, the mystery of the living Christ. And this is the mystery which we are living together with our people. All our pastoral efforts are aimed at assisting the faithful to share more intimately in the life of Christ.

3. A heightened awareness of the profound mystery of Christ's life in us sustains us in our apostolic activities. This awareness, nurtured in faith, generates in us pastoral strength. When we realize that the living Christ is in us, we understand more deeply that "God did not give us a spirit of timidity but a spirit of power and love and self-control" (2 Tm. 1:7).

Being rooted in this conviction, you radiate new hope as you announce the Gospel of peace and minister to your flocks, however small they may be. Your ministry takes on an added sureness as you realize how relevant Christ's promise is: "I am with you always, to the close of the age" (Mt. 28:20). Fresh joy is manifested in the witness that you give; you communicate a serene confidence to your local churches.

With renewed zeal you then proclaim the life which was proclaimed to you, "which was from the beginning . . . the eternal life which was with the Father" (1 Jn. 1:1-2). The life of Christ, and in Chirst the life of the most Holy Trinity, is the great treasure that you share with all those who freely choose to listen to you and to accept your witness, your teaching, your proclamation of the faith.

4. This great treasure must be presented in an especially dynamic way to the young people of the church. It is they who are assailed most by the problems of the modern world; it is they who need a particular grace from Christ to endure the Christian combat with temptation and sin. In Christ the young people can find the answers to the deep questions that are at the basis of all Christian choices. How greatly they need the pastoral support of their bishops, together with their priests, in order to develop and persevere in their Christian vocation.

In speaking of the young people and their needs we cannot ignore the formidable problem of narcotics in the world today, as well as the causes of this phenomenon and the means needed to face this crisis of humanity. The whole human community must be mobilized to confront this issue. But here the church has a specific task of educating to human dignity, to the respect of self, to the values of the spirit, to the search for that true joy which abides in the heart and not in the passing exhilaration of the senses.

In this regard the Catholic schools in particular are in a position to make an excellent contribution to the solid education needed by the young to overcome the temptation of drugs. The Catholic schools provide a proper context to impart the information that will assist young people to resist the pressures placed upon them and the opportunity for them to discuss with their teachers the safeguards that experience can offer. Above all, the power of Christ's word, presented through the ministry of the bishops, offers to all the young the deep solution to all the many problems that touch their consciences as they strive to live the life of Christ.

In this area of narcotics and in so many others the pastors of the flock must stand vigilant in the midst of the faithful, proclaming the great motivation of the Christian vocation, which is to live the life of Jesus Christ.

5. As bishops you are called upon to help your people face many issues that affect their lives as individuals and as members of a family and of society. If your people are constantly reminded of their Christian dignity, of their life in Christ, they will have an ever fresh motivation to face the challenges made to them by the Gospel of Christ, which has much to say about public and private morality, about the need to worship God and to serve one's neighbor. As bishops, never hesitate to emphasize to your communities how their Christian vocation gives them an important mission of Christian witness. Christ himself put it this way: "Let your light so shine before men that they may see your good works and give glory to your Father who is in heaven" (Mt. 5:16).

Dear brother bishops: I am close to you as you strive to help your young people and the Christian families from which they come, as well as the whole Christian community, to live to the full the life of Christ. As you endeavor to promote vocations to the priesthood and religious life and as each of you strives to be a brother, father and friend to the priests who collaborate with you in building up the church in faith and love, know that you in turn are supported and loved by the pope, by the whole college of bishops and by the entire church. This is indeed the mystery of the church: to live Christ's life and to live it together.

Everything we do as bishops must be marked by the attitude of the Good Shepherd, who through us wants to continue to love his flock because he came "that they may have life, and have it abundantly" (Jn. 10:10).

Venerable and dear brothers: This is the meaning of our lives and of our sacred ministry: to live in Christ Jesus and to serve that life in others.

Praised be Jesus Christ! Praised be Jesus Christ in Thailand!

FIRST BUDGET RESOLUTION FOR FISCAL YEAR 1986

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on amendment No. 43 to the motion to recommit, which the clerk will report:

The bill clerk read as follows:

A concurrent resolution (S. Con. Res. 32) setting forth the congressional budget for the U.S. Government for the fiscal years 1986, 1987, and 1988 and revising the congressional budget for the U.S. Government for the fiscal year 1985.

The Senate resumed consideration of the concurrent resolution.

Pending:

(1) Dole-Domenici Amendment No. 37, in the nature of a substitute.

(2) Dole-Domenici Amendment No. 38 (to Amendment No. 37), of a perfecting nature.

(3) Dole-Domenici Amendment No. 39 (to Amendment No. 38), in the nature of a substitute.

(4) Dole-Domenici Amendment No. 41 (to the resolution), of a perfecting nature.

(5) Dole-Domenici Amendment No. 42 (to Amendment No. 41), in the nature of a substitute.

(6) Dole motion to recommit the resolution with instructions to report forthwith.

(7) Dole-Domenici Amendment No. 43 (to the aforementioned motion), to strike the instructions and insert language in lieu of the language in the resolution.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time? If neither side yields time, time runs equally.

Mr. CHILES. Mr. President, I yield to the distinguished Senator from South Carolina 15 minutes off the resolution.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator is recognized.

Mr. HOLLINGS. I thank the distinguished Senator from Florida, our ranking member on the Budget Committee.

Mr. President, one of our colleagues asked me just a moment ago, about this big tax bill that I may offer.

Let me address that particular comment because, Mr. President, I'm only suggesting what the President of the United States said in his 1984 budget message:

Fourth, because we must ensure reduction and eventual elimination of deficits over the next several years, I will propose a standby tax limited to 1 percent of the gross national product to start in the fiscal year 1986.

This is the President of the United States, Ronald Reagan speaking.

He said that he would propose a tax if we did not get the deficit down.

Now, at that particular time, I say to the distinguished majority leader, President Reagan projected a 1986 deficit of $147 billion. Instead of $147 billion, we now have a $220 billion deficit and it continues to grow and grow.

What I am submitting is bipartisan, and I do not want to talk in any partisan terms. But I must correct the record and the impression that has been made throughout the country, in the media, in the editorials, that somehow because Fritz Mondale and Ronald Reagan got in a silly campaign last year, we are not going to think rationally with respect to this deficit.

The President of the United States said he would impose a standby tax of 1 percent of the gross national product. In 1986, this would generate $43 billion in revenues.

Now, under our bipartisan plan, I say to the distinguished majority leader, there is a call for only $25 billion in revenues. You see, I am on the conservative side. Ronald Reagan is a high-tax man; I am the low-tax man.

But I want to congratulate the majority leader on the progress that he has made. And I am genuine in this. I could not be more sincere.

Right after the election, the Secretary of the Treasury, then Don Regan, came out with the charts. He was one of these fiscal Iacoccas. He said 75 percent would not pay taxes, 25 percent, 40 percent would. He broke my TV; no one could understand him.

And I asked the distinguished majority leader, "For Heaven's sake, tackle him and let's get on with the deficit." Tax simplification is important but reducing the deficit is our No. 1 priority.

In December, you could not mention defense, now in April you can, due to the distinguished majority leader. I remember his going to the White House right before Christmas and the President said, "Now Bob, I want $35 billion more in defense. I'm going to have to spend $27 billion more in interest costs. That is $52 billion. I want $12 billion more in health costs. So that is $64 billion. I can't touch Social Security, so that is $7 billion more. I have got an increase in foreign aid and space and science, that's another $4 billion."

That is $75 billion in increases the President asked for. And then he said, "And, by the way, Bob, I want you to cut spending $50 billion. And, oh, by the way, Bob, don't touch revenues."

So you came back and publicly stated, before the President gave his State of the Union Address that, "Most respectfully, I am going to have to go to work on the Hill, because I have been given mission impossible."

If you take the President's particular budget and cut $50 billion from it then add his increases in spending, which he must have, you still have increases of $25 billion, and you have done absolutely nothing to reduce the deficits. So, to your credit, where you could not discuss defense in December, we can discuss defense now in April. Where you could not discuss Social Security in January, you can discuss Social Security in April. And in the April issue of U.S. News & World Report, the distinguished majority leader, when asked what about the alternative of raising taxes, answered: "It is just not going to happen." And talking along, just to save a little time, I quote Senator DOLE:

Yet, I assume that if we found some egregious loophole in the Tax Code that should be closed we might be able to address it. In my view that would not be a tax increase.

Bless you, I really love you for that. [Laughter.] Because, I do not want to increase taxes and go back to South Carolina and hear that "Hollings is a tax increaser." I am just closing egregious loopholes. If we can talk sense, we can get a plan. The great objection I have to the Chiles plan and to the so-called White House Senate Republican compromise, is that they do not do the job. Under the Congressional Budget Office figures, most respectfully, to both Senators who have worked so hard on this, you have given me a half a hair cut.

You have deficits in excess of $100 billion. You have $107 billion according to assumptions of the Congressional Budget Office. Senator CHILES has $106 billion according to assumptions of the Congressional Budget Office. So if I support your compromise I would be supporting deficits in excess of $100 billion in 1990. So that when I run next year——

Mr. CHILES. 1988 or 1990?

Mr. HOLLINGS. 1990.

The Senator has $145 billion in 1988 and still a very large $107 billion by 1990. I want to help, I want to compromise, and I want to go along with a true compromise. But when I run next year—whoever my opponent is stands up and says, "This Hollings is a big windbag on budgets, we have heard all about his budget, he was chairman, and all of that. But what did he vote for? He voted to have at least $100 billion deficits from now as far as the eye can see including over $107 billion in 1990." That is my political dilemma. The fiscal dilemma is the markets read it the same way the politicians do. You still have over $100 billion. You have put the bullet in your mouth but you will not bite it. And I say if you are going this far, Senator CHILES—and I appreciate your courage in acknowledging that revenues must be part of deficit reduction—let us go ahead, bite that bullet, and come on down, and do the job.

We can agree on defense. We can agree on Social Security. We can agree on social programs. We can agree on maintaining the Small Business Administration. I find the Chamber of Commerce and the Federation of Independent Businesses downtown saying I want you to go along with the compromise but we are going to save SBA. You have a lot of doublespeak here. That's what I want to address now that I have held the distinguished majority leader. I do not want to hold the Senator. The Senator has more important business.

Mr. DOLE. Will the Senator yield for 1 second on the resolution?

Mr. HOLLINGS. Yes, sir.

Mr. DOLE. I hope when all of this preliminary maneuvering is completed that there will be a majority on both sides to sit down and work out a package. I have to believe the single biggest job in America is this big ticking time bomb called the Federal deficit. Some have been slow to realize it. Some have been waiting for growth to take over. We are all for growth. It is painless. You do not have to do anything, and we want growth. It is a very important factor. But I am encouraged by the Senator's comments. He has been out front on freezing some of this long before anybody else in the Senate.

I think the one problem we have in the so-called bipartisan package is the rather large tax numbers. We will have to examine each one closely. But I hope there is a difference in whether you close loopholes for rate reduction or close loopholes so you do not have to cut spending. My view is if there is going to be any loopholes closed at all, it ought to be for rate reduction—not more spending.

Mr. HOLLINGS. I agree with you thoroughly. And, if you can fashion the Dole-Domenici-Chiles compromise which would be a true compromise, then I will go along. What happens is with the doublespeak that we have in this town is the leadership and the White House got together. That is like me going into executive session with myself in a telephone booth. You did not have Senator KASSEBAUM, Senator ANDREWS, Senator MATHIAS and those who really had taken a different view—and Senator GRASSLEY who voted differently in your Budget Committee. That is a matter of record. He voted for this freeze.

We have bipartisan support. We had 12 Republican's over the objection of the leadership last year, in May, vote for this particular bipartisan freeze approach not because they liked it, but because they found—as you indicate now in your comments—it is absolutely necessary we get something done. If we can get that kind of movement going, that would be a true compromise, and you would get this Senator to hush.

I am just trying to go along, but I am trying to get the job done. I do not want to go halfway, and not get this job done.

That is our dilemma. What we see in the newspapers' reporting of the so-called compromise, is that it cuts $52 billion in spending in 1986. That is not the case. That is absolutely false. You read that in the news. The Chamber comes up here, the Business Round Table comes up here, and the Federation of Independent Businesses come up here. These are the sort of sentries at the gate for the fiscal future of the United States, and we have total confusion because they use Rose Garden Defense figures and not the nonpartisan Congressional Budget Office.

The compromise does not cut $52 billion, it cuts $37 billion. And it does not get the deficit down to $98 billion by 1988. It gets the deficit down to $145 billion. And it does not produce a balanced budget by the decade's end—that is absolutely false. The deficit in 1990 is $107 billion. So the Senators who are called to sacrifice and lose their programs in EDA, REA, SBA, Amtrak, feeding, housing, student loans—and we are asking 1 million students to drop the course as the President chants stay the course—these Senators lose all of these vital programs and the deficit never goes below $100 billion. But we have decimated education and the investment in the human infra structure. Why? To continue investment in the corporate infrastructure. It is an imbalance. Yes. They can see oil companies needing incentives. Put that down, double space it, and underline it. Put it down solid. Oil companies need incentive. Little children—you give them a 30-cent breakfast, and you have ruined them for life. They become drones, they become immoral, and they will never work. That is what they will tell you in these board rooms around here. And if you look at the National Government's budget, 28 percent of it goes for those 65 years of age and over—and less than 6 percent goes for the youth, for the feeding, for the day care center, for women, infants, and children feeding, for school lunches, student loans, Pell grants. All of these—less than 6 percent. We are supposed to prepare the next generation for the future in this land, and we turned this into a welfare machine with pollster politicking. We see that posterity under those polls can do nothing for us.

We see no reason we should do anything for posterity. We look to the next election rather than the next generation and to the seniors, the poor seniors. We never think of the future of this country. It has gotten to be a national disgrace. I do not know how they will ever get it back into focus with all the shenanigans that go on with respect to budgets. It is a misallocation. The administration says do away with Pell grants and student loans so that General Electric does not have to pay taxes. Do away with the Small Business Administration—and listen to the Chamber of Commerce who is supposed to be the business representative. The small businesses in America—who really represents them? The National Association of Manufacturers is big business; the Round Table is big business; big business has a lot of representation.

Well, the Chamber is supposed to represent small business too. But they came and they said, "We want you to approve doing away with the Small Business Adminstration so General Dynamics and 127 others do not have to pay taxes."

That is what they tell the national Congress in their zeal to get behind the so-called compromise, which is not even a compromise.

I wish I could get our friends in the media to cover the budget so people can understand it. I appreciate it is difficult. But what has made it difficult is using the flim-flam of the national administration with the so-called Rose Garden figures.

There is another objection I have to the Chiles plan. On defense the plan used OMB economies and in the other parts, it uses CBO. That is why I draw attention to the budget plan chart behind to show my colleagues what each plan does.

I wish the distinguished Senator from Florida would read the RECORD today on his cuts. The best I can find out is they are 10 to 25 percent in certain programs. I have yet to find out where those programs are and what the cuts may be.

Be that as it may, we are not going to get anywhere unless we get a bipartisan approach on all segments of the budget. The President of the United States comes on national TV and his words are, "No part of the budget is spared."

It spares defense to the tune of $24 billion. You are not sparing defense. He wants to increase that.

He spares the space program and foreign aid. He spares social security to the tune of $7 billion. More increases.

He spares revenues. He does not want them touched. He says no part of the budget is spared and then he looks at us and says, "by the way, get rid of the old, filthy Amtrak and the Small Business Administration and we can balance the Government's budget."

That is a reallocation. It is a flim-flam. That is not a compromise we are voting on this afternoon. It is a flim-flam and we all know it.

I would like to get into the debate and into the issues so we can decide where we will allocate our priorities of our national government.

We could not find support for deficit reduction last May—even though we had 38 Senators vote for a bipartisan freeze—because the administration had a higher priority of reelecting the President. I understand that. They could not find a crisis or a problem.

Now they find the crisis and the problem but they jump to a halfway solution of doing away with all programs.

I believe in cuts. We have in our bipartisan plan exactly what we had in the Budget Committee. We started in the Budget Committee with the Hollings-Andrews-Exon freeze. Senator STENNIS was with us on this, too, and Senator KASSEBAUM voted for it along with Senators ANDREWS and GRASSLEY in the Budget Committee.

Where we could get less than the freeze, I stood quiet because we can cut some and we cut some $4 billion below a freeze through extensive reductions in foreign aid, transportation, energy, and agriculture. Those are still included in this bipartisan approach.

We took the Chiles mark on education; the Domenici mark on international affairs. We tried really to fashion a political document to get the most votes and get the job done. There was give-and-take where we could to try to attract the most votes.

I think we have, by far and away, the best proposition here that does the job. There could be many, many votes on this floor, including many popular votes on domestic programs but they do not do the job.

The Hollings-Andrews-Exon-Stennis-Bingaman freeze is the only one that is bipartisan and, the only one that will do the job and lower the deficit to 2 percent of the GNP by 1988. The 2 percent is the goal set by the administration and the Federal Reserve. None of the other plans reach that objective but we do. And the administration does not cut $52 billion in 1986 but only $37 billion—while we cut $51 billion.

The only plan that brings the deficit down on a gradual curve, puts Government in the black, allows the investment community to count on the Congress finally having controlled itself and avoid the inflation recession that we are all terrified about—the only one that does that is our bipartisan plan.

If anyone has a better one, I hope they will submit it. I will be glad to support it. I feel just as seriously as the majority leader does that the No. 1 problem we have before us is the deficit.

I met with the National Governors Conference in February and they endorsed the freeze. I met with the Republican Governors who said they do not understand Washington going full speed down the road with continued spending in all regards and not paying the bills.

With respect to the mayors, I met with them they support a freeze. What we are saying to President Reagan with all of his "make my day" and "veto" baloney is, "Mr. President, you ran on this budget last year. You said it was a good budget. You took 49 of the 50 States."

No one is really suffering at the present moment, certainly not the Defense Department, which has $52 billion backed up in the pipeline in unobligated funds. It is like force feeding a goose over there. They are falling all over the place. That is why you see all the waste, fraud, and abuse. Contractors cannot physically imbibe, consume, or allocate $150 billion in 5 years. You cannot do it. That has been proven. The DOD needs to steady the boat some and show restraint.

We are saying, "Mr. President, we have given you a good, workable budget on all the programs for 1 more year. If you were mayor of a city, this is exactly what you would have to do."

We print dollars in Washington. They do not print dollars in a Governor's office or a mayor's office back home. Only in this way are we going to be able to control ourselves.

I thank the Senator from Wyoming, the distinguished majority leader, and my distinguished minority leader for yielding this time. We have a vote coming in the Commerce Committee.

I hope Senators will consider and look at this particular chart, which really brings it into focus. That is not HOLLINGS or STENNIS or EXON focusing, but the Congressional Budget Office showing exactly what we do.

We are talking this language of freeze. The President says, "We are freezing defense."

Robert Louis Stevenson said years ago, man does not live by bread alone but principally by catchwords.

You hear the President and he says, "We are freezing defense," and goes on to say a certain percentage. The inference, of course, is that it is frozen. No one really believes and understands that the President of the United States is asking for $24 billion more under this compromise in outlays and $21 billion in budget authority. There is no freeze there.

The press crowd continues on reporting the President's doublespeak. How do you make sense on the floor of the national Congress if we cannot get hold of ourselves and understand exactly what we are doing?

The President, is leading the way for more increases in space and social programs. The President even has an increase in his budget for the National Endowment for Democracy. That is $30 million to the political parties so they can go to Geneva and sit and eat and tell them about government in the United States.

I mean, a tight budget, a sacrifice? There is no sacrifice at all in this so-called White House compromise that they are voting on today. It is a redistribution. It is the other extreme.

I should note for the record what really occurred between 1969 and 1979 was seven tax reforms. We cut taxes and cut taxes and cut taxes, to the tune of $720 billion lost in revenues.

While those cuts were going on under the Democrats, Republican Senator ROTH and Congressman KEMP said, "You Democrats are just redistributing the wealth." If you cannot beat them, you are going to join them.

"So we are going to give you the Kemp-Roth, 5-10-10-percent tax cuts." The distinguished Senator from Kansas said that was totally unheard of and ridiculous; we would never do that.

Well, we have done it. A 25-percent tax cut.

That is exactly what happened in those years. We have been cutting rather than raising national taxes.

Now comes the President of the United States and he goes totally overboard with Kemp-Roth. David Stockman described it as having hogs feeding at the trough.

We decimated the corporate taxes. If any corporation is paying a tax, they better get a new CPA. There is something wrong with them. I do not blame GE or General Dynamics. I blame us. We, in the Congress, put it in but they do not want to say that on either side of the aisle. We are the ones who put those provisions into law.

So hogs feeding at the trough, but now the hogs are coming home to—not to roost but to wallow, and we here in the hog pen are wallowing with them.

And many of the Members still give the media the doublespeak about the great sacrifice when there is no sacrifice; the great compromise with no compromise; the great freeze with no freeze; the great cut in spending with increases in spending.

And they keep that babble going. And they wonder why Washington gets by with it.

You would not let me get by with that. If I were Governor of South Carolina at this time last year, and I came down the capitol steps in Columbia and you put that microphone under my nose and said, "Governor, what are you going to do about the $200 million deficit"—which compares with the $200 billion Federal deficit—and I rared back and said, "Oh, ho, ho, ho, this is an election year, there is a lot of political cost in doing anything in an election year; but after my reelection, we are going to go to work on this thing," you would say to me, "Son, there is not going to be any reelection for you unless you get to work between now and next November. You have to get the job done."

They do not let us get by with that. But all our distinguished reporters, great thinkers and great budgeteers fall into the psychology of the thing, that the budget is a heck of a lot of facts, and just get in rhythm and show yourself as the great eruditer of the situation—that is what has been occurring in this entire budget process.

We are not sacrificing, we are not compromising, we are not cutting spending. We are increasing spending in different areas. That is what they are asking us to vote on this afternoon. I am saying, stop everything—revenues, social programs, Social Security, defense—they all have to hold the line for just 1 year.

That is not all that difficult, frankly, I say to the Senator from Arkansas. Governor PRYOR, if you were to do that in Arkansas, and I did it in South Carolina, the people in the media would commend us for it. But they keep writing the doublespeak in the news columns and we keep doing it on the floor of the U.S. Senate. That is how we got into this particular mess.

Reaganomics, we are going to grow out of it. The President comes here in February and says, we have the 39th month of the greatest economic boom. Just the other night, less than 1 week ago, he got on TV and said we are doing fine, we are doing good. Then Don Regan, his right arm, said the economy is not healthy. Finally we got Regan straightened out. Now, if we could only get some facts before the President so he could learn what's in his budget.

I am glad the Senator from Florida is back. He has been more than generous with his time. I appreciate it very much.

I yield the floor, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER [Mr. KASTEN]. Who yields time?

If neither side yields time, the time runs equally on both sides against the amendment.

RECESS UNTIL 2 P.M.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The hour of 12 noon having arrived, in accordance with the previous order, the Senate now stands in recess until 2 p.m.

Thereupon, at 12 noon, the Senate recessed until 2 p.m.; whereupon, the Senate reassembled when called to order by the Presiding Officer [Mrs. KASSEBAUM].

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The hour of 2 p.m. having arrived, who yields time? If no one yields time, the time will be equally charged.

Mr. METZENBAUM addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Ohio.

Mr. METZENBAUM. Madam President, how much time remains on the present amendment?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. A minute and a half.

Mr. METZENBAUM. And the Senate is not in a quorum call at the moment?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That is correct.

Mr. METZENBAUM. Madam President, I move that the Senate recess for 15 minutes and that immediately after the Senate reconvenes, the Senate shall immediately proceed to a vote on the Moynihan-Byrd-Riegle-et al. amendments to restore Social Security cost-of-living increases to current law.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator's motion is not a motion but a unanimous-consent request.

Is there objection?

Mr. DOLE. I object.

Mr. METZENBAUM. Madam President, I did not hear what the Chair said. What did the Chair say?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair said that the Senator's motion is not a motion but a unanimous-consent request and as such would require unanimous consent, and an objection has been heard.

Mr. METZENBAUM. Madam President, I appeal the decision of the Chair, and I ask for the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there a sufficient second? There is a sufficient second.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is, Will the decision of the Chair stand as the decision of the Senate? The yeas and nays have been ordered.

Mr. DOLE addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The majority leader.

Mr. DOLE. Madam President, I suggest the absence of a quorum——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

Mr. DOLE [continuing]. To be charged against the resolution.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The quorum will be charged against the resolution. The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislation clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. METZENBAUM. Mr. President, reserving the right to object, I did not hear that.

Mr. DOLE. I am just calling off the quorum.

Mr. METZENBAUM. I have no objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The question before the Senate is, Shall the order of the Chair stand as the judgment of the Senate? The ruling of the Chair is that the motion of the Senator from Ohio is not in order. The motion of the Senator from Ohio is that the Senate recess for 15 minutes and that immediately after the Senate reconvenes, the Senate shall immediately proceed to a vote on the Moynihan-Byrd-Riegle-et al. amendment to restore Social Security cost-of-living increases through current law.

On this question the yeas and nays have been ordered, and the clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll.

Mr. SIMPSON. I announce that the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. EAST] is absent due to illness.

I further announce that, if present and voting, the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. EAST] would vote "yea."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Are there any other Senators in the Chamber who desire to vote?

The result was announced—yeas 54, nays 45, as follows:

[Rollcall vote No. 33 Leg.]

YEAS—54

Abdnor	Gramm	Murkowski
Andrews	Grassley	Nickles
Armstrong	Hatch	Packwood
Boschwitz	Hatfield	Pressler
Byrd	Hawkins	Quayle
Chafee	Hecht	Roth
Cochran	Heinz	Rudman
Cohen	Helms	Simpson
D'Amato	Humphrey	Specter
Danforth	Kassebaum	Stafford
Denton	Kasten	Stevens
Dole	Laxalt	Symms
Domenici	Long	Thurmond
Durenberger	Lugar	Trible
Evans	Mathias	Wallop
Garn	Mattingly	Warner
Goldwater	McClure	Weicker
Gorton	McConnell	Wilson

NAYS—45

Baucus	Ford	Melcher
Bentsen	Glenn	Metzenbaum
Biden	Gore	Mitchell
Bingaman	Harkin	Moynihan
Boren	Hart	Nunn
Bradley	Heflin	Pell
Bumpers	Hollings	Proxmire
Burdick	Inouye	Pryor
Chiles	Johnston	Riegle
Cranston	Kennedy	Rockefeller
DeConcini	Kerry	Sarbanes
Dixon	Lautenberg	Sasser
Dodd	Leahy	Simon
Eagleton	Levin	Stennis
Exon	Matsunaga	Zorinsky

NOT VOTING—1

East

So the ruling of the Chair was sustained as the judgment of the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The motion of the Senator from Ohio is not in order.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote.

AMENDMENT NO. 44

(Purpose: An amendment to the pending amendment to the instructions)

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I send an amendment to the desk, and I ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Kansas [Mr. DOLE] for himself, Mr. DOMENICI, and other Senators, proposes an amendment numbered 44.

In the pending amendment, do the following:

On page 2, line 8, strike the figure and insert "$736,200,000,000".

On page 2, line 9, strike the figure and insert "$793,600,000,000".

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that further reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, reserving the right to object——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the majority leader?

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, for the moment, I object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is heard.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

On page 2, line 10, strike the figure and insert "$866,300,000,000".

On page 2, line 11, strike the figure and insert "$955,900,000,000".

On page 2, line 14, strike the figure and insert "$0".

On page 2, line 15, strike the figure and insert "$900,000,000".

On page 2, line 16, strike the figure and insert "$2,000,000,000".

On page 2, line 17, strike the figure and insert "$3,400,000,000".

On page 2, line 21, strike the figure and insert "44,800,000,000".

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that further reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? Hearing no objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

On page 2, line 22, strike the figure and insert "$51,000,000,000".

On page 2, line 23, strike the figure and insert "$56,100,000,000".

On page 2, line 24, strike the figure and insert "$61,300,000,000".

On page 3, line 5, strike the figure and insert "$186,200,000,000".

On page 3, line 6, strike the figure and insert "$200,700,000,000".

On page 3, line 7, strike the figure and insert "$216,900,000,000".

On page 3, line 8, strike the figure and insert "$248,300,000,000".

On page 3, line 11, strike the figure and insert "$1,055,600,000,000".

On page 3, line 12, strike the figure and insert "$1,076,000,000,000".

On page 3, line 13, strike the figure and insert "$1,139,000,000,000".

On page 3, line 14, strike the figure and insert "$1,216,100,000,000".

On page 3, line 17, strike the figure and insert "$949,100,000,000".

On page 3, line 18, strike the figure and insert "$969,000,000,000".

On page 3, line 19, strike the figure and insert "$1,013,100,000,000".

On page 3, line 20, strike the figure and insert "$1,055,700,000,000".

On page 3, line 24, strike the figure and insert "$212,900,000,000".

On page 3, line 25, strike the figure and insert "$175,400,000,000".

On page 4, line 1, strike the figure and insert "$146,800,000,000".

On page 4, line 2, strike the figure and insert "$99,800,000,000".

On page 4, line 5, strike the figure and insert "$1,849,300,000,000".

On page 4, line 6, strike the figure and insert "$2,088,000,000,000".

On page 4, line 7, strike the figure and insert "$2,316,300,000,000".

On page 4, line 8, strike the figure and insert "$2,529,300,000,000".

On page 4, line 11, strike the figure and insert "$25,500,000,000".

On page 4, line 12, strike the figure and insert "$238,700,000,000".

On page 4, line 13, strike the figure and insert "$228,300,000,000".

On page 4, line 14, strike the figure and insert "$213,100,000,000".

On page 4, line 21, strike the figure and insert "$52,900,000,000".

On page 4, line 23, strike the figure and insert "$69,200,000,000".

On page 4, line 25, strike the figure and insert "$68,200,000,000".

On page 5, line 3, strike the figure and insert "$30,000,000,000".

On page 5, line 5, strike the figure and insert "$74,500,000,000".

On page 5, line 7, strike the figure and insert "$68,200,000,000".

On page 5, line 10, strike the figure and insert "$27,400,000,000".

On page 5, line 12, strike the figure and insert "$74,400,000,000".

On page 5, line 14, strike the figure and insert "$68,200,000,000".

On page 5, line 17, strike the figure and insert "$25,600,000,000".

On page 5, line 19, strike the figure and insert "$79,000,000,000".

On page 5, line 21, strike the figure and insert "$68,200,000,000".

On page 6, line 6, strike the figure and insert "$292,600,000,000".

On page 6, line 7, strike the figure and insert "$252,000,000,000".

On page 6, line 8, strike the figure and insert "$0".

On page 6, line 10, strike the figure and insert "$0".

On page 6, line 12, strike the figure and insert "$0".

On page 6, line 15, strike the figure and insert "$312,800,000,000".

On page 6, line 16, strike the figure and insert "$276,100,000,000".

On page 6, line 17, strike the figure and insert "$0".

On page 6, line 19, strike the figure and insert "$0".

On page 6, line 21, strike the figure and insert "$0".

On page 6, line 24, strike the figure and insert "$334,900,000,000".

On page 6, line 25, strike the figure and insert "$298,400,000,000".

On page 7, line 1, strike the figure and insert "$0".

On page 7, line 3, strike the figure and insert "$0".

On page 7, line 5, strike the figure and insert "$0".

On page 7, line 8, strike the figure and insert "$359,600,000,000".

On page 7, line 9, strike the figure and insert "$321,400,000,000".

On page 7, line 10, strike the figure and insert "$0".

On page 7, line 12, strike the figure and insert "$0".

On page 7, line 14, strike the figure and insert "$0".

On page 7, line 17, strike the figure and insert "$25,300,000,000".

On page 7, line 18, strike the figure and insert "$18,000,000,000".

On page 7, line 20, strike the figure and insert "$11,500,000,000".

On page 7, line 22, strike the figure and insert "$10,300,000,000".

On page 7, line 24, strike the figure and insert "$0".

On page 8, line 1, strike the figure and insert "$21,000,000,000".

On page 8, line 2, strike the figure and insert "$17,800,000,000".

On page 8, line 4, strike the figure and insert "$8,200,000,000".

On page 8, line 6, strike the figure and insert "$12,300,000,000".

On page 8, line 8, strike the figure and insert "$0".

On page 8, line 10, strike the figure and insert "$20,200,000,000".

On page 8, line 11, strike the figure and insert "$17,100,000,000".

On page 8, line 13, strike the figure and insert "$7,800,000,000".

On page 8, line 15, strike the figure and insert "$12,300,000,000".

On page 8, line 17, strike the figure and insert "$0".

On page 8, line 19, strike the figure and insert "$20,500,000,000".

On page 8, line 20, strike the figure and insert "$16,600,000,000".

On page 8, line 22, strike the figure and insert "$7,900,000,000".

On page 8, line 24, strike the figure and insert "$12,300,000,000".

On page 9, line 2, strike the figure and insert "$0".

On page 9, line 5, strike the figure and insert "$9,100,000,000".

On page 9, line 6, strike the figure and insert "$8,700,000,000".

On page 9, line 7, strike the figure and insert "$0".

On page 9, line 9, strike the figure and insert "$0".

On page 9, line 11, strike the figure and insert "$0".

On page 9, line 13, strike the figure and insert "$8,800,000,000".

On page 9, line 14, strike the figure and insert "$8,700,000,000".

On page 9, line 15, strike the figure and insert "$0".

On page 9, line 17, strike the figure and insert "$0".

On page 9, line 19, strike the figure and insert "$0".

On page 9, line 21, strike the figure and insert "$9,000,000,000".

On page 9, line 22, strike the figure and insert "$8,800,000,000".

On page 9, line 23, strike the figure and insert "$0".

On page 9, line 25, strike the figure and insert "$0".

On page 10, line 2, strike the figure and insert "$0".

On page 10, line 4, strike the figure and insert "$9,300,000,000".

On page 10, line 5, strike the figure and insert "$9,000,000,000".

51-059 O-86-42 (Pt. 7)

On page 10, line 6, strike the figure and insert "$0".
On page 10, line 8, strike the figure and insert "$0".
On page 10, line 10, strike the figure and insert "$0".
On page 10, line 13, strike the figure and insert "$1,600,000,000".
On page 10, line 14, strike the figure and insert "$6,500,000,000".
On page 10, line 16, strike the figure and insert "$2,100,000,000".
On page 10, line 18, strike the figure and insert "$100,000,000".
On page 10, line 20, strike the figure and insert "$0".
On page 10, line 22, strike the figure and insert "$5,200,000,000".
On page 10, line 23, strike the figure and insert "$5,100,000,000".
On page 10, line 25, strike the figure and insert "$2,100,000,000".
On page 11, line 2, strike the figure and insert "$4,100,000,000".
On page 11, line 4, strike the figure and insert "$0".
On page 11, line 6, strike the figure and insert "$5,200,000,000".
On page 11, line 7, strike the figure and insert "$4,600,000,000".
On page 11, line 9, strike the figure and insert "$1,400,000,000".
On page 11, line 11, strike the figure and insert "$0".
On page 11, line 13, strike the figure and insert "$0".
On page 11, line 15, strike the figure and insert "$4,900,000,000".
On page 11, line 16, strike the figure and insert "$4,200,000,000".
On page 11, line 18, strike the figure and insert "$1,000,000,000".
On page 11, line 20, strike the figure and insert "$0".
On page 11, line 22, strike the figure and insert "$0".
On page 11, line 25, strike the figure and insert "$12,700,000,000".
On page 12, line 1, strike the figure and insert "$13,100,000,000".
On page 12, line 3, strike the figure and insert "$100,000,000".
On page 12, line 5, strike the figure and insert "$0".
On page 12, line 7, strike the figure and insert "$0".
On page 12, line 9, strike the figure and insert "$12,100,000,000".
On page 12, line 10, strike the figure and insert "$12,400,000,000".
On page 12, line 12, strike the figure and insert "$100,000,000".
On page 12, line 14, strike the figure and insert "$0".
On page 12, line 16, strike the figure and insert "$0".
On page 12, line 18, strike the figure and insert "$12,500,000,000".
On page 12, line 19, strike the figure and insert "$12,200,000,000".
On page 12, line 21, strike the figure and insert "$100,000,000".
On page 12, line 23, strike the figure and insert "$0".
On page 12, line 25, strike the figure and insert "$0".
On page 13, line 2, strike the figure and insert "$12,700,000,000".
On page 13, line 3, strike the figure and insert "$12,300,000,000".
On page 13, line 4, strike the figure and insert "$0".
On page 13, line 6, strike the figure and insert "$0".
On page 13, line 8, strike the figure and insert "$0".
On page 13, line 11, strike the figure and insert "$24,800,000,000".
On page 13, line 12, strike the figure and insert "$21,000,000,000".
On page 13, line 14, strike the figure and insert "$13,800,000,000".
On page 13, line 16, strike the figure and insert "$5,700,000,000".
On page 13, line 18, strike the figure and insert "$0".
On page 13, line 20, strike the figure and insert "$16,500,000,000".
On page 13, line 21, strike the figure and insert "$13,800,000,000".
On page 13, line 23, strike the figure and insert "$11,700,000,000".
On page 13, line 25, strike the figure and insert "$8,000,000,000".
On page 14, line 2, strike the figure and insert "$0".
On page 14, line 4, strike the figure and insert "$16,400,000,000".
On page 14, line 5, strike the figure and insert "$14,500,000,000".
On page 14, line 7, strike the figure and insert "$10,200,000,000".
On page 14, line 9, strike the figure and insert "$8,000,000,000".
On page 14, line 11, strike the figure and insert "$0".
On page 14, line 13, strike the figure and insert "$13,600,000,000".
On page 14, line 14, strike the figure and insert "$11,500,000,000".
On page 14, line 16, strike the figure and insert "$9,100,000,000".
On page 14, line 18, strike the figure and insert "$8,000,000,000".
On page 14, line 20, strike the figure and insert "$0".
On page 14, line 23, strike the figure and insert "$12,600,000,000".
On page 14, line 24, strike the figure and insert "$5,600,000,000".
On page 15, line 2, strike the figure and insert "$6,500,000,000".
On page 15, line 4, strike the figure and insert "$27,000,000,000".
On page 15, line 6, strike the figure and insert "$68,200,000,000".
On page 15, line 8, strike the figure and insert "$7,200,000,000".
On page 15, line 9, strike the figure and insert "$2,600,000,000".
On page 15, line 11, strike the figure and insert "$2,500,000,000".
On page 15, line 13, strike the figure and insert "$25,200,000,000".
On page 15, line 15, strike the figure and insert "$68,200,000,000".
On page 15, line 17, strike the figure and insert "$3,900,000,000".
On page 15, line 18, strike the figure and insert "$100,000,000".
On page 15, line 20, strike the figure and insert "$2,500,000,000".
On page 15, line 22, strike the figure and insert "$26,700,000,000".
On page 15, line 24, strike the figure and insert "$68,200,000,000".
On page 16, line 1, strike the figure and insert "$4,300,000,000".
On page 16, line 2, strike the figure and insert "$2,000,000,000".
On page 16, line 4, strike the figure and insert "$2,700,000,000".
On page 16, line 6, strike the figure and insert "$28,400,000,000".
On page 16, line 8, strike the figure and insert "$68,200,000,000".
On page 16, line 11, strike the figure and insert "$29,600,000,000".
On page 16, line 12, strike the figure and insert "$26,100,000,000".
On page 16, line 14, strike the figure and insert "$300,000,000".
On page 16, line 16, strike the figure and insert "$300,000,000".
On page 16, line 18, strike the figure and insert "$0".
On page 16, line 20, strike the figure and insert "$26,600,000,000".
On page 16, line 21, strike the figure and insert "$25,600,000,000".
On page 16, line 23, strike the figure and insert "$200,000,000".
On page 16, line 25, strike the figure and insert "$300,000,000".
On page 17, line 2, strike the figure and insert "$0".
On page 17, line 4, strike the figure and insert "$27,100,000,000".
On page 17, line 5, strike the figure and insert "$27,000,000,000".
On page 17, line 7, strike the figure and insert "$100,000,000".
On page 17, line 9, strike the figure and insert "$300,000,000".
On page 17, line 11, strike the figure and insert "$0".
On page 17, line 13, strike the figure and insert "$26,300,000,000".
On page 17, line 14, strike the figure and insert "$26,500,000,000".
On page 17, line 16, strike the figure and insert "$100,000,000".
On page 17, line 18, strike the figure and insert "$300,000,000".
On page 17, line 20, strike the figure and insert "$0".
On page 17, line 23, strike the figure and insert "$8,400,000,000".
On page 17, line 24, strike the figure and insert "$8,700,000,000".
On page 18, line 2, strike the figure and insert "$1,800,000,000".
On page 18, line 4, strike the figure and insert "$200,000,000".
On page 18, line 6, strike the figure and insert "$0".
On page 18, line 8, strike the figure and insert "$5,400,000,000".
On page 18, line 9, strike the figure and insert "$7,600,000,000".
On page 18, line 11, strike the figure and insert "$800,000,000".
On page 18, line 13, strike the figure and insert "$200,000,000".
On page 18, line 15, strike the figure and insert "$0".
On page 18, line 17, strike the figure and insert "$5,800,000,000".
On page 18, line 18, strike the figure and insert "$6,800,000,000".
On page 18, line 20, strike the figure and insert "$700,000,000".
On page 18, line 22, strike the figure and insert "$200,000,000".
On page 18, line 24, strike the figure and insert "$0".
On page 19, line 1, strike the figure and insert "$6,200,000,000".
On page 19, line 2, strike the figure and insert "$6,200,000,000".
On page 19, line 4, strike the figure and insert "$800,000,000".
On page 19, line 6, strike the figure and insert "$200,000,000".
On page 19, line 8, strike the figure and insert "$0".
On page 19, line 12, strike the figure and insert "$31,600,000,000".
On page 19, line 13, strike the figure and insert "$30,300,000,000".
On page 19, line 15, strike the figure and insert "$1,100,000,000".

On page 19, line 17, strike the figure and insert "$8,600,000,000".
On page 19, line 19, strike the figure and insert "$0".
On page 19, line 21, strike the figure and insert "$28,600,000,000".
On page 19, line 22, strike the figure and insert "$29,800,000,000".
On page 19, line 24, strike the figure and insert "$1,100,000,000".
On page 20, line 2, strike the figure and insert "$8,900,000,000".
On page 20, line 4, strike the figure and insert "$0".
On page 20, line 6, strike the figure and insert "$29,400,000,000".
On page 20, line 7, strike the figure and insert "$28,700,000,000".
On page 20, line 9, strike the figure and insert "$1,100,000,000".
On page 20, line 11, strike the figure and insert "$9,200,000,000".
On page 20, line 13, strike the figure and insert "$0".
On page 20, line 15, strike the figure and insert "$29,800,000,000".
On page 20, line 16, strike the figure and insert "$29,000,000,000".
On page 20, line 18, strike the figure and insert "$1,100,000,000".
On page 20, line 20, strike the figure and insert "$9,400,000,000".
On page 20, line 22, strike the figure and insert "$0".
On page 20, line 25, strike the figure and insert "$33,600,000,000".
On page 21, line 1, strike the figure and insert "$33,500,000,000".
On page 21, line 2, strike the figure and insert "$0".
On page 21, line 4, strike the figure and insert "$200,000,000".
On page 21, line 6, strike the figure and insert "$0".
On page 21, line 8, strike the figure and insert "$34,900,000,000".
On page 21, line 9, strike the figure and insert "$35,000,000,000".
On page 21, line 10, strike the figure and insert "$0".
On page 21, line 12, strike the figure and insert "$200,000,000".
On page 21, line 14, strike the figure and insert "$0".
On page 21, line 16, strike the figure and insert "$37,100,000,000".
On page 21, line 17, strike the figure and insert "$36,700,000,000".
On page 21, line 18, strike the figure and insert "$0".
On page 21, line 20, strike the figure and insert "$300,000,000".
On page 21, line 22, strike the figure and insert "$0".
On page 21, line 24, strike the figure and insert "$39,200,000,000".
On page 21, line 25, strike the figure and insert "$38,700,000,000".
On page 22, line 1, strike the figure and insert "$0".
On page 22, line 3, strike the figure and insert "$300,000,000".
On page 22, line 5, strike the figure and insert "$0".
On page 22, line 8, strike the figure and insert "$71,800,000,000".
On page 22, line 9, strike the figure and insert "$65,200,000,000".
On page 22, line 10, strike the figure and insert "$0".
On page 22, line 12, strike the figure and insert "$0".
On page 22, line 14, strike the figure and insert "$0".
On page 22, line 16, strike the figure and insert "$81,600,000,000".
On page 22, line 17, strike the figure and insert "$68,000,000,000".
On page 22, line 18, strike the figure and insert "$0".
On page 22, line 20, strike the figure and insert "$0".
On page 22, line 22, strike the figure and insert "$0".
On page 22, line 24, strike the figure and insert "$90,500,000,000".
On page 22, line 25, strike the figure and insert "$74,100,000,000".
On page 23, line 1, strike the figure and insert "$0".
On page 23, line 3, strike the figure and insert "$0".
On page 23, line 5, strike the figure and insert "$0".
On page 23, line 7, strike the figure and insert "$93,300,000,000".
On page 23, line 8, strike the figure and insert "$81,600,000,000".
On page 23, line 9, strike the figure and insert "$0".
On page 23, line 11, strike the figure and insert "$0".
On page 23, line 13, strike the figure and insert "$0".
On page 23, line 17, strike the figure and insert "$162,800,000,000".
On page 23, line 18, strike the figure and insert "$128,600,000,000".
On page 23, line 20, strike the figure and insert "$14,300,000,000".
On page 23, line 22, strike the figure and insert "$0".
On page 23, line 24, strike the figure and insert "$0".
On page 24, line 2, strike the figure and insert "$156,300,000,000".
On page 24, line 3, strike the figure and insert "$118,100,000,000".
On page 24, line 5, strike the figure and insert "$1,800,000,000".
On page 24, line 7, strike the figure and insert "$0".
On page 24, line 9, strike the figure and insert "$0".
On page 24, line 12, strike the figure and insert "$166,500,000,000".
On page 24, line 13, strike the figure and insert "$121,900,000,000".
On page 24, line 15, strike the figure and insert "$2,300,000,000".
On page 24, line 17, strike the figure and insert "$0".
On page 24, line 19, strike the figure and insert "$0".
On page 24, line 22, strike the figure and insert "$174,700,000,000".
On page 24, line 23, strike the figure and insert "$125,600,000,000".
On page 24, line 25, strike the figure and insert "$1,800,000,000".
On page 25, line 2, strike the figure and insert "$0".
On page 25, line 4, strike the figure and insert "$0".
On page 25, line 8, strike the figure and insert "$195,500,000,000".
On page 25, line 9, strike the figure and insert "$189,300,000,000".
On page 25, line 10, strike the figure and insert "$0".
On page 25, line 12, strike the figure and insert "$0".
On page 25, line 14, strike the figure and insert "$0".
On page 25, line 17, strike the figure and insert "$207,600,000,000".
On page 25, line 18, strike the figure and insert "$197,700,000,000".
On page 25, line 19, strike the figure and insert "$0".
On page 25, line 21, strike the figure and insert "$0".
On page 25, line 23, strike the figure and insert "$0".
On page 26, line 2, strike the figure and insert "$225,300,000,000".
On page 26, line 3, strike the figure and insert "$206,500,000,000".
On page 26, line 4, strike the figure and insert "$0".
On page 26, line 6, strike the figure and insert "$0".
On page 26, line 8, strike the figure and insert "$0".
On page 26, line 11, strike the figure and insert "$266,200,000,000".
On page 26, line 12, strike the figure and insert "$216,100,000,000".
On page 26, line 13, strike the figure and insert "$0".
On page 26, line 15, strike the figure and insert "$0".
On page 26, line 17, strike the figure and insert "$0".
On page 26, line 20, strike the figure and insert "$27,200,000,000".
On page 26, line 21, strike the figure and insert "$26,300,000,000".
On page 26, line 23, strike the figure and insert "$1,300,000,000".
On page 26, line 25, strike the figure and insert "$16,800,000,000".
On page 27, line 2, strike the figure and insert "$0".
On page 27, line 4, strike the figure and insert "$26,900,000,000".
On page 27, line 5, strike the figure and insert "$26,300,000,000".
On page 27, line 7, strike the figure and insert "$1,300,000,000".
On page 27, line 9, strike the figure and insert "$15,300,000,000".
On page 27, line 11, strike the figure and insert "$0".
On page 27, line 13, strike the figure and insert "$26,900,000,000".
On page 27, line 14, strike the figure and insert "$26,300,000,000".
On page 27, line 16, strike the figure and insert "$1,200,000,000".
On page 27, line 18, strike the figure and insert "$17,400,000,000".
On page 27, line 20, strike the figure and insert "$0".
On page 27, line 22, strike the figure and insert "$26,900,000,000".
On page 27, line 23, strike the figure and insert "$26,400,000,000".
On page 27, line 25, strike the figure and insert "$1,200,000,000".
On page 28, line 2, strike the figure and insert "$20,100,000,000".
On page 28, line 4, strike the figure and insert "$0".
On page 28, line 7, strike the figure and insert "$6,600,000,000".
On page 28, line 8, strike the figure and insert "$6,400,000,000".
On page 28, line 9, strike the figure and insert "$0".
On page 28, line 11, strike the figure and insert "$0".
On page 28, line 13, strike the figure and insert "$0".
On page 28, line 15, strike the figure and insert "$6,800,000,000".
On page 28, line 16, strike the figure and insert "$6,700,000,000".
On page 28, line 17, strike the figure and insert "$0".
On page 28, line 19, strike the figure and insert "$0".

On page 28, line 21, strike the figure and insert "$0".
On page 28, line 23, strike the figure and insert "$6,900,000,000".
On page 28, line 24, strike the figure and insert "$6,900,000,000".
On page 28, line 25, strike the figure and insert "$0".
On page 29, line 2, strike the figure and insert "$0".
On page 29, line 4, strike the figure and insert "$0".
On page 29, line 6, strike the figure and insert "$7,000,000,000".
On page 29, line 7, strike the figure and insert "$7,000,000,000".
On page 29, line 8, strike the figure and insert "$0".
On page 29, line 10, strike the figure and insert "$0".
On page 29, line 12, strike the figure and insert "$0".
On page 29, line 15, strike the figure and insert "$5,800,000,000".
On page 29, line 16, strike the figure and insert "$5,800,000,000".
On page 29, line 17, strike the figure and insert "$0".
On page 29, line 19, strike the figure and insert "$0".
On page 29, line 21, strike the figure and insert "$0".
On page 29, line 23, strike the figure and insert "$5,300,000,000".
On page 29, line 24, strike the figure and insert "$5,300,000,000".
On page 29, line 25, strike the figure and insert "$0".
On page 30, line 2, strike the figure and insert "$0".
On page 30, line 4, strike the figure and insert "$0".
On page 30, line 6, strike the figure and insert "$5,400,000,000".
On page 30, line 7, strike the figure and insert "$5,300,000,000".
On page 30, line 8, strike the figure and insert "$0".
On page 30, line 10, strike the figure and insert "$0".
On page 30, line 12, strike the figure and insert "$0".
On page 30, line 14, strike the figure and insert "$5,600,000,000".
On page 30, line 15, strike the figure and insert "$5,500,000,000".
On page 30, line 16, strike the figure and insert "$0".
On page 30, line 18, strike the figure and insert "$0".
On page 30, line 20, strike the figure and insert "$0".
On page 30, line 23, strike the figure and insert "$6,400,000,000".
On page 30, line 24, strike the figure and insert "$6,400,000,000".
On page 30, line 25, strike the figure and insert "$0".
On page 31, line 2, strike the figure and insert "$0".
On page 31, line 4, strike the figure and insert "$0".
On page 31, line 6, strike the figure and insert "$6,500,000,000".
On page 31, line 7, strike the figure and insert "$6,500,000,000".
On page 31, line 8, strike the figure and insert "$0".
On page 31, line 10, strike the figure and insert "$0".
On page 31, line 12, strike the figure and insert "$0".
On page 31, line 14, strike the figure and insert "$2,000,000,000".
On page 31, line 15, strike the figure and insert "$3,200,000,000".
On page 31, line 16, strike the figure and insert "$0".
On page 31, line 18, strike the figure and insert "$0".
On page 31, line 20, strike the figure and insert "$0".
On page 31, line 22, strike the figure and insert "$2,100,000,000".
On page 31, line 23, strike the figure and insert "$2,100,000,000".
On page 31, line 24, strike the figure and insert "$0".
On page 32, line 2, strike the figure and insert "$0".
On page 32, line 4, strike the figure and insert "$0".
On page 32, line 8, strike the figure and insert "$129,700,000,000".
On page 32, line 9, strike the figure and insert "$129,700,000,000".
On page 32, line 10, strike the figure and insert "$0".
On page 32, line 12, strike the figure and insert "$0".
On page 32, line 14, strike the figure and insert "$0".
On page 32, line 17, strike the figure and insert "$142,300,000,000".
On page 32, line 18, strike the figure and insert "$142,300,000,000".
On page 32, line 19, strike the figure and insert "$0".
On page 32, line 21, strike the figure and insert "$0".
On page 32, line 23, strike the figure and insert "$0".
On page 33, line 2, strike the figure and insert "$153,000,000,000".
On page 33, line 3, strike the figure and insert "$153,000,000,000".
On page 33, line 4, strike the figure and insert "$0".
On page 33, line 6, strike the figure and insert "$0".
On page 33, line 8, strike the figure and insert "$0".
On page 33, line 11, strike the figure and insert "$155,200,000,000".
On page 33, line 12, strike the figure and insert "$155,200,000,000".
On page 33, line 13, strike the figure and insert "$0".
On page 33, line 15, strike the figure and insert "$0".
On page 33, line 17, strike the figure and insert "$0".
On page 33, line 20, strike the figure and insert "$300,000,000".
On page 33, line 21, strike the figure and insert "$300,000,000".
On page 33, line 22, strike the figure and insert "$0".
On page 33, line 24, strike the figure and insert "$0".
On page 34, line 2, strike the figure and insert "$0".
On page 34, line 5, strike the figure and insert "−$1,400,000,000".
On page 34, line 6, strike the figure and insert "−$1,400,000,000".
On page 34, line 7, strike the figure and insert "$0".
On page 34, line 9, strike the figure and insert "$0".
On page 34, line 11, strike the figure and insert "$0".
On page 34, line 14, strike the figure and insert "−$1,200,000,000".
On page 34, line 15, strike the figure and insert "−$1,200,000,000".
On page 34, line 16, strike the figure and insert "$0".
On page 34, line 18, strike the figure and insert "$0".
On page 34, line 20, strike the figure and insert "$0".
On page 34, line 23, strike the figure and insert "−$200,000,000".
On page 34, line 24, strike the figure and insert "−$100,000,000".
On page 34, line 25, strike the figure and insert "$0".
On page 35, line 2, strike the figure and insert "$0".
On page 35, line 4, strike the figure and insert "$0".
On page 35, line 8, strike the figure and insert "−$32,400,000,000".
On page 35, line 9, strike the figure and insert "−$32,400,000,000".
On page 35, line 10, strike the figure and insert "$0".
On page 35, line 12, strike the figure and insert "$0".
On page 35, line 14, strike the figure and insert "$0".
On page 35, line 17, strike the figure and insert "−$35,000,000,000".
On page 35, line 18, strike the figure and insert "−$35,000,000,000".
On page 35, line 19, strike the figure and insert "$0".
On page 35, line 21, strike the figure and insert "$0".
On page 35, line 23, strike the figure and insert "$0".
On page 36, line 2, strike the figure and insert "−$37,800,000,000".
On page 36, line 3, strike the figure and insert "−$37,800,000,000".
On page 36, line 4, strike the figure and insert "$0".
On page 36, line 6, strike the figure and insert "$0".
On page 36, line 8, strike the figure and insert "$0".
On page 36, line 11, strike the figure and insert "−$41,100,000,000".
On page 36, line 12, strike the figure and insert "−$41,100,000,000".
On page 36, line 13, strike the figure and insert "$0".
On page 36, line 15, strike the figure and insert "$0".
On page 36, line 17, strike the figure and insert "$0".
On page 36, line 19, strike the date and insert "June 30, 1985".
On page 37, line 11, strike the first figure and insert "$3,899,000,000".
On page 37, line 11, strike the second figure and insert "$4,610,000,000".
On page 37, line 12, strike the figure and insert "$3,773,000,000".
On page 37, line 13, strike the figure and insert "$6,540,000,000".
On page 37, line 14, strike the first figure and insert "$4,258,000,000".
On page 37, line 14, strike the second figure and insert "$10,326,000,000".
On page 37, line 20, strike the first figure and insert "$0".
On page 37, line 20, strike the second figure and insert "$376,000,000".
On page 37, line 21, strike the figure and insert "$0".
On page 37, line 22, strike the figure and insert "$894,000,000".
On page 37, line 23, strike the first figure and insert "$0".
On page 37, line 23, strike the second figure and insert "$1,424,000,000".
On page 38, line 10, strike the first figure and insert "$10,122,000,000".
On page 38, line 10, strike the second figure and insert "$4,213,000,000".

On page 38, line 11, strike the figure and insert "$11,353,000,000".
On page 38, line 12, strike the figure and insert "$7,416,000,000".
On page 38, line 13, strike the figure and insert "$12,509,000,000".
On page 38, line 14, strike the figure and insert "$9,566,000,000".
On page 38, line 24, strike the first figure and insert "$2,622,000,000".
On page 38, line 24, strike the second figure and insert "$2,216,000,000".
On page 38, line 25, strike the figure and insert "$1,416,000,000".
On page 39, line 1, strike the figure and insert "$1,077,000,000".
On page 39, line 2, strike the first figure and insert "$1,633,000,000".
On page 39, line 2, strike the second figure and insert "$1,368,000,000".
On page 39, line 13, strike the first figure and insert "$2,962,000,000".
On page 39, line 13, strike the second figure and insert "$2,253,000,000".
On page 39, line 14, strike the figure and insert "$2,723,000,000".
On page 39, line 15, strike the figure and insert "$2,579,000,000".
On page 39, line 16, strike the first figure and insert "$2,720,000,000".
On page 39, line 16, strike the second figure and insert "$2,814,000,000".
On page 40, line 2, strike the first figure and insert "$719,000,000".
On page 40, line 2, strike the second figure and insert "$306,000,000".
On page 40, line 3, strike the figure and insert "$1,208,000,000".
On page 40, line 4, strike the figure and insert "$1,451,000,000".
On page 40, line 5, strike the first figure and insert "$1,720,000,000".
On page 40, line 5, strike the second figure and insert "$2,112,000,000".
On page 40, line 15, strike the figure and insert "$0".
On page 40, line 16, strike the first figure and insert "$8,117,000,000".
On page 40, line 16, strike the second figure and insert "$0".
On page 40, line 17, strike the figure and insert "$18,934,000,000".
On page 40, line 18, strike the first figure and insert "$0".
On page 40, line 18, strike the second figure and insert "$28,137,000,000".
On page 41, line 3, strike the figure and insert "$192,000,000".
On page 41, line 4, strike the figure and insert "$47,000,000".
On page 41, line 5, strike the first figure and insert "$275,000,000".
On page 41, line 5, strike the second figure and insert "$109,000,000".
On page 41, line 6, strike the figure and insert "$282,000,000".
On page 41, line 7, strike the figure and insert "$140,000,000".
On page 41, line 16, strike the first figure and insert "$375,000,000".
On page 41, line 16, strike the second figure and insert "$0".
On page 41, line 17, strike the figure and insert "$3,101,000,000".
On page 41, line 18, strike the first figure and insert "$1,325,000,000".
On page 41, line 18, strike the second figure and insert "$0".
On page 41, line 19, strike the figure and insert "$7,332,000,000".
On page 41, line 20, strike the first figure and insert "$1,370,000,000".
On page 41, line 20, strike the second figure and insert "$0".
On page 41, line 21, strike the figure and insert "$9,097,000,000".
On page 42, line 6, strike the first figure and insert "$3,404,000,000".
On page 42, line 6, strike the second figure and insert "$1,299,000,000".
On page 42, line 7, strike the figure and insert "$3,826,000,000".
On page 42, line 8, strike the figure and insert "$3,446,000,000".
On page 42, line 9, strike the first figure and insert "$4,291,000,000".
On page 42, line 9, strike the second figure and insert "$4,231,000,000".
On page 42, line 19, strike the figure and insert "$882,000,000".
On page 42, line 20, strike the figure and insert "$1,258,000,000".
On page 42, line 21, strike the first figure and insert "$2,034,000,000".
On page 42, line 21, strike the second figure and insert "$2,101,000,000".
On page 42, line 22, strike the figure and insert "$2,594,000,000".
On page 42, line 23, strike the figure and insert "$2,275,000,000".
On page 43, line 7, strike the figure and insert "$858,000,000".
On page 43, line 8, strike the figure and insert "$791,000,000".
On page 43, line 9, strike the first figure and insert "$1,332,000,000".
On page 43, line 9, strike the second figure and insert "$1,496,000,000".
On page 43, line 10, strike the figure and insert "$1,725,000,000".
On page 43, line 11, strike the figure and insert "$1,987,000,000".
On page 43, line 20, strike the figure and insert "$192,000,000".
On page 43, line 21, strike the figure and insert "$87,000,000".
On page 43, line 22, strike the first figure and insert "$201,000,000".
On page 43, line 22, strike the second figure and insert "$151,000,000".
On page 43, line 23, strike the figure and insert "$211,000,000".
On page 43, line 24, strike the figure and insert "$181,000,000".
On page 44, line 10, strike the figure and insert "$3,899,000,000".
On page 44, line 11, strike the figure and insert "$4,610,000,000".
On page 44, line 12, strike the first figure and insert "$3,773,000,000".
On page 44, line 12, strike the second figure and insert "$6,540,000,000".
On page 44, line 13, strike the figure and insert "$4,258,000,000".
On page 44, line 14, strike the figure and insert "$10,326,000,000".
On page 44, line 19, strike the first figure and insert "$0".
On page 44, line 19, strike the second figure and insert "$376,000,000".
On page 44, line 20, strike the figure and insert "$0".
On page 44, line 21, strike the figure and insert "$894,000,000".
On page 44, line 22, strike the first figure and insert "$0".
On page 44, line 22, strike the second figure and insert "$1,424,000,000".
On page 45, line 8, strike the first figure and insert "$9,159,000,000".
On page 45, line 8, strike the second figure and insert "$4,028,000,000".
On page 45, line 9, strike the figure and insert "$9,730,000,000".
On page 45, line 10, strike the figure and insert "$6,870,000,000".
On page 45, line 11, strike the first figure and insert "$10,379,000,000".
On page 45, line 11, strike the second figure and insert "$8,550,000,000".
On page 45, line 21, strike the figure and insert "$2,838,000,000".
On page 45, line 22, strike the figure and insert "$1,316,000,000".
On page 45, line 23, strike the first figure and insert "$3,183,000,000".
On page 45, line 23, strike the second figure and insert "$3,202,000,000".
On page 45, line 24, strike the figure and insert "$3,549,000,000".
On page 45, line 25, strike the figure and insert "$3,865,000,000".
On page 46, line 9, strike the figure and insert "$5,188,000,000".
On page 46, line 10, strike the figure and insert "$8,187,000,000".
On page 46, line 11, strike the first figure and insert "$3,871,000,000".
On page 46, line 11, strike the second figure and insert "$10,159,000,000".
On page 46, line 12, strike the figure and insert "$3,958,000,000".
On page 46, line 13, strike the figure and insert "$13,539,000,000".
On page 46, line 23, strike the figure and insert "$192,000,000".
On page 46, line 24, strike the figure and insert "$47,000,000".
On page 46, line 25, strike the first figure and insert "$275,000,000".
On page 46, line 25, strike the second figure and insert "$109,000,000".
On page 47, line 1, strike the figure and insert "$282,000,000".
On page 47, line 2, strike the figure and insert "$140,000,000".
On page 47, line 11, strike the figure and insert "$0".
On page 47, line 12, strike the first figure and insert "$64,000,000".
On page 47, line 12, strike the second figure and insert "$0".
On page 47, line 13, strike the figure and insert "$3,699,000,000".
On page 47, line 14, strike the first figure and insert "$0".
On page 47, line 14, strike the second figure and insert "$5,203,000,000".
On page 47, line 25, strike the first figure and insert "$540,000,000".
On page 47, line 25, strike the second figure and insert "$292,000,000".
On page 48, line 1, strike the figure and insert "$559,000,000".
On page 48, line 2, strike the figure and insert "$402,000,000".
On page 48, line 3, strike the first figure and insert "$634,000,000".
On page 48, line 3, strike the second figure and insert "$526,000,000".
On page 48, line 14, strike the first figure and insert "$401,000,000".
On page 48, line 14, strike the second figure and insert "$379,000,000".
On page 48, line 15, strike the figure and insert "$293,000,000".
On page 48, line 16, strike the figure and insert "$352,000,000".
On page 48, line 17, strike the first figure and insert "$394,000,000".
On page 48, line 17, strike the second figure and insert "$450,000,000".
On page 49, line 2, strike the figure and insert "$375,000,000".
On page 49, line 3, strike the first figure and insert "$0".
On page 49, line 3, strike the second figure and insert "$3,037,000,000".
On page 49, line 4, strike the first figure and insert "$1,325,000,000".
On page 49, line 4, strike the second figure and insert "$0".

On page 49, line 5, strike the figure and insert "$7,183,000,000".
On page 49, line 6, strike the first figure and insert "$1,370,000,000".
On page 49, line 6, strike the second figure and insert "$0".
On page 49, line 7, strike the figure and insert "$8,850,000,000".
On page 49, line 17, strike the first figure and insert "$1,895,000,000".
On page 49, line 17, strike the second figure and insert "$469,000,000".
On page 49, line 18, strike the figure and insert "$3,091,000,000".
On page 49, line 19, strike the figure and insert "$1,950,000,000".
On page 49, line 20, strike the first figure and insert "$4,170,000,000".
On page 49, line 20, strike the second figure and insert "$3,161,000,000".
On page 50, line 5, strike the figure and insert "$882,000,000".
On page 50, line 6, strike the figure and insert "$1,258,000,000".
On page 50, line 7, strike the first figure and insert "$2,034,000,000".
On page 50, line 7, strike the second figure and insert "$2,101,000,000".
On page 50, line 8, strike the figure and insert "$2,594,000,000".
On page 50, line 9, strike the figure and insert "$2,275,000,000".
On page 50, line 18, strike the figure and insert "$858,000,000".
On page 50, line 19, strike the figure and insert "$791,000,000".
On page 50, line 20, strike the first figure and insert "$1,332,000,000".
On page 50, line 20, strike the second figure and insert "$1,496,000,000".
On page 50, line 21, strike the figure and insert "$1,725,000,000".
On page 50, line 22, strike the figure and insert "$1,987,000,000".
On page 51, line 6, strike the figure and insert "$0".
On page 51, line 7, strike the first figure and insert "$7,600,000,000".
On page 51, line 7, strike the second figure and insert "$0".
On page 51, line 8, strike the figure and insert "$14,456,000,000".
On page 51, line 9, strike the first figure and insert "$0".
On page 51, line 9, strike the second figure and insert "$21,809,000,000".
On page 51, line 17, strike the figure and insert "$313,500,000,000".
On page 51, line 19, strike the figure and insert "$335,600,000,000".
On page 51, line 20, strike the figure and insert "$360,400,000,000".
On page 52, line 1, strike the figure and insert "$136,700,000,000".
On page 52, line 3, strike the figure and insert "$138,200,000,000".
On page 52, line 4, strike the figure and insert "$143,100,000,000".
On page 54, line 20, strike the figure and insert "8".

Mr. BYRD addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The minority leader is recognized.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I ask for the yeas and nays on the amendment.

Mr. BYRD. I yield for that purpose.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there a sufficient second? There is a sufficient second.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The cosponsors of the amendment (No. 44) are: Mr. DOLE, for himself, Mr. DOMENICI, Mr. ARMSTRONG, Mr. BOSCHWITZ, Mr. CHAFEE, Mr. COCHRAN, Mr. DANFORTH, Mr. EVANS, Mr. GARN, Mr. GRAMM, Mr. HATCH, Mr. HECHT, Mr. HEINZ, Mr. HELMS, Mr. HUMPHREY, Mr. LAXALT, Mr. LUGAR, Mr. MATTINGLY, Mr. MCCLURE, Mr. MCCONNELL, Mr. MURKOWSKI, Mr. PACKWOOD, Mr. ROTH, Mr. RUDMAN, Mr. SIMPSON, Mr. STEVENS, Mr. SYMMS, Mr. THURMOND, Mr. TRIBLE, Mr. WALLOP, and Mr. WARNER.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I yield myself 5 minutes on the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The minority leader is recognized.

Mr. President, the distinguished majority leader has now offered his amendment which, as I recall, would be amendment C on page 58, of the Book on Senate Procedure.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That is correct.

Mr. BYRD. In other words, it completes the tree of amendments on a motion to recommit with instructions.

The distinguished majority leader's amendment is not amendable at this point.

Now, Mr. President, thus far in this debate the distinguished majority leader has offered amendments to fill out the tree of amendments on page 70, which allows any number of amendments up to and including seven amendments. So he has filled every space in that tree. He has left no opportunity for a Senator on this side of the aisle or a Senator on the other side of the aisle to offer an amendment, as long as he sought to do so himself.

Then once that tree of amendments was completed, he moved to recommit the resolution with instructions that it be reported back forthwith with the language in amendment A. Now, he has offered an amendment to amendment A, which is in the C position, and no other Senator has had an opportunity to offer amendments because the distinguished majority leader has the right of first recognition, by custom. It is a custom that is accepted on this side of the aisle, and has been for a long time.

Now that the distinguished majority leader has completed the tree of amendments on page 58, I would ask him if the Democrats could offer the next amendment.

Before I pause for him to respond to that question, may I say this: I have no quarrel with the distinguished majority leader in anything that he has done by way of using the rules that are there to fill out both of these amendment trees that I have described, and which the Members may see on pages 58 and 70. I have no problem with that. I do have problems with it, but I have no quarrel with it, because the distinguished majority leader has pursued the rules and has used his right to recognition very effectively.

But as of now, Senators on this side of the aisle have not had any opportunity to offer an amendment because we are all shut out by the distinguished majority leader's use of right of recognition.

Even so, it has been our time on this side of the aisle on the overall resolution that is also being consumed. There are only 50 hours overall on the resolution; and amendments thereto, while they may have 1 or 2 hours, depending on the nature of an amendment and to what vehicle it may be offered, the time for amendments comes out of the overall.

So while we Democrats have been made to keep silent as far as offering amendments is concerned, it has been half of our time which is being used by the other side.

Even so, I have no quarrel with the distinguished majority leader about that.

But now that he has completed the offering of his own amendments, and when the vote occurs on amendment C, on page 58, we Democrats would want to offer the next amendment.

Of course, the distinguished majority leader did not take me up on the offer on last Thursday, to vote on a somewhat similar amendment; nor did he take us up on our offer to vote on Friday at noon. But I do not quarrel with him for that.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator has expired.

Mr. BYRD. I yield myself 5 additional minutes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. BYRD. So he rejected my offer or declined it—declined in a very courteous fashion our offer to vote at noon on Friday. I do not blame him for that because he was not sure whether or not he had the votes. I was not certain, either.

Here we are now with the same amendment and he probably wants a vote on it today.

Once we vote on his amendment, whether it be today or tomorrow, then amendment A, on page 58, as amended by amendment C, will be open to further amendment. There is where the rub will come.

At that point, we Democrats want to offer an amendment. The distinguished majority leader has now offered nine amendments, including the motion to recommit, and we Democrats say patiently and humbly, hoping to offer some amendments. The other day, I stated on this floor that I would hope that, once the distinguished majority leader's "compromise" amendment was voted on, I would hope we could alternate then; that the Democrats would have a shot and then we would alternate the rest of the way—first the Democrats, then the Republicans, and so on.

Now, I am going to ask that question again. We Democrats have wanted to offer an amendment restoring the Social Security COLA. We indicated, days ago, that that was an amendment we wanted to offer, that was an issue that we wanted to deal with, soon. I offered a Senate joint resolution, that went on the calendar. I offered a simple resolution and it went on another calendar, which amendments pressed to restore the Social Security cuts in the COLA. The President has broken his promise to the old folks of this country. But I am not going to break mine. I am going to do everything I can to restore those COLA's. Most Senators on this side of the aisle feel as I do.

But how are we going to be able to represent the elderly and get an amendment in, and have it voted on to restore the COLA's if we cannot get recognition for the offering of such an amendment? We just cannot do it.

It is not just the Democrats. A lot of those elderly people out there beyond the beltway are Republicans, and it may also be that some of our friends on the other side of the aisle would support our amendment.

I plead and beseech, and I implore, and I beg the distinguished majority leader, that once his amendment C is acted on, then would he let us Democrats have an opportunity, for the first time—for the first time since we have been on this resolution—to offer an amendment that says to the elderly people of this country, "The President broke his campaign promise but we are not going to break ours." It would enable a lot of our Republican friends also to keep that promise to the elderly people of this country.

All I am asking the distinguished majority leader is, will he relent and let the Democrats offer the first amendment after his perfecting amendment "C" is agreed to, as I believe it will be agreed to. I am sure that the distinguished majority leader, being a good vote counter, is not going to let that vote occur until he is pretty confident of the vote. I do not blame him for that.

But we also want our chance to offer amendments. It is only fair that Democrats, who number 47 in this body, have the opportunity to offer an amendment on behalf of the elderly people of this country to protect them against the social security cuts in the COLA.

We have not yet had an opportunity to offer an amendment and yet we have been charged for half of the time on this resolution.

I would hope and believe that if—I yield myself 2 more minutes—if the distinguished majority leader would do that, I think it might pay off down the road to his benefit. The distinguished Senator from Kansas, who is our illustrious majority leader, is playing hardball. Let us say he calls up an amendment for someone else on his side, once he gets Senate action on the last amendment he has offered in filling the amendment trees. Maybe he will not do so. I hope he will not. But if he does then begin to call up amendments for other Senators, I would say that he would then be abusing—I do not think the majority leader would ever abuse his right of recognition as majority leader, but let us just say for the sake of the record that he calls up a Senator's amendment on that side, because that Senator cannot get recognition over the minority leader.

The minority leader, under the customs that have heretofore been followed, has first recognition after the majority leader. And my friends on the other side of the aisle know that if I get recognized, I am going to call up the Moynihan-Byrd-Riegle Social Security amendment to restore the cuts in Social Security COLA's. But if the able majority leader uses his recognition power—I do not believe he will, but if he were to, that would be an abuse of the first recognition rights of the distinguished majority leader. And I just cannot believe that he would do that. But if he does use the right of recognition to shut out the minority party, then he can go right on down the line until the 50 hours are all gone. I do not believe he will do that, surely. But if he were to do that and use the whole 50 hours, using his power of recognition to call amendments up for Senators on the other side, we on our side would be completely shut out. When we reach the 50th hour, we would not have any oil in our lamps, and all we could then do is offer amendments and have them voted on without debate.

Now, one final word. Why would the distinguished majority leader—and I do not believe he will—why would the distinguished majority leader—and I feel rather badly about this, because I have not given the distinguished majority leader an opportunity to tell us yet, but if he were to do that, one might ask why would he do that? Could it be that the distinguished majority leader, in order to get the votes to enact his White House compromise—remembers, he would not accept our vote offer on Thursday, nor our offer on Friday—as was noted in the newspapers, one might come to the conclusion that the reason, perhaps, why the distinguished majority leader would not accept our offers last week was that he simply did not have the votes at that time.

Now, there has been a rumor going around—and this is Washington, a place rife for rumors—that maybe the able leader has picked up the needed votes by offering to call up somebody else's amendments. Let us say there is a Senator on the other side of the aisle who wants to be "fustes' with the mostes' " on Social Security——

Mr. HOLLINGS. Oh, no, I do not believe he would do that. I just cannot believe that.

(Mr. DENTON assumed the chair.)

Mr. BYRD. I have Senator HOLLINGS with me on this one. He and I are drinking out of the same quill on this one. I do not believe the majority leader would do that.

Mr. HOLLINGS. I do not believe it.

Mr. BYRD. I cannot believe it. I just cannot believe it.

But let us say that he does. Let us say that the distinguished majority leader has a Senator on that side of the aisle who is hard pressed to appear to be the Senator who restored the Social Security COLA cuts. Just using that as an example—and if the leader said, "Well, now, if you would vote for me on my package, I would guarantee you would be the first to get your amendment up"—I am not saying the distinguished majority leader would do that, because I do not know, but I can imagine how a majority leader might do that.

Mr. HOLLINGS. Never.

Mr. BYRD. That being the case, I can see why the distinguished majority leader might be under the compulsion to call up amendments on that side of the aisle for one, two, three, four, or five Senators in a list of commitments.

Mr. MOYNIHAN. Mr. President, would the distinguished minority leader yield for a question?

Mr. BYRD. If I could just finish my thought—yes, I yield.

Mr. MOYNIHAN. Could I ask the distinguished minority leader if he has had an opportunity to read this report in this morning's Washington Post by David Hoffman and Helen Dewar in which the distinguished majority leader is quoted as saying he plans to do exactly what the minority leader has speculated?

I cannot believe it. [Laughter.]

Mr. BYRD. I shall have to read it with my own eyes before I believe it. And I will not believe it even then.

But laying all the humor aside and speaking seriously, Mr. President, if the distinguished majority leader does call up amendments for other Senators, and if the reason were to be that he had made promises that he would get their amendments up first if they would but vote for his package, then I say to my fellow Democrats that we are under no compulsion over here to help the distinguished majority leader fulfill his commitments.

I think I shall now yield the floor to the distinguished majority leader if he wishes, and I hope that he would say in response to my question that Democrats will be offered an opportunity to call up the next amendment once his package is adopted, if it is adopted, and we can all proceed from there.

Let me say in closing that I have the utmost respect for the distinguished majority leader.

I hope the distinguished majority leader will relent and let Democrats offer the first amendment to his package once it is adopted, if it is adopted, and I dare say it will be.

Mr. DOLE addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The majority leader is recognized.

Mr. DOLE. Speaking on the resolution, Mr. President, I appreciate very much the comments of the distinguished minority leader, who is the recognized expert on procedure, history, and precedent. Many of the parliamentary ideas that I have come across I can attribute to the distinguished minority leader either when he was minority leader or majority leader. But in moving forward on this resolution I do not intend to do anything that would violate the rules. I have discussed this matter with the distinguished minority leader and he indicated to me that, "As long as you are within the rules, there is no quarrel."

I would indicate that even though we have offered eight amendments, I think, instead of nine, these eight amendments are really in essence only one. We have been trying to get to that one amendment. We had to offer eight amendments to get to that one. I never fully understood why I had to do all that. I talked to the Parliamentarian. He wrote it down. I said, "It sounds like a good idea," and so we have offered eight to get to this one amendment—the Senate leadership White House budget package. We would like to vote on that amendment today.

I would point out that the first vote on this resolution came at the insistence of a member on that side of the aisle. We have not had any votes on this side of the aisle. I must say we had mixed feelings on this side whether to adopt the Metzenbaum proposal and not to try to sustain the Chair. Then we could have amended that motion and voted on our package very quickly. Nevertheless, that procedure if we sustained would be a total thrashing of the rules, bordering on abuse of the rules. I have always understood that in this body it is the right of the majority leader to recess the Senate. I recall that we had a discussion on this very subject just about 5 or 6 weeks ago. At that time, on February 25, the minority leader reassured me that the motion to recess was a prerogative normally preserved for the majority leader. And so we studied very carefully the effort by the distinguished Senator from Ohio. It was a close call, but in the long run I think the Senate would have been injured if we followed this procedure. We would have gained a short-term advantage by then amending the motion, having the vote, and following that procedure in the Senate at least this year and the next year. We could break all filibusters, by moving to recess, reporting back in 5 minutes and voting on anything, so as long as you had more votes than the other side. I would assume that would be an advantage. But, again, I am certain the distinguished minority leader probably knew that in advance. I had to learn it rather quickly.

So far as what amendments may be offered after the vote on so-called White House-leadership amendment, we have thought about a number of ways to address that problem. Maybe we could adopt a proportional allocation based on the number of votes we have on this side for the leadership package and the number of votes we have on that side for the leadership package. If half of you vote for the package, you get to offer half of the amendments. So we have looked at a number of ways to deal with it because it is a serious matter. But I cannot say this proposed procedure is without precedent. I am certain there is precedent for it. What I want to do as the majority leader is to get the deficit reduced.

I would hope that in the final analysis there is going to be a big bipartisan vote for a deficit reduction package, some from that side and some from this side. But if we cannot demonstrate up front as the majority party that we have the ability to at least start with a package, or in effect describe the parameters as $300 billion or more in deficit reduction, then I am not certain why we are the majority party.

It is my responsibility on this side to make certain that we win some votes, if I can. If I cannot, we lose. And it would not be an end of the process if the so-called White House-leadership package is voted down. We could then start amending the leadership package. There is no doubt in my mind there are 68- or 70-some amendments pending right now. I can assure the distinguished minority leader that I am not going to offer all of those amendments. Nevertheless, I may offer a few, not to frustrate the process, but there is just as much concern on this side as there is on that side about senior citizens, veterans, the handicapped, farmers, and all the other constituencies affected by this package. If we all adopt the attitude that we cannot do anything that affects in any way this group or that group or that group, then it does not make much difference who offers the amendments; they are all going to pass. So we finish the exercise, but there is nothing left in the package except an increase in taxes and a cut defense, which in the view of most Americans is not the way to go.

So I say to the distinguished minority leader I will certainly be in constant touch with him, visiting with him, and having dialog with him, as I have tried to do for the past several months. He has been most accommodating—but I am not prepared to say at this time we are going to rotate amendments. I have searched the Budget Act and I cannot find a rotation requirement in that law. There is nothing in the Budget Act that says you have to take all the heat on one side and all the pleasure on the other side in this body. If we are serious about reducing the deficit, the fun and games will end one of these days. We are going to be faced with the question of whether or not we are going to vote yes or no on a final package. I am convinced there is a majority on both sides who are sincerely concerned about deficit reduction. I would hope in the final analysis, though I cannot now give an affirmative answer to the distinguished minority leader, that we will do what the American people expect us to do, that is make some hard decisions. If we do not want to make some hard decisions, it does not make any difference who offers the amendments. We cannot have everything. We cannot say, "We can't cut agriculture because I'm from a farm State; we can't cut something else because somebody else is from a different State," and end up with anything but a big fat deficit, higher taxes, more inflation, and more people out of work. So we are prepared to initially indicate to everyone—our colleagues on the other side of the aisle, and the American people—that for one brief moment at least we agreed that we had to reduce the deficit $300 billion. Then there will be those who want to start the dismantling process. We have Members on this side who want to knock out of the package the Social Security 2-2-2 proposition. We have other Members who want to cut more from defense spending—not many but some. I do not agree with those positions, but I would hope that as majority leader of the Republican side I have some right to protect the Republican side and the Members who make up the Republican side.

I would assure the distinguished minority leader that I have no intention of abusing the rules or of frustrating the good intentions of any Senator. But I also have the responsibility to try to protect my side.

I do not think rotation is a plan that has a great deal of appeal to me at this time. There will be all the votes the Democrats want on their package. I know of at least three Democratic budget packages. The distinguished minority leader is working on one, the distinguished ranking member on the Budget Committee has one, and the distinguished Senator from South Carolina discussed his plan this morning. They all have certain appeal. Ours may have certain appeal to Senators on that side. I am not trying to bully anyone, I am not trying to dictate to anyone, but I am trying to reduce the deficit without raising taxes, and by cutting spending, at this point I would have to indicate to the distinguished minority leader, who asked the question in good faith, that I would not be prepared to say that following the vote on the so-called leadership package the next amendment will be offered from that side.

Mr. CHILES addressed the Chair.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Who yields time?

Mr. CHILES. Mr. President, I yield myself such time as I might use from the resolution.

Mr. President, it is our wish that we have the first opportunity of amendment, and our wish that we have a rotation of amendments after that. We have used that process several times before.

Even if the majority leader is correct that there is no obligation on his part to assure, such a procedure, and that there is nothing in the Budget Committee rules that says it must be done that way, normal Senate comity should be considered. The normal rules of recognition in the Senate, generally provide that the person first on his feet and obtaining recognition of the Chair, is the person entitled to move the amendment.

There is an exception. The exception is that the majority leader gets the first crack and the minority leader gets the second crack. I think we all know there is good reason for that exception. The reason, as I understand it, is that the majority leader has the duty of putting motions to adjourn, motions to recess, motions to recommit, together with those duties that fall on him as majority leader, to conduct the affairs of the Senate. But this Senator has never felt that those rules giving the majority leader first recognition were ever designed or to be used for getting recognition to move an amendment for somebody else.

When you start doing that in this Chamber, comity is going to break down. There is no doubt about it. If you start using the power of recognition to move an amendment that you are not even for; that goes against the package that you have proposed; that is helping to dismantle the package you put up—when you start doing that, based solely on the right of first recognition, then comity breaks down.

If you step in either of our cloakrooms right now and watch the House of Representatives on television, you will see and hear an acrimonious debate going on about abuse of power. It is interesting, because in that instance the minority party, the Republicans, are talking about the unbridled use of power and criticizing the Democrats. The minority feels they have great justification. There has even been talk about chaining themselves to the rostrum to prevent the House from going on. Fortunately, we have not had that over here.

As the Senator from Florida sees it, generally speaking, we observe comity in this body. It is the common practice in the Senate to allow the Chair to recognize the person on his feet first. That is the procedure we are all accustomed to in this body. That is the way I have always known it.

I cannot remember Mike Mansfield ever demanding recognition so he could allow the Junior Senator from Florida at that time to call up his amendment. I cannot remember Majority Leader BYRD demanding recognition under his power as the majority leader to have the Senator from Michigan present an amendment. I cannot remember that ever happening. Maybe the rules allow it. The rules would have allowed, I suppose, a majority to overturn the ruling of the Chair. But we heard the distinguished majority leader say that would be trashing the rules, and I think that is true. Once we start doing that, it would be trashing the rules.

I hope that because a power is there and was put there for a good purpose—to allow the majority leader and the minority leader to carry out their duties and their functions of leadership—it would not be distorted to allow recognition or the presenting of an amendment which is not theirs.

If it is an amendment the distinguished majority leader believes in, if he is a cosponsor of it, then perhaps he is entitled to recognition. But to do it five times, to do it on a series of things, I think would be an abuse of recognition by the Chair.

The majority leader has said that he hopes there will come a time, as I do, that there can be some bipartisan movement to adopt a deficit reduction package. That is what this is all about. That is what the American people want. But I say to him I do not think we are helping that process if the majority uses its power in an abusive manner, in obtaining recognition, under the power of the Chair, to put someone else's amendment.

It is one thing to say: "I don't feel I owe the responsibility to you, as the minority party, to guarantee you every other motion or to guarantee you the first right of recognition." I think it is another thing to say: "I am going to use my power as majority leader to obtain recognition and then call up amendments for someone else." I certainly hope the distinguished majority leader will not do that.

Perhaps, he cannot work out an arrangement allowing us every other vote. Perhaps he would not allow us to have the first amendment. Perhaps we would feel we have been shut out by a skillful use of the rules. That has been done by this side, so we cannot complain. I hope it will not go further than that, to undo the normal recognition process where he who is on his feet first and seeks recognition is automatically recognized. When you go beyond that and say, "We are going to alter the power of the majority leader," that will cause a breakdown of comity in this body, and I think that is something that will hurt the Senate.

Mr. METZENBAUM and Mr. DOLE addressed the Chair.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, speaking on the resolution, I know we are walking a fine line and I know this matter is very sensitive.

If we had 62 or 63 votes on this side, there would not be any problem. The Democrats enjoyed big margins here in Senate, on and off, for 26 years. They did not have 52 or 53 votes. We really have 52, because one Member is hospitalized. So we have to assess where we are with that many votes.

As I look back at the first budget resolution in 1981, there were 18 Democratic amendments and 5 Republican amendments. There were 18 Democratic amendments offered in a row.

In 1977, when the distinguished minority leader was majority leader, the first three amendments—not all this tree building—were offered by the majority party, the Democrats.

So I think that before we have all this anguish and all the soul searching about fairness or whatever, we can go back and take a look at the past history.

It may be that I will offer a few amendments.

Mr. CHILES. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. DOLE. I yield.

Mr. CHILES. Can the Senator tell me when those 18 amendments were offered? Was recognition obtained by the majority leader and then assigned to a Member, or was it on the basis of who stood up and said they wanted to offer an amendment,

Mr. DOLE. I would have to go back and check that, but I do not believe there is anything inconsistent. If we were to agree to recognize three Republicans other than the majority leader, it is the same thing.

Mr. CHILES. I say to my distinguished friend that I do not think it is the same thing. I think it is one thing to say that perhaps in the first resolution we had more people seeking to offer amendments; but the thing is, were they recognized because they were on their feet first, was the majority leader on this side obtaining recognition and assigning it to those Members? That is what we are talking about.

Mr. DOLE. I know we cannot resolve that today.

I know that Social Security is very sensitive. There is a lot of political mileage to be gained, and everybody wants to offer the first amendment. I do not know what the actual count is on that side, but in some of these packages, the Democrats want to freeze Social Security COLA's. I know that the distinguished Senator from Florida has a package in which he freezes Social Security COLA's.

We should get off this kick that only Republicans want to do anything with Social Security. That is why I suggest, in the final analysis, that maybe we can work a package out. Maybe the strategy is, "Let's embarrass the Republicans up front. We're trying to protect the senior citizens."

Most senior citizens have children and grandchildren who may want to find work in a year or two, who probably do not want inflation to go back up, and who are concerned about the economy and sustaining growth.

In our package, we have a guaranteed COLA of 2 percent, 2 percent, and 2 percent, notwithstanding present law, which says that when inflation is less than 3 percent, you do not get any Social Security COLA. It is a moderate approach to a very important problem.

So we become a little tender about being jumped on by certain Democrats, who assert that somehow the Republicans are against the old people, the senior citizens, and that if it were not for Democrats, they would not be protected. We can make all those arguments when we get into it, but I hope the politics would not decide who is going to be first.

I think the best political advantage may be based on who is going to reduce the deficit. And I am prepared to make some very difficult votes to do that and I think the American people have been prepared for about the last 2 years. The President is on board. He is talking about reductions. It is probably the only opportunity we are going to have for a long time.

I do not want to break my pick with my friends on the other side, but I do hope they understand that sometimes you just have to do what you have to do.

Mr. METZENBAUM addressed the Chair.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Who yields time?

Mr. CHILES. I yield the distinguished Senator such time as he might need off the resolution.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Ohio is recognized.

Mr. METZENBAUM. Mr. President, I think we ought to understand where we are and where we are not and understand who is trashing the rules around here and who is bordering on abuse. We should not get the idea that somebody is in here with a halo around their head to reduce the deficit and the rest of us do not share that commitment.

I believe that there are 100 Members of this body and every one of them wants to reduce the deficit. And each of us probably has his own way or her own way as to how we should go about doing it.

So we brought to the floor better than a week ago the budget resolution. I serve on the Budget Committee, and I know that that committee wrestled with the issue of how to reduce the deficit and fought about it and finally came out with a package.

That package was available and was supposed to be called up a week ago Monday, a week ago yesterday. Nothing happened on Monday. Not a vote, not a word. And nothing happened on Tuesday. The Senate was dark.

And then Wednesday it was brought up, but we could not vote because the President was going to address the country that night. So we were not ready to really get into the meat of doing our job.

So we sat here on Thursday and we sat here on Friday and we played games with each other—that is they played games with us. We did not participate in those games. And it was the first amendment and the second amendment and the substitute amendment. And then we went over to the other side of the page and we went down that part of the tree. Then we came in yesterday, as I understand it, or this morning and we came in with a motion to recommit and then we wanted to be certain to lock that in. And all the time we have not spent 1 minute on the issue before the Senate, and that is reducing the deficit.

Somehow we have got a great big flag raised high, and it is waving around, and we have got to get the White House Republican package before the Senate, notwithstanding the fact that every single Member of this body knows that that is not going to be the final package. Certain deals were made with Senators from this State and that State. "You can offer this amendment, just go along with the original package."

Then they have come up with this new kind of hokum—and this is hokum. "This is just a procedural motion. This is just a procedural motion." It is not a procedural motion at all. It is the budget resolution that is being offered to the Senate, and we are being called upon to act upon it.

And then nobody should have the audacity to come forward with an amendment. What difference does it make if that budget eliminates the Job Corps? Who cares about the fact that the Appalachian Regional Commission will no longer be operable? What difference does it make that the charitable organizations across this country—the American Heart Association, American Cancer Society, all the churches will lose their postal subsidies.

The President says he is not going to have any new taxes, but he is going to sock it to all those charitable organizations. He is going to sock it to the second-class rural newspapers, eliminate their postal subsidies. "But don't offer an amendment on it, not until we get our package in place."

Who is abusing the rules? You are abusing the rules. You are not letting us proceed in a normal manner. You are letting the clock run without anything being achieved.

No Federal subsidy for Amtrak. That is the end of Amtrak. Knock out the SBA Program almost in its entirety. Federal crop insurance, slash that. Knock out part of the subsidy for school lunches. Eliminate revenue sharing. Eliminate the Rural Loan Program. Eliminate UDAG for cities.

But be sure you do not offer any amendments having to do with defense spending. No, those are issues we do not want to get into until we get the package. And nobody, nobody has the right to offer an amendment. The majority leader has priority rights under the rules of the Senate to be recognized and say. "He offers his first amendment and he offers his second amendment and he offers his substitute amendment," and goes right on down the tree. So he says to all of us, "You can't offer any amendment."

And so, indeed, those of us who believe that this body ought to address itself to the issue of slashing Social Security wanted to have some way to bring that issue to the floor. And then we read in the paper that a deal had been cut in some way; that the deal was that some would vote for the package and then, after the deal was made and the package was put in place, then a few select people would have the right to offer the amendment to eliminate the Social Security cuts.

Talk about abusing the rules. Talk about comity. Talk about the question of whether or not we are proceeding here in a manner that we proceeded in the past.

I have been in this body long enough to say that I have never, never before seen an instance where a U.S. Senator of either party could not get his amendment up after a week and a half on the same issue. A week and a half on the same issue and we cannot even get an amendment called up.

So, indeed, the Senator from Ohio had no reservation in letting it be known that we want to bring up the Social Security issue. And the only way I could figure out to do it, in view of the fact that we had been precluded from offering an amendment to the bill, precluded from offering a motion to recommit, was to offer it as an amendment on a motion to recess. An unusual procedure I would agree.

The fact is this body is proceeding in a way that I have not seen in history and to the best of my knowledge it has not proceeded in this same manner at any time in the past. Not alone are we talking about the fact that nobody can get an amendment offered before the sacred package is voted upon, but, beyond that, we are saying, as the majority leader just said, he is not sure when the members of the minority are going to have an opportunity to offer an amendment.

What kind of body are we? What is so unfair about offering an amendment? It is not our fault whether he has got the votes or does not have the votes or whether he has 52 or 53 or 60 Members in the majority. We live in a political system. That is the way this Government operates. But does that mean that we deny some in the minority the opportunity to vote, the opportunity to offer an amendment?

I cannot believe what is transpiring in the Senate at the moment.

And I would say to the distinguished majority leader that if I can figure out some other way to bring the issue of eliminating the cuts in Social Security to this floor before the package is considered, or any one of a host of other amendments that I think we ought to be considering. I will not hesitate to use the rules to do that, just as the majority leader is using the rules to provide an ironclad fist and say, "No amendment. No opportunity for anybody to bring an issue to this floor."

Why not? What is so terrible? What is there about putting the package in place? Does it mean that we can run and tell the President, as we wave him bye, bye on the plane, "Mr. President, we got the budget resolution through, the White House package"? Is that what we are worried about? Well, we wish the President bon voyage.

We wish him a good trip. We wish him a healthy trip. But the fact is we wish him a trip where we could report to him regularly that we just adopted an amendment to reject the Social Security cuts for the senior citizens of this country, and to save so many other programs that should be saved. Why can we not vote? Why can we not offer an amendment? Is there some special reason that we are not permitted to offer our amendments? I indicated the other day on the floor of the Senate that after the seven steps were taken that I would be prepared to offer a motion to recommit, and I discussed that this morning with the Parliamentarian. It was not so long thereafter that the majority leader offered just such a motion himself, and then put in the first two steps as well to preclude my offering any kind of motion of that kind. Why? What is there so sacred about requiring the Senate to vote on this package as a package and why, can we not get an opportunity to offer an amendment?

I cannot for the life of me understand the procedure. It may make good sense to the majority leader, and I have a lot of respect for him. But I do not think it makes good sense to the American people. He says it is because we want to reduce the deficit. Let us reduce defense spending another 3 percent instead of increasing it. We would not be cutting it. All we would be doing is holding it to the inflation figure. Why should we be increasing defense spending? We want to reduce the deficit. Give us an opportunity to vote on whether or not we should increase defense spending as provided in this package that the White House and the majority party have agreed upon that will reduce the deficit an additional amount. No. No votes, no opportunity to get into the issue. I can only say this: I am disappointed that we do not have an opportunity to proceed in a normal way for each Member of the Senate to have an opportunity to be heard and offer such amendment as he or she might want to in order to bring it to a vote. I say to my colleague, the leader of the Senate, that this may be a procedure that you are happy with at the moment, but I am afraid that it will be a rather shallow victory, and a rather hollow victory if and when you prevail because I do not believe that the American people will look favorably upon it.

Mr. CRANSTON. Does the Senator from Florida yield time?

Mr. DOLE addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. DENTON). Who yields time?

The majority leader.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I yield myself 5 minutes on the amendment. I designate the distinguished Senator, Senator DOMENICI, chairman of the Budget Committee, to manage time on the amendment. I guess the question now is, Are we going to vote this evening? I have heard all of this rhetoric. The question is whether we are going to vote. There are a number of Senators who have conflicts between 6 and 8 on both sides. If there is no plan to vote between 6 and 8, I guess the next question is if we can vote after 8. There are, as I understand it, less than 40 minutes on the amendment itself remaining. So I have obtained recognition to determine whether or not we can agree that there will be a vote before 6, or after 6 and, if so, how long after 6.

I would like to get into the merits of the proposal rather than a lot of other things. But I am happy to yield to the distinguished Senator from Arkansas.

Mr. PRYOR. Mr. President, I thank the distinguished majority leader for yielding. There has been a great deal said back and forth across the aisle this afternoon about who is being fair and who is being unfair. That is not the issue. Before we vote on the so-called compromise that is now before the Senate, I think there are a lot of Senators in this Chamber who would like to express themselves on the issue of Social Security. For example, I have voted previously to freeze at the present level Social Security as long as everything else in the entire Federal budget is frozen, including national defense. But, that is not this package before us. It cuts COLA's without a defense cut. So, before we vote on the so-called compromise, this Senator would like to express himself on Social Security.

I am wondering if the majority leader, at the conclusion of the pending amendment now before the Senate, would allow me to be recognized to introduce a sense-of-the-Senate resolution relative to the cost-of-living increases for our Social Security recipients. It seems eminently fair. I do not think we have to debate it. But I am just hoping that I would have an opportunity to at least present this sense-of-the-Senate resolution before we vote on the package before this body.

Mr. DOLE. Let me say to my colleague, first, I would like to see the amendment. If it is what I think it is, the answer would probably be "No." I do not know what is in it.

Mr. PRYOR. That is what I am afraid of. Of course, the majority leader knows it is nonbinding. It is an expression that would probably get support from both sides of the aisle. I hope the majority leader will consider having mercy on this Senator, and allow me this opportunity.

Mr. DOLE. I want to have mercy on the Senator, but I want to have mercy on the country, too. There are a lot of people who are going to be suffering if we do not do something on the deficit. I can see we are ginning up the PR machine to see who can protect the senior citizens the most. I would vote for a freeze except, or I would vote for this except, or I would vote for something else except. There is never that perfect package. The American people know there is not going to be a perfect package where everybody can vote in some painless way, I would be happy to look at the amendment. That would be an indication to me that we are not going to vote this evening. If we can confirm that, then we can determine what course of action would be this evening for all Senators. If every Senator wishes to give some testimony on social security, so it will appear in his next newsletter or mailing, then that would take some time.

I think there are just as many people on this side concerned about the senior citizens. In fact, there are a few more—52 to 47 on that side. If we can get a vote now that is all right with me. But I understood the Senator from Ohio just complaining about all the time we have been using and no votes. I am not certain I have the votes on the package. But I am willing to vote. I hope we can vote tonight before midnight or 1 or 2 a.m. It will take us quite a while to fly over there. We could get word I guess by the time they landed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the majority leader has expired.

Mr. DOLE. I yield the balance of the time on the amendment to the distinguished chairman of the Budget Committee, Senator DOMENICI.

Mr. CRANSTON. Mr. President, may I ask for some time on our side?

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, I am going to sit down in a moment. I have a half hour or so to speak, but I want to make a parlimentary inquiry. Parlimentary inquiry, Mr. President: How much time do we have remaining on the pending amendment? How much time does the minority have?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The majority has 24½ minutes, and the minority 19½ minutes.

Mr. DOMENICI. How much time remains on the resolution?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The majority has 16 hours, 30½ minutes and the minority has 19 hours 20½ minutes.

Mr. DOMENICI. Thank you, Mr. President. For those who are interested in discussing the substance of deficit reduction, and the pending amendment, I raised the parliamentary inquiry so everyone will understand there is plenty of time. On the amendment itself there is 24½ and 19½ minutes for the majority and the minority, respectively. Clearly the Senator from New Mexico within reason is prepared to yield time off the resolution to anybody who would like to speak here in the event they want to discuss substance.

I think you all heard that there remains 16½ hours and about 19½ hours for the majority and minority, respectively on the resolution. I do not know how long it will take, but the majority leader has answered all the possible procedural and time limitation questions related to the pending resolution. That is not up to the Senator from New Mexico. As I understand it, the pending business is the Domenici-Dole amendment offered to complete the parliamentary process, wherein it will receive a vote without any other amendment, but thereafter it will be subject to further amendments.

I want to make just one comment about Social Security and then I am going to sit down and invite Members who want to talk about deficit reduction, who have been asking me for the last 5 or 6 days when they would have an opportunity to give their first remarks about it, to proceed. I would invite them on my side to come to the floor.

I have been working on this budget in particular and on the process in general for a long time. I have been working at trying to put a package together that was equal to the problem, the problem of deficits between $200 and $250 billion, and as far out there as you can see, assuming good economic times. So when I say I have been trying to put together a package equal to that, clearly I have been working at a major package that would be commensurate with that problem.

Almost everyone now has reached some consensus that we ought to cut that deficit in half, at least by half, in 3 years. I started months ago trying to do that. I worked in open committee hearings for 2 weeks trying to do that.

Finally, we got a package that was reasonably good. It came here to the floor and everybody knows what has happened since then.

But I want to share with the Senators, in the event they have not thought about it, and with the American people in the event they are interested, that I think we are in an amazing dilemma here. The leadership package has the equivalent of a cost-of-living freeze for all Social Security and Federal pensions. It is spread differently, but it is about the same as a freeze. Everybody seems now to be anxious to get the first amendment so they can take that out of the package.

Well, I look around and I see amendments on the other side of the aisle, a whole package, not a single amendment, and I say this with all compliment to those who are proposing them, that I see one from the distinguished Senator who used to be the ranking member of the Budget Committee, and indeed chairman for a short period of time, Senator HOLLINGS. He has one for a 1-year freeze on cost-of-living adjustments for all Social Security and Federal pensioners. I see an overall deficit reduction package from my friend, the ranking member of the Committee and senior Senator from Florida, that freezes for 1-year cost-of-living increases for pensioners and on Social Security and effectively does that with some reserve to ameliorate the major problem.

It is a peculiar situation. I have not counted heads yet, but I would say without fear of being wrong that well over 60 U.S. Senators from both sides of the aisle are for a cost-of-living freeze on Social Security and pensions. I am hearing that one group is for protecting the senior citizens and it is attributed to one side of the aisle. I hear our distinguished leader say there are some on our side who want to put back the full cost-of-living because that is perceived to be protecting the seniors.

But I repeat, if I go back and check the record of last year's votes on the HOLLINGS' freeze, and now he has another amendment similar to it with cosponsors, and I have looked at the package that my good friend from Florida has, I have looked at our own and I know how many votes there are for ours, and when I add it all up I think we all ought to understand that there is somewhere between 55 and 60 Senators right now who are for a cost-of-living freeze on all pensions, including Social Security.

I want to state the nature of the problem as I see it.

They are for freezing Social Security and pensions, if they can get what they want in the rest of the package to lessen the burden of the projected deficits on future generations of Americans.

I think that, in and of itself, speaks of the tremendous consensus in the Chamber to reduce the deficits. Those people on the other side of the aisle who were on budget packages that will freeze Social Security are just as much in favor of freezing Social Security as Republicans, or maybe more. It is just that we are for it with this package and they are for it with some other combination of restraint or taxes.

I do not think that means that we are more for deficit reduction than they are, or that they are more for it than we are. Nor do I think it means that they are more for senior citizens than we are, or we are less for them than they are. I think we are going through the normal processes of the U.S. Senate, with open, free democratic debate, and sooner or later we are going to come to the consensus that we have to put a deficit reduction package together and if it is not ours, it has to be somebody's. It has to be commensurate with the problem, and it has to address the cost-of-living indexes on pensions. It has to address the cost of defense. It has to address a lot of other programs.

I clearly do not want to argue with my friend from Ohio about his statement as to who is doing what to whom here procedurally, but we have not had any substantive debate. We have not had any amendments because all we have been trying to do, because the Senate has very, very complicated rules, is to get a vote on a package and then let everybody have their day in the sun amending it thereafter.

From my standpoint, I believe that there will be other packages offered and which will be voted on. I believe there are Senators on that side of the aisle who want their vote and I believe they will find a way to get a vote on their packages.

I do not think that we will have to go through a complicated arduous process to give them that vote. Frankly, speaking only for myself, when the distinguished Senator from Florida is ready to offer his package, and I think I know what it is, I have described one aspect of it, I hope he can get a vote up or down on it.

When the distinguished Senator HOLLINGS from South Carolina is ready to offer his package, I hope we get a vote on it. I do not think that is asking too much of the institution. That is all we ask of ourselves, to get a vote on the package and start amending it afterwards.

I have taken only a few minutes at the outset to put this issue of cost-of-living indexes for all pensioners in the United States into perspective because it is going to be very, very strange for those watching the Senate to do the counting of who is for and who is against. It is going to be who is for the cost-of-living freezes if they get everything else they want. I think everybody ought to know that.

So when you make that original count and say these people are against the cost-of-living freeze, it is going to be amazing in about 4 or 5 days some of those same ones who voted against it are going to be for it. Then maybe a couple of days later when another package is offered, there will be a whole different group of Senators voting for a freeze on cost-of-living indexes. They will have voted against it, they probably will have voted against it when Senator CHILES offers his, and they will be for it when another Senator offers it. I really do not think any of us are for or against senior citizens, and I surely think it does not mean that we know who is for or against freezing the pensions and pay of our Federal employees for 1 year in order to put together a package that is substantial and commensurate with the dimension of this problem of deficits.

Mr. President, I yield the floor at this point.

Mr. CRANSTON addressed the Chair.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Who yields time?

Mr. CHILES. I yield 5 minutes to the Senator from California.

Mr. CRANSTON. Mr. President, it is almost as difficult to follow what has been happening on the floor now as it is to follow the chart of the tree of amendments that the majority leader keeps referring to and inspecting on the desk.

Let me summarize what has occurred.

The first vote of the Senate respecting the budget resolution has now been held on the issue of Social Security. Virtually all Democrats voted to bring up the Moynihan-Riegle amendment that would give Social Security recipients a full cost-of-living increase. All Republicans voted against bringing up the Moynihan-Riegle Social Security amendment.

This may be an arcane, inside parliamentary victory for the Republicans, but the fact is that it is the first step in the defeat for President Reagan. The fact is that the Republicans want to thwart Democratic efforts to undo what Ronald Reagan wants to do on Social Security, cut the COLA's, because certain Republicans want to get the credit for undoing what Ronald Reagan wants to do with Social Security.

The Republicans have offered a budget package negotiated with President Reagan that reduces the value of Social Security by denying the full cost-of-living increase. That diminishes the purchasing power of every Social Security check received by every Social Security recipient. Therefore, it is tampering with Social Security.

But the Republican intention is to give Members of their own party the first opportunity to amend the budget package to grant a full COLA. They want a Republican name on the Social Security amendment. I submit that that would be a false label.

They want a Republican name on a Social Security amendment that their own President opposes. They want a Republican name on a Social Security amendment that they refuse to include in their Republican budget package.

The Senator from New Mexico [Mr. DOMENICI] just stated that 60 to 70 percent of Republicans want a budget package that will freeze Social Security COLA's—not even grant the 2-percent increase that is proposed in the package, but freeze them. Obviously, these Republicans must depend on Democratic votes to pass their Social Security amendment to get them off the political hook upon which they now find themselves impaled.

Mr. President, I say we need truth in labeling in the Senate. The Social Security amendment we vote on should be the Democratic Moynihan-Riegle amendment.

Let me briefly respond to this question: Why do most Democrats and some Republicans favor a full COLA for Social Security recipients? First, for all the reasons that Ronald Reagan was advancing throughout his campaign and stayed with until very recently. As the President has stated, the Social Security fund has a surplus. It has nothing to do with the deficit, and it has its own separate trust fund that is not part of the overall Federal budget.

Second, another reason, not advanced by the President, is that something like one-third of Social Security recipients are getting 90 percent of what they live on from Social Security. They are old or they are totally disabled, they are unable to work now, and most are unable to find other sources of income. The average Social Security check is $450 a month—a little bit less than that. We all know it is hard to make do on $450 a month.

The fact is that, according to the Congressional Budget Office, if the COLA is granted only halfway as the Republican package proposes, approximately 575,000 senior citizens would be pushed below the poverty line. That would be something like 75,000 Californians.

Mr. President, I oppose that happening to any American. I certainly oppose its happening to any Californian.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Who yields time?

Mr. DOMENICI address the Chair.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from New Mexico.

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, I yield myself time off the amendment. I do not know of any Republicans who desire to speak at this time. Once again, I would say if there are any on our side who desire to speak with reference to the pending amendment or the problem we are confronted with in terms of the deficit, we have some time now.

In deference to making sure that the record is correct, the distinguished Senator from California would not yield for a question as he spoke, and I understand that. But I believe I said 55 to 60 U.S. Senators from both sides of the aisle, in my opinion, are for and will vote for a cost-of-living freeze on Social Security. I believe there will be substantial numbers from that side of the aisle. It is just that they will do that only in the context of the kind of budget that they support.

I did not say 60 percent of the Republicans or 60 percent of the Democrats. I just said there are a number for Senator HOLLINGS' amendment, which is an entire package, a freeze; there is another group of Senators that are for the Chiles proposal, which has a Social Security freeze with a small reserve. I think when you are through adding those up, you will find that my rough estimate as of tonight will be correct and, if anything, it will be on the short side.

Mr. President, this week we embark on one of the most important debates of the past 40 years. The outcome of this debate may well determine the economic health and vitality of the Nation for the rest of this century. Unlike many debates, in which we battle over fundamental goals or objectives, this debate will focus on different ways to reach what everyone in the Senate has agreed is our final goal—large deficit reduction this year and in the years to come.

Indeed, when we began this year's budget deliberations back in January, our leadership established a very clear goal. That goal was embodied in S. 1 as introduced by our distinguished majority leader and which I cosponsored. That goal, simply stated, was and is that deficits must be reduced as a percentage of our gross national product [GNP] from their current level of 5.2 percent, down to 4 percent in 1986, 3 percent in 1987, and 2 percent in 1988, and by the beginning of the next decade, the Federal budget must be in balance. That goal has guided not only the early discussions with the administration but all serious budget proposals since that time. This goal reflects not only the view of many that any budget action this year must be significant but, most particularly, the views of Federal Reserve Chairman Volcker that the budget savings must be at least $50 billion in the first year to have an impact on financial markets. That means on interest rates.

The distinguished Senator from Florida [Mr. CHILES] has already divulged his plan that would save $58 billion off the deficit in 1986 and $316 billion over the fiscal year 1986–88 period. The chairman of the House Budget Committee, Representative GRAY, has announced that he wishes to devise a package that will save $50 billion from the deficit in 1986. The President of the United States offered a plan in his February budget submission that saved about $51 billion off the deficit in 1986. The Senate Budget Committee reported out earlier this month a plan that cut the projected 1986 deficit by approximately $57 billion. And, finally, the Senate leadership and the White House have compromised on a budget plan, which I believe will be the starting point this week for debate, that cuts the 1986 deficit by $52 billion. In short, I think it is fair to say the major players in this immense debate at least agree on objectives. Certainly it is obvious here today that we disagree on means.

Yet, even in our debate on means, I believe it is important to distinguish precisely the size and nature of our disagreement.

As I have worked through the long process to reach consensus on the budget, I have applied two basic tests in making judgments about how much to cut or whether to terminate a program entirely. My first test is simply this: In times of $240-billion-plus deficits, is this the kind of program we would start? Or, is this program something that would be nice to have, but which has become unaffordable as we try to reduce the burgeoning Federal debt.

My second test is more general, but it may also be more important. I ask myself a simple question: For the average working man and woman, with two kids at home and takehome pay of about $20,000 a year, is this the kind of Federal program that I would ask them to pay taxes to support? Or, is this a program that helps so narrow a constituency that it is truly unfair, with these kinds of deficit, to ask working men and women to aid it with their tax dollars?

These two tests, I have found, are useful as we compare the major public budget plans. Let us compare, for example, the major elements of the plan devised by the distinguished Senator from Florida [Mr. CHILES] with the Senate-White House agreement. I will, of course, be discussing Senator CHILES' plan at greater length later in the debate, if he offers it. I hope he will, and I hope he gets a vote.

On defense, Senator CHILES would give zero real growth in fiscal year 1986 and 3 percent real growth in 1987 and 1988. The Senate-White House compromise would give 3 percent real growth in all 3 years. There are many who have adopted a lot of myths about the impact of various proposals as they apply to defense on this budget. But in strictly money terms, the differences are not large when we are talking about $300 billion in total budget savings. But, in terms of program and policy, the difference between the two proposals is substantial. Senator CHILES' proposal would mean cuts in some conventional and strategic weapons systems below minimal economic production rates. Congress has repeatedly supported these systems, and we will end up buying them sooner or later. If we wait until later, we will end up paying a much higher price for them.

On Social Security cost-of-living adjustments, there are some differences between Senator CHILES' proposal to freeze cost-of-living adjustments for Social Security recipients for 1 year and the 3-year COLA restraint contained in the Senate Republican-White House compromise. However, both proposals recognize that all groups in this society must share in the burden of Federal spending restraint—including, all pensioners, including Social Security recipients.

I commend Senator CHILES for his courage in putting forward such a proposal. He represents a State that has many retirees as do I. What he was proposed not only requires great political courage and leadership but also reflects how very serious he views our budget problems today and in the future.

Senator CHILES' proposal illustrates a basic problem we face. For most nondefense programs, he proposes a freeze at the 1985 level or modest cuts below that level. This approach will simply hold the growth in these programs in check temporarily. This Senator, for one, will tell anyone who is willing to listen that this is not just a period of temporary austerity; this is a period of permanent readjustment in the level and mix of Government spending that will determine that long-run growth of Federal spending not only for this decade but for this century. This Government simply cannot pay for all of the programs it now sponsors at any reasonable tax rate—even one that is higher than we now have.

It is for this reason that I strongly advocate some program eliminations and reforms contained in the Senate-White House compromise. The Senate-White House budget plan eliminates 20 programs, some of them minor, some of them major, reforms 40 additional programs and freezes nearly all of the remaining hundreds of Federal activities. Unfortunately, the only way to assure that the difficult actions we take today will have permanent effects in the future is to make the hard choices now and eliminate many programs that may be worthy but do not meet the two tests which I started with earlier in my comments. This is Not easy for me and I do not expect it to be easy for anyone else. As a matter of fact, I do not enjoy it very much. Some of the programs I think in different times under different circumstances I could staunchly advocate. But I am supporting these reductions and, in some cases, the elimination of programs I have supported during my entire Senate career of over 12 years. Indeed, I will confess that I helped create some of them.

Finally, this brings us to the issue of taxes. There are some, I am sure, who will propose a minimum tax as a way out of the deficit problem. This is like trying to pass the proverbial camel through the eye of a needle. I have looked at the conventional proposals and I can find no more than $15 to $20 billion dollars in increased revenues over 3 years from the minimum corporate tax because you cannot raise any more than that. This is, some will say, a noble gesture, but it is hardly perceptible in a package of $300 billion in budget savings. But there is a more important issue. We can raise taxes, certainly. Some of the proposal before us say we should. One proposes that we raise $67 billion over the next 3 years. We can raise taxes by eliminating existing preferences in the tax code, freezing tax expenditures, or we can adopt some other scheme.

But the question remains, do we want to use this added revenue to finance existing Federal spending programs or do we want to offset some of the added burden of these higher taxes through lower tax rates on working men and women and the poor. The Children's Defense League recently released a major study on the taxation of the poor. Since the late 1970's, thousands of poor, probably hundreds of thousands of poor, have been pushed on to the tax rolls because their meager increases in income—which only kept pace with inflation—were measured against a minimum tax threshold which has not been adjusted since 1978.

Why has Congress not made the necessary adjustments? Simply because changes in the tax burden at the low end of the income scale result in substantial revenue loss. A study by Representative RANGEL, of the House Ways and Means Committee, last year showed that the revenue loss from exempting the poor from taxation would cost $16.6 billion in the first year alone—that is to say to that group of Americans, as I believe we should—if we are going to reform taxes, we ought to start with that one—if we take them off the tax rolls, we will have to find $16.6 billion in tax revenues somewhere just to come out even, that is an amount almost equal to the amount we will spend this year on food stamps and AFDC.

In short, we have not been able to afford to remove the poor from taxation because the Federal Government's insatiable appetite for revenue to finance rapidly rising levels of Federal spending made it, for all practical purposes, impossible.

Some Senators have asked how the Senate-White House budget compromise differs from what was reported out of the Senate Budget Committee. Before I outline those differences and the many similarities between the two budgets, let me say a word about the deliberations of the Senate Budget Committee.

Frankly, things looked somewhat bleak as the committee began its work. We had been unable to forge an independent Republican plan as we had hoped before the committee began its work. I began markup of the budget without any agreement among Republicans or among a bipartisan group on my committee. But I did one thing right, I think, as I look back. I initiated the discussion with a proposal of my own, a comprehensive proposal that reached the goals we have all set for ourselves for deficit reduction. I called that plan the promised land, and I held it up to the committee as the standard against which other proposals should be measured.

The President's February budget, as we all remember, fell short of meeting the goals set in the promised land budget. This meant that my proposal had to incorporate many of the reforms and terminations the President and the Congressional Budget Office had recommended over the years, but also had to go beyond the President in two major areas—defense and Social Security.

In defense, my original proposal presented to the Budget Committee had real growth of 3 percent in budget authority for each of the 3 years, fiscal years 1986–88. That is the same level now contained in the Senate-White House compromise, which has been given the title of the "taxpayers' protection plan." So, I feel comfortable with the 3-percent real growth figure we will have before the Senate this week, since I originally offered that level in committee.

In Social Security, I offered, as I indicated earlier, a 1-year freeze. But I have advocated a CPI minus 2 or CPI minus 3 approach in the past, so I feel comfortable with the proposal now contained in the promised land No. 2, or the taxpayers' protection plan.

In major domestic programs, my original proposal accepted almost all of the reforms, terminations, and cuts proposed by the President, plus a few more cuts that he had not recommended. So, again, I feel comfortable with the program cuts, terminations, and reforms assumed—not mandated—in the budget package compromise before the Senate.

As we proceeded with markup of the budget resolution, a curious thing happened, and, I suspect it might happen on the floor of the Senate. I hope not. Almost every Member had an amendment. Most amendments would have added back spending. Some amendments would have cut more in one place or the other. We had 60 votes in committee. But when all was said and done, many spending increases were adopted, and the committee was dissatisfied with the outcome. The deficits were too large.

It was at that time that I offered a variation on my original proposal, and a majority of the committee voted to report it out of committee. Some of those who voted for the revised plan said that they did not like parts of it. Some of those who voted against the plan said that they did like parts of it. As I have said many times, there was something to offend everyone in the resolution reported by the Senate Budget Committee.

But, Mr. President, I want to make clear the one thing that happened that made all of the turmoil and difficulties of producing a budget worth while. We succeeded. We did report out a budget.

I must at this time compliment all of those in the committee who worked for responsible numbers. At times, I thought I would get only one or two votes for my proposals. But our committee, on both sides of the aisle, showed courage and farsightedness of the highest order, and I thank those on my side of the aisle who helped so much. I also thank those, like Senator CHILES and Senator HOLLINGS, who played a large role in the debate and who had major plans of their own.

It is now time to compare the major differences between what our small band in the budget committee produced and what the deliberations between the Senate leadership and the White House have yielded.

Not surprisingly, the differences are small and the similarities many.

First, in defense. The committee reported out zero percent real growth in 1986, followed by 3 percent real growth in 1987 and 1988. The compromise has 3 percent real growth in all 3 years.

Second, in Social Security. The committee approved a 1-year freeze on the cost-of-living adjustment, with a full COLA for SSI recipients and, most important, an increase for all SSI recipients beyond the full adjustment for inflation. This additional $1.4 billion was our way of acknowledging that SSI recipients and the poor need special consideration in our budget package. The compromise before us guarantees at least a 2-percent cost-of-living adjustment for each of the next 3 years and retains the SSI increase proposed by the committee.

Third, in domestic programs the Senate Budget Committee budget resolution reformed, cut, or terminated about 83 programs. The Senate-White House agreement reforms, cuts, or terminates about 85 programs in the domestic area, in addition to a general freeze on domestic spending. The budget committee resolution would have saved about $137 billion through reconciliation to the individual committees. The agreement calls for reconciliation savings of almost $156 billion. The difference is about $19 billion, over 3 years.

The major changes are as follows: The compromise assumes savings in farm credit reform, phasing-out federally subsidized crop insurance, the levying of Coast Guard user fees for nonsearch and rescue operations, reform of non-GSL student financial assistance, and a cap on the COLA for veterans pensions similar to that for Social Security and other programs. All of these are new and were not contained in the Senate Budget Committee reported resolution.

In addition, the compromise assumes more savings than the Budget Committee did in such areas as farm price-support programs, the Export-Import Bank, Urban Mass Transit Program reform, Amtrak termination, Medicare and Medicaid reform, elimination of general revenue sharing at the end of its authorization period, termination of the Job Corps, termination of the Small Business Administration Business Assistance Program, and reform of the Veterans' Administration medical system. All of these latter items were addressed by the Senate Budget Committee. The compromise asks for more savings in these areas, most often by termination or phaseout.

In a few cases, of course, the compromise adds back money to a program. We added back funds for food and nutrition service programs, we changed the nature of handling fees to be charged by Government-sponsored credit agencies, we added a slight amount back for foreign aid activities, we lowered our savings level assumed from management and work force reforms in the civil service system, and, finally and importantly, we added substantial sums to elementary and secondary education programs.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that a table reflecting the comparison between the Senate Budget Committee reported budget resolution and the Senate-White House compromise be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the table was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

SENATE-WHITE HOUSE AGREEMENT (CHANGE FROM SENATE CONCURRENT RESOLUTION 32, AS REPORTED)

[In billions of dollars and fiscal years]

	1985	1986	1987	1988
050: National defense:
Budget authority		+10.3	+11.5	+12.8
Outlays		+3.0	+6.3	+8.4
150: International affairs:
Budget authority		−0.2	+0.1
Outlays		+0.2		−0.2
250: General science, space, and technology:
Budget authority
Outlays
270: Energy:
Budget authority		−0.3	−0.3	−0.1
Outlays		−0.3	−0.3
300: Natural resources and environment:
Budget authority
Outlays
350: Agriculture:
Budget authority		−3.9	−3.8	−6.1
Outlays		−3.8	−4.6	−7.4
370: Commerce and housing credit:
Budget authority		+1.2	−0.6	−0.7
Outlays		−0.2	−0.5	−0.5
400: Transportation:
Budget authority		−0.4	−1.4	−1.9
Outlays		−0.5	−0.7	−1.1
450: Community and regional development:
Budget authority		−0.4	−0.4	−0.4
Outlays		−0.1	−0.1	−0.2
500: Education, training, employment, and social services:
Budget authority	+0.1	−0.3	−0.1	+0.1
Outlays		+0.1	−0.2	−0.1
550: Health:
Budget authority			−0.3	−0.8
Outlays			−0.4	0.8
570: Medical insurance:
Budget authority		−0.6	−0.3	−0.2
Outlays		−0.7	−0.5	−0.4
600: Income security:
Budget authority		+0.8	+1.1	+0.4
Outlays		+1.2	+1.6	+0.6
650: Social security:
Budget authority		−4.0	−0.7	−0.5
Outlays		+2.8	+0.5	−4.1
700: Veterans benefits and services:
Budget authority		+0.1	−0.1	−0.5
Outlays		+0.3		−0.4
750: Administration of justice:
Budget authority
Outlays
800: General government:
Budget authority		+0.1	+0.1	+0.2
Outlays		+0.1	+0.2	+0.1
850: General purpose fiscal assistance:
Budget authority		+2.3	−2.3
Outlays		+1.7	−1.1	−0.5
900: Net interest:
Budget authority			+1.4	+2.0
Outlays			+1.4	+2.0
920: Allowances:
Budget authority		+0.8	+1.5	+1.8
Outlays		+0.8	+1.5	+1.8
950: Undistributed offsetting receipts:
Budget authority
Outlays
Total:
Budget authority	+0.1	+5.5	+5.4	+6.1
Outlays		+4.6	+3.1	−2.8
Revenues		−0.2	−0.3	−0.3
Deficit change		+4.8	+3.4	−2.5

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, let me conclude where I began, by asking my colleagues as we debate during these next, critical days, to use the same two tests as I have used as we consider terminating or reforming programs: Would we begin this program if we faced $200-plus billion deficits, and is this the kind of program that working men and women in this Nation should be paying their taxes to support? This Senator will have no trouble saying that we ought to reform the Eximbank, which benefits some of the wealthiest corporations in the world, or that we ought to terminate Amtrak, which has mostly well-to-do businessmen as riders, or end other subsidies to the well-to-do. I do not think working men and women making $20,000 a year for their families ought to be paying taxes to subsidize those better off than they are. And while Amtrak is something we wish we could afford, the simple fact is that we could not make such a commitment if we had faced $200 billion deficits 12 years ago. I will make these arguments in greater detail as we face the dozens of amendments I anticipate later this week and next.

The issues are clearly before the Senate and they are not trivial. The issue of the Federal deficit goes directly to the underlying structure and evolution of our free, democratic political economic system. The politics of the budget are intertwined with the fundamental principles of our Government: Federal and State responsibilities, private and public rights, economic equity, and economic efficiency.

I am remined of what our former distinguished majority leader Howard Baker once said. He said, "We live in troubled times; a final judgment on our stewardship would be premature. For those of us who wear the mantle of politicians, these are by no means favorable times." He concluded, however, on an optimistic note—that the complexities and obstacles will no doubt be present, but within this Chamber, they will be met by a will and conviction and a determination that will insure responsible action and responsible governing. I believe that, despite our differences at the outset, a fair and enduring consensus is possible. I believe that the Senate will report a major deficit reduction plan. I have made it clear how I believe that plan must be structured and I intend to defend those views. But I also intend to work with my colleagues as I have in the past, to assure that we meet our responsibilities with the commitment and consensus that Senator Baker foresaw as the necessary ingredient of responsible governance.

The PRESIDING OFFICER [Mr. EVANS]. Who yields time?

Mr. MELCHER. Mr. President, will the Democratic manager of the bill yield time to me?

Mr. CHILES. I yield the Senator from Montana 5 minutes on the resolution.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Montana is recognized.

Mr. MELCHER. I thank the Senator from Florida.

Mr. President, I believe this is the fourth day that we have been talking about having a vote on this particular proposal. I believe it is called the Republican leadership-White House proposed budget. Whatever it is called, it is a farce.

Nobody expects us, in the final analysis, to approve a budget that results in a $183 billion deficit for the coming fiscal year, according to CBO's mathematics, or, if we are going to use the current method on this package, I think they say it is $175 billion. Whatever method you use, it is too much.

We know that this is not going to fly. Yet, we are held here 4 days waiting to vote on it. I do not mind voting on it, because once it is voted upon, we can get into the amendments.

What I really would like to happen is that we get into some amendments of substance or some packages of substance that might put together the majority vote in the Senate for final passage of a meaningful budget resolution. Nobody in the Senate or nobody in the country, I hope, wants us to have a budget which ends up for the fiscal year with a $180 billion deficit. That is no progress.

Despite what the leadership on the Republican side might be saying, this proposal is outrageous. It does not cut the deficit sufficiently and does not get into the area of cutting the deficit that they claim is essential. Why is that, since it knocks out a number of programs? Let me read some of the things this does.

It causes Medicare recipients to put in a $5 billion out-of-pocket increase in order to pay the bill. That is a tax increase if I ever heard of one. Social security COLA's are cut. Revenue sharing is terminated. Education and training is cut over 3 years by $10 billion. Child nutrition is cut. The veterans are cut. Programs that are eliminated include SBA, Amtrak, mass transit, housing, UDAG. I cannot believe that UDAG would be eliminated completely, but I guess it is seriously cut.

At any rate, all these things are cut and cut rather drastically, and you still end up with a big deficit. Why is that? There is a sacred cow in here. There is some feeling, apparently, in the Senate, and I do not think it is shared all that strongly by the rest of the country, that the sacred cow of Pentagon spending is going to be protected.

The taxpayers who have filed by April 15 will be delighted to know that some of their tax dollars can go for the $44 light bulbs that the Pentagon found a need for, or the $640 toilet seat covers, or the $7,000 coffeemakers for the C-5, or the $180 flashlight, or the $40 washer.

That is outrageous waste which everybody says we should eliminate, but this particular proposal indicates that we should increase the spending by inflation plus 3 percent. I do not believe that is going to be the final vote in this Senate, and certainly it is not what the country wants.

So I am all for getting on and getting into the substance of doing something, and I suggest that the first thing that can be done is to somehow get beyond the point where I suppose the Republicans and Members of the Senate on that side of the aisle are going to vote for it just to get something rolling, and I suppose those of us who vigorously oppose it will have an opportunity to show our disinclination to support it.

Really, Mr. President, I have to respond on one point that has been discussed here this afternoon, and that is whether or not there should be some means of correcting the inequity on corporation taxes. We look at the top 20 moneymakers for the last couple of years that are reported and find it very discouraging that companies can make as much as $1 billion or $2 billion in profits and pay little or no Federal income taxes.

I think the people of this country have made a judgment on that sort of loopholes, and they say, "Close them," and why we should wait to close them, I do not know.

Despite what has been said just a few moments ago by the very distinguished chairman of the Senate Budget Committee that I am talking of $3 billion per year of additional revenue, oh, no, I am talking about more than that, because the loopholes are there. They exist. They must be closed, and now is the time to do it. We should have done it 1 year or 2 years ago or we should not have opened the gates as much as we did in the last couple tax packages that were unwisely passed by Congress to allow this to happen.

But there will be substitutes offered. There will be packages offered. They merit support, and they will be based on fairness and equity and assuring competitiveness and economic growth in making investments in our future both in the terms of human and fiscal needs.

I have not mentioned one area that this budget drastically reduces, and I do want to bring it up. That is that rural programs would be cut over the next 3 years by 41 percent. That, Mr. President, is totally unlikely to happen, but it does send out shock waves, as to these other proposals that I have listed, among the people throughout the country.

We can better serve all of our citizens of this country by quickly going through this farce of voting this thing into place so we can start to do something with it.

It is an impossible proposition that we are going to finally approve a budget deficit package that results in $180 billion in Federal deficit for the next fiscal year, and we know that will not happen. We know that there will not be cuts and elimination of programs I have mentioned to the degree that are proposed in this budget resolution. We know that will not happen, and so we will have to start piecing it together correctly.

Mr. President, finally, I note that I believe that in all comity for the Senate to function properly, the obvious time-worn and time-tested procedure of recognizing the minority leadership for amendments cannot be abused. I believe the right of the majority of the Senate to determine how we take up the amendments is, of course, their prerogative, but the rights and privileges, I might add, of any one Senator can certainly cause some of the abusers of the time-tested system here in the Senate to want to play the same type of hard ball. I hope that will not happen, but, Mr. President, the possibility is very strong if we are not allowed from our side to present amendments that we think ought to be considered. We waited, after all, 4 days and we could have voted at any time during these 4 days. It simply has not occurred. So it has served the pleasure and desires of the majority, which I do not object to up to this point, but I will certainly be offering my next amendment that is offered.

Thank you, Mr. President.

Several Senators addressed the Chair.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Who yields time?

Mr. GORTON. Mr. President, as the Senate begins debate on the first concurrent budget resolution for fiscal year 1986, I want to take this opportunity to offer some observations on the proposals we will be considering. I say this partly as a matter of record, but also because I hope that my colleagues will approach the debate with a sense of urgency and seriousness appropriate to the situation in which we find ourselves.

A budget resolution has two primary purposes. First and foremost, it is the one document through which the Congress addresses Federal fiscal policy. Until Congress created the budget process in 1974, the legislative branch simply did not address fiscal policy in any systematic fashion. Because congressional oversight over monetary policy is relatively indirect, we were in an astonishing situation, in that the Congress of the United States had no mechanism for expressing itself on questions of Federal economic policy. Monetary policy was determined by a quasi-independent Federal Reserve, fiscal policy emerged from whatever tax and appropriations bills Congress passed on a piecemeal basis, so the ability of Congress to guide economic policy was extremely limited. Whatever the other shortcomings of the congressional budget process, it has at least given Congress a method for addressing economic policy.

The second major purpose of a budget resolution is, of course, to judge the relative importance of various specific programs funded by the Federal Government. From a fiscal policy point of view, not much would be lost if the budget resolution consisted only of two numbers: total spending, and total revenues. But a budget resolution, by virtue of the fact that it includes instructions as to budget authority and outlay figures for each of the 21 functions of Government, has far broad implications. It is the document in which we describe what we think Government should be: What functions it should perform, what activities it should support, and what the role of the Government should be in our lives.

For my part, I cannot help but have distinctly different reactions to the principal budget proposal before us—the so-called Rose Garden II plan—depending upon which aspect I focus on.

From the point of view of fiscal policy, I believe the plan is a good one, indeed, a very good one. It achieves a substantial amount of deficit reduction, and it does so on the spending side alone. Measured against the Senate Budget Committee baseline, the proposal yields $52 billion in deficit reduction in 1986, and over $300 billion in deficit reduction over its 3-year life. The deficit is reduced to 4.2 percent of GNP in 1986, 3.2 percent of GNP in 1987, and 2 percent of GNP in fiscal 1988. It meets the principal fiscal goal that most of us set when we began consideration of the budget.

In addition, by achieving this deficit reduction entirely on the spending side, we derive two further benefits. The first is purely economic: A smaller Federal Government is most consistent with steady and sustained economic growth generally, so it is important that we achieve as much deficit reduction as possible through spending cuts. In addition, we are likely to have to consider, later this year, a proposal for comprehensive tax reform. Everyone in this Chamber knows that passing such a reform measure, valuable though it would be, will be one of the most difficult tasks this body has had to confront in recent years. It is important that we retain maximum flexibility for this battle; that we not spend tax increases now. For every tax we raise now is surely a tax we cannot trade off later, during the consideration of tax reform. As a consequence, we will make that task easier for ourselves if we can avoid tax increases at this time.

Of course, to reach these spending reduction goals we have had to consider many spending cuts which will be politically unpopular. Would that it were not so. But the hard fact is simply that even an across-the-board spending freeze does not come close to generating the kind of deficit reduction that the present challenge demands, and is insufficient from a fiscal standpoint.

From the point of view of what this proposal says about our priorities for government, however, I have some deep reservations. I do not believe that this proposal is as fair as was the resolution originally passed by the Budget Committee, in terms of its distribution of the burden of deficit reduction. Once again, we have focused to an excessive degree on the discretionary, nondefense side of the budget. If I could write the budget by myself, my own preference would be for a number of spending restorations, matched by some deeper cuts. I will not enumerate these now—I have registered my concerns previously in the Budget Committee Report, and the next 2 weeks will provide ample opportunity to expand on this issue.

I would point out, in addition, that not every budget cut contained in the Rose Garden II proposal is motivated purely by budgetary considerations. It is clear that the administration, led in this effort by the Director of the Office of Management and Budget, Mr. Stockman, has seized upon the budget as a vehicle for proposing and, it hopes, passing a number of program terminations. In this effort its motives are more ideological than fiscal. I suspect many Senators will have differences of opinion with the administration over many of these proposals. I know that this Senator does.

Not surprisingly, Mr. President, I would like to restore spending for some programs in the budget. We have not reached the final act in this year's drama, and I suspect I may have an opportunity, before this is over, to try to make a mark on the Senate's budget. Perhaps I will succeed; perhaps I will fail. Perhaps the final package on which I will have an opportunity to vote will be the so-called Rose Garden II proposal.

In that case, I will confront a dilemma. For, as I have indicated, I believe that budget to be admirable on fiscal grounds, but flawed as a guideline to general government. Nevertheless, should I be confronted ultimately with the choice of whether or not to support this proposal, I will do so. I believe that reducing the deficit is, of necessity, our most important national goal at this time. Should we fail in this task, we will condemn the economy to a continuation of high interest rates, an overvalued dollar, an accumulation of debt, and ultimately, an economic burden it will be unable to sustain. The most important social program we can support is that the economic environment will be congenial to steady and sustained economic growth. This will be of far greater benefit, to far more people, than any of the individual spending proposals we will debate over the next 2 weeks. I hope that my colleagues in the Senate will keep this in mind, and not be dissuaded by the many spokesmen for special interests—and I know how forcefully and persuasively they will present their cases—into sacrificing this general good.

I do not know how this budget debate will turn out. But I do know that what we do here in the next 2 weeks is of the most profound importance to our prosperity for the balance of this decade. We will be judged harshly, Mr. President, if we fail to provide a budget resolution that deals clearly and convincingly with the principal economic problem facing the Nation: The size of the Federal deficit.

Mr. GRASSLEY. Mr. President, I am casting my vote in support of this amendment as a procedural step forward. Republicans, as the majority party, must move the Senate along, and move toward some form of agreement soon on a deficit reduction package for fiscal year 1986.

It is my desire to stress, Mr. President, that I view this vote not in terms of the substance of the amendment. It is well known I intend to offer, indeed I have been assured of offering, a 1-year, across-the-board freeze as a substitute to this plan; I further intend to offer an amendment to reduce the fiscal year 1986 defense budget from its present level of 7 percent in this compromise budget to the level of the increase in entitlement COLA's. This will be a test vote in the Senate for establishing fairness and an overall mood of true deficit reduction.

I have also made it known that I have difficulties with many other provisions of the compromise package, and disagree with its general approach of shifting domestic funds to defense expenditures. I do not disagree with saving money on the domestic side, but those savings should not be used to increase defense. I particularly do not favor increases in defense unless and until substantive changes are made in the way the Pentagon does business.

Again, I reiterate my support to proceed with action on the fiscal year 1986 budget, and fully intend to amend the package for fairness and equity.

Mrs. HAWKINS. Mr. President, the vote I am casting today is strictly a procedural vote. I know that it has been touted as a vote to decrease Social Security COLA's and therefore that it must be my intention to do so. However, I believe that my votes in the past on Social Security COLA's, the resolution I introduced last week not to decrease the fiscal year 1986 COLA, and the accurate news reports that I am dedicated to preventing a reduction in Social Security in this budget process clearly show my commitment to Social Security and keeping a full COLA for fiscal years 1986–88. I am as concerned as any Senator in this Chamber with our Federal deficits and have every intention of reducing them—but decreasing the COLA is not the way to do it—the money saved cannot be used for any other purpose.

This is why I have introduced legislation to separate Social Security from the unified budget. It does not cause the deficit problem, and it should not be used as a band-aid. Now that we have a budget package before us, I will fight to ensure that the Social Security COLA is not decreased by any amount. I feel confident that my colleagues will recognize that restoring the full COLA is the only logical and conscionable action, and doing so will not increase this Nation's debt.

Mr. THURMOND. Mr. President, I strongly support adoption of the comprehensive substitute amendment offered by the distinguished majority leader, Senator DOLE. This amendment, of which I am proud to be a cosponsor, embodies what has become known as the Senate administration deficit reduction plan, which would achieve substantial reductions in the projected Federal budget deficits over the next 3 fiscal years.

Mr. President, it is absolutely essential to the economic well-being of this Nation that we take immediate, strong, and decisive steps to reduce the Federal deficit. The plan we have before us here today would do just that.

This budget proposal would reduce projected deficits in fiscal year 1986 by more than $52 billion. Over the 3-year period of fiscal years 1986–88, projected deficits would be reduced by $297 billion. Adoption of this plan would put us clearly on the path toward achieving a balanced Federal budget by the end of the decade, and hopefully, bring to a close the practice of placing the burden of our fiscal irresponsibility on the backs of our children and grandchildren—a burden which today already totals $1.5 trillion in public debt.

Mr. President, over the last few months, and particularly within the last few weeks, many of us have heard from great numbers of our constituents, as well as special interest groups, on budgetary matters. The phone calls and letters I have received from my constituents number in the thousands, and I am certain other Senators have experienced similar interest on the part of their constituents.

I am very pleased that so many South Carolinians, while expressing concern over how a particular budget reduction will require a sacrifice on their part, have stated their willingness to accept sacrifice in order that all may share in the benefits that will result from the savings this resolution would achieve.

In regard to the issue of sacrifices, Mr. President, I would like to clarify just what adoption of this budget proposal would do, and what it would not do.

This budget proposal, the Senate/administration deficit reduction plan, if adopted, would require, and I repeat, would require, that the various authorizing committees of the Congress report legislation achieving a total of $52 billion in savings in fiscal year 1986, from programs within their respective jurisdictions. Adoption of this budget proposal would not, and I repeat again, Mr. President, would not require that any particular programs be cut or eliminated.

While it is certainly true that cuts will have to be made in many programs, and that others may have to be eliminated, in order to achieve savings totaling $52 billion in fiscal year 1986, this proposal does not dictate how those savings are to be achieved. The program reductions and eliminations we have reading and hearing so much about lately are the assumptions underlying the spending targets this proposal would establish.

These assumptions are merely examples of means by which the required savings can be achieved. They do not have to be achieved in the assumed way; and I would say to my colleagues, that I intend to work closely with the various authorizing committees toward achieving savings, in several of the budget function categories, in ways other than those outlined in the assumptions underlying this budget proposal.

I strongly support adoption of the Senate/administration deficit reduction plan because I believe the reduction it would bring about in the Federal deficit are essential to the economic health and vitality of this Nation. At the same time, I share some of the concerns many have expressed over several of the suggested program cutbacks and eliminations underlying the proposal. For instance, under the agriculture function, one assumption is a phaseout of Rural Electricfication Administration programs over an 8-year period. Another is a reduction of the soil and water conservation program.

These are both worthwhile, solid, cost-effective programs which have been of tremendous benefit to rural America. These are programs which I have long supported and plan to continue to support. I believe the savings this proposal would require under the agriculture function can be achieved in ways other than phasing our rural electrification programs, and in ways other than drastically reducing soil and water conservation programs. Accordingly, I plan to work closely with Senator HELMS and other members of the Senate Agriculture Committee on these matters.

In this regard, Mr. President, I am pleased that the administration has made some concessions already, and am encouraged by the willingness Senator HELMS has expressed to me and others to work toward developing a number of different ways the required savings can be achieved under the agriculture function of the budget. Additionally, I would point out to my colleagues that the Senate/administration deficit reduction plan calls for substantially less reductions in agriculture function programs than did the February budget request.

Another assumed program saving that is of concern to me involves the manner in which the supposed cap on Federal Medicaid expenditures would be applied to the respective States. It is assumed that the proportion of future Federal Medicaid matching moneys available to each individual State would be based upon respective amounts received in fiscal year 1985.

In my opinion, such an allocation formula would disproportionately impact States which, because of their limited tax base, have had difficulty in raising the funds required to match Federal dollars, and therefore, have maintained relatively stringent Medicaid eligibility requirements. Therefore, in the event the Senate Finance Committee deems it necessary to limit overall Federal Medicaid expenditures, I plan to work with members of that committee on ways to allocate whatever funds are available to the respective States in a fairer and more equitable manner than would the underlying budget assumptions.

Mr. President, I have these and other concerns about the assumptions underlying the Senate/administration deficit reduction plan. However, I feel it would be most unwise to oppose the entire budget proposal simply because the underlying projected changes—which merely suggest one possible format for achieving the overall savings required—recommend some program curtailments with which I do not agree. Major deficit reductions are simply too important to the future economic vitality of the Nation for me to do less than lend my full support to the adoption of this measure. Certainly the fate of no single program, or group of programs, which might be affected by this budget proposal is as crucial to the Nation as is the success of this package of budget reforms.

If we do not act now to reduce the size of future deficits, we will be unable to maintain strong economic growth. Interest rates will once again rise; American dollars will continue to be overvalued in foreign exchange transactions, leading to a worsening of the already bloated trade deficits; and the economic gains achieved under the leadership of President Reagan will begin to sharply erode.

On the other hand, Mr. President, the benefits expected to accrue from deficit reductions of the magnitude in the Senate/administration deficit reduction plan would assure continued economic expansion for the remainder of this decade. Economists estimate passage of this package would mean a drop of at least 1 percent in interest rates over the short term and 2 to 3 percent over the long term. Such a decline in interest rates would be of tremendous assistance to all sectors of the economy.

For example, a 1-percent decrease in interest rates would result in a 10-percent—$2.15 billion—increase in net farm income. It would result in 300,000 more home sales, and a reduction of almost $50 per month in monthly mortgage payments on a median-priced home.

A 2-percent decrease in interest rates would result in a 20-percent—$4.3 billion—increase in net farm income, and also produce 600,000 more home sales. Such a decrease would also produce a savings of nearly $100 per month in mortgage payments on a median-priced home.

In addition, a drop in interest rates should result in a decline in the relative value of the dollar, thereby improving American competitiveness in world markets. American jobs would be protected and preserved, and the current unfavorable trade balance would be much improved.

Mr. President, we simply cannot continue the fiscal policies of the past. The Federal Government has run a deficit in 37 of the last 45 years, and 24 of the last 25 years. The gross Federal debt is estimated to reach $1.841 trillion in 1985. It currently stands around $1.5 trillion; equivalent to approximately 48 percent of our gross national product.

In 1985, interest on the national debt will cost taxpayers $130 billion. This equals the sum total of all Federal spending from the founding of the Republic through the first 36 years of this century. It is equivalent to the total Federal outlays of 1966, and the entire defense budget in 1980. Approximately 40 percent of all revenue collected in personal income taxes by the Federal Government will go to pay interest on the debt.

Most alarming to me, Mr. President, are the inevitable, disastrous consequences which continued fiscal irresponsibility on our part will visit upon future generations of Americans. If we do not exercise political courage and act now, we will almost certainly end up with a $300 billion deficit in 1990, and a national debt of $2.8 trillion. Interest on the debt will consume $230 billion, or almost one-half of all personal income tax revenues. This would be a terrible, unthinkable burden to place on future generations. We simply cannot afford to be politically expedient or shortsighted. For the sake of a continued strong America, bold, decisive action is necessary now!

Mr. President, I urge my colleagues to join in supporting adoption of the Senate/administration deficit reduction plan.

Mr. D'AMATO. Mr. President, the matter before us is one of the greatest importance and of the greatest urgency. We are deciding a matter no less serious than the future of the American economy. Although the motion may seem procedural and technical—whether or not to agree to a second degree amendment to a motion to recommit a Senate concurrent resolution to committee—it has far more significance.

Mr. President, this Nation cannot long survive with annual deficits exceeding $200 billion. Our economy cannot absorb the massive shock of a national debt rapidly approaching $2 trillion. The annual deficit must be reduced. The rate of growth of the national debt must be slowed.

We have before us a plan, a compromise, a package put together by the Senate Republican leadership and the White House. This proposal will cut the deficit. It will slow the rate of growth of our national debt. It is a step in the right direction.

The question, however, is, Is it the right step? Is this the best way to reduce the deficit?

Frankly, this proposal is not the one I would have chosen. I have suggested a nearly across-the-board freeze on discretionary Federal spending as an alternative. I have suggested the adoption of a meaningful corporate minimum tax. I have suggested modest reductions in many Federal programs.

Some of my suggestions have been accepted, others have not. Some of the options which I oppose have been included in this package, others have not. On the whole this package is a reasonable one, but one that can use some modification.

The most important modification is clearly the need to reiterate our commitment to our mothers and fathers. This package's most glaring defect is its proposal to reduce Social Security cost-of-living increases by 2 percent each year for the next 3 years. I do not and I cannot support this discriminatory reduction.

We made our commitment to our elderly. We promised them that they would no longer be victimized by the ravages of inflation. We promised them not luxurious living, not a steadily increasing benefit, but merely the ability to keep pace with rising costs. They deserve no less. We should give them no less.

I have numerous arguments to make as to why we must keep the commitment of full COLA's for Social Security, but I will not make them now. I will save them for when an amendment is offered to restore full COLA's to this package.

In the interim, however, I wish to explain why I am voting to move this budget package along on this crucial procedural vote, despite its flaws. I am doing so for the very simple reason that I see no other way to truly pass a deficit reduction package this year. Once we get past this procedural vote I will offer an amendment to restore full COLA's to this package. I will support other amendments to correct flaws in this package. I will work for a better deficit reduction package than the one we have here.

But to vote against moving forward on this crucial procedural vote is not a realistic option. That would leave us without any plan for meaningful deficit reduction. We have many opportunities still ahead to correct the defects in this package. Let's get on with our business.

Thank you, Mr. President.

Mr. SPECTER. Mr. President, I am voting in favor of the substitute budget proposed by Senator DOLE, the Majority Leader, because I wish to support the Republican Senate leadership/White House commitment to deficit reduction; and this amendment still leaves me free to support additional amendments which are important to Pennsylvania's interests.

I totally agree with the commitments expressed by President Reagan and Senator DOLE for deficit reduction. In 1982, I supported the constitutional amendment for a balanced budget which passed the Senate by a vote of 69 to 31. In my judgment, steps should be taken to reduce the deficit beyond any of the proposals yet submitted for fiscal year 1986.

The Dole substitute makes substantial changes on the resolution passed by the Budget Committee. I agree with some of the changes and disagrees with others. For example, this amendment is preferable to the Budget Committee resolution on the cost-of-living adjustment on Social Security for senior citizens. The Budget Committee amendment gives no cost-of-living increase while this amendment gives a 2-percent increase. Neither is satisfactory. I plan to support an amendment to provide for a cost-of-living adjustment equal to the inflation rate.

Similarly, this amendment is preferable on student aid since it lifts the cap from $4,000 to $8,000 and the maximum parental earning from $32,500 to $60,000. Again, neither is satisfactory; and I intend to vote to retain the student aid in the fiscal year 1985 budget.

In agreeing to support this amendment, I have advised Senator DOLE, and the chairman of the Budget Committee, Senator DOMENICI, of my reservation of rights to propose and support amendments which are important to Pennsylvania. I intend to offer amendments or to support amendments offered by others on a wide range of issues including, but not limited to, Social Security COLA, student aid, Amtrak, mass transit, Medicaid, Appalachian Regional Commission, Economic Development Administration, community development block grants, urban development action grants, Small Business Administration, Job Corps, Rural Electrification Administration, veterans benefits, and soil and water conservation.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The majority time on this amendment has expired.

Mr. CHILES. Mr. President, I yield 5 minutes off the resolution to the distinguished Senator from Iowa.

Mr. HARKIN. Thank you, Mr. President.

Mr. President, a lot has been said here about the impact on the elderly and the significance of the upcoming vote in regards to the Social Security cuts. But I draw attention to another aspect of this vote. I know it has been counted as just a procedural vote that we are going to be voting on here, but a lot of times in procedural votes there really is more substance than there is procedure. So it is with this vote that we are going to be taking this evening, especially in the area of agriculture.

I think we have to be very clear about the exact nature of the vote and the severe hardship that this will create for our family farmers, who are already facing a crisis not seen since the days of the Great Depression. Quite frankly, the vote on this amendment is a vote to gut the farm program. It is a vote to cut more than $18 billion from our farm programs over the next 3 years, and it is a vote, quite simply, to cut the lifeline to our family farmers at a time when it is most needed.

We all want a budget that is both responsible and fair and a budget that does indeed cut the deficit. But this so-called compromise is filled with thorns. It is neither fair nor responsible. At the same time President Reagan is gutting the farm program, he is also asking for a 3-percent growth in real spending in the Pentagon's budgets. So I ask where is the fairness and where is the sharing of pain here?

Mr. President, our family farmers are not greedy. Mr. President, they are not stupid, either. President Reagan will tell you that this farm program is too expensive and it must be restrained.

Well, he is partially right. The farm program is too expensive, and it is too expensive because he conceived of irrational programs like the PIK program that gave billions away to the largest of our farmers. Fifty percent of the PIK program went to less than 5.4 percent of our largest farmers.

But let us look at what the Rose Garden plan will do:

First, it will reduce both support prices and farm income support over the next 3 years.

Second, it will gut the Farmers Home Administration operating and ownership loans.

Third, it will eliminate emergency disaster loans.

Fourth, it will eliminate crop insurance subsidies.

Fifth, it will reduce conservation programs drastically.

This budget does not address the needs of the family farmers and it does not address the needs of this Nation. It is nothing short of shameful when it comes to helping our farmers who are already hurt enough.

The truth is in the numbers. Farm programs account for a mere 2 percent of the budget outlays over the next 3 years, but 6 percent of the total cuts in the compromise are laid on the backs of our family farmers. Two percent of the budget for agriculture, and yet they have to absorb 6 percent of the cuts. That is not fair and that is not reasonable, and it is being done at a time when we are throwing more money at defense contractors and we are throwing it at them faster than they can spend it, and that is why we are paying $600 for hammers and $10,000 for haircuts for defense industry executives.

This is not sensible and it is not good policy.

The vote this evening is purely and simply a vote that will gut farm programs, and it is a vote that is eminently unfair when we are asked to take 6 percent of the total cut when we only make up 2 percent of the budget. If we were to do absolutely nothing with our farm programs over the next 3 years, from the baseline this vote represents a 41-percent cut in our farm programs.

It is a cut that will devastate Farmers' Home programs, providing housing for 200 low-income Americans every day, though 10 million still live in substandard housing. It will shut off the tap on Farmers Home programs which make water drinkable for families in rural areas, though one-fourth of our rural households' drinking water is unsafe and unhealthy. And it will slam the door on Farmers' Home programs which encourage industry and business in small towns and provide basic services like fire protection, though this is becoming more and more an effort when the farm crisis is turning our small communities into ghost towns.

So let us be clear about the vote coming up this evening. It cannot be counted as a procedural vote. It may be passed off as a procedural vote, but it is purely and simply a substance vote, a vote to gut our farm programs.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator's 5 minutes have expired.

Mr. CHILES. I yield the Senator 1 more minute.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Iowa.

Mr. HARKIN. It is a vote on substance, the substance of which is to gut our farm programs and to do in our farmers at a time more than ever since the Great Depression that they need a lifeline to get them through these tough times, a lifeline to get them into the future.

What this vote this evening does is to cut the lifeline and to throw our farmers and our farm families to the wolves without even a BB gun to protect themselves.

I yield back the balance of my time. I thank the distinguished Senator from Florida.

Mr. CHILES. I yield to the distinguished Senator from Michigan 4 minutes.

Mr. RIEGLE. I thank the Senator from Florida.

I wanted to say on the Social Security issue that there are items in this budget package that hurt senior citizens so severely that by themselves I think they constitute a sufficient reason to vote this package down. But I want to put the numbers on the record now because anybody who votes for this package in a minute is voting for these cuts. I want to make sure that they know they are voting for them, so in the future there is no excuse for a vote in favor of this package by those later who may want to cover their tracks and say that that is not what they meant.

With the 3-year, 2-percent COLA elimination that is planned for the average person on Social Security who would receive about $450 a month, they would be losing in the first year about $9 a month by the cut in the COLA protection. They would lose a second $9 a month in the second year which would mean a total of $18 a month in real buying power and in the third year of the cut proposed by the Republican package they would lose another $9 a month for a 3-year total of $27 a month, of a loss in their buying power below where they are at the present time.

But, in addition to that, in the Republican package are also cuts in the Medicare Program, both in the amount of the premiums and the deductibles as well as reducing the reimbursement that would normally be available. You add that up and that amounts to a total dollar figure per month for the average person on Social Security of about $33.10 by 1990. So by the time we get to 1990, if this package is accepted just in those two items, Social Security COLA reductions and Medicare cost increases, the average person on Social Security will loose over $60 a month from where they are today in terms of value of their Social Security coverage at the present time.

But that is not all of it. There are also cuts in the Older Americans Act. There are cuts in senior feeding programs, weatherization programs, and a low-income energy assistance to the elderly, transportation, and the list goes on.

So for anybody who feels that they can vote for that package with those kinds of Social Security cuts over 3 years and reductions in Medicare protection over 5 years, and then come back and put it back in later, they ought to understand clearly what they are doing now, because they are no friends of the senior citizens.

The best estimates are that about 450,000 senior citizens in the first year under Social Security will be driven below the poverty line as a result of the Social Security cuts contained in this package.

So I asked my friends on the other side of the aisle on the Budget Committee how they propose to deal with the new poor that they would be creating by these cuts in the cost-of-living adjustments. And they say, "Well, they will have to go on welfare. We will put some more money in the Supplemental Security Income [SSI] Program and they can go on the welfare."

So their answer is for people that are driven below the poverty line on Social Security, that they should sign up for public assistance, file the records necessary and become basically a welfare client. I think that is absolutely an inexcusable kind of thinking. The whole point of Social Security, for which people pay in during a lifetime of work, is to avoid having to go on welfare. We do not want people on public welfare. We want people off welfare.

And to drive another half million senior citizens below the poverty line in order to take and shift that money over into the Defense Department—and make no mistake about it, that is what is happening—is just as wrong as it could be.

President Reagan, back in March this year, after the election, after he made the promise to protect Social Security, himself in his press conference said:

> Social Security is running on a surplus and is totally funded by a tax that can only be used for that purpose. So when we talk about Social Security, we are not really getting at the deficit problem at all.

Well, the President understood it on March 21 of this year, but apparently he does not understand it now. Caspar Weinberger does not need this money. He does not need to loot the Social Security system of its reserves in order to pay for this bloated defense build-up. But that is precisely what this package does.

It is far worse than the package that came out of the Budget Committee with only the votes of Republicans a short time before. The package we're voting on now is a 3-year cut in Social Security, and in fact it permanently reduces the buying power. Any notion that this is an increase is wrong. It does not provide an increase, because the cost-of-living adjustment comes a year later and is only designed to restore what inflation has taken away.

So I would hope we would defeat this package.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Who yields time?

Mr. CHILES. I yield myself 5 minutes from the amendment.

Mr. President, we are about to vote on this package. I find it curious that its characterized in different ways. On one hand, I hear it characterized as a procedural vote. It is only supposed to be a little vote on procedure and everybody can vote for it because it is just a housekeeping matter, mere mechanics.

On the other hand, I hear it characterized as a very symbolic vote. It is going to be a great symbol that the President's package and the Republican leadership package has support.

I think it is certainly more than a procedural vote. I do not think there is any way you can say voting for this particular package is only procedural.

It seems to me that once you have bitten the apple, once you have voted for 2-percent cuts 3 years in a row off of Social Security, you voted for a major structural change on COLA's.

Once you've cast that vote you can't come back and just say, "Well, that is procedure and that does not count." You cannot fool anyone with that. What you have really said is this: "That is all right, even though the pain is not shared equally, even though some wealthy corporations that are making billions of dollars and are not paying any tax, in fact are being paid by taxpayer. You are saying that is acceptable. We do not need to do anything about them. We do not need to do anything about all of those people we read about every day that are making over $200,000 a year and paying no tax. We do not have to ask them to be a part of the sacrifice. But, we are going to make this structural change in Social Security. If you vote for this package, you are putting your stamp of approval on all that."

You will also be saying something else. And here it is: "We are going to ask you to pay more on your health bills. We just feel that is right. We are not satisfied to just freeze the providers. We are going to ask the individual recipients to go on and pay more on their health bills."

Vote for this package and you will be saying that is all right now because it is only "procedure". We are going to come around and maybe change that later.

It seems to me this is a major vote. Everybody needs to view it that way. I think this sets the blueprint. Even if some amendment are made at a future time, this package will return. And when this package returns after it has been amended, I am sure some people are going to be called on. The majority will be saying to their Members, "Wait a minute, now, you voted for this once. You have already voted for it. You can't change now. You're locked in."

So it seems to me this sets the precedent. If it is wrong to change COLA's structurally now without asking everybody to share the pain of dealing with this deficit, if that is wrong, it is as wrong on this vote as it will be tomorrow, as it will be the day after tomorrow, and the day after that. And it would seem to me if that is wrong, then it ought to be voted that way and we ought to turn this down and start off with this package the way it is normally done. Lay it down, allow the Senate to work its will and amend it. Evidently we are not able to do this. It seems to me that if we are going to put something together to deal with this deficit, it must include revenues. We must restrain defense, we must restrain all of the other domestic programs. Are we willing to restrain everything on the domestic side, including the entitlement programs, and including the COLA programs? If we are, then I think we are serious about this deficit. If we are not, then I think we are talking about a package that puts more of the pain, and more of the burden on certain people as opposed to what we put on the others. So, Mr. President, this is no procedural vote. I think it is a major, substantive vote.

Mr. LAUTENBERG. Mr. President, I rise in opposition to the pending amendment, the so-called White House-Senate leadership package.

Mr. President, it must be clearly understood. What are we asked to vote on?

The Senate is not asked to freeze Government spending, to freeze spending across the board; it is asked to stop spending, to stop spending on transit, and on urban development; it is asked to slow spending on education, cleaning the environment, taking care of the sick, the elderly; and it is asked to accelerate military spending, to accelerate spending on defense which has already gone up 30 percent over inflation since 1981.

That is what we are asked to vote on.

We are asked not just to cut the deficit. I want to cut the deficit. I think every Member in this body believes that the record deficits created by this administration must be cut.

But we are asked to not just cut the deficit, we are asked to undercut Americans, who rely on Government for a dignified retirement, for an education, for a clean environment.

We are asked to undercut the foundation of our economy, an economy that depends on essential spending on transportation, research, and exports. We are asked to undercut our future.

We are asked not to raise taxes—the taxes, that is, of corporations that pay none—but we are asked to hide taxes on the average citizen, to hide the taxman on the buses, collecting higher fares because transit subsidies will be ended. The taxman will be hiding at the schoolhouse gate, collecting higher costs for education. The taxman will be standing at the hospital door, dipping deeper into the pocket of elderly in need of medical care because Medicare has been cut.

We are not asked to break the spending spiral, we are asked to break a promise to senior citizens, who were told that once Social Security was taxed, once one cost-of-living increase was postponed, that Social Security would be safe. We are asked to break that promise and banish over 600,000 seniors to poverty.

That Mr. President, is what we are asked to vote for. That is the budget we are asked to vote for. That is a budget I cannot endorse.

Every Member in this body would welcome the days of mere $70 billion deficits, the kind we had before this administration, the kind of deficit that's dwarfed by the $200 billion deficit we see now.

Every Member in this body would welcome the days of a mere trillion dollar national debt, the kind we had before this administration, a debt that is dwarfed by the nearly $2 trillion debt we have now.

Beneath the veneer of recovery, budget deficits are eating away at our economic future; 1.3 percent growth in the GNP is a sign that the recovery may be rotting away.

The Nation's borrowing keeps interest rates high. High rates keep the dollar overvalued. So, our exports are priced out of the foreign markets, while imports flood our own. Manufacturers and the thousands of people they employ are running harder and harder just to stay in place. They are losing jobs at home and markets abroad; they are losing jobs and markets that they may never regain.

Our diet for debt feeds on foreign capital. As a net debtor Nation, owing out more to others than they owe to us, the United States will be less secure, and less a master of its own economic destiny.

What is worse, the problem feeds on itself. The Nation borrows to finance the deficit, and then borrows to pay interest on its borrowing. Since 1980, interest on the national debt has grown faster than any other sector of the national budget. On the present path, the Nation will spend more on debt service by the end of the decade than it will spend on all nondefense discretionary programs combined. That is, more in interest than in feeding our people, educating them, and building for the future.

In sum, Mr. President, we must get hold of our fiscal policy, if we care about the economy, if we care about the future.

But, if that is our goal, we should not support the amendment before us. In the coming days, Democrats will offer an alternative, an alternative that imposes sacrifice fairly and does not sacrifice our future.

Mr. President, we must fight a winning war against rising budget deficits. But the budget before us would wage a futile assault, and the casualties will only be those who have suffered so much before, the casualties will be the future we want to protect.

Until all of America is enlisted in the battle, we cannot succeed.

I will vote against the amendment, and I urge my colleagues to join me.

IMPROVING THE BUDGET COMPROMISE

Mr. PROXMIRE. Mr. President, I have decided to vote against this package not because it does too much to reduce the deficit but because it does too little. We can, and should, do better.

What does this package do to the deficit? Proponents contend that it will reduce the deficit to about $100 billion in 1988. But this package is based on economic assumptions which make Pollyanna look like a pessimist.

The Congressional Budget Office—a nonpartisan, congressional agency—has estimated the level of deficits using economic assumptions which are still optimistic but more reasonable. They say the deficit in 1988 will be around $150 billion. If the economy continues to perform as it has over the last three quarters, that estimate may be optimistic.

These figures point to the most attractive feature of the package. It makes a serious attempt on the domestic side of the budget to bring Federal spending under control. It ends, or drastically cuts, a number of politically popular programs. The administration deserves credit for making such difficult recommendations.

To my colleagues, who hope to save this or that favorite program, I say look at those figures on the deficits. They demonstrate that sooner or later we in Congress are going to be forced to face the issue of how much can we afford to spend. After doing so, I believe our answers will not be that much different from those recommended by the administration.

If the administration has done a reasonably good job on the domestic side of the budget, where else should we look for additional savings? One answer is in the defense budget.

Every inefficient or obsolete domestic program has its counterpoint in the defense budget. If the Small Business Administration is inefficient, then the Divad antiaircraft gun is equally so. If subsidizing Amtrak riders to the tune of about $35 a ride is bad policy, then so is the Defense Department paying $400 for a hammer.

Think how much we could have saved if the administration had applied the same standard to Defense as it did to domestic spending. Only the administration has the knowledge and staff to go through the Defense budget in this manner. We in Congress can make the judgment about how much is enough. But we cannot make certain that the money we appropriate is spent wisely. In an agency as large and complex as the Defense Department, that responsibility lies with the agency itself.

The Defense Department has refused to make those judgments. It has taken an all-or-nothing attitude.

Mr. President, we seldom see an executive agency make a mistake of historic proportions, but in my opinion, the Defense Department has done so. Only 4 years ago, the American people and the Congress were solidly behind the administration's efforts to improve our defense. The Carter administration started the buildup, the Reagan administration expanded it, and Congress cheered.

Now, Congress is likely to freeze defense spending and only the administration will protest. In my 27 years as a Senator, I have seldom seen a more rapid change in public sentiment. And the lion's share of blame for this change lies at the doors of the Pentagon. They stonewalled. They cried wolf. They denied the problem. Those chickens are now coming home to roost. As a result—the final irony—we will probably spend less money on defense under this administration than we would have had Walter Mondale been elected.

Where else can we look for savings? The simple fact is that we are going to have to raise more revenue. Tax loopholes now cost the Treasury over $300 billion a year.

As with domestic and defense spending, many of these loopholes are inefficient and obsolete. They are defended by powerful special interests, to be sure. But is not every program in the budget? These tax loopholes should not be exempted from our efforts to reduce the deficit.

If I were advising the corporate lobbyists clustered around our offices—and I do not—I would point to what happened to defense. The newspapers are now reporting that a number of major corporations pay no income taxes. That information is sinking into the American public's mind, just as did the information about outrageous spare parts prices. After it does, the public may support tax increases on corporations that could be punitive. Corporations will be better served by supporting efforts to close the most outrageous loopholes—that would be my advice.

Someone will argue that the President is dead set against tax increases. His campaign statements about taxes left the door open for tax changes if we cut spending. Those statements were much less adamant than were his promises about protecting Social Security.

In that instance, the President was right. The Social Security trust fund is financially sound. The program is not causing the deficit. Instead, it is paying its own way and then some. Before even considering cuts in Social Security, let us go through the defense budget and the Tax Code. Let us cut those programs that are not paying their way. If we do so, then this Senator is confident that we will have resolved the deficit problem without having to touch Social Security.

Mr. President, this compromise does too little to reduce the deficits. Let us keep its good features intact and add to them. It is a start, but we can improve it. Let us start today.

Mr. DECONCINI. Mr. President, the substitute budget resolution proposed by the Republican leadership and supported by the President violates not only the long-standing agreement between this country and its elderly and retired people, but also reneges on President Reagan's personal promise. President Reagan and his Republican colleagues ran for election last year on the promise of reducing the deficit but promised there would be no tax increases, no cuts in defense spending, and no cuts in Social Security.

We in the Democratic Party warned that such a promise could not be kept. We said that if when it came showdown time on the budget, the Republicans would renege on their promises. History showed, and we tried to sound the alarm, that if one part of this promise could not be kept; if one group had to sacrifice while others were held harmless; if one segment of our population had to bear a disproportionate share of the burden of deficit reduction, this administration would choose that group of Americans most unable to survive such singling out: our elderly and retired citizens.

Unfortunately, the Democrats turned out to be better prognosticators than campaigners. We lost the elections in 1984, although we were somewhat successful in the Senate, and on their first at bat, the Republicans and the President have tried to knock Social Security out of the ballpark.

Last July, the Senate voted to insure the full Social Security COLA for January 1985. The vote was 87–3. Supporting the resolution was Senator DOLE, now the majority leader; Senator DOMENICI, the chairman of the Budget Committee; and the President of the United States. Of course, this vote was in the middle of the election campaign.

Just 2 years ago we in Congress passed the Social Security Act Amendments of 1983. This reform package was the result of a bipartisan effort by Democrats and Republicans led by President Reagan's Commission on Social Security Reform. As part of that package, to insure the continued solvency of Social Security, we had to swallow some bitter medicine. We delayed COLA's for 6 months permanently. That is, every year the Social Security COLA will be issued 6 months later than it would have been absent that legislation. We taxed Social Security benefits for the first time ever. We increased the retirement age, we added Federal workers to the Social Security rolls, we increased penalties for early retirement and increased taxes on the self-employed. All of these provisions were painful. But we voted for this package because it was balanced, necessary, and workable.

Fortunately, the Social Security Act amendments were successful. The Social Security trust funds are thriving. Next year the trust funds should realize a surplus of $4.9 billion; the following year, $4.4 billion; and in 1987, $7.6 billion. These surplus are necessary to prepare the trust funds for the retirement in the next century of the baby boom generation. In any event, the action we took in 1983 to solve a very immediate problem has worked.

In 1983, we told our Social Security beneficiary constituents that the reform package was necessary, that it would work, and that we would not need to affect Social Security benefits again for a very long time. And we do not. Cutting the COLA will not really help us reduce the deficit problem. Admittedly, if we cut the COLA, less money will be spent by the Federal Government and on paper the deficit will be reduced. This savings cannot be spent to reduce our deficit though. It has to, by law, stay in the Social Security trust funds. It can only be used to buy Federal savings instruments, thereby driving up interest rates across the board.

I will support an across-the-board freeze on spending that includes Social Security COLA's. I will not support a piece-meal approach that singles out one group for sacrifice and allows others to continue their Government-sponsored prosperity.

THE REPUBLICAN BUDGET COMPROMISE: A BAD COMPROMISE ON PRIORITIES

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I recognize the need for a responsible approach to the Federal budget, an approach which will help reduce the crushing burden of debt which today's huge deficits create.

In 5 years, the current administration will have doubled the national debt—doubled the debt that it took 39 Presidents almost 200 years to accumulate. This administration is the biggest spender of all time. But the plan supported by the President is not the right answer.

The priorities reflected in this amendment are dead wrong. Many of the areas that the President has targeted are the very areas which need to be maintained if America is to stride confidently into the future. This budget shortchanges the future, by cutting education and research. It does nothing to curb outrageous waste in our defense establishment. This budget is unfair. It breaks the President's own promises to our Nation's elderly. It hurts children and middle income families.

A $200 billion deficit is a very serious national problem. It is a problem that will take an all-out national effort to solve. It is already taking its toll. America has become a debtor nation. We are losing out to foreign competition. It is costing us millions of jobs.

But we must tackle this important task in a manner which resolves the deficit problem without sacrificing the future of our Nation.

The budget debate is not just a dry exercise in balancing figures. A budget is a road map for our future. Make no mistake about it, the budget we finally enact and the choices reflected in that budget will affect each American citizen directly and will shape the future of this great country.

Let me give an example of how budget choices impact on future directions for years to come. Back in 1961, President Kennedy urged Congress to invest in the research and education required to land astronauts on the Moon. Today, hundreds of thousands of Americans are working in space technology and rocketry because we made that commitment as a nation. Computers are part of many homes. Countless people are benefiting from breakthroughs in medical research which were paid for by the National Institutes of Health. Literally millions of jobs exist solely because we invested in the future.

Let me say in the most emphatic and most unmistakable way that Democrats want to reduce the deficit. We will work with the President to reduce the deficit, and we will deal with it directly and responsibly. But, the program being offered today is a formula for future economic disaster. Education holds the key to the future. But this budget will deny thousands of youngsters the chance to get a college education. This budget undermines our scientific and medical research, job training, and many other areas so desperately needed if we are to maintain our economy and prepare for our future in a competitive world. Let us be clear about one thing. We cannot remain a political power in the world if we are not economically strong.

Democrats believe that our present Tax Code is a nightmare which needs to be simplified in order to make it fair. It is simply not fair to ask Social Security recipients, middle income families, coal miners, and farmers to sacrifice while the largest, richest, most profitable corporations in America are permitted to get a free ride.

This budget fails to get serious about Pentagon waste. A few days ago, on April 15, most Americans paid their taxes. Every citizen who paid $500 in taxes to the Federal Government bought the Pentagon a hammer and two lightbulbs. Every citizen who paid $10,000 in taxes bought a coffee maker, three toilet seat covers, and a tape measure.

Such waste in our defense establishment is a national scandal; yet, the budget compromise before us at this moment does nothing to deal with the problem. Democrats have consistently tried to address the problem of Pentagon waste, and we have been fought every step of the way by the current administration. Two years ago, Democrats managed to create an office of inspector general to try to tame Pentagon mismanagement, and we were forced to accomplish this essential reform over the strong objections of the White House. On the basis of this experience, we know that further savings can be made in the Pentagon budget without jeopardizing in any way our basic national security. This ought to be the goal of any budget proposal for the Pentagon; yet, it is not the goal of the so-called Republican compromise before us today.

Today, the Defense budget is three times greater than it was in 1968 when we had a million more people under arms. With all of this spending, we are still dangerously thin in our ability to fight nonnuclear combat in areas where our national interest might some day be threatened. As in other areas of the budget, the President's choices do not target the real challenges which may face us in the future. We need to tighten this Defense budget so that our readiness to fight a conventional war is increased and waste and inefficiency are eliminated.

If the compromise before us is misguided in its emphasis on spending more on the Pentagon, it is even more misguided in those programs it proposes to cut. The cuts proposed in this budget fall on some of the most important and most vulnerable groups in American society. The proposal would erode the value of Social Security—the critical life support system for the elderly. It would increase the elderly's medical bills, by making deep cuts in Medicare. It would hurt the Nation's farmers, the backbone of the greatest food production system in the world. This budget would reduce the ability of families to finance college education for their sons and daughters. The proposal would slash nutrition programs for infants and children—surely the key to any bright future for our country.

Democrats believe that these are misguided priorities. Democrats have a vision for the future, and we want this year's budget resolution to reflect that vision. We are determined to strengthen this Nation's ability to compete in global markets. We are determined to see that our children have the best education that we as a nation can offer them. We are determined to stress technological research so that the jobs of the future can be filled by Americans. We are determined to stop exporting American jobs overseas. We are determined to restore this Nation's manufacturing capability before it is too late. We are determined to address the deficit problem in a fair way that inspires the faith of our people and reassures their perceptions about the fairness of their government. We are determined to ensure a strong and sound national defense for our people.

To realize these goals, Democrats are prepared to offer concrete alternatives in this year's budget debate. In the coming days, Democrats intend to offer budget proposals which establish the proper priorities for our Nation, now and in the future. Democrats will try to set this Nation on a positive course for our future. We will offer the alternatives needed to achieve this great vision that we all want for our country.

These are the reasons I will vote against the so-called "compromise" budget which is before us at this time. I believe the Senate will have ample opportunity in the days ahead to debate specific items in the budget. This debate will help clarify the crucial issue at stake, and will, I hope, result in a budget which meets the needs of the country.

Mr. PELL. Mr. President, I shall vote against the budget presented to the Senate by the administration and the Republican leadership.

In acting on a budget for the next fiscal year, the Senate faces two challenges: The huge Federal budget deficits must be reduced, and of equal importance, the deficit must be reduced in a way that is fair, and equitable and that reflects our real national priorities.

The administration budget proposal meets the first challenge—it reduces the deficit—but it fails to meet the second challenge of fairness and recognition of essential national goals.

I am committed to reducing the budget deficit and I will be supporting other proposals here in the Senate to reduce the huge deficits that have ballooned during the past 4 years.

What is wrong with the administration budget?

The administration budget continues the runaway increase in defense spending, costing the taxpayers an added $20 billion next year.

While increasing defense spending by the rate of inflation plus 3 percent, the budget would give the elderly retired on Social Security an adjustment of inflation minus 2 percent.

In education, the real pillar of our national strength, this budget would eliminate assistance for up to 1 million needy young people pursuing post-high-school education.

This budget would also destroy Amtrak, leaving the United States as the only industrialized nation without a rail passenger service system. It would eliminate completely the modest programs that have proven successful in helping entrepreneurs develop their own businesses.

And in the process of cutting Federal Government spending, this budget would shift many of the real costs of essential services to our State and local taxpayers, to the elderly, and to middle-class families. These kinds of budget cuts don't save a buck, they just pass the buck.

All Americans, I believe, share the vision of an opportunity society but this budget would reduce educational opportunities for young Americans, and opportunities for essential medical care and a dignified retirement for elderly Americans. To a great extent, these opportunities would be sacrificed to provide another $20 billion for military spending that has proven wasteful, nonessential and poorly managed.

I regret that this budget is being presented to the Senate on a take-it-or-leave it basis. The budget before us is described as a compromise, but it is a compromise only between the President and some members of his own political party.

Although this compromise budget has been changed almost daily for the past 3 months, we are now told that any and all changes must be opposed and that we must take the package as it is or leave it.

Faced with that choice, I regretfully shall vote to leave it.

If the majority of the Senate votes in support of this budget, I look forward to the opportunity to change it and improve it through amendments and substitute proposals that will reduce the deficit effectively, but in a fairer and more constructive way.

Mr. HOLLINGS addressed the Chair.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from South Carolina is recognized.

Mr. HOLLINGS. I thank the distinguished Vice President.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to include at this point in the RECORD the list made by the Congressional Budget Office of the increases in budget authority and outlays contained in the President's budget submission. A similar list of increases in budget authority and outlays for the President's compromise has not been compiled by CBO because the information to provide such a list has not been submitted.

There being no objection, the tables were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

CBO/BUDGET ANALYSIS DIV(MAR40R) CBO EST. OF PRES. WHERE BUDGET YEAR DATA
(UNIFIED BUDGET) IS GREATER THAN CURRENT YEAR DATA
P63 SORTED BY: SCOM,FUNC,SFUN,TID
(AMOUNTS IN THOUSANDS)

Appropriations Committee		1985 BA	1985 OUTLAYS	1986 BA	1986 OUTLAYS	DIFFERENCE COL2 - COL1 BA	DIFFERENCE COL2 - COL1 OUTLAYS
ALLOWANCES
Civilian agency pay raises
Allowances
Allowances for:
Coast Guard military pay raises
99 6006 0 1 921
	NEW:	6,900	6,600	27,700	26,900	20,800	20,300
	PRIOR:		0		0		0
	TOTAL:	6,900	6,600	27,700	26,900	20,800	20,300
COMMITTEE TOTAL.. AP Appropriations Committee
	NEW:	6,900	6,600	27,700	26,900	20,800	20,300
	PRIOR:		0		0		0
	TOTAL:	6,900	6,600	27,700	26,900	20,800	20,300

Note: Some committee totals may not reflect exact jurisdiction because accounts with joint jurisdiction appear in total in only one committee.

(AMOUNTS IN THOUSANDS)

Agriculture Subcommittee		1985 BA	1985 OUTLAYS	1986 BA	1986 OUTLAYS	DIFFERENCE COL2 - COL1 BA	DIFFERENCE COL2 - COL1 OUTLAYS
NATURAL RESOURCES AND ENVIRONMENT
Conservation and land management
Department of Agriculture
Soil Conservation Service
Conservation operations
12 1000 0 1 302
	NEW:	351,190	322,278	354,179	325,136	2,989	2,858
	PRIOR:		28,939		28,912		-27
	TOTAL:	351,190	351,217	354,179	354,048	2,989	2,831
AGRICULTURE
Agricultural research and services
Departmental Administration
Standard level user charges
12 0117 0 1 352
	NEW:	67,254	67,254	77,300	77,300	10,046	10,046
	PRIOR:		0		0		0
	TOTAL:	67,254	67,254	77,300	77,300	10,046	10,046
World Agricultural Outlook Board
World agricultural outlook board
12 2100 0 1 352
	NEW:	1,610	1,397	1,619	1,409	9	12
	PRIOR:		197		213		16
	TOTAL:	1,610	1,594	1,619	1,622	9	28
Human Nutrition Information Service
Human Nutrition Information Service
12 3501 0 1 352
	NEW:	7,462	5,745	13,416	10,344	5,954	4,599
	PRIOR:		1,400		1,717		317
	TOTAL:	7,462	7,145	13,416	12,061	5,954	4,916
COMMUNITY AND REGIONAL DEVELOPMENT
Area and regional development
Rural Electrification Administration
Rural communication development fund
12 4142 0 3 452
	NEW:	1,604	1,604	1,834	1,834	230	230
	PRIOR:		2,899		3,899		1,000
	TOTAL:	1,604	4,503	1,834	5,733	230	1,230
HEALTH
Consumer and occupational health and safety
Department of Health and Human Services
Food and Drug Administration
Program expenses
75 0600 0 1 554
	NEW:	407,500	359,082	409,072	363,326	1,572	4,244
	PRIOR:		45,387		47,412		2,025
	TOTAL:	407,500	404,469	409,072	410,738	1,572	6,269

CBO/BUDGET ANALYSIS DIV(HAR40R) CBO EST. OF PRES. WHERE BUDGET YEAR DATA
(UNIFIED BUDGET) IS GREATER THAN CURRENT YEAR DATA
P63 SORTED BY: SCOM,FUNC,SFUN,TID
(AMOUNTS IN THOUSANDS)

Agriculture Subcommittee	1985 BA	1985 OUTLAYS	1986 BA	1986 OUTLAYS	DIFFERENCE COL2 - COL1 BA	DIFFERENCE COL2 - COL1 OUTLAYS
INCOME SECURITY
Food and nutrition assistance
Department of Agriculture
Food and Nutrition Service
Food donations program
12 3503 0 1 605
NEW:	139,546	109,623	174,607	142,672	35,061	33,049
PRIOR:		53,600		29,923		-23,677
TOTAL:	139,546	163,223	174,607	172,595	35,061	9,372
Food stamp program
12 3505 0 1 605
NEW:	11,661,528	11,486,998	11,858,000	11,679,770	196,472	192,772
PRIOR:		209,240		175,230		-34,010
TOTAL:	11,661,528	11,696,238	11,858,000	11,855,000	196,472	158,762
Food program administration
12 3508 0 1 605
NEW:	82,503	74,422	86,406	78,025	3,903	3,603
PRIOR:		7,752		8,095		343
TOTAL:	82,503	82,174	86,406	86,120	3,903	3,946
Women, infants and children programs (WIC and CSFP)
12 3510 0 1 605
NEW:	1,448,501	1,293,110	1,513,849	1,346,040	65,348	52,930
PRIOR:		152,890		165,000		12,110
TOTAL:	1,448,501	1,446,000	1,513,849	1,511,040	65,348	65,040
COMMITTEE TOTAL.. AR Agriculture Subcommittee
NEW:	14,168,698	13,721,513	14,490,282	14,025,856	321,584	304,343
PRIOR:		502,304		460,401		-41,903
TOTAL:	14,168,698	14,223,817	14,490,282	14,486,257	321,584	262,440

(AMOUNTS IN THOUSANDS)

Commerce, State, Judiciary	1985 BA	1985 OUTLAYS	1986 BA	1986 OUTLAYS	DIFFERENCE COL2 - COL1 BA	DIFFERENCE COL2 - COL1 OUTLAYS
INTERNATIONAL AFFAIRS
Conduct of foreign affairs
Department of State
Administration of Foreign Affairs
Salaries and experses
19 0113 0 1 153
NEW:	1,434,290	1,128,064	1,475,103	1,268,589	40,813	140,525
PRIOR:		170,942		223,605		52,663
TOTAL:	1,434,290	1,299,006	1,475,103	1,492,194	40,813	193,188
Other
Soviet-East European research and training
19 0118 0 1 153
NEW:	4,800	4,800	5,000	5,000	200	200
PRIOR:		0		0		0
TOTAL:	4,800	4,800	5,000	5,000	200	200
Administration of Foreign Affairs
Protection of foreign missions and officials
19 0520 0 1 153
NEW:	9,500	7,695	9,900	8,019	400	324
PRIOR:		0		1,805		1,805
TOTAL:	9,500	7,695	9,900	9,824	400	2,129
Payment to the American Institute in Taiwan
19 0523 0 1 153
NEW:	9,800	8,085	10,000	8,250	200	165
PRIOR:		1,641		1,715		74
TOTAL:	9,800	9,726	10,000	9,965	200	239
Other
Payment to the Asia Foundation
19 0525 0 1 153
NEW:	9,600	6,720	9,785	6,850	185	130
PRIOR:		2,799		2,880		81
TOTAL:	9,600	9,519	9,785	9,730	185	211
Administration of Foreign Affairs
Representation allowances
19 0545 0 1 153
NEW:	4,500	3,852	4,700	4,023	200	171
PRIOR:		598		648		50
TOTAL:	4,500	4,450	4,700	4,671	200	221
International Organizations and Conferences
Contributions for international peacekeeping activities
19 1124 0 1 153
NEW:	47,400	41,238	51,000	44,370	3,600	3,132
PRIOR:		9,363		6,162		-3,201
TOTAL:	47,400	50,601	51,000	50,532	3,600	-69

CBO/BUDGET ANALYSIS DIV(MAR40R)
(UNIFIED BUDGET)
P63 SORTED BY: SCOM,FUNC,SFUN,TID

CBO EST. OF PRES. WHERE BUDGET YEAR DATA IS GREATER THAN CURRENT YEAR DATA
(AMOUNTS IN THOUSANDS)

Commerce, State, Judiciary	1985		1986		DIFFERENCE COL2 - COL1
	BA	OUTLAYS	BA	OUTLAYS	BA	OUTLAYS
Contributions to international organizations
19 1126 0 1 153
NEW:	487,888	467,885	495,235	474,930	7,347	7,045
PRIOR:		21,341		20,003		-1,338
TOTAL:	487,888	489,226	495,235	494,933	7,347	5,707
Other
U.S. bilateral science and technology agreements
19 1151 0 1 153
NEW:	0	0	4,000	4,000	4,000	4,000
PRIOR:		2,000		0		-2,000
TOTAL:	0	2,000	4,000	4,000	4,000	2,000
Other Independent Agencies
International Trade Commission
Salaries and expenses
34 0100 0 1 153
NEW:	24,830	22,942	28,901	26,705	4,071	3,763
PRIOR:		1,551		1,858		307
TOTAL:	24,830	24,493	28,901	28,563	4,071	4,070
Foreign information and exchange activities
Other Independent Agencies
United States Information Agency
Salaries and expenses
67 0201 0 1 154
NEW:	545,423	430,247	585,054	461,608	39,631	31,361
PRIOR:		100,871		111,817		10,946
TOTAL:	545,423	531,118	585,054	573,425	39,631	42,307
Acquisition and construction of radio facilities
67 0204 0 1 154
NEW:	85,000	8,500	167,947	16,795	82,947	8,295
PRIOR:		13,064		56,070		43,006
TOTAL:	85,000	21,564	167,947	72,865	82,947	51,301
Radio broadcasting to Cuba
67 0208 0 1 154
NEW:	8,500	6,706	11,202	8,838	2,702	2,132
PRIOR:		2,500		3,078		578
TOTAL:	8,500	9,206	11,202	11,916	2,702	2,710
Educational and cultural exchange programs
67 0209 0 1 154
NEW:	130,000	87,100	159,136	106,621	29,136	19,521
PRIOR:		48,500		41,500		-7,000
TOTAL:	130,000	135,600	159,136	148,121	29,136	12,521
National Endowment for Democracy
67 0210 0 1 154
NEW:	0	0	31,300	28,170	31,300	28,170
PRIOR:		11,500		0		-11,500
TOTAL:	0	11,500	31,300	28,170	31,300	16,670
Other Independent Agencies
Board for International Broadcasting
Grants and expenses
95 1145 0 1 154
NEW:	97,498	90,283	142,125	119,470	44,627	29,187
PRIOR:		13,167		1,755		-11,412
TOTAL:	97,498	103,450	142,125	121,225	44,627	17,775
NATURAL RESOURCES AND ENVIRONMENT
Water resources
Department of State
International Commissions
Construction
19 1078 0 1 301
NEW:	2,400	1,832	2,557	1,951	157	119
PRIOR:		293		2,190		1,897
TOTAL:	2,400	2,125	2,557	4,141	157	2,016
American sections, international commissions
19 1082 0 1 301
NEW:	3,685	2,491	3,755	2,538	70	47
PRIOR:		1,034		1,156		122
TOTAL:	3,685	3,525	3,755	3,694	70	169
Conservation and land management
International fisheries commissions
19 1087 0 1 302
NEW:	9,100	9,091	9,900	9,890	800	799
PRIOR:		9		9		0
TOTAL:	9,100	9,100	9,900	9,899	800	799
Other natural resources
Department of Commerce
National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration
Aviation weather services program
13 8105 0 7 306
NEW:	27,000	22,950	28,000	23,800	1,000	850
PRIOR:		4,050		4,050		0
TOTAL:	27,000	27,000	28,000	27,850	1,000	850

CBO/BUDGET ANALYSIS DIV(MAR40R) CBO EST. OF PRES. WHERE BUDGET YEAR DATA
(UNIFIED BUDGET) IS GREATER THAN CURRENT YEAR DATA
P63 SORTED BY: SCOM,FUNC,SFUN,TID
(AMOUNTS IN THOUSANDS)

Commerce, State, Judiciary	1985		1986		DIFFERENCE COL2 - COL1
	BA	OUTLAYS	BA	OUTLAYS	BA	OUTLAYS
COMMERCE AND HOUSING CREDIT
Other advancement of commerce
Administration for Enterprise Development and Opportunity
White House Conference on Small Business
13 0104 0 1 376
NEW:	0	0	1,000	1,000	1,000	1,000
PRIOR:		0		0		0
TOTAL:	0	0	1,000	1,000	1,000	1,000
Enterprise development and opportunity
13 0201 0 1 376
NEW:	49,580	15,359	97,716	61,691	48,136	46,332
PRIOR:		35,773		34,843		-930
TOTAL:	49,580	51,132	97,716	96,534	48,136	45,402
Bureau of the Census
Salaries and expenses
13 0401 0 1 376
NEW:	85,259	76,052	87,962	78,462	2,703	2,410
PRIOR:		6,043		9,207		3,164
TOTAL:	85,259	82,095	87,962	87,669	2,703	5,574
Periodic censuses and programs
13 0450 0 1 376
NEW:	80,209	50,612	105,802	69,592	25,593	18,980
PRIOR:		30,114		27,457		-2,657
TOTAL:	80,209	80,726	105,802	97,049	25,593	16,323
International Trade Administration
Operations and administration
13 1250 0 1 376
NEW:	170,885	115,279	171,972	116,597	1,087	1,318
PRIOR:		60,563		59,362		-1,201
TOTAL:	170,885	175,842	171,972	175,959	1,087	117
Other Independent Agencies
Small Business Administration
SBA, Small business investment companies, FFB(loan guarantee
20 4154 0 3 376
NEW:	0	0	2,471,000	2,522,080	2,471,000	2,522,080
PRIOR:		0		252,920		252,920
TOTAL:	0	0	2,471,000	2,775,000	2,471,000	2,775,000
Department of the Treasury
Financial Management Service
Surety bond guarentees revolving fund
20 4156 0 3 376
NEW:	0	0	13,572	1,574	13,572	1,574
PRIOR:		0		16,426		16,426
TOTAL:	0	0	13,572	18,000	13,572	18,000
Other Independent Agencies
Securities and Exchange Commission
Salaries and expenses
50 0100 0 1 376
NEW:	105,337	95,857	107,267	97,536	1,930	1,679
PRIOR:		7,939		9,456		1,517
TOTAL:	105,337	103,796	107,267	106,992	1,930	3,196
Other Independent Agencies
Other Historical and Memorial Agencies
Christopher Columbus Quincentennary Jubilee Commission
76 0800 0 1 376
NEW:	0	0	220	198	220	198
PRIOR:		220		0		-220
TOTAL:	0	220	220	198	220	-22
TRANSPORTATION
Water transportation
Department of Transportation
Maritime Administration
Research and development
69 1716 0 1 403
NEW:	2,900	1,613	9,900	5,504	7,000	3,891
PRIOR:		11,078		7,414		-3,664
TOTAL:	2,900	12,691	9,900	12,918	7,000	227
COMMUNITY AND REGIONAL DEVELOPMENT
Disaster relief and insurance
Department of the Treasury
Financial Management Service
Disaster Loan Fund
20 4153 0 3 453
NEW:	0	0	36,300	36,300	36,300	36,300
PRIOR:		0		317,000		317,000
TOTAL:	0	0	36,300	353,300	36,300	353,300

CBO/BUDGET ANALYSIS DIV(MAR40R) CBO EST. OF PRES. WHERE BUDGET YEAR DATA
(UNIFIED BUDGET) IS GREATER THAN CURRENT YEAR DATA
P63 SORTED BY: SCOM,FUNC,SFUN,TID
(AMOUNTS IN THOUSANDS)

Commerce, State, Judiciary	1985		1986		DIFFERENCE COL2 - COL1
	BA	OUTLAYS	BA	OUTLAYS	BA	OUTLAYS
ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE
Federal law enforcement activities
Department of Justice
Federal Bureau of Investigation
Salaries and expenses
15 0200 0 1 751
NEW:	1,145,118	915,340	1,195,664	956,179	50,546	40,839
PRIOR:		103,372		217,305		113,933
TOTAL:	1,145,118	1,018,712	1,195,664	1,173,484	50,546	154,772
United States Parole Commission
Salaries and expenses
15 1061 0 1 751
NEW:	8,913	8,200	9,415	8,662	502	462
PRIOR:		610		713		103
TOTAL:	8,913	8,810	9,415	9,375	502	565
Drug Enforcement Administration
Salaries and expenses
15 1100 0 1 751
NEW:	331,812	285,613	345,671	297,277	13,859	11,664
PRIOR:		36,000		35,959		-959
TOTAL:	331,812	321,613	345,671	334,236	13,859	12,623
Immigration and Naturalization Service
Salaries and expenses
15 1217 0 1 751
NEW:	575,470	502,848	584,096	509,244	8,626	6,396
PRIOR:		63,057		71,976		8,919
TOTAL:	575,470	565,905	584,096	581,220	8,626	15,315
Federal litigative and judicial activities
The Judiciary
Supreme Court of the United States
Salaries and expenses
10 0100 0 1 752
NEW:	14,143	11,102	15,176	11,913	1,033	811
PRIOR:		2,926		3,041		115
TOTAL:	14,143	14,028	15,176	14,954	1,033	926
Courts of Appeals, District Courts, and other Judicial Services
Salaries of judges
10 0200 0 1 752
NEW:	77,638	76,147	104,826	102,729	27,188	26,582
PRIOR:		0		1,491		1,491
TOTAL:	77,638	76,147	104,826	104,220	27,188	28,073
United States Court of International Trade
Salaries and expenses
10 0400 0 1 752
NEW:	6,070	5,766	6,538	6,211	468	445
PRIOR:		287		304		17
TOTAL:	6,070	6,053	6,538	6,515	468	462
United States Court of Appeals for the Federal Circuit
Salaries and expenses
10 0510 0 1 752
NEW:	5,150	4,903	5,720	5,445	570	542
PRIOR:		228		247		19
TOTAL:	5,150	5,131	5,720	5,692	570	561
Courts of Appeals, District Courts, and other Judicial Services
Defender services
10 0923 0 1 752
NEW:	59,575	30,587	68,955	41,373	9,380	10,786
PRIOR:		16,063		26,440		10,377
TOTAL:	59,575	46,650	68,955	67,813	9,380	21,163
Salaries of supporting personnel
10 0924 0 1 752
NEW:	375,776	361,146	509,010	489,668	133,234	128,522
PRIOR:		10,430		12,039		1,609
TOTAL:	375,776	371,576	509,010	501,707	133,234	130,131
Fees of jurors and commissioners
10 0925 0 1 752
NEW:	43,700	40,675	46,200	42,966	2,500	2,291
PRIOR:		3,045		3,025		-20
TOTAL:	43,700	43,720	46,200	45,991	2,500	2,271
Expenses of Operation and Maintenance of the Courts
10 0926 0 1 752
NEW:	115,026	91,370	144,926	120,289	29,900	28,919
PRIOR:		13,000		23,656		10,656
TOTAL:	115,026	104,370	144,926	143,945	29,900	39,575

CBO/BUDGET ANALYSIS DIV(MAR40R) CBO EST. OF PRES. WHERE BUDGET YEAR DATA
(UNIFIED BUDGET) IS GREATER THAN CURRENT YEAR DATA
P63 SORTED BY: SCOM,FUNC,SFUN,TID
(AMOUNTS IN THOUSANDS)

Commerce, State, Judiciary		1985		1986		DIFFERENCE COL2 - COL1
		BA	OUTLAYS	BA	OUTLAYS	BA	OUTLAYS
Administrative Office of the United States Courts
Salaries and expenses
10 0927 0 1 752
	NEW:	28,336	25,141	32,217	28,576	3,881	3,435
	PRIOR:		1,930		2,093		163
	TOTAL:	28,336	27,071	32,217	30,669	3,881	3,598
Federal Judicial Center
Salaries and expenses
10 0928 0 1 752
	NEW:	9,381	7,486	9,923	7,909	542	423
	PRIOR:		1,724		1,895		171
	TOTAL:	9,381	9,210	9,923	9,804	542	594
Courts of Appeals, District Courts, and other Judicial Services
Court security
10 0930 0 1 752
	NEW:	26,992	26,992	38,116	38,116	11,124	11,124
	PRIOR:		0		0		0
	TOTAL:	26,992	26,992	38,116	38,116	11,124	11,124
Space and facilities
10 0931 0 1 752
	NEW:	142,384	126,280	155,018	137,346	12,634	11,066
	PRIOR:		13,549		13,444		-105
	TOTAL:	142,384	139,829	155,018	150,790	12,634	10,961
Department of Justice
Legal Activities
Salaries and expenses, General Legal Activities
15 0128 0 1 752
	NEW:	195,041	174,627	200,277	179,248	5,236	4,621
	PRIOR:		16,387		19,805		3,418
	TOTAL:	195,041	191,014	200,277	199,053	5,236	8,039
Fees and expenses of witnesses
15 0311 0 1 752
	NEW:	43,091	32,926	47,900	35,973	4,809	3,047
	PRIOR:		9,433		10,165		732
	TOTAL:	43,091	42,359	47,900	46,138	4,809	3,779
Salaries and expenses, Antitrust Division
15 0319 0 1 752
	NEW:	42,454	34,801	43,476	35,650	1,022	849
	PRIOR:		7,858		7,729		-129
	TOTAL:	42,454	42,659	43,476	43,379	1,022	720
Salaries and expenses, United States Attorneys and Marshals
15 0322 0 1 752
	NEW:	443,947	412,471	478,057	444,593	34,110	32,122
	PRIOR:		41,866		30,888		-10,978
	TOTAL:	443,947	454,337	478,057	475,481	34,110	21,144
Salaries and expenses, Community Relations Service
15 0500 0 1 752
	NEW:	32,957	16,457	33,217	16,609	260	152
	PRIOR:		15,000		19,500		4,500
	TOTAL:	32,957	31,457	33,217	36,109	260	4,652
Assets forfeiture fund
15 5042 0 2 752
	NEW:	5,000	4,887	20,000	15,000	15,000	10,113
	PRIOR:		0		113		113
	TOTAL:	5,000	4,887	20,000	15,113	15,000	10,226
Federal correctional activities
Federal Prison System
Salaries and expenses
15 1060 0 1 753
	NEW:	506,082	469,653	546,884	507,508	40,802	37,855
	PRIOR:		20,233		36,429		16,196
	TOTAL:	506,082	489,886	546,884	543,937	40,802	54,051
Criminal justice assistance
National Institute of Corrections
15 1004 0 1 754
	NEW:	13,106	4,706	13,120	5,248	14	542
	PRIOR:		10,400		8,400		-2,000
	TOTAL:	13,106	15,106	13,120	13,648	14	-1,458

CBO/BUDGET ANALYSIS DIV(MAR40R) CBO EST. OF PRES. WHERE BUDGET YEAR DATA
(UNIFIED BUDGET) IS GREATER THAN CURRENT YEAR DATA
P63 SORTED BY: SCOM,FUNC,SFUN,TID
(AMOUNTS IN THOUSANDS)

Commerce, State, Judiciary		1985 BA	1985 OUTLAYS	1986 BA	1986 OUTLAYS	DIFFERENCE COL2 - COL1 BA	DIFFERENCE COL2 - COL1 OUTLAYS
GENERAL GOVERNMENT
Central fiscal operations
Department of the Treasury
Financial Management Service
Portfolio Liquidation
20 1848 0 1 803
	NEW:	0	0	73,961	66,565	73,961	66,565
	PRIOR:		0		0		0
	TOTAL:	0	0	73,961	66,565	73,961	66,565
COMMITTEE TOTAL.. CJ Commerce, State, Judiciary
	NEW:	7,682,546	6,375,377	11,065,674	9,731,248	3,383,128	3,355,871
	PRIOR:		944,351		1,762,043		817,692
	TOTAL:	7,682,546	7,319,728	11,065,674	11,493,291	3,383,128	4,173,563

(AMOUNTS IN THOUSANDS)

Defense Subcommittee		1985 BA	1985 OUTLAYS	1986 BA	1986 OUTLAYS	DIFFERENCE COL2 - COL1 BA	DIFFERENCE COL2 - COL1 OUTLAYS
NATIONAL DEFENSE
Department of Defense-Military
Department of Defense--Military
Military Personnel
Military personnel, Marine Corps
17 1105 0 1 051
	NEW:	4,817,506	4,611,000	5,217,400	5,008,000	399,894	397,000
	PRIOR:		70,000		144,000		74,000
	TOTAL:	4,817,506	4,681,000	5,217,400	5,152,000	399,894	471,000
Operation and Maintenance
Operation and maintenance, Marine Corps
17 1106 0 1 051
	NEW:	1,640,294	1,334,000	1,667,400	1,354,000	27,106	20,000
	PRIOR:		184,000		337,000		153,000
	TOTAL:	1,640,294	1,518,000	1,667,400	1,691,000	27,106	173,000
Operation and maintenance, Marine Corps Reserve
17 1107 0 1 051
	NEW:	58,642	38,000	61,600	40,000	2,958	2,000
	PRIOR:		14,000		21,000		7,000
	TOTAL:	58,642	52,000	61,600	61,000	2,958	9,000
Military Personnel
Reserve personnel, Marine Corps
17 1108 0 1 051
	NEW:	267,186	234,000	290,000	253,000	22,814	19,000
	PRIOR:		6,000		27,000		21,000
	TOTAL:	267,186	240,000	290,000	280,000	22,814	40,000
Research, Development, Test, and Evaluation
Research, development, test, and evaluation, Navy
17 1319 0 1 051
	NEW:	9,251,506	4,770,000	11,264,300	5,858,000	2,012,794	1,088,000
	PRIOR:		3,263,000		3,894,000		631,000
	TOTAL:	9,251,506	8,033,000	11,264,300	9,752,000	2,012,794	1,719,000
Military Personnel
Reserve personnel, Navy
17 1405 0 1 051
	NEW:	1,127,700	969,000	1,353,600	1,164,000	225,900	195,000
	PRIOR:		79,000		117,000		38,000
	TOTAL:	1,127,700	1,048,000	1,353,600	1,281,000	225,900	233,000
Military personnel, Navy
17 1453 0 1 051
	NEW:	15,701,274	15,347,000	17,221,400	16,876,000	1,520,126	1,529,000
	PRIOR:		123,000		157,000		34,000
	TOTAL:	15,701,274	15,470,000	17,221,400	17,033,000	1,520,126	1,563,000
Procurement
Aircraft procurement, Navy
17 1506 0 1 051
	NEW:	10,903,798	981,300	12,062,600	1,085,000	1,158,802	103,700
	PRIOR:		7,907,000		8,622,000		715,000
	TOTAL:	10,903,798	8,888,300	12,062,600	9,707,000	1,158,802	818,700
Weapons procurement, Navy
17 1507 0 1 051
	NEW:	4,353,611	479,000	5,705,700	619,000	1,352,089	140,000
	PRIOR:		2,781,000		3,338,000		557,000
	TOTAL:	4,353,611	3,260,000	5,705,700	3,957,000	1,352,089	697,000
Operation and Maintenance
Operation and maintenance, Navy
17 1804 0 1 051
	NEW:	25,103,941	18,586,000	25,797,700	19,023,000	693,759	437,000
	PRIOR:		4,529,000		5,797,000		1,268,000
	TOTAL:	25,103,941	23,115,000	25,797,700	24,820,000	693,759	1,705,000

CBO/BUDGET ANALYSIS DIV(MAR40R) CBO EST. OF PRES. WHERE BUDGET YEAR DATA
(UNIFIED BUDGET) IS GREATER THAN CURRENT YEAR DATA
P63 SORTED BY: SCOM,FUNC,SFUN,TID
(AMOUNTS IN THOUSANDS)

Defense Subcommittee		1985 BA	1985 OUTLAYS	1986 BA	1986 OUTLAYS	DIFFERENCE COL2 - COL1 BA	DIFFERENCE COL2 - COL1 OUTLAYS
Operation and maintenance, Navy Reserve
17 1806 0 1 051	NEW:	827,181	590,000	954,500	676,000	127,319	86,000
	PRIOR:		153,000		191,000		38,000
	TOTAL:	827,181	743,000	954,500	867,000	127,319	124,000
Procurement
Other procurement, Navy
17 1810 0 1 051	NEW:	5,341,614	534,000	6,601,200	660,000	1,259,586	126,000
	PRIOR:		3,154,000		3,812,000		658,000
	TOTAL:	5,341,614	3,688,000	6,601,200	4,472,000	1,259,586	784,000
Revolving and Management Funds
Navy stock fund
17 4911 0 4 051	NEW:	473,307	359,700	716,500	548,700	243,193	185,000
	PRIOR:		-359,700		85,000		444,700
	TOTAL:	473,307	0	716,500	629,700	243,193	629,700
Marine Corps stock fund
17 4913 0 4 051	NEW:	34,908	26,530	42,700	32,712	7,792	6,182
	PRIOR:		-26,530		6,000		32,530
	TOTAL:	34,908	0	42,700	38,712	7,792	38,712
Operation and Maintenance
National Board for the Promotion of Rifle Practice, Army
21 1705 0 1 051	NEW:	914	557	920	551	6	-6
	PRIOR:		343		350		7
	TOTAL:	914	900	920	901	6	1
Military Personnel
Military personnel, Army
21 2010 0 1 051	NEW:	21,097,085	20,600,000	22,712,000	22,258,000	1,614,915	1,658,000
	PRIOR:		265,000		210,000		-55,000
	TOTAL:	21,097,085	20,865,000	22,712,000	22,468,000	1,614,915	1,603,000
Operation and Maintenance
Operation and maintenance, Army
21 2020 0 1 051	NEW:	18,403,298	14,747,000	20,190,630	16,173,000	1,787,332	1,426,000
	PRIOR:		2,577,000		3,309,000		732,000
	TOTAL:	18,403,298	17,324,000	20,190,630	19,482,000	1,787,332	2,158,000
Procurement
Missile procurement, Army
21 2032 0 1 051	NEW:	3,158,300	259,000	3,419,300	277,000	261,000	18,000
	PRIOR:		2,287,000		2,578,000		291,000
	TOTAL:	3,158,300	2,546,000	3,419,300	2,855,000	261,000	309,000
Procurement of weapons and tracked combat vehicles, Army
21 2033 0 1 051	NEW:	4,744,500	544,900	5,822,900	356,400	1,078,400	-188,500
	PRIOR:		3,278,500		4,004,600		726,100
	TOTAL:	4,744,500	3,823,400	5,822,900	4,361,000	1,078,400	537,600
Other procurement, Army
21 2035 0 1 051	NEW:	5,122,450	308,000	5,712,800	342,000	590,350	34,000
	PRIOR:		3,762,000		4,269,000		507,000
	TOTAL:	5,122,450	4,070,000	5,712,800	4,611,000	590,350	541,000
Research, Development, Test, and Evaluation
Research, development, test, and evaluation, Army
21 2040 0 1 051	NEW:	4,376,115	2,305,000	5,279,900	2,798,000	903,785	493,000
	PRIOR:		1,741,000		1,850,000		109,000
	TOTAL:	4,376,115	4,046,000	5,279,900	4,648,000	903,785	602,000
Military Personnel
National Guard personnel, Army
21 2060 0 1 051	NEW:	2,889,559	2,651,000	3,430,800	3,109,000	541,241	458,000
	PRIOR:		169,000		260,000		91,000
	TOTAL:	2,889,559	2,820,000	3,430,800	3,369,000	541,241	549,000
Operation and Maintenance
Operation and maintenance, Army National Guard
21 2065 0 1 051	NEW:	1,424,293	1,260,000	1,605,200	1,400,000	180,907	140,000
	PRIOR:		91,000		145,000		54,000
	TOTAL:	1,424,293	1,351,000	1,605,200	1,545,000	180,907	194,000

CBO/BUDGET ANALYSIS DIV(MAR40R) CBO EST. OF PRES. WHERE BUDGET YEAR DATA
(UNIFIED BUDGET) IS GREATER THAN CURRENT YEAR DATA
P63 SORTED BY: SCOM,FUNC,SFUN,TID
(AMOUNTS IN THOUSANDS)

Defense Subcommittee		1985 BA	1985 OUTLAYS	1986 BA	1986 OUTLAYS	DIFFERENCE COL2 - COL1 BA	DIFFERENCE COL2 - COL1 OUTLAYS
Military Personnel
Reserve personnel, Army
21 2070 0 1 051
	NEW:	2,077,853	1,951,000	2,394,400	2,241,000	316,547	290,000
	PRIOR:		115,000		133,000		18,000
	TOTAL:	2,077,853	2,066,000	2,394,400	2,374,000	316,547	308,000
Operation and Maintenance
Operation and maintenance, Army Reserve
21 2080 0 1 051
	NEW:	724,400	637,000	779,600	683,000	55,200	46,000
	PRIOR:		23,000		71,000		48,000
	TOTAL:	724,400	660,000	779,600	754,000	55,200	94,000
Revolving and Management Funds
Army stock fund
21 4991 0 4 051
	NEW:	366,448	278,500	442,000	335,890	75,552	57,390
	PRIOR:		-278,500		-2,047,000		-1,768,500
	TOTAL:	366,448	0	442,000	-1,711,110	75,552	-1,711,110
Procurement
Aircraft procurement, Air Force
57 3010 0 1 051
	NEW:	26,270,966	2,109,700	26,475,700	2,094,000	204,734	-15,700
	PRIOR:		13,108,000		17,583,000		4,475,000
	TOTAL:	26,270,966	15,217,700	26,475,700	19,677,000	204,734	4,459,300
Missile procurement, Air Force
57 3020 0 1 051
	NEW:	6,903,345	1,385,000	10,917,700	2,173,000	4,014,355	788,000
	PRIOR:		4,457,000		5,047,000		590,000
	TOTAL:	6,903,345	5,842,000	10,917,700	7,220,000	4,014,355	1,378,000
Other procurement, Air Force
57 3080 0 1 051
	NEW:	8,853,090	4,431,000	9,538,000	4,769,000	684,910	338,000
	PRIOR:		2,742,000		3,422,000		680,000
	TOTAL:	8,853,090	7,173,000	9,538,000	8,191,000	684,910	1,018,000
Operation and Maintenance
Operation and maintenance, Air Force
57 3400 0 1 051
	NEW:	19,093,165	15,864,000	20,924,400	17,248,000	1,831,235	1,384,000
	PRIOR:		2,179,400		2,982,000		802,600
	TOTAL:	19,093,165	18,043,400	20,924,400	20,230,000	1,831,235	2,186,600
Military Personnel
Military personnel, Air Force
57 3500 0 1 051
	NEW:	17,572,005	17,221,000	19,187,900	18,804,000	1,615,895	1,583,000
	PRIOR:		276,000		264,000		-12,000
	TOTAL:	17,572,005	17,497,000	19,187,900	19,068,000	1,615,895	1,571,000
Research, Development, Test, and Evaluation
Research, development, test, and evaluation, Air Force
57 3600 0 1 051
	NEW:	13,506,247	6,980,000	15,578,500	8,101,000	2,072,253	1,121,000
	PRIOR:		4,930,000		5,491,000		561,000
	TOTAL:	13,506,247	11,910,000	15,578,500	13,592,000	2,072,253	1,682,000
Military Personnel
Reserve personnel, Air Force
57 3700 0 1 051
	NEW:	566,631	493,000	622,500	545,000	55,869	52,000
	PRIOR:		32,000		60,000		28,000
	TOTAL:	566,631	525,000	622,500	605,000	55,869	80,000
Operation and Maintenance
Operation and maintenance, Air Force Reserve
57 3740 0 1 051
	NEW:	872,461	770,000	907,700	798,000	35,239	28,000
	PRIOR:		35,000		80,000		45,000
	TOTAL:	872,461	805,000	907,700	878,000	35,239	73,000
Operation and maintenance, Air National Guard
57 3840 0 1 051
	NEW:	1,810,348	1,669,000	1,830,100	1,687,000	19,752	18,000
	PRIOR:		79,000		123,000		44,000
	TOTAL:	1,810,348	1,748,000	1,830,100	1,810,000	19,752	62,000
Military Personnel
National Guard personnel, Air Force
57 3850 0 1 051
	NEW:	868,578	843,000	995,100	966,000	126,522	123,000
	PRIOR:		27,000		22,000		-5,000
	TOTAL:	868,578	870,000	995,100	988,000	126,522	118,000

CBO/BUDGET ANALYSIS DIV(MAR40R) CBO EST. OF PRES. WHERE BUDGET YEAR DATA
(UNIFIED BUDGET) IS GREATER THAN CURRENT YEAR DATA
P63 SORTED BY: SCOM,FUNC,SFUN,TID
(AMOUNTS IN THOUSANDS)

Defense Subcommittee		1985 BA	1985 OUTLAYS	1986 BA	1986 OUTLAYS	DIFFERENCE COL2 - COL1 BA	DIFFERENCE COL2 - COL1 OUTLAYS
Operation and Maintenance
Operation and maintenance, Defense agencies
97 0100 0 1 051	NEW:	7,076,069	6,311,000	7,568,900	6,735,000	492,831	424,000
	PRIOR:		354,000		892,000		538,000
	TOTAL:	7,076,069	6,665,000	7,568,900	7,627,000	492,831	962,000
Claims, Defense
97 0102 0 1 051	NEW:	146,500	155,000	158,300	154,000	11,800	-1,000
	PRIOR:		33,000		4,000		-29,000
	TOTAL:	146,500	188,000	158,300	158,000	11,800	-30,000
Court of Military Appeals, Defense
97 0104 0 1 051	NEW:	2,870	2,657	3,200	2,800	330	143
	PRIOR:		338		200		-138
	TOTAL:	2,870	2,995	3,200	3,000	330	5
Procurement
Procurement, Defense agencies
97 0300 0 1 051	NEW:	1,166,201	186,000	1,391,900	223,000	225,699	37,000
	PRIOR:		585,000		735,000		150,000
	TOTAL:	1,166,201	771,000	1,391,900	958,000	225,699	187,000
Defense production act purchases
97 0360 0 1 051	NEW:	10,000	0	59,000	0	49,000	0
	PRIOR:		0		0		0
	TOTAL:	10,000	0	59,000	0	49,000	0
Research, Development, Test, and Evaluation
Research, development, test, and evaluation, Defense agencie
97 0400 0 1 051	NEW:	4,236,327	1,882,000	7,053,900	3,174,000	2,817,573	1,292,000
	PRIOR:		1,346,000		1,973,000		627,000
	TOTAL:	4,236,327	3,228,000	7,053,900	5,147,000	2,817,573	1,919,000
Director of test and evaluation, Defense
97 0450 0 1 051	NEW:	59,000	17,000	103,500	31,000	44,500	14,000
	PRIOR:		34,000		38,000		4,000
	TOTAL:	59,000	51,000	103,500	69,000	44,500	18,000
Revolving and Management Funds
Defense stock fund
97 4961 0 4 051	NEW:	130,700	99,332	193,500	146,610	62,800	47,278
	PRIOR:		-99,332		24,000		123,332
	TOTAL:	130,700	0	193,500	170,610	62,800	170,610
Allowances
Other legislation
97 9912 0 1 051	NEW:	0	0	188,700	69,800	188,700	69,800
	PRIOR:		0		0		0
	TOTAL:	0	0	188,700	69,800	188,700	69,800
Defense-related activities
Other Independent Agencies
Central Intelligence Agency
Payment to the Central Intelligence Agency retirement and di
56 3400 0 1 054	NEW:	99,300	99,300	109,500	109,500	10,200	10,200
	PRIOR:		0		0		0
	TOTAL:	99,300	99,300	109,500	109,500	10,200	10,200
Other Independent Agencies
Intelligence Community Staff
Intelligence community staff
95 0400 0 1 054	NEW:	20,797	13,716	21,900	19,710	1,103	5,994
	PRIOR:		7,143		2,029		-5,114
	TOTAL:	20,797	20,859	21,900	21,739	1,103	880
COMMITTEE TOTAL.. DE Defense Subcommittee	NEW:	253,552,283	154,933,192	284,576,950	171,017,673	31,024,667	16,084,481
	PRIOR:		66,032,662		80,073,179		14,040,517
	TOTAL:	253,552,283	220,965,854	284,576,950	251,090,852	31,024,667	30,124,998

CBO/BUDGET ANALYSIS DIV(HAR40R) CBO EST. OF PRES. WHERE BUDGET YEAR DATA
(UNIFIED BUDGET) IS GREATER THAN CURRENT YEAR DATA
P63 SORTED BY: SCOM,FUNC,SFUN,TID
(AMOUNTS IN THOUSANDS)

Energy and Water Subcomm		1985 BA	1985 OUTLAYS	1986 BA	1986 OUTLAYS	DIFFERENCE COL2 - COL1 BA	DIFFERENCE COL2 - COL1 OUTLAYS
NATIONAL DEFENSE
Atomic energy defense activities
Department of Energy
Atomic Energy Defense Activities
Atomic energy defense activities
89 0220 0 1 053
	NEW:	5,682,190	3,116,633	8,046,900	4,292,535	2,364,710	1,175,902
	PRIOR:		3,715,936		3,407,465		-308,471
	TOTAL:	5,682,190	6,832,569	8,046,900	7,700,000	2,364,710	867,431
GENERAL SCIENCE, SPACE, AND TECHNOLOGY
General science and basic research
Energy Programs
General science and research activities
89 0222 0 1 251
	NEW:	518,167	350,787	685,400	464,016	167,233	113,229
	PRIOR:		152,930		167,757		14,827
	TOTAL:	518,167	503,717	685,400	631,773	167,233	128,056
ENERGY
Energy supply
Energy supply, R&D activities
89 0224 0 1 271
	NEW:	1,955,489	993,489	1,969,671	1,002,562	14,182	9,073
	PRIOR:		1,103,488		1,022,525		-80,963
	TOTAL:	1,955,489	2,096,977	1,969,671	2,025,087	14,182	-71,890
Power Marketing Administration
Operation and maintenance, Southeastern Power Administration
89 0302 0 1 271
	NEW:	35,729	14,283	39,800	15,920	4,071	1,637
	PRIOR:		7,372		18,254		10,882
	TOTAL:	35,729	21,655	39,800	34,174	4,071	12,519
Energy Programs
Nuclear waste disposal fund
89 5227 0 2 271
	NEW:	327,669	187,000	571,460	285,730	243,791	98,730
	PRIOR:		137,208		140,898		3,690
	TOTAL:	327,669	324,208	571,460	426,628	243,791	102,420
Energy information, policy, and regulation
Departmental Administration
Departmental administration
89 0228 0 1 276
	NEW:	133,789	-8,624	170,424	4,563	36,635	13,187
	PRIOR:		133,474		156,796		23,322
	TOTAL:	133,789	124,850	170,424	161,359	36,635	36,509
NATURAL RESOURCES AND ENVIRONMENT
Water resources
Department of Defense--Civil
Corps of Engineers--Civil
Inland waterways trust fund
20 8861 0 7 301
	NEW:	0	0	196,000	137,200	196,000	137,200
	PRIOR:		0		0		0
	TOTAL:	0	0	196,000	137,200	196,000	137,200
Revolving fund
96 4902 0 4 301
	NEW:	0	8,000	7,000	7,000	7,000	-1,000
	PRIOR:		-1,900		0		1,900
	TOTAL:	0	6,100	7,000	7,000	7,000	900
COMMITTEE TOTAL.. EW Energy and Water Subcomm
	NEW:	8,653,033	4,661,568	11,686,655	6,209,526	3,033,622	1,547,958
	PRIOR:		5,248,508		4,913,695		-334,813
	TOTAL:	8,653,033	9,910,076	11,686,655	11,123,221	3,033,622	1,213,145

(AMOUNTS IN THOUSANDS)

Foreign Operations Subcomm		1985 BA	1985 OUTLAYS	1986 BA	1986 OUTLAYS	DIFFERENCE COL2 - COL1 BA	DIFFERENCE COL2 - COL1 OUTLAYS
INTERNATIONAL AFFAIRS
Foreign economic and financial assistance
Funds Appropriated to the President
Multilateral Assistance
Contribution to the International Bank for Reconstruction an 11 0077 0 1 151
	NEW:	139,723	13,972	182,871	18,287	43,148	4,315
	PRIOR:		16,047		37,813		21,766
	TOTAL:	139,723	30,019	182,871	56,100	43,148	26,081
Contribution to the International Finance Corporation
11 0078 0 1 151
	NEW:	0	0	35,033	35,033	35,033	35,033
	PRIOR:		0		0		0
	TOTAL:	0	0	35,033	35,033	35,033	35,033

CBO/BUDGET ANALYSIS DIV(HAR40R) CBO EST. OF PRES. WHERE BUDGET YEAR DATA
(UNIFIED BUDGET) IS GREATER THAN CURRENT YEAR DATA
P63 SORTED BY: SCOM,FUNC,SFUN,TID
(AMOUNTS IN THOUSANDS)

Foreign Operations Subcomm	1985 BA	1985 OUTLAYS	1986 BA	1986 OUTLAYS	DIFFERENCE COL2 - COL1 BA	DIFFERENCE COL2 - COL1 OUTLAYS
Contribution to the African Development Fund
11 0079 0 1 151
NEW:	50,000	0	75,000	0	25,000	0
PRIOR:		68,960		56,150		-12,810
TOTAL:	50,000	68,960	75,000	56,150	25,000	-12,810
Agency for International Development
Functional development assistance program
11 1021 0 1 151
NEW:	1,646,354	202,617	1,655,900	203,676	9,546	1,059
PRIOR:		1,125,286		1,240,908		115,622
TOTAL:	1,646,354	1,327,903	1,655,900	1,444,584	9,546	116,681
Department of State
Other
International narcotics control
11 1022 0 1 151
NEW:	50,217	16,321	57,529	18,697	7,312	2,376
PRIOR:		24,193		28,674		4,481
TOTAL:	50,217	40,514	57,529	47,371	7,312	6,857
Migration and refugee assistance
19 1143 0 1 151
NEW:	325,500	222,968	337,680	231,311	12,180	8,343
PRIOR:		90,106		86,424		-3,682
TOTAL:	325,500	313,074	337,680	317,735	12,180	4,661
Funds Appropriated to the President
Agency for International Development
Private sector revolving fund
72 4341 0 3 151
NEW:	16,000	6,038	20,000	7,574	4,000	1,536
PRIOR:		4,529		10,914		6,385
TOTAL:	16,000	10,567	20,000	18,488	4,000	7,921
International security assistance
International Security Assistance
Economic support fund
11 1037 0 1 152
NEW:	3,841,000	2,216,257	4,078,000	2,338,416	237,000	122,159
PRIOR:		1,557,859		1,462,576		-95,283
TOTAL:	3,841,000	3,774,116	4,078,000	3,800,992	237,000	26,876
Military assistance
11 1080 0 1 152
NEW:	805,100	792,425	949,350	934,160	144,250	141,735
PRIOR:		18,500		10,466		-8,034
TOTAL:	805,100	810,925	949,350	944,626	144,250	133,701
International military education and training
11 1081 0 1 152
NEW:	56,221	25,299	65,650	29,543	9,429	4,244
PRIOR:		23,482		25,822		2,340
TOTAL:	56,221	48,781	65,650	55,365	9,429	6,584
Foreign military sales credit
11 1082 0 1 152
NEW:	4,939,500	1,297,190	5,655,000	1,740,349	715,500	443,159
PRIOR:		1,110,300		2,448,209		1,337,909
TOTAL:	4,939,500	2,407,490	5,655,000	4,188,558	715,500	1,781,068
COMMITTEE TOTAL.. FA Foreign Operations Subcomm
NEW:	11,869,615	4,793,087	13,112,013	5,557,046	1,242,398	763,959
PRIOR:		4,039,262		5,407,956		1,368,694
TOTAL:	11,869,615	8,832,349	13,112,013	10,965,002	1,242,398	2,132,653

(AMOUNTS IN THOUSANDS)

Hud-Independent Subcomm	1985 BA	1985 OUTLAYS	1986 BA	1986 OUTLAYS	DIFFERENCE COL2 - COL1 BA	DIFFERENCE COL2 - COL1 OUTLAYS
GENERAL SCIENCE, SPACE, AND TECHNOLOGY
General science and basic research
Other Independent Agencies
National Science Foundation
Research and related activities
49 0100 0 1 251
NEW:	1,304,910	664,199	1,397,750	767,365	92,840	103,166
PRIOR:		565,635		594,594		28,959
TOTAL:	1,304,910	1,229,834	1,397,750	1,361,959	92,840	132,125
U.S. Antarctic program
49 0200 0 1 251
NEW:	110,080	34,345	120,100	42,035	10,020	7,690
PRIOR:		68,850		75,626		6,776
TOTAL:	110,080	103,195	120,100	117,661	10,020	14,466

CBO/BUDGET ANALYSIS DIV(MAR40R) CBO EST. OF PRES. WHERE BUDGET YEAR DATA
(UNIFIED BUDGET) IS GREATER THAN CURRENT YEAR DATA
P63 SORTED BY: SCOM,FUNC,SFUN,TID
(AMOUNTS IN THOUSANDS)

Hud-Independent Subcomm	1985		1986		DIFFERENCE COL2 - COL1
	BA	OUTLAYS	BA	OUTLAYS	BA	OUTLAYS
Space flight
National Aeronautics and Space Administration
National Aeronautics and Space Administration
Research and program management (Space flight)
80 0103 0 1 253
NEW:	557,200	525,774	581,200	548,653	24,000	22,879
PRIOR:		32,684		29,530		-3,154
TOTAL:	557,200	558,458	581,200	578,183	24,000	19,725
Research and development (Space flight)
80 0108 0 1 253
NEW:	501,400	382,092	709,300	548,454	207,900	166,362
PRIOR:		107,650		108,910		1,260
TOTAL:	501,400	489,742	709,300	657,364	207,900	167,622
Space, science, applications, and technology
Research and program management (Space science, applications
80 0103 0 1 254
NEW:	441,200	405,904	449,600	413,632	8,400	7,728
PRIOR:		34,469		35,244		775
TOTAL:	441,200	440,373	449,600	448,876	8,400	8,503
Construction of facilities (Space science, applications, and 80 0107 0 1 254
NEW:	8,300	954	13,000	1,495	4,700	541
PRIOR:		5,712		7,798		2,086
TOTAL:	8,300	6,666	13,000	9,293	4,700	2,627
Research and development (Space science, applications, and t
80 0108 0 1 254
NEW:	1,564,000	875,840	1,802,300	1,009,288	238,300	133,448
PRIOR:		571,822		666,523		94,701
TOTAL:	1,564,000	1,447,662	1,802,300	1,675,811	238,300	228,149
Supporting space activities
Research and program management (Supporting space activities
80 0103 0 1 255
NEW:	58,600	55,670	59,200	56,280	600	610
PRIOR:		2,941		2,904		-37
TOTAL:	58,600	58,611	59,200	59,184	600	573
Space flight, control, and data communications (Supporting s
80 0105 0 1 255
NEW:	795,700	572,904	808,300	581,976	12,600	9,072
PRIOR:		168,500		219,145		50,645
TOTAL:	795,700	741,404	808,300	801,121	12,600	59,717
Construction of facilities (Supporting space activities)
80 0107 0 1 255
NEW:	85,200	8,520	93,300	9,330	8,100	810
PRIOR:		59,020		62,556		3,536
TOTAL:	85,200	67,540	93,300	71,886	8,100	4,346
Research and development (Supporting space activities)
80 0108 0 1 255
NEW:	14,800	10,656	16,200	11,664	1,400	1,008
PRIOR:		31,083		15,000		-16,083
TOTAL:	14,800	41,739	16,200	26,664	1,400	-15,075
ENERGY
Energy supply
Environmental Protection Agency
Environmental Protection Agency
Research and development (energy supply)
68 0107 0 1 271
NEW:	52,337	15,701	61,863	18,559	9,526	2,858
PRIOR:		19,235		34,050		14,815
TOTAL:	52,337	34,936	61,863	52,609	9,526	17,673
NATURAL RESOURCES AND ENVIRONMENT
Pollution control and abatement
Hazardous substance response trust fund
20 8145 0 7 304
NEW:	620,000	210,791	900,000	306,000	280,000	95,209
PRIOR:		189,709		320,937		131,228
TOTAL:	620,000	400,500	900,000	626,937	280,000	226,437
Research and development (Pollution control and abatement)
68 0107 0 1 304
NEW:	136,538	39,130	150,537	43,054	13,999	3,924
PRIOR:		84,296		80,539		-3,757
TOTAL:	136,538	123,426	150,537	123,593	13,999	167
Abatement, control, and compliance
68 0108 0 1 304
NEW:	453,087	214,742	495,500	233,381	42,413	18,639
PRIOR:		234,863		249,789		14,926
TOTAL:	453,087	449,605	495,500	483,170	42,413	33,565

CBO/BUDGET ANALYSIS DIV(HAR40R)
(UNIFIED BUDGET)
P63
CBO EST. OF PRES. WHERE BUDGET YEAR DATA IS GREATER THAN CURRENT YEAR DATA
SORTED BY: SCOM,FUNC,SFUN,TID
(AMOUNTS IN THOUSANDS)

Hud-Independent Subcomm	1985		1986		DIFFERENCE COL2 - COL1
	BA	OUTLAYS	BA	OUTLAYS	BA	OUTLAYS
Salaries and expenses
68 0200 0 1 304
NEW:	654,412	571,938	654,696	572,204	284	266
PRIOR:		53,665		77,102		23,437
TOTAL:	654,412	625,603	654,696	649,306	284	23,703
COMMERCE AND HOUSING CREDIT
Mortgage credit and deposit insurance
Other Independent Agencies
National Credit Union Administration
Central liquidity facility
25 4470 0 3 371
NEW:	105,000	0	106,000	0	1,000	0
PRIOR:		99,000		101,000		2,000
TOTAL:	105,000	99,000	106,000	101,000	1,000	2,000
Other advancement of commerce
General Services Administration
Office of Information Resources Management
Consumer information center fund
47 4549 0 3 376
NEW:	1,149	0	1,249	0	100	0
PRIOR:		878		1,149		271
TOTAL:	1,149	878	1,249	1,149	100	271
TRANSPORTATION
Air transportation
National Aeronautics and Space Administration
National Aeronautics and Space Administration
Research and development (Air transportation)
80 0108 0 1 402
NEW:	342,400	188,320	354,000	194,700	11,600	6,380
PRIOR:		135,148		148,963		13,815
TOTAL:	342,400	323,468	354,000	343,663	11,600	20,195
COMMUNITY AND REGIONAL DEVELOPMENT
Community development
Department of Housing and Urban Development
Policy Development and Research
Research and technology
86 0108 0 1 451
NEW:	16,900	5,070	18,900	5,670	2,000	600
PRIOR:		17,448		13,300		-4,148
TOTAL:	16,900	22,518	18,900	18,970	2,000	-3,548
Management and Administration
Salaries and expenses, including transfer of funds (Communit
86 0143 0 1 451
NEW:	186,074	154,845	191,020	159,693	4,946	4,848
PRIOR:		35,893		31,229		-4,664
TOTAL:	186,074	190,738	191,020	190,922	4,946	184
Disaster relief and insurance
Funds Appropriated to the President
Disaster Relief
Disaster relief
11 0039 0 1 453
NEW:	100,000	18,750	194,000	194,000	94,000	175,250
PRIOR:		366,629		173,435		-193,194
TOTAL:	100,000	385,379	194,000	367,435	94,000	-17,944
Other Independent Agencies
Federal Emergency Management Agency
National flood insurance fund
58 4236 0 3 453
NEW:	95,064	0	98,459	0	3,395	0
PRIOR:		74,964		92,208		17,244
TOTAL:	95,064	74,964	98,459	92,208	3,395	17,244
INCOME SECURITY
Housing assistance
Department of Housing and Urban Development
Management and Administration
Salaries and expenses, including transfer of funds (Housing
86 0143 0 1 604
NEW:	74,026	62,500	96,138	81,525	22,112	19,025
PRIOR:		11,526		11,526		0
TOTAL:	74,026	74,026	96,138	93,051	22,112	19,025
VETERANS BENEFITS AND SERVICES
Income security for veterans
Veterans Administration
Veterans Administration
Compensation
36 0153 0 1 701
NEW:	10,197,300	9,354,639	10,446,000	9,579,394	248,700	224,755
PRIOR:		842,061		838,106		-3,955
TOTAL:	10,197,300	10,196,700	10,446,000	10,417,500	248,700	220,800

CBO/BUDGET ANALYSIS DIV(MAR40R) CBO EST. OF PRES. WHERE BUDGET YEAR DATA
(UNIFIED BUDGET) IS GREATER THAN CURRENT YEAR DATA
P63 SORTED BY: SCOM,FUNC,SFUN,TID
(AMOUNTS IN THOUSANDS)

Hud-Independent Subcomm		1985		1986		DIFFERENCE COL2 - COL1
		BA	OUTLAYS	BA	OUTLAYS	BA	OUTLAYS
Pensions
36 0154 0 1 701
	NEW:	3,854,100	3,538,925	3,940,700	3,621,521	86,600	82,596
	PRIOR:		349,975		315,179		-34,796
	TOTAL:	3,854,100	3,888,900	3,940,700	3,936,700	86,600	47,800
Burial benefits and miscellaneous assistance
36 0155 0 1 701
	NEW:	135,700	135,522	144,100	143,922	8,400	8,400
	PRIOR:		178		178		0
	TOTAL:	135,700	135,700	144,100	144,100	8,400	8,400
Hospital and medical care for veterans
Medical care
36 0160 0 1 703
	NEW:	8,781,904	7,640,154	9,090,000	7,908,300	308,096	268,146
	PRIOR:		1,000,874		957,172		-43,702
	TOTAL:	8,781,904	8,641,028	9,090,000	8,865,472	308,096	224,444
Other veterans benefits and services
Department of Defense--Civil
Cemeterial Expenses, Army
Salaries and expenses
21 1805 0 1 705
	NEW:	7,759	6,284	14,778	6,502	7,019	218
	PRIOR:		2,000		2,164		164
	TOTAL:	7,759	8,284	14,778	8,666	7,019	382
Veterans Administration
Veterans Administration
General operating expenses
36 0151 0 1 705
	NEW:	746,120	686,300	749,412	689,459	3,292	3,159
	PRIOR:		60,054		59,820		-234
	TOTAL:	746,120	746,354	749,412	749,279	3,292	2,925
ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE
Federal law enforcement activities
Department of Housing and Urban Development
Management and Administration
Salaries and expenses, including transfer of funds (Federal 86 0143 0 1 751
	NEW:	25,965	22,004	26,267	22,590	302	586
	PRIOR:		3,524		3,683		159
	TOTAL:	25,965	25,528	26,267	26,273	302	745
Fair Housing and Equal Opportunity
Fair housing initiatives
86 0151 0 1 751
	NEW:	0	0	10,000	6,000	10,000	6,000
	PRIOR:		0		0		0
	TOTAL:	0	0	10,000	6,000	10,000	6,000
GENERAL GOVERNMENT
Executive direction and management
Executive Office of the President
Council on Environmental Quality and Office of Environmental Quality Council on Environmental Quality and Office of Environmental 11 1453 0 1 802
	NEW:	700	683	705	688	5	5
	PRIOR:		32		17		-15
	TOTAL:	700	715	705	705	5	-10
COMMITTEE TOTAL.. IH Hud-Independent Subcomm
	NEW:	32,027,925	26,403,156	33,794,574	27,777,334	1,766,649	1,374,178
	PRIOR:		5,230,318		5,329,376		99,058
	TOTAL:	32,027,925	31,633,474	33,794,574	33,106,710	1,766,649	1,473,236

INTERNATIONAL AFFAIRS
Foreign economic and financial assistance
Department of State
Other
Compact of free association
19 0117 0 1 151
	NEW:	0	0	299,270	299,270	299,270	299,270
	PRIOR:		0		0		0
	TOTAL:	0	0	299,270	299,270	299,270	299,270

CBO/BUDGET ANALYSIS DIV(MAR40R) CBO EST. OF PRES. WHERE BUDGET YEAR DATA
(UNIFIED BUDGET) IS GREATER THAN CURRENT YEAR DATA
P63 SORTED BY: SCOM,FUNC,SFUN,TID
(AMOUNTS IN THOUSANDS)

Interior Subcommittee		1985 BA	1985 OUTLAYS	1986 BA	1986 OUTLAYS	DIFFERENCE COL2 - COL1 BA	DIFFERENCE COL2 - COL1 OUTLAYS
ENERGY
Energy supply
Department of the Treasury
Financial Management Service
Energy security reserve
20 0112 0 1 271
	NEW:	-5,375,000	0	0	0	5,375,000	0
	PRIOR:		50,458		181,654		131,196
	TOTAL:	-5,375,000	50,458	0	181,654	5,375,000	131,196
NATURAL RESOURCES AND ENVIRONMENT
Conservation and land management
Department of Agriculture
Forest Service
Construction
12 1103 0 1 302
	NEW:	35,050	159,598	209,637	128,298	174,587	-31,300
	PRIOR:		106,466		91,617		-14,849
	TOTAL:	35,050	266,064	209,637	219,915	174,587	-46,149
National forest system
12 1106 0 1 302
	NEW:	1,094,793	954,968	1,103,342	960,855	8,549	5,887
	PRIOR:		121,226		139,823		18,597
	TOTAL:	1,094,793	1,076,194	1,103,342	1,100,678	8,549	24,484
Acquisition of lands for national forests, special acts
12 5208 0 2 302
	NEW:	766	645	800	674	34	29
	PRIOR:		121		121		0
	TOTAL:	766	766	800	795	34	29
Miscellaneous trust funds
12 9973 0 7 302
	NEW:	181,043	88	199,717	5,190	18,674	5,102
	PRIOR:		167,334		179,603		12,269
	TOTAL:	181,043	167,422	199,717	184,793	18,674	17,371
Department of the Interior
Bureau of Land Management
Service charges, deposits, and forfeitures
14 5017 0 2 302
	NEW:	4,070	840	5,920	1,330	1,850	490
	PRIOR:		2,902		3,230		328
	TOTAL:	4,070	3,742	5,920	4,560	1,850	818
Range improvements
14 5132 0 2 302
	NEW:	10,000	6,450	10,460	6,747	460	297
	PRIOR:		4,175		3,550		-625
	TOTAL:	10,000	10,625	10,460	10,297	460	-328
Recreational resources
National Park Service
National park system visitor facilities fund
14 5078 0 2 303
	NEW:	5,880	2,528	8,500	3,655	2,620	1,127
	PRIOR:		3,500		3,236		-264
	TOTAL:	5,880	6,028	8,500	6,891	2,620	863
United States Fish and Wildlife Service
Sport fish restoration
14 8151 0 7 303
	NEW:	0	0	44,000	0	44,000	0
	PRIOR:		0		0		0
	TOTAL:	0	0	44,000	0	44,000	0
COMMUNITY AND REGIONAL DEVELOPMENT
Area and regional development
Bureau of Indian Affairs
Operation of Indian programs (Area and regional development)
14 2100 0 1 452
	NEW:	495,183	345,142	502,208	350,039	7,025	4,897
	PRIOR:		159,489		144,648		-14,841
	TOTAL:	495,183	504,631	502,208	494,687	7,025	-9,944
Indian loan guaranty and insurance fund
14 4410 0 3 452
	NEW:	0	0	1,485	1,485	1,485	1,485
	PRIOR:		4,470		4,000		-470
	TOTAL:	0	4,470	1,485	5,485	1,485	1,015
Miscellaneous trust funds (Area and regional development)
14 9973 0 7 452
	NEW:	403,503	399,508	418,908	414,759	15,405	15,251
	PRIOR:		3,271		3,995		724
	TOTAL:	403,503	402,779	418,908	418,754	15,405	15,975

CBO/BUDGET ANALYSIS DIV(MAR40R) CBO EST. OF PRES. WHERE BUDGET YEAR DATA
(UNIFIED BUDGET) IS GREATER THAN CURRENT YEAR DATA
P63 SORTED BY: SCOM,FUNC,SFUN,TID
(AMOUNTS IN THOUSANDS)

Interior Subcommittee		1985 BA	1985 OUTLAYS	1986 BA	1986 OUTLAYS	DIFFERENCE COL2 - COL1 BA	DIFFERENCE COL2 - COL1 OUTLAYS
EDUCATION, TRAINING, EMPLOYMENT, AND SOCIAL SERVICES
Research and general education aids
Other Independent Agencies
Smithsonian Institution
Salaries and expenses
33 0100 0 1 503
	NEW:	162,415	144,026	180,525	159,385	18,110	15,359
	PRIOR:		17,706		19,338		1,632
	TOTAL:	162,415	161,732	180,525	178,723	18,110	16,991
Restoration and renovation of buildings
33 0132 0 1 503
	NEW:	13,475	4,736	14,140	10,317	665	5,581
	PRIOR:		8,864		3,392		-5,472
	TOTAL:	13,475	13,600	14,140	13,709	665	109
Construction
33 0133 0 1 503
	NEW:	0	0	4,000	4,000	4,000	4,000
	PRIOR:		12,000		7,000		-5,000
	TOTAL:	0	12,000	4,000	11,000	4,000	-1,000
Salaries and expenses, National Gallery of Art
33 0200 0 1 503
	NEW:	36,085	32,658	36,704	34,778	619	2,120
	PRIOR:		4,813		3,555		-1,258
	TOTAL:	36,085	37,471	36,704	38,333	619	862
Salaries and expenses, Woodrow Wilson International Center f
33 0400 0 1 503
	NEW:	2,658	1,485	2,852	1,679	194	194
	PRIOR:		1,173		1,173		0
	TOTAL:	2,658	2,658	2,852	2,852	194	194
GENERAL PURPOSE FISCAL ASSISTANCE
Other general purpose fiscal assistance
Department of the Interior
Bureau of Land Management
Payments in lieu of taxes
14 1114 0 1 852
	NEW:	102,900	102,900	105,000	105,000	2,100	2,100
	PRIOR:		0		0		0
	TOTAL:	102,900	102,900	105,000	105,000	2,100	2,100
United States Fish and Wildlife Service
National wildlife refuge fund
14 5091 0 2 852
	NEW:	12,385	8,666	12,685	12,544	300	3,878
	PRIOR:		3,929		0		-3,929
	TOTAL:	12,385	12,595	12,685	12,544	300	-51
COMMITTEE TOTAL.. IN Interior Subcommittee
	NEW:	-2,814,794	2,164,238	3,160,153	2,500,005	5,974,947	335,767
	PRIOR:		671,897		789,935		118,038
	TOTAL:	-2,814,794	2,836,135	3,160,153	3,289,940	5,974,947	453,805

(AMOUNTS IN THOUSANDS)

Labor, HHS Subcomm		1985 BA	1985 OUTLAYS	1986 BA	1986 OUTLAYS	DIFFERENCE COL2 - COL1 BA	DIFFERENCE COL2 - COL1 OUTLAYS
EDUCATION, TRAINING, EMPLOYMENT, AND SOCIAL SERVICES
Elementary, secondary, and vocational education
Department of Education
Special Institutions
American Printing House for the Blind
91 0600 0 1 501
	NEW:	5,500	5,500	5,510	5,510	10	10
	PRIOR:		0		0		0
	TOTAL:	5,500	5,500	5,510	5,510	10	10
Higher education
Office of Postsecondary Education
Higher education facilities loans and insurance
91 0240 0 1 502
	NEW:	14,194	0	17,996	0	3,802	0
	PRIOR:		5,629		1,996		-3,633
	TOTAL:	14,194	5,629	17,996	1,996	3,802	-3,633
Special Institutions
Gallaudet College
91 0602 0 1 502
	NEW:	58,700	58,700	58,889	58,889	189	189
	PRIOR:		2,000		0		-2,000
	TOTAL:	58,700	60,700	58,889	58,889	189	-1,811

CBO/BUDGET ANALYSIS DIV(MAR40R) CBO EST. OF PRES. WHERE BUDGET YEAR DATA
(UNIFIED BUDGET) IS GREATER THAN CURRENT YEAR DATA
P63 SORTED BY: SCOM,FUNC,SFUN,TID
(AMOUNTS IN THOUSANDS)

Labor, HHS Subcomm		1985 BA	1985 OUTLAYS	1986 BA	1986 OUTLAYS	DIFFERENCE COL2 - COL1 BA	DIFFERENCE COL2 - COL1 OUTLAYS
Research and general education aids
Other Independent Agencies
Corporation for Public Broadcasting
Public broadcasting fund
20 0151 0 1 503
	NEW:	150,500	150,500	159,500	159,500	9,000	9,000
	PRIOR:		0		0		0
	TOTAL:	150,500	150,500	159,500	159,500	9,000	9,000
Training and employment
Department of Labor
Employment and Training Administration
State unemployment insurance and employment service operatio
16 0179 0 1 504
	NEW:	23,500	6,850	23,600	6,575	100	-275
	PRIOR:		43,754		16,650		-27,104
	TOTAL:	23,500	50,604	23,600	23,225	100	-27,379
Other labor services
Bureau of Labor Statistics
Salaries and expenses
16 0200 0 1 505
	NEW:	147,095	138,210	148,294	138,898	1,199	688
	PRIOR:		10,691		10,503		-188
	TOTAL:	147,095	148,901	148,294	149,401	1,199	500
Social services
Department of Health and Human Services
Human Development Services
Family social services
75 1645 0 1 506
	NEW:	736,910	731,194	740,994	736,976	4,084	5,782
	PRIOR:		47,955		5,507		-42,448
	TOTAL:	736,910	779,149	740,994	742,483	4,084	-36,666
HEALTH
Health care services
Office of Assistant Secretary for Health
Retirement pay and medical benefits for commissioned officer
75 0379 0 1 551
	NEW:	72,121	69,240	97,702	75,909	25,581	6,669
	PRIOR:		2,084		2,124		40
	TOTAL:	72,121	71,324	97,702	78,033	25,581	6,709
Health Care Financing Administration
Grants to states for medicaid
75 0512 0 1 551
	NEW:	21,845,491	21,126,807	23,016,000	22,684,918	1,170,509	1,558,111
	PRIOR:		1,470,193		331,082		-1,139,111
	TOTAL:	21,845,491	22,597,000	23,016,000	23,016,000	1,170,509	419,000
Legislative Branch
Other Legislative Branch Agencies
Prospective Payment Assessment Commission
95 3400 0 1 551
	NEW:	2,424	2,124	3,240	2,940	816	816
	PRIOR:		1,170		300		-870
	TOTAL:	2,424	3,294	3,240	3,240	816	-54
Health research
Department of Health and Human Services
Office of Assistant Secretary for Health
Public health service management (Health research)
75 1101 0 1 552
	NEW:	59,060	27,846	64,180	31,236	5,120	3,390
	PRIOR:		35,601		32,809		-2,792
	TOTAL:	59,060	63,447	64,180	64,045	5,120	598
Alcohol, Drug Abuse, and Mental Health Administration
Alcohol, drug abuse, and mental health (Health research)
75 1361 0 1 552
	NEW:	375,149	278,957	375,194	263,571	45	-15,386
	PRIOR:		94,985		115,660		20,675
	TOTAL:	375,149	373,942	375,194	379,231	45	5,289
Education and training of health care work force
National Institutes of Health
Research resources (Education and training of health care wo
75 0848 0 1 553
	NEW:	1,102	48	1,109	60	7	12
	PRIOR:		908		1,130		222
	TOTAL:	1,102	956	1,109	1,190	7	234
National Cancer Institute (Education and training of health
75 0849 0 1 553
	NEW:	30,838	646	32,290	646	1,452	0
	PRIOR:		23,739		30,552		6,813
	TOTAL:	30,838	24,385	32,290	31,198	1,452	6,813

CBO/BUDGET ANALYSIS DIV(MAR40R) CBO EST. OF PRES. WHERE BUDGET YEAR DATA
(UNIFIED BUDGET) IS GREATER THAN CURRENT YEAR DATA
P63 SORTED BY: SCOM,FUNC,SFUN,TID
(AMOUNTS IN THOUSANDS)

Labor, HHS Subcomm	1985 BA	1985 OUTLAYS	1986 BA	1986 OUTLAYS	DIFFERENCE COL2 - COL1 BA	DIFFERENCE COL2 - COL1 OUTLAYS
National Institute of General Medical Sciences (Education an 75 0851 0 1 553
NEW:	59,337	40,225	59,412	44,988	75	4,763
PRIOR:		14,768		15,000		232
TOTAL:	59,337	54,993	59,412	59,988	75	4,995
National Eye Institute (Education and training of health car
75 0887 0 1 553
NEW:	5,486	3,996	5,491	4,000	5	4
PRIOR:		705		706		1
TOTAL:	5,486	4,701	5,491	4,706	5	5
MEDICARE
Medicare
Health Care Financing Administration
Federal hospital insurance trust fund
20 8005 0 7 572
NEW:	52,928,000	30,974,743	62,160,000	48,999,865	9,232,000	18,025,122
PRIOR:		17,237,161		0		-17,237,161
TOTAL:	52,928,000	48,211,904	62,160,000	48,999,865	9,232,000	787,961
INCOME SECURITY
General retirement and disability insurance (excluding socia
Department of Labor
Employment and Training Administration
Advances to the unemployment trust fund and other funds (Gen
16 0327 0 1 601
NEW:	0	0	116,000	116,000	116,000	116,000
PRIOR:		395,000		0		-395,000
TOTAL:	0	395,000	116,000	116,000	116,000	-279,000
Employment Standards Administration
Special benefits (General retirement and disability insuranc
16 1521 0 1 601
NEW:	4,400	4,400	4,500	4,500	100	100
PRIOR:		0		0		0
TOTAL:	4,400	4,400	4,500	4,500	100	100
Black lung disability trust fund
20 8144 0 7 601
NEW:	963,537	970,073	999,000	999,000	35,463	28,927
PRIOR:		927		0		-927
TOTAL:	963,537	971,000	999,000	999,000	35,463	28,000
Other Independent Agencies
Railroad Retirement Board
Federal payments to the railroad retirement accounts
60 0113 0 1 601
NEW:	2,895,600	2,895,000	3,099,000	3,099,200	203,400	204,200
PRIOR:		0		1,000		1,000
TOTAL:	2,895,600	2,895,000	3,099,000	3,100,200	203,400	205,200
Rail Industry Pension Fund
60 8011 0 7 601
NEW:	3,740,600	55,531	4,070,000	20,795	329,400	-34,736
PRIOR:		2,263,494		2,326,230		62,736
TOTAL:	3,740,600	2,319,025	4,070,000	2,347,025	329,400	28,000
Federal employee retirement and disability
Department of Labor
Employment Standards Administration
Special benefits (Federal employee retirement and disability
16 1521 0 1 602
NEW:	207,000	206,527	233,000	232,527	26,000	26,000
PRIOR:		473		473		0
TOTAL:	207,000	207,000	233,000	233,000	26,000	26,000
Unemployment compensation
Employment and Training Administration
Advances to the unemployment trust fund and other funds (Une
16 0327 0 1 603
NEW:	0	0	80,000	80,000	80,000	80,000
PRIOR:		1,305,000		0		-1,305,000
TOTAL:	0	1,305,000	80,000	80,000	80,000	-1,225,000
Other income security
Department of Health and Human Services
Social Security Administration
Supplemental security income program
75 0406 0 1 609
NEW:	9,309,000	9,309,000	9,913,000	9,913,000	604,000	604,000
PRIOR:		348,000		28,000		-320,000
TOTAL:	9,309,000	9,657,000	9,913,000	9,941,000	604,000	284,000
Assistance payments program
75 0412 0 1 609
NEW:	8,517,000	8,517,000	8,773,000	8,773,000	256,000	256,000
PRIOR:		80,000		0		-80,000
TOTAL:	8,517,000	8,597,000	8,773,000	8,773,000	256,000	176,000

CBO/BUDGET ANALYSIS DIV(MAR40R) CBO EST. OF PRES. WHERE BUDGET YEAR DATA
(UNIFIED BUDGET) IS GREATER THAN CURRENT YEAR DATA
P63 SORTED BY: SCOM,FUNC,SFUN,TID
(AMOUNTS IN THOUSANDS)

Labor, HHS Subcomm		1985 BA	1985 OUTLAYS	1986 BA	1986 OUTLAYS	DIFFERENCE COL2 - COL1 BA	DIFFERENCE COL2 - COL1 OUTLAYS
SOCIAL SECURITY
SOCIAL SECURITY
Federal old-age and survivors insurance trust fund
20 8006 0 7 650	NEW:	177,976,000	172,091,865	191,169,000	181,681,586	13,193,000	9,589,721
	PRIOR:		0		0		0
	TOTAL:	177,976,000	172,091,865	191,169,000	181,681,586	13,193,000	9,589,721
Federal disability insurance trust fund
20 8007 0 7 650	NEW:	20,373,000	19,586,689	20,586,000	20,258,000	213,000	671,311
	PRIOR:		0		0		0
	TOTAL:	20,373,000	19,586,689	20,586,000	20,258,000	213,000	671,311
COMMITTEE TOTAL.. LA Labor, HHS Subcomm	NEW:	300,501,544	267,251,671	326,011,901	298,392,089	25,510,357	31,140,418
	PRIOR:		23,384,237		2,919,722		-20,464,515
	TOTAL:	300,501,544	290,635,908	326,011,901	301,311,811	25,510,357	10,675,903

(AMOUNTS IN THOUSANDS)

Legislative Branch Subcomm		1985 BA	1985 OUTLAYS	1986 BA	1986 OUTLAYS	DIFFERENCE COL2 - COL1 BA	DIFFERENCE COL2 - COL1 OUTLAYS
COMMERCE AND HOUSING CREDIT
Other advancement of commerce
Legislative Branch
Library of Congress
Copyright Office: Salaries and expenses
03 0102 0 1 376	NEW:	11,102	10,159	12,081	11,054	979	895
	PRIOR:		940		943		3
	TOTAL:	11,102	11,099	12,081	11,997	979	898
Other Legislative Branch Agencies
Copyright Royalty Tribunal: Salaries and expenses
09 0310 0 1 376	NEW:	217	211	227	221	10	10
	PRIOR:		6		6		0
	TOTAL:	217	217	227	227	10	10
EDUCATION, TRAINING, EMPLOYMENT, AND SOCIAL SERVICES
Research and general education aids
Library of Congress
Salaries and expenses
03 0101 0 1 503	NEW:	133,192	111,237	142,307	123,729	9,115	12,492
	PRIOR:		24,578		21,926		-2,652
	TOTAL:	133,192	135,815	142,307	145,655	9,115	9,840
Books for the blind and physically handicapped: Salaries and
03 0141 0 1 503	NEW:	36,592	19,972	38,402	18,351	1,810	-1,621
	PRIOR:		20,109		18,426		-1,683
	TOTAL:	36,592	40,081	38,402	36,777	1,810	-3,304
Furniture and furnishings
03 0146 0 1 503	NEW:	1,673	887	5,915	3,135	4,242	2,248
	PRIOR:		804		786		-18
	TOTAL:	1,673	1,691	5,915	3,921	4,242	2,230
GENERAL GOVERNMENT
Legislative functions
Senate
Compensation of Members, Senate
00 0100 0 1 801	NEW:	8,856	8,856	8,976	8,976	120	120
	PRIOR:		0		0		0
	TOTAL:	8,856	8,856	8,976	8,976	120	120
Salaries, officers and employees
00 0110 0 1 801	NEW:	165,642	155,703	174,162	163,712	8,520	8,009
	PRIOR:		0		0		0
	TOTAL:	165,642	155,703	174,162	163,712	8,520	8,009
Secretary of the Senate
00 0126 0 1 801	NEW:	711	661	760	707	49	46
	PRIOR:		0		50		50
	TOTAL:	711	661	760	757	49	96
Sergeant at Arms and Doorkeeper of the Senate
00 0127 0 1 801	NEW:	42,057	39,172	43,989	40,910	1,932	1,738
	PRIOR:		0		2,885		2,885
	TOTAL:	42,057	39,172	43,989	43,795	1,932	4,623

CBO/BUDGET ANALYSIS DIV(MAR40R) CBO EST. OF PRES. WHERE BUDGET YEAR DATA
(UNIFIED BUDGET) IS GREATER THAN CURRENT YEAR DATA
P63 SORTED BY: SCOM,FUNC,SFUN,TID
(AMOUNTS IN THOUSANDS)

Legislative Branch Subcomm		1985		1986		DIFFERENCE COL2 - COL1
		BA	OUTLAYS	BA	OUTLAYS	BA	OUTLAYS
Inquiries and investigations
00 0128 0 1 801
	NEW:	51,498	46,213	53,916	47,985	2,418	1,772
	PRIOR:		914		961		47
	TOTAL:	51,498	47,127	53,916	48,946	2,418	1,819
Stationery (revolving fund)
00 0140 0 1 801
	NEW:	12	12	13	13	1	1
	PRIOR:		0		0		0
	TOTAL:	12	12	13	13	1	1
Joint Items
Capitol Guide Service
00 0170 0 1 801
	NEW:	810	689	954	811	144	122
	PRIOR:		75		79		4
	TOTAL:	810	764	954	890	144	126
Senate
Office of Senate Legal Counsel
00 0171 0 1 801
	NEW:	565	513	575	522	10	9
	PRIOR:		50		52		2
	TOTAL:	565	563	575	574	10	11
Joint Items
Joint Committee on Printing
00 0180 0 1 801
	NEW:	909	782	945	812	36	30
	PRIOR:		85		127		42
	TOTAL:	909	867	945	939	36	72
Joint Economic Committee
00 0181 0 1 801
	NEW:	2,569	2,055	2,680	2,144	111	89
	PRIOR:		488		514		26
	TOTAL:	2,569	2,543	2,680	2,658	111	115
Senate
Senate policy committees
00 0182 0 1 801
	NEW:	1,898	1,898	1,981	1,981	83	83
	PRIOR:		0		0		0
	TOTAL:	1,898	1,898	1,981	1,981	83	83
Office of the Legislative Counsel of the Senate
00 0185 0 1 801
	NEW:	1,400	1,244	1,590	1,414	190	170
	PRIOR:		0		0		0
	TOTAL:	1,400	1,244	1,590	1,414	190	170
House of Representatives
Compensation of Members and related administrative expenses
00 0200 0 1 801
	NEW:	36,410	34,762	37,633	35,940	1,223	1,178
	PRIOR:		1,449		1,648		199
	TOTAL:	36,410	36,211	37,633	37,588	1,223	1,377
House leadership offices
00 0408 0 1 801
	NEW:	3,240	2,476	3,357	2,565	117	89
	PRIOR:		696		764		68
	TOTAL:	3,240	3,172	3,357	3,329	117	157
Salaries, officers and employees
00 0410 0 1 801
	NEW:	47,077	45,146	48,981	46,973	1,904	1,827
	PRIOR:		1,676		1,931		255
	TOTAL:	47,077	46,822	48,981	48,904	1,904	2,082
Members' clerk hire
00 0415 0 1 801
	NEW:	164,126	161,664	169,641	167,096	5,515	5,432
	PRIOR:		0		0		0
	TOTAL:	164,126	161,664	169,641	167,096	5,515	5,432
Committee employees
00 0416 0 1 801
	NEW:	40,607	39,095	44,325	42,552	3,718	3,457
	PRIOR:		0		0		0
	TOTAL:	40,607	39,095	44,325	42,552	3,718	3,457
Committee on Appropriations (Studies and investigations)
00 0418 0 1 801
	NEW:	4,315	4,142	4,500	4,320	185	178
	PRIOR:		0		0		0
	TOTAL:	4,315	4,142	4,500	4,320	185	178

CBO/BUDGET ANALYSIS DIV(MAR40R)
(UNIFIED BUDGET)
P63 SORTED BY: SCOM,FUNC,SFUN,TID

CBO EST. OF PRES. WHERE BUDGET YEAR DATA IS GREATER THAN CURRENT YEAR DATA
(AMOUNTS IN THOUSANDS)

Legislative Branch Subcomm		1985		1986		DIFFERENCE COL2 - COL1
		BA	OUTLAYS	BA	OUTLAYS	BA	OUTLAYS
Joint Items
Office of the Attending Physician
00 0425 0 1 801	NEW:	1,007	971	1,078	1,039	71	68
	PRIOR:		0		0		0
	TOTAL:	1,007	971	1,078	1,039	71	68
House of Representatives
Special and select committees
00 0433 0 1 801	NEW:	45,667	43,840	46,960	45,082	1,293	1,242
	PRIOR:		0		0		0
	TOTAL:	45,667	43,840	46,960	45,082	1,293	1,242
Allowances and expenses
00 0438 0 1 801	NEW:	128,640	113,932	137,058	120,611	8,418	6,679
	PRIOR:		12,389		14,708		2,319
	TOTAL:	128,640	126,321	137,058	135,319	8,418	8,998
Joint Items
Joint Committee on Taxation
00 0460 0 1 801	NEW:	3,605	2,387	3,897	2,580	292	193
	PRIOR:		856		1,218		362
	TOTAL:	3,605	3,243	3,897	3,798	292	555
General expenses, Capitol police
00 0476 0 1 801	NEW:	1,471	1,250	1,670	1,420	199	170
	PRIOR:		0		0		0
	TOTAL:	1,471	1,250	1,670	1,420	199	170
Official mail costs
00 0825 0 1 801	NEW:	85,797	60,539	144,458	95,114	58,661	34,575
	PRIOR:		25,258		49,344		24,086
	TOTAL:	85,797	85,797	144,458	144,458	58,661	58,661
Architect of the Capitol
Office of the Architect of the Capitol: Salaries
01 0100 0 1 801	NEW:	5,137	4,777	5,675	5,170	538	393
	PRIOR:		179		360		181
	TOTAL:	5,137	4,956	5,675	5,530	538	574
Capitol buildings
01 0105 0 1 801	NEW:	11,544	9,897	12,621	10,816	1,077	919
	PRIOR:		3,252		1,647		-1,605
	TOTAL:	11,544	13,149	12,621	12,463	1,077	-686
Capitol grounds
01 0108 0 1 801	NEW:	2,796	2,460	3,364	2,964	568	504
	PRIOR:		1,455		336		-1,119
	TOTAL:	2,796	3,915	3,364	3,300	568	-615
Senate office buildings
01 0123 0 1 801	NEW:	19,241	13,661	23,598	16,755	4,357	3,094
	PRIOR:		7,535		13,416		5,881
	TOTAL:	19,241	21,196	23,598	30,171	4,357	8,975
House office buildings
01 0127 0 1 801	NEW:	22,750	20,339	41,323	36,943	18,573	16,604
	PRIOR:		2,325		2,411		86
	TOTAL:	22,750	22,664	41,323	39,354	18,573	16,690
Capitol Power Plant
01 0133 0 1 801	NEW:	22,920	17,112	25,375	18,955	2,455	1,843
	PRIOR:		6,645		5,808		-837
	TOTAL:	22,920	23,757	25,375	24,763	2,455	1,006
Structural and mechanical care, Library buildings and ground
01 0155 0 1 801	NEW:	5,709	5,258	7,380	6,797	1,671	1,539
	PRIOR:		5,569		16,399		10,830
	TOTAL:	5,709	10,827	7,380	23,196	1,671	12,369

CBO/BUDGET ANALYSIS DIV(MAR4QR) CBO EST. OF PRES. WHERE BUDGET YEAR DATA
(UNIFIED BUDGET) IS GREATER THAN CURRENT YEAR DATA
P63 SORTED BY: SCOM,FUNC,SFUN,TID
(AMOUNTS IN THOUSANDS)

Legislative Branch Subcomm		1985 BA	1985 OUTLAYS	1986 BA	1986 OUTLAYS	DIFFERENCE COL2 - COL1 BA	DIFFERENCE COL2 - COL1 OUTLAYS
Library of Congress
Congressional Research Service: Salaries and expenses
03 0127 0 1 801
	NEW:	39,833	37,324	43,292	40,565	3,459	3,241
	PRIOR:		2,344		2,507		163
	TOTAL:	39,833	39,668	43,292	43,072	3,459	3,404
Government Printing Office
Printing and binding
04 0202 0 1 801
	NEW:	13,200	7,392	14,500	8,120	1,300	728
	PRIOR:		3,665		5,808		2,143
	TOTAL:	13,200	11,057	14,500	13,928	1,300	2,871
General Accounting Office
Salaries and expenses
05 0107 0 1 801
	NEW:	295,825	271,031	339,639	311,109	43,814	40,078
	PRIOR:		16,257		24,794		8,537
	TOTAL:	295,825	287,288	339,639	335,903	43,814	48,615
Congressional Budget Office
Salaries and expenses
08 0100 0 1 801
	NEW:	17,418	14,857	18,455	15,742	1,037	885
	PRIOR:		2,405		2,561		156
	TOTAL:	17,418	17,262	18,455	18,303	1,037	1,041
Other Legislative Branch Agencies
Botanic Garden: Salaries and expenses
09 0200 0 1 801
	NEW:	2,044	1,923	2,197	2,067	153	144
	PRIOR:		122		121		-1
	TOTAL:	2,044	2,045	2,197	2,188	153	143
Office of Technology Assessment: Salaries and expenses
09 0700 0 1 801
	NEW:	15,549	13,683	17,000	14,960	1,451	1,277
	PRIOR:		1,767		1,866		99
	TOTAL:	15,549	15,450	17,000	16,826	1,451	1,376
COMMITTEE TOTAL.. LB Legislative Branch Subcomm
	NEW:	1,495,631	1,330,182	1,687,450	1,482,732	191,819	152,550
	PRIOR:		143,893		194,402		50,509
	TOTAL:	1,495,631	1,474,075	1,687,450	1,677,134	191,819	203,059

(AMOUNTS IN THOUSANDS)

Military Constr Subcomm		1985 BA	1985 OUTLAYS	1986 BA	1986 OUTLAYS	DIFFERENCE COL2 - COL1 BA	DIFFERENCE COL2 - COL1 OUTLAYS
NATIONAL DEFENSE
Department of Defense-Military
Department of Defense--Military
Family Housing
Family housing, Navy and Marine Corps
17 0703 0 1 051
	NEW:	657,789	323,000	722,500	317,658	64,711	-5,342
	PRIOR:		261,000		367,413		106,413
	TOTAL:	657,789	584,000	722,500	685,071	64,711	101,071
Military Construction
Military construction, Navy
17 1205 0 1 051
	NEW:	1,534,592	226,000	2,085,200	375,000	550,608	149,000
	PRIOR:		801,000		1,061,000		260,000
	TOTAL:	1,534,592	1,027,000	2,085,200	1,436,000	550,608	409,000
Family Housing
Family housing, Army
21 0702 0 1 051
	NEW:	1,328,378	820,000	1,610,700	791,594	282,322	-28,406
	PRIOR:		346,000		489,462		143,462
	TOTAL:	1,328,378	1,166,000	1,610,700	1,281,056	282,322	115,056
Military Construction
Military construction, Army
21 2050 0 1 051
	NEW:	1,593,137	235,000	2,020,900	323,000	427,763	88,000
	PRIOR:		812,000		1,075,000		263,000
	TOTAL:	1,593,137	1,047,000	2,020,900	1,398,000	427,763	351,000
Military construction, Army National Guard
21 2085 0 1 051
	NEW:	98,603	6,000	102,100	6,000	3,497	0
	PRIOR:		58,000		97,000		39,000
	TOTAL:	98,603	64,000	102,100	103,000	3,497	39,000

CBO/BUDGET ANALYSIS DIV(MAR40R)
(UNIFIED BUDGET)
P63
SORTED BY: SCOM,FUNC,SFUN,TID
CBO EST. OF PRES. WHERE BUDGET YEAR DATA IS GREATER THAN CURRENT YEAR DATA
(AMOUNTS IN THOUSANDS)

Military Constr Subcomm		1985 BA	1985 OUTLAYS	1986 BA	1986 OUTLAYS	DIFFERENCE COL2 - COL1 BA	DIFFERENCE COL2 - COL1 OUTLAYS
Military construction, Army Reserve
21 2086 0 1 051	NEW:	69,306	3,000	70,700	4,000	1,394	1,000
	PRIOR:		30,000		46,000		16,000
	TOTAL:	69,306	33,000	70,700	50,000	1,394	17,000
Family Housing
family housing, Air Force
57 0704 0 1 051	NEW:	884,111	447,000	929,400	415,227	45,289	-31,773
	PRIOR:		286,000		402,606		116,606
	TOTAL:	884,111	733,000	929,400	817,833	45,289	84,833
Military Construction
Military construction, Air Force
57 3300 0 1 051	NEW:	1,572,655	179,000	2,082,000	250,000	509,345	71,000
	PRIOR:		1,160,000		1,357,000		197,000
	TOTAL:	1,572,655	1,339,000	2,082,000	1,607,000	509,345	268,000
Military construction, Air National Guard
57 3830 0 1 051	NEW:	111,200	6,000	137,200	8,000	26,000	2,000
	PRIOR:		84,000		127,000		43,000
	TOTAL:	111,200	90,000	137,200	135,000	26,000	45,000
Military construction, Defense agencies
97 0500 0 1 051	NEW:	302,198	24,000	309,600	25,000	7,402	1,000
	PRIOR:		244,000		252,000		8,000
	TOTAL:	302,198	268,000	309,600	277,000	7,402	9,000
Family Housing
Family housing, Defense agencies
97 0706 0 1 051	NEW:	17,437	10,000	20,300	13,195	2,863	3,195
	PRIOR:		5,000		7,039		2,039
	TOTAL:	17,437	15,000	20,300	20,234	2,863	5,234
Military Construction
Defense facilities replacement
97 0811 0 1 051	NEW:	0	0	33,000	4,500	33,000	4,500
	PRIOR:		0		0		0
	TOTAL:	0	0	33,000	4,500	33,000	4,500
COMMITTEE TOTAL.. MC Military Constr Subcomm	NEW:	8,169,406	2,279,000	10,123,600	2,533,174	1,954,194	254,174
	PRIOR:		4,087,000		5,281,520		1,194,520
	TOTAL:	8,169,406	6,366,000	10,123,600	7,814,694	1,954,194	1,448,694

(AMOUNTS IN THOUSANDS)

Transportation Subcomm		1985 BA	1985 OUTLAYS	1986 BA	1986 OUTLAYS	DIFFERENCE COL2 - COL1 BA	DIFFERENCE COL2 - COL1 OUTLAYS
TRANSPORTATION
Ground transportation
Department of Transportation
Federal Highway Administration
Federal-aid highways (trust fund)
20 8102 0 7 401	NEW:	14,838,423	2,063,000	15,211,096	2,305,000	372,673	242,000
	PRIOR:		10,587,000		11,495,000		908,000
	TOTAL:	14,838,423	12,650,000	15,211,096	13,800,000	372,673	1,150,000
Other Independent Agencies
Washington Metropolitan Area Transit Authority
Interest payments
46 0300 0 1 401	NEW:	46,176	46,176	51,664	51,664	5,488	5,488
	PRIOR:		0		0		0
	TOTAL:	46,176	46,176	51,664	51,664	5,488	5,488
Department of Transportation
National Highway Traffic Safety Administration
Operations and research
69 0650 0 1 401	NEW:	57,752	37,576	57,757	38,606	5	1,030
	PRIOR:		26,917		28,064		1,147
	TOTAL:	57,752	64,493	57,757	66,670	5	2,177
Motor Carrier Safety, NHTSA
69 0654 0 1 401	NEW:	0	0	13,639	12,357	13,639	12,357
	PRIOR:		0		1,282		1,282
	TOTAL:	0	0	13,639	13,639	13,639	13,639

CBO/BUDGET ANALYSIS DIV(MAR40R) CBO EST. OF PRES. WHERE BUDGET YEAR DATA
(UNIFIED BUDGET) IS GREATER THAN CURRENT YEAR DATA
P63 SORTED BY: SCOM,FUNC,SFUN,TID
(AMOUNTS IN THOUSANDS)

Transportation Subcomm		1985		1986		DIFFERENCE COL2 - COL1
		BA	OUTLAYS	BA	OUTLAYS	BA	OUTLAYS
Federal Railroad Administration
Railroad safety
69 0702 0 1 401
	NEW:	25,921	19,405	27,267	20,450	1,346	1,045
	PRIOR:		7,241		11,404		4,163
	TOTAL:	25,921	26,646	27,267	31,854	1,346	5,208
National Highway Traffic Safety Administration
Trust fund share of operations and research
69 8016 0 7 401
	NEW:	23,423	11,669	30,455	13,323	7,032	1,654
	PRIOR:		9,000		8,242		-758
	TOTAL:	23,423	20,669	30,455	21,565	7,032	896
Motor carrier safety grants
69 8067 0 7 401
	NEW:	0	0	14,000	12,600	14,000	12,600
	PRIOR:		0		1,400		1,400
	TOTAL:	0	0	14,000	14,000	14,000	14,000
Urban Mass Transportation Administration
Formula capital grants
69 8099 0 7 401
	NEW:	0	0	1,100,000	47,000	1,100,000	47,000
	PRIOR:		0		0		0
	TOTAL:	0	0	1,100,000	47,000	1,100,000	47,000
Air transportation
Federal Aviation Administration
Trust fund share of FAA operations
69 8104 0 7 402
	NEW:	1,110,000	976,800	2,043,471	1,798,254	933,471	821,454
	PRIOR:		0		88,800		88,800
	TOTAL:	1,110,000	976,800	2,043,471	1,887,054	933,471	910,254
Grants-in-aid for airports (Airport and airway trust fund)
69 8106 0 7 402
	NEW:	987,000	184,075	1,017,000	202,383	30,000	18,308
	PRIOR:		613,000		669,950		56,950
	TOTAL:	987,000	797,075	1,017,000	872,333	30,000	75,258
Water transportation
Coast Guard
Operating expenses
69 0201 0 1 403
	NEW:	1,735,573	1,410,337	1,767,101	1,440,745	31,528	30,408
	PRIOR:		257,392		275,287		17,895
	TOTAL:	1,735,573	1,667,729	1,767,101	1,716,032	31,528	48,303
Retired pay - Coast Guard
69 0241 0 1 403
	NEW:	330,800	299,043	340,500	306,727	9,700	7,684
	PRIOR:		11,629		31,757		20,128
	TOTAL:	330,800	310,672	340,500	338,484	9,700	27,812
Reserve training
69 0242 0 1 403
	NEW:	58,392	50,508	61,502	53,261	3,110	2,753
	PRIOR:		7,347		7,852		505
	TOTAL:	58,392	57,855	61,502	61,113	3,110	3,258
Research, development, test, and evaluation
69 0243 0 1 403
	NEW:	22,865	7,593	23,000	7,728	135	135
	PRIOR:		14,565		15,198		633
	TOTAL:	22,865	22,158	23,000	22,926	135	768
Boat safety
69 8149 0 7 403
	NEW:	13,625	13,625	28,625	28,625	15,000	15,000
	PRIOR:		0		0		0
	TOTAL:	13,625	13,625	28,625	28,625	15,000	15,000
Other Independent Agencies
Panama Canal Commission
Operations and facilities
95 5190 0 2 403
	NEW:	429,846	378,922	446,784	389,149	16,938	10,227
	PRIOR:		74,098		57,010		-17,088
	TOTAL:	429,846	453,020	446,784	446,159	16,938	-6,861

CBO/BUDGET ANALYSIS DIV(MAR40R.) CBO EST. OF PRES. WHERE BUDGET YEAR DATA
(UNIFIED BUDGET) IS GREATER THAN CURRENT YEAR DATA
P63 SORTED BY: SCOM,FUNC,SFUN,TID
(AMOUNTS IN THOUSANDS)

Transportation Subcomm		1985 BA	1985 OUTLAYS	1986 BA	1986 OUTLAYS	DIFFERENCE COL2 - COL1 BA	DIFFERENCE COL2 - COL1 OUTLAYS
Other transportation
Department of Transportation
Office of the Secretary
Salaries and expenses
69 0102 0 1 407
	NEW:	50,000	45,800	50,695	46,437	695	637
	PRIOR:		3,032		4,200		1,168
	TOTAL:	50,000	48,832	50,695	50,637	695	1,805
COMMITTEE TOTAL.. TR Transportation Subcomm
	NEW:	19,729,796	5,544,529	22,284,556	6,774,309	2,554,760	1,229,780
	PRIOR:		11,611,221		12,695,446		1,084,225
	TOTAL:	19,729,796	17,155,750	22,284,556	19,469,755	2,554,760	2,314,005

(AMOUNTS IN THOUSANDS)

Treas-Postal Serv Subcomm		1985 BA	1985 OUTLAYS	1986 BA	1986 OUTLAYS	DIFFERENCE COL2 - COL1 BA	DIFFERENCE COL2 - COL1 OUTLAYS
NATIONAL DEFENSE
Defense-related activities
General Services Administration
Federal Property Resources Activities
Operating expenses, federal property resources service (Defe
47 0533 0 1 054
	NEW:	27,864	20,029	29,334	25,989	1,470	5,960
	PRIOR:		7,546		3,150		-4,396
	TOTAL:	27,864	27,575	29,334	29,139	1,470	1,564
EDUCATION, TRAINING, EMPLOYMENT, AND SOCIAL SERVICES
Other labor services
Other Independent Agencies
Committee for Purchase from the Blind and other Severely Handicapped
Salaries and expenses
95 2000 0 1 505
	NEW:	710	581	730	581	20	0
	PRIOR:		128		129		1
	TOTAL:	710	709	730	710	20	1
HEALTH
Health care services
Office of Personnel Management
Office of Personnel Management
Government payment for annuitants, employees health benefits
24 0206 0 1 551
	NEW:	1,341,553	1,198,070	1,606,165	1,447,509	264,612	249,439
	PRIOR:		275,707		180,078		-95,629
	TOTAL:	1,341,553	1,473,777	1,606,165	1,627,587	264,612	153,810
ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE
Federal law enforcement activities
Department of the Treasury
United States Customs Service
Operation and maintenance, air interdiction program
20 0604 0 1 751
	NEW:	44,425	11,106	60,425	15,106	16,000	4,000
	PRIOR:		20,000		21,106		1,106
	TOTAL:	44,425	31,106	60,425	36,212	16,000	5,106
Federal litigative and judicial activities
Legislative Branch
United States Tax Court
Salaries and expenses
23 0100 0 1 752
	NEW:	22,344	20,624	24,556	22,665	2,212	2,041
	PRIOR:		1,185		1,720		535
	TOTAL:	22,344	21,809	24,556	24,385	2,212	2,576
GENERAL GOVERNMENT
Executive direction and management
Executive Office of the President
Office of Management and Budget
Salaries and expenses
11 0300 0 1 802
	NEW:	38,500	34,226	40,041	35,775	1,541	1,549
	PRIOR:		4,115		4,274		159
	TOTAL:	38,500	38,341	40,041	40,049	1,541	1,708
National Security Council
Salaries and expenses
11 2000 0 1 802
	NEW:	4,605	3,601	4,627	3,618	22	17
	PRIOR:		980		1,004		24
	TOTAL:	4,605	4,581	4,627	4,622	22	41

CBO/BUDGET ANALYSIS DIV(MAR40R) CBO EST. OF PRES. WHERE BUDGET YEAR DATA
(UNIFIED BUDGET) IS GREATER THAN CURRENT YEAR DATA
P63 SORTED BY: SCOM,FUNC,SFUN,TID
(AMOUNTS IN THOUSANDS)

Treas-Postal Serv Subcomm		1985 BA	1985 OUTLAYS	1986 BA	1986 OUTLAYS	DIFFERENCE COL2 - COL1 BA	DIFFERENCE COL2 - COL1 OUTLAYS
General Services Administration General Activities Allowances and office staff for former Presidents 47 0105 0 1 802	NEW:	1,151	1,053	1,208	1,107	57	54
	PRIOR:		97		98		1
	TOTAL:	1,151	1,150	1,208	1,205	57	55
Central fiscal operations Department of the Treasury Office of the Secretary Salaries and expenses 20 0101 0 1 803	NEW:	55,505	46,660	76,716	64,595	21,211	17,935
	PRIOR:		10,443		8,845		-1,598
	TOTAL:	55,505	57,103	76,716	73,440	21,211	16,337
Internal Revenue Service Processing tax returns 20 0912 0 1 803	NEW:	981,676	736,062	998,241	748,681	16,565	12,619
	PRIOR:		189,441		208,281		18,840
	TOTAL:	981,676	925,503	998,241	956,962	16,565	31,459
Examinations and appeals 20 0913 0 1 803	NEW:	1,355,547	1,274,118	1,375,302	1,292,784	19,755	18,666
	PRIOR:		77,281		81,429		4,148
	TOTAL:	1,355,547	1,351,399	1,375,302	1,374,213	19,755	22,814
Financial Management Service Salaries and expenses 20 1801 0 1 803	NEW:	241,622	218,022	248,121	223,309	6,499	5,287
	PRIOR:		24,337		23,799		-538
	TOTAL:	241,622	242,359	248,121	247,108	6,499	4,749
United States Customs Service Customs forfeiture fund 20 5693 0 2 803	NEW:	6,000	6,000	8,000	8,000	2,000	2,000
	PRIOR:		0		0		0
	TOTAL:	6,000	6,000	8,000	8,000	2,000	2,000
General property and records management General Services Administration Personal Property Activities Personal property, operating expenses 47 0116 0 1 804	NEW:	160,700	147,040	164,257	150,295	3,557	3,255
	PRIOR:		13,338		13,660		322
	TOTAL:	160,700	160,378	164,257	163,955	3,557	3,577
Central personnel management Office of Personnel Management Office of Personnel Management Payment to civil service retirement and disability fund 24 0200 0 1 805	NEW:	15,616,833	15,616,833	15,962,808	15,962,808	345,975	345,975
	PRIOR:		0		0		0
	TOTAL:	15,616,833	15,616,833	15,962,808	15,962,808	345,975	345,975
Other Independent Agencies Merit Systems Protection Board Office of the Special Counsel 41 0101 0 1 805	NEW:	4,583	4,212	4,594	4,222	11	10
	PRIOR:		357		371		14
	TOTAL:	4,583	4,569	4,594	4,593	11	24
Other Independent Agencies Federal Labor Relations Authority Salaries and expenses 54 0100 0 1 805	NEW:	17,197	15,477	17,490	15,741	293	264
	PRIOR:		1,677		1,720		43
	TOTAL:	17,197	17,154	17,490	17,461	293	307
Other general government Department of the Treasury United States Customs Service Customs services at small airports 20 5694 0 2 806	NEW:	42	42	75	0	33	-42
	PRIOR:		0		75		75
	TOTAL:	42	42	75	75	33	33
COMMITTEE TOTAL.. TY Treas-Postal Serv Subcomm	NEW:	19,920,857	19,353,756	20,622,690	20,022,785	701,833	669,029
	PRIOR:		626,632		549,739		-76,893
	TOTAL:	19,920,857	19,980,388	20,622,690	20,572,524	701,833	592,136

CBO/BUDGET ANALYSIS DIV(MAR40R) CBO EST. OF PRES. WHERE BUDGET YEAR DATA
(UNIFIED BUDGET) IS GREATER THAN CURRENT YEAR DATA
P63 SORTED BY: SCOM,FUNC,SFUN,TID
(AMOUNTS IN THOUSANDS)

SENATE APPROPRIATION COMMITTEE TO	1985		1986		DIFFERENCE COL2 - COL1
	BA	OUTLAYS	BA	OUTLAYS	BA	OUTLAYS
NEW:	674,963,440	508,817,869	752,644,198	566,050,677	77,680,758	57,232,808
PRIOR:		122,522,285		120,377,414		-2,144,871
TOTAL:	674,963,440	631,340,154	752,644,198	686,428,091	77,680,758	55,087,937

(AMOUNTS IN THOUSANDS)

Unassigned to Committee	1985		1986		DIFFERENCE COL2 - COL1
	BA	OUTLAYS	BA	OUTLAYS	BA	OUTLAYS
INTERNATIONAL AFFAIRS
Foreign economic and financial assistance
Department of Transportation
Offsetting Receipts
Advances & Deposits, Dept. of Transportation
69 9990 8 7 151
NEW:	-8,771	-8,771	-8,000	-8,000	771	771
PRIOR:		0		0		0
TOTAL:	-8,771	-8,771	-8,000	-8,000	771	771
Conduct of foreign affairs
Funds Appropriated to the President
Offsetting Receipts
Payment to the Foreign Service Retirement Fund
11 9990 8 7 153
NEW:	-41,864	-41,864	-35,562	-35,562	6,302	6,302
PRIOR:		0		0		0
TOTAL:	-41,864	-41,864	-35,562	-35,562	6,302	6,302
Department of State
Offsetting Receipts
International center federal payment
19 9990 8 1 153
NEW:	-4,420	-4,420	-945	-945	3,475	3,475
PRIOR:		0		0		0
TOTAL:	-4,420	-4,420	-945	-945	3,475	3,475
Payment to Foreign Service Retirement Fund
19 9990 8 7 153
NEW:	-342,137	-342,137	-251,774	-251,774	90,363	90,363
PRIOR:		0		0		0
TOTAL:	-342,137	-342,137	-251,774	-251,774	90,363	90,363
International financial programs
Funds Appropriated to the President
Military Sales Programs
Foreign Military Sales Trust Fund (Receipts)
11 9990 8 7 155
NEW:	-12,100,000	-12,100,000	-12,000,000	-12,000,000	100,000	100,000
PRIOR:		0		0		0
TOTAL:	-12,100,000	-12,100,000	-12,000,000	-12,000,000	100,000	100,000
ENERGY
Energy supply
Department of Energy
Offsetting Receipts
Sale of minerals and mineral products
89 9990 8 1 271
NEW:	-1,156,139	-1,156,139	-1,142,209	-1,142,209	13,930	13,930
PRIOR:		0		0		0
TOTAL:	-1,156,139	-1,156,139	-1,142,209	-1,142,209	13,930	13,930
Energy-Advances for Cooperative Work
89 9990 8 7 271
NEW:	-133,171	-133,171	-120,948	-120,948	12,223	12,223
PRIOR:		0		0		0
TOTAL:	-133,171	-133,171	-120,948	-120,948	12,223	12,223
Nuclear waste disposal fund, Energy
89 9992 8 1 271
NEW:	-1,549,400	-1,549,400	-375,770	-375,770	1,173,630	1,173,630
PRIOR:		0		0		0
TOTAL:	-1,549,400	-1,549,400	-375,770	-375,770	1,173,630	1,173,630
Alaska Power Administration
89 9994 8 1 271
NEW:	-7,674	-7,674	-5,975	-5,975	1,699	1,699
PRIOR:		0		0		0
TOTAL:	-7,674	-7,674	-5,975	-5,975	1,699	1,699
Falcom Dam
89 9999 8 1 271
NEW:	-39	-39	-32	-32	7	7
PRIOR:		0		0		0
TOTAL:	-39	-39	-32	-32	7	7

CBO/BUDGET ANALYSIS DIV(HAR40R) CBO EST. OF PRES. WHERE BUDGET YEAR DATA
(UNIFIED BUDGET) IS GREATER THAN CURRENT YEAR DATA
P63 SORTED BY: SCOM,FUNC,SFUN,TID
(AMOUNTS IN THOUSANDS)

Unassigned to Committee	1985 BA	1985 OUTLAYS	1986 BA	1986 OUTLAYS	DIFFERENCE COL2 - COL1 BA	DIFFERENCE COL2 - COL1 OUTLAYS
NATURAL RESOURCES AND ENVIRONMENT
Conservation and land management
Department of the Interior
Department of the Interior
Interior Timber
14 9992 8 1 302
NEW:	-138,262	-138,262	-37,183	-37,183	101,079	101,079
PRIOR:		0		0		0
TOTAL:	-138,262	-138,262	-37,183	-37,183	101,079	101,079
Department of Defense--Civil
Forest and Wildlife Conservation, Military Reservations
Reserve Account, Forest Products Program, Army
21 9990 8 2 302
NEW:	-1,393	-1,393	-610	-610	783	783
PRIOR:		0		0		0
TOTAL:	-1,393	-1,393	-610	-610	783	783
Pollution control and abatement
Environmental Protection Agency
Offsetting Receipts
Hazardous substance/Pollution fund
68 9990 8 7 304
NEW:	-44,000	-44,000	0	0	44,000	44,000
PRIOR:		0		0		0
TOTAL:	-44,000	-44,000	0	0	44,000	44,000
TRANSPORTATION
Ground transportation
Department of Transportation
Offsetting Receipts
Offsetting receipts
69 9990 8 7 401
NEW:	-884	-884	-643	-643	241	241
PRIOR:		0		0		0
TOTAL:	-884	-884	-643	-643	241	241
COMMUNITY AND REGIONAL DEVELOPMENT
Area and regional development
Other Independent Agencies
Appalachian Regional Commission
Appalachian Regional Comm.
46 9990 8 7 452
NEW:	-1,850	-1,850	0	0	1,850	1,850
PRIOR:		0		0		0
TOTAL:	-1,850	-1,850	0	0	1,850	1,850
Appalachian Regional Commission
46 9991 8 7 452
MEDICARE
Medicare
Department of Health and Human Services
Department of Health and Human Services
Offsetting Receipts
20 9990 8 7 572
NEW:	-19,263,000	-19,263,000	-19,249,000	-19,249,000	14,000	14,000
PRIOR:		0		0		0
TOTAL:	-19,263,000	-19,263,000	-19,249,000	-19,249,000	14,000	14,000
INCOME SECURITY
General retirement and disability insurance (excluding socia
Department of Labor
Offsetting Receipts
Offsetting receipt, advances to UI and other trust funds
20 9990 8 7 601
NEW:	-395,000	-395,000	-116,000	-116,000	279,000	279,000
PRIOR:		0		0		0
TOTAL:	-395,000	-395,000	-116,000	-116,000	279,000	279,000
Department of the Treasury
Offsetting Receipts
Interest Payments on advances to Railroad Retirement
20 9995 8 7 601
NEW:	-222,000	-222,000	-199,000	-199,000	23,000	23,000
PRIOR:		0		0		0
TOTAL:	-222,000	-222,000	-199,000	-199,000	23,000	23,000
Unemployment compensation
Department of Labor
Offsetting Receipts
Repymts. of loans, extended unemployment comp.
16 9990 8 1 603
NEW:	-4,870,000	-4,870,000	-4,650,000	-4,650,000	220,000	220,000
PRIOR:		0		0		0
TOTAL:	-4,870,000	-4,870,000	-4,650,000	-4,650,000	220,000	220,000
Unemployment trust fund, repayable advances
20 9990 8 7 603
NEW:	-1,512,000	-1,512,000	-327,000	-327,000	1,185,000	1,185,000
PRIOR:		0		0		0
TOTAL:	-1,512,000	-1,512,000	-327,000	-327,000	1,185,000	1,185,000

CBO/BUDGET ANALYSIS DIV(MAR40R) CBO EST. OF PRES. WHERE BUDGET YEAR DATA
(UNIFIED BUDGET) IS GREATER THAN CURRENT YEAR DATA
P63 SORTED BY: SCOM,FUNC,SFUN,TID
(AMOUNTS IN THOUSANDS)

Unassigned to Committee		1985		1986		DIFFERENCE COL2 - COL1
		BA	OUTLAYS	BA	OUTLAYS	BA	OUTLAYS
Other Independent Agencies
Railroad Retirement Board
Offsetting Receipts
60 9990 8 7 603
	NEW:	-93,900	-93,900	-70,000	-70,000	23,900	23,900
	PRIOR:		0		0		0
	TOTAL:	-93,900	-93,900	-70,000	-70,000	23,900	23,900
SOCIAL SECURITY
SOCIAL SECURITY
Department of Health and Human Services
Social Security Administration
Interest payments to DI
75 9993 8 7 650
	NEW:	-364,000	-364,000	-166,000	-166,000	198,000	198,000
	PRIOR:		0		0		0
	TOTAL:	-364,000	-364,000	-166,000	-166,000	198,000	198,000
Interest payments to HI
75 9994 8 7 650
	NEW:	-1,207,000	-1,207,000	-797,000	-797,000	410,000	410,000
	PRIOR:		0		0		0
	TOTAL:	-1,207,000	-1,207,000	-797,000	-797,000	410,000	410,000
VETERANS BENEFITS AND SERVICES
Income security for veterans
Veterans Administration
Offsetting Reciepts
NSLI Fund, Payments from General and Special Funds
36 9992 8 7 701
	NEW:	-1,775	-1,775	-1,739	-1,739	36	36
	PRIOR:		0		0		0
	TOTAL:	-1,775	-1,775	-1,739	-1,739	36	36
Veterans education, training, and rehabilitation
Deductions from Military Pay
36 9991 8 7 702
	NEW:	-167,000	-167,000	-101,800	-101,800	65,200	65,200
	PRIOR:		0		0		0
	TOTAL:	-167,000	-167,000	-101,800	-101,800	65,200	65,200
GENERAL GOVERNMENT
Central fiscal operations
Department of the Treasury
Offsetting Receipts
Administrative Expenses of the SS Act
20 9990 8 1 803
	NEW:	-250,000	-250,000	-230,000	-230,000	20,000	20,000
	PRIOR:		0		0		0
	TOTAL:	-250,000	-250,000	-230,000	-230,000	20,000	20,000
Surplus Income, Coinage Profit Fund and Mint
20 9991 8 1 803
	NEW:	-153,714	-153,714	-53,752	-53,752	99,962	99,962
	PRIOR:		0		0		0
	TOTAL:	-153,714	-153,714	-53,752	-53,752	99,962	99,962
General property and records management
General Services Administration
General Services Administration
Offsetting Receipts
47 9990 8 1 804
	NEW:	-112,000	-112,000	-88,000	-88,000	24,000	24,000
	PRIOR:		0		0		0
	TOTAL:	-112,000	-112,000	-88,000	-88,000	24,000	24,000
Central personnel management
Office of Personnel Management
Office of Personnel Management
Offsetting receipt, payment to Civil Service retirement
24 9990 8 7 805
	NEW:	-4,407,833	-4,407,833	-4,344,808	-4,344,808	63,025	63,025
	PRIOR:		0		0		0
	TOTAL:	-4,407,833	-4,407,833	-4,344,808	-4,344,808	63,025	63,025
Deductions for offsetting receipts
Department of the Treasury
Offsetting Receipts
Intrabudgetary recoveries from salary reductions
20 9990 8 1 809
	NEW:	-400	-400	0	0	400	400
	PRIOR:		0		0		0
	TOTAL:	-400	-400	0	0	400	400
GENERAL PURPOSE FISCAL ASSISTANCE
General revenue sharing
Payment to general revenue sharing trust fund
20 9990 8 7 851
	NEW:	-4,566,700	-4,566,700	0	0	4,566,700	4,566,700
	PRIOR:		0		0		0
	TOTAL:	-4,566,700	-4,566,700	0	0	4,566,700	4,566,700

CBO/BUDGET ANALYSIS DIV(MAR40R) CBO EST. OF PRES. WHERE BUDGET YEAR DATA
(UNIFIED BUDGET) IS GREATER THAN CURRENT YEAR DATA
P63 SORTED BY: SCOM,FUNC,SFUN,TID
(AMOUNTS IN THOUSANDS)

Unassigned to Committee		1985		1986		DIFFERENCE COL2 - COL1
		BA	OUTLAYS	BA	OUTLAYS	BA	OUTLAYS
Other general purpose fiscal assistance
Other Independent Agencies
District of Columbia
Subfunction 852 receipts
20 9990 8 1 852
	NEW:	-107,002	-107,002	-36,314	-36,314	70,688	70,688
	PRIOR:		0		0		0
	TOTAL:	-107,002	-107,002	-36,314	-36,314	70,688	70,688
NET INTEREST
Other interest
Legislative Branch
Library of Congress
Interest on investments in public debt securities
03 9990 8 1 908
	NEW:	-5,012	-5,012	-5,008	-5,008	4	4
	PRIOR:		0		0		0
	TOTAL:	-5,012	-5,012	-5,008	-5,008	4	4
Department of Commerce
Offsetting Receipts
Subfunction 908 receipts
13 9990 8 1 908
	NEW:	-5,959	-5,959	-1,160	-1,160	4,799	4,799
	PRIOR:		0		0		0
	TOTAL:	-5,959	-5,959	-1,160	-1,160	4,799	4,799
Department of the Interior
Offsetting Receipts
Interest, tribal funds
14 9990 8 7 908
	NEW:	-74,620	-74,620	-71,320	-71,320	3,300	3,300
	PRIOR:		0		0		0
	TOTAL:	-74,620	-74,620	-71,320	-71,320	3,300	3,300
Department of the Treasury
Department of the Treasury
Interest, Upper Colo. River Storage Project
14 9994 8 1 908
	NEW:	-16,745	-16,745	-16,590	-16,590	155	155
	PRIOR:		0		0		0
	TOTAL:	-16,745	-16,745	-16,590	-16,590	155	155
Offsetting Receipts
Intragovernmental interest
20 9992 8 1 908
	NEW:	-4,577,000	-4,577,000	-4,525,000	-4,525,000	52,000	52,000
	PRIOR:		0		0		0
	TOTAL:	-4,577,000	-4,577,000	-4,525,000	-4,525,000	52,000	52,000
Interest on advances to SBA
73 9997 8 1 908
	NEW:	-370,000	-370,000	-175,000	-175,000	195,000	195,000
	PRIOR:		0		0		0
	TOTAL:	-370,000	-370,000	-175,000	-175,000	195,000	195,000
Other Treasury Department
Interest on loans to individuals and private organizations
75 9990 8 1 908
	NEW:	-33,803	-33,803	-30,073	-30,073	3,730	3,730
	PRIOR:		0		0		0
	TOTAL:	-33,803	-33,803	-30,073	-30,073	3,730	3,730
COMMITTEE TOTAL.. XX Unassigned to Committee
	NEW:	-58,308,317	-58,308,317	-49,234,215	-49,234,215	9,074,102	9,074,102
	PRIOR:		0		0		0
	TOTAL:	-58,308,317	-58,308,317	-49,234,215	-49,234,215	9,074,102	9,074,102

(AMOUNTS IN THOUSANDS)

Senate Agriculture, Nutrition, and		1985		1986		DIFFERENCE COL2 - COL1
		BA	OUTLAYS	BA	OUTLAYS	BA	OUTLAYS
ENERGY
Energy supply
Federal Financing Bank Activities
Rural electrification and telephone revolving fund
20 4230 0 3 271
	NEW:	382,000	382,000	474,000	474,000	92,000	92,000
	PRIOR:		0		0		0
	TOTAL:	382,000	382,000	474,000	474,000	92,000	92,000
NATURAL RESOURCES AND ENVIRONMENT
Water resources
Department of Agriculture
Soil Conservation Service
Miscellaneous contributed funds (Water resources)
12 8210 0 7 301
	NEW:	600	201	621	208	21	7
	PRIOR:		3,625		399		-3,226
	TOTAL:	600	3,826	621	607	21	-3,219

CBO/BUDGET ANALYSIS DIV(MAR40R) CBO EST. OF PRES. WHERE BUDGET YEAR DATA
(UNIFIED BUDGET) IS GREATER THAN CURRENT YEAR DATA
P63 SORTED BY: SCOM,FUNC,SFUN,TID
(AMOUNTS IN THOUSANDS)

Senate Agriculture, Nutrition, and	1985		1986		DIFFERENCE COL2 - COL1
	BA	OUTLAYS	BA	OUTLAYS	BA	OUTLAYS
Conservation and land management
Forest Service
Operations and maintenance of quarters
12 5219 0 2 302
NEW:	5,300	4,240	5,700	4,560	400	320
PRIOR:		0		1,060		1,060
TOTAL:	5,300	4,240	5,700	5,620	400	1,380
AGRICULTURE
Farm income stabilization
Farmers Home Administration
Agricultural credit insurance fund
12 4140 0 3 351
NEW:	1,925,000	2,350,000	2,357,000	1,196,000	432,000	-1,154,000
PRIOR:		0		0		0
TOTAL:	1,925,000	2,350,000	2,357,000	1,196,000	432,000	-1,154,000
Agricultural research and services
Food Safety and Inspection Service
Expenses and refunds, inspection and grading of farm product
12 8137 0 7 352
NEW:	848	778	884	811	36	33
PRIOR:		70		70		0
TOTAL:	848	848	884	881	36	33
Agricultural Research Service
Miscellaneous contributed funds
12 8214 0 7 352
NEW:	2,000	1,132	2,084	1,180	84	48
PRIOR:		868		868		0
TOTAL:	2,000	2,000	2,084	2,048	84	48
Statistical Reporting Service
Miscellaneous contributed funds
12 8218 0 7 352
NEW:	275	110	288	115	13	5
PRIOR:		165		165		0
TOTAL:	275	275	288	280	13	5
Economic Research Service
Miscellaneous contributed funds
12 8227 0 7 352
NEW:	54	54	57	57	3	3
PRIOR:		0		0		0
TOTAL:	54	54	57	57	3	3
Office of International Cooperation and Development
Miscellaneous contributed funds
12 8232 0 7 352
NEW:	7,900	5,929	8,256	6,200	356	271
PRIOR:		1,971		1,971		0
TOTAL:	7,900	7,900	8,256	8,171	356	271
Animal and Plant Health Inspection Service
Miscellaneous trust funds
12 9971 0 7 352
NEW:	2,878	1,912	2,996	1,989	118	77
PRIOR:		617		966		349
TOTAL:	2,878	2,529	2,996	2,955	118	426
Agricultural Marketing Service
Miscellaneous trust funds
12 9972 0 7 352
NEW:	76,216	54,835	79,387	57,079	3,171	2,244
PRIOR:		20,547		21,381		834
TOTAL:	76,216	75,382	79,387	78,460	3,171	3,078
COMMUNITY AND REGIONAL DEVELOPMENT
Area and regional development
Farmers Home Administration
Rural development insurance fund
12 4155 0 3 452
NEW:	560,005	731,000	612,098	648,000	52,093	-83,000
PRIOR:		0		0		0
TOTAL:	560,005	731,000	612,098	648,000	52,093	-83,000
Rural Electrification Administration
Rural telephone bank
12 4231 0 3 452
NEW:	127,962	88,712	132,204	92,554	4,242	3,842
PRIOR:		0		0		0
TOTAL:	127,962	88,712	132,204	92,554	4,242	3,842
COMMITTEE TOTAL.. 64 Senate Agriculture, Nutrition, and Forestry Committee
NEW:	3,091,038	3,620,903	3,675,575	2,482,753	584,537	-1,138,150
PRIOR:		27,863		26,880		-983
TOTAL:	3,091,038	3,648,766	3,675,575	2,509,633	584,537	-1,139,133

CBO/BUDGET ANALYSIS DIV(MAR40R) CBO EST. OF PRES. WHERE BUDGET YEAR DATA
(UNIFIED BUDGET) IS GREATER THAN CURRENT YEAR DATA
P63 SORTED BY: SCOM,FUNC,SFUN,TID
(AMOUNTS IN THOUSANDS)

Senate Armed Services Committee		1985 BA	1985 OUTLAYS	1986 BA	1986 OUTLAYS	DIFFERENCE COL2 - COL1 BA	DIFFERENCE COL2 - COL1 OUTLAYS
NATIONAL DEFENSE
Department of Defense-Military
Department of Defense--Military
Trust Funds
Department of the Navy trust funds
17 9972 0 7 051
	NEW:	24,420	24,098	25,500	25,500	1,080	1,402
	PRIOR:		142		0		-142
	TOTAL:	24,420	24,240	25,500	25,500	1,080	1,260
Department of Defense--Military
Subfunction 051 receipts
17 9990 8 1 051
	NEW:	-93,600	-93,600	-87,800	-87,800	5,800	5,800
	PRIOR:		0		0		0
	TOTAL:	-93,600	-93,600	-87,800	-87,800	5,800	5,800
Interest on Loans to States
21 9994 8 1 051
	NEW:	-259,600	-259,600	-214,100	-214,100	45,500	45,500
	PRIOR:		0		0		0
	TOTAL:	-259,600	-259,600	-214,100	-214,100	45,500	45,500
Trust Funds
Department of the Air Force general gift fund
57 8928 0 7 051
	NEW:	60	0	100	100	40	100
	PRIOR:		50		0		-50
	TOTAL:	60	50	100	100	40	50
Department of Defense--Military
Interest on Loans to Defense Contractors
57 9993 8 1 051
	NEW:	-235,550	-235,550	-213,000	-213,000	22,550	22,550
	PRIOR:		0		0		0
	TOTAL:	-235,550	-235,550	-213,000	-213,000	22,550	22,550
Family Housing
Homeowners assistance fund, Defense
97 4090 0 3 051
	NEW:	600	0	750	600	150	600
	PRIOR:		1,700		0		-1,700
	TOTAL:	600	1,700	750	600	150	-1,100
Defense-related activities
Department of Defense--Civil
Military Retirement
Payment to military retirement fund
97 0040 0 1 054
	NEW:	9,551,300	9,551,300	10,054,100	10,054,100	502,800	502,800
	PRIOR:		0		0		0
	TOTAL:	9,551,300	9,551,300	10,054,100	10,054,100	502,800	502,800
INCOME SECURITY
Federal employee retiremnnt and disability
Military retirement fund
97 8097 0 7 602
	NEW:	27,693,300	15,834,300	30,546,100	17,653,100	2,852,800	1,818,800
	PRIOR:		0		0		0
	TOTAL:	27,693,300	15,834,300	30,546,100	17,653,100	2,852,800	1,818,800
VETERANS BENEFITS AND SERVICES
Veterans education, training, and rehabilitation
Education Benefits
Education benefits fund
97 8098 0 7 702
	NEW:	30,000	0	162,000	0	132,000	0
	PRIOR:		0		3,000		3,000
	TOTAL:	30,000	0	162,000	3,000	132,000	3,000
COMMITTEE TOTAL.. 66 Senate Armed Services Committee
	NEW:	36,710,930	24,820,948	40,273,650	27,218,500	3,562,720	2,397,552
	PRIOR:		1,892		3,000		1,108
	TOTAL:	36,710,930	24,822,840	40,273,650	27,221,500	3,562,720	2,398,660

(AMOUNTS IN THOUSANDS)

Senate Banking, Housing and Urban		1985 BA	1985 OUTLAYS	1986 BA	1986 OUTLAYS	DIFFERENCE COL2 - COL1 BA	DIFFERENCE COL2 - COL1 OUTLAYS
COMMERCE AND HOUSING CREDIT
Other advancement of commerce
Department of Housing and Urban Development
Housing Programs
Interstate land sales
86 5270 0 2 376
	NEW:	1,200	1,200	1,246	1,246	46	46
	PRIOR:		0		0		0
	TOTAL:	1,200	1,200	1,246	1,246	46	46

CBO/BUDGET ANALYSIS DIV(MAR40R.) CBO EST. OF PRES. WHERE BUDGET YEAR DATA
(UNIFIED BUDGET) IS GREATER THAN CURRENT YEAR DATA
P63 SORTED BY: SCOM,FUNC,SFUN,TID
(AMOUNTS IN THOUSANDS)

Senate Banking, Housing and Urban		1985		1986		DIFFERENCE COL2 - COL1
		BA	OUTLAYS	BA	OUTLAYS	BA	OUTLAYS
Manufactured home inspection and monitoring
86 5271 0 2 376
	NEW:	5,952	3,831	6,220	4,006	268	175
	PRIOR:		2,121		2,121		0
	TOTAL:	5,952	5,952	6,220	6,127	268	175
COMMUNITY AND REGIONAL DEVELOPMENT
Community development
Department of the Treasury
Federal Financing Bank Activities
Community development grants, FFB (loan guarantee originatio
20 0162 0 1 451
	NEW:	113,000	37,000	116,000	28,000	3,000	-9,000
	PRIOR:		0		0		0
	TOTAL:	113,000	37,000	116,000	28,000	3,000	-9,000
Other Independent Agencies
Federal Emergency Management Agency
National insurance development fund
58 4235 0 3 451
	NEW:	10,688	0	18,255	0	7,567	0
	PRIOR:		11,086		16,738		5,652
	TOTAL:	10,688	11,086	18,255	16,738	7,567	5,652
COMMITTEE TOTAL.. 68 Senate Banking, Housing and Urban Affairs Committee
	NEW:	130,840	42,031	141,721	33,252	10,881	-8,779
	PRIOR:		13,207		18,859		5,652
	TOTAL:	130,840	55,238	141,721	52,111	10,881	-3,127

(AMOUNTS IN THOUSANDS)

Senate Commerce, Science, and Tran		1985		1986		DIFFERENCE COL2 - COL1
		BA	OUTLAYS	BA	OUTLAYS	BA	OUTLAYS
COMMERCE AND HOUSING CREDIT
Other advancement of commerce
Department of Commerce
Economic and Statistical Analysis
Information products and services
13 8546 0 7 376
	NEW:	31,000	27,515	32,364	28,739	1,364	1,224
	PRIOR:		3,485		3,485		0
	TOTAL:	31,000	31,000	32,364	32,224	1,364	1,224
GENERAL PURPOSE FISCAL ASSISTANCE
Other general purpose fiscal assistance
Department of Defense--Civil
Corps of Engineers--Civil
Permanent appropriations (Other general purpose fiscal assis
96 9921 0 2 852
	NEW:	5,900	0	6,160	0	260	0
	PRIOR:		5,700		5,900		200
	TOTAL:	5,900	5,700	6,160	5,900	260	200
COMMITTEE TOTAL.. 72 Senate Commerce, Science, and Transportation Committee
	NEW:	36,900	27,515	38,524	28,739	1,624	1,224
	PRIOR:		9,185		9,385		200
	TOTAL:	36,900	36,700	38,524	38,124	1,624	1,424

(AMOUNTS IN THOUSANDS)

Senate Energy and Natural Resource		1985		1986		DIFFERENCE COL2 - COL1
		BA	OUTLAYS	BA	OUTLAYS	BA	OUTLAYS
NATURAL RESOURCES AND ENVIRONMENT
Water resources
Department of the Interior
Bureau of Reclamation
Reclamation trust funds
14 8070 0 7 301
	NEW:	6,880	5,944	16,041	13,859	9,161	7,915
	PRIOR:		2,093		2,986		893
	TOTAL:	6,880	8,037	16,041	16,845	9,161	8,808
Recreational resources
National Park Service
Miscellaneous permanent appropriations
14 9924 0 2 303
	NEW:	1,020	732	1,035	743	15	11
	PRIOR:		570		288		-282
	TOTAL:	1,020	1,302	1,035	1,031	15	-271
Miscellaneous trust funds
14 9972 0 7 303
	NEW:	16,059	11,165	16,761	11,649	702	484
	PRIOR:		2,100		3,541		1,441
	TOTAL:	16,059	13,265	16,761	15,190	702	1,925

CBO/BUDGET ANALYSIS DIV(MAR40R)
(UNIFIED BUDGET)
P63
SORTED BY: SCOM,FUNC,SFUN,TID
CBO EST. OF PRES. WHERE BUDGET YEAR DATA IS GREATER THAN CURRENT YEAR DATA
(AMOUNTS IN THOUSANDS)

Senate Energy and Natural Resource		1985 BA	1985 OUTLAYS	1986 BA	1986 OUTLAYS	DIFFERENCE COL2 - COL1 BA	DIFFERENCE COL2 - COL1 OUTLAYS
GENERAL PURPOSE FISCAL ASSISTANCE
Other general purpose fiscal assistance.
Territorial and International Affairs
Payments to the United States territories, fiscal assistance
14 0418 0 1 852
	NEW:	62,910	62,910	65,678	65,678	2,768	2,768
	PRIOR:		0		0		0
	TOTAL:	62,910	62,910	65,678	65,678	2,768	2,768
Bureau of Reclamation
Colorado River dam fund, Boulder Canyon project
14 5656 0 2 852
	NEW:	2,100	2,100	31,767	24,293	29,667	22,193
	PRIOR:		0		8,457		8,457
	TOTAL:	2,100	2,100	31,767	32,750	29,667	30,650
Department of the Treasury
United States Customs Service
Miscellaneous permanent appropriations
20 9922 0 2 852
	NEW:	80,527	76,259	84,005	79,553	3,478	3,294
	PRIOR:		4,017		4,268		251
	TOTAL:	80,527	80,276	84,005	83,821	3,478	3,545
COMMITTEE TOTAL.. 74 Senate Energy and Natural Resources Committee
	NEW:	169,496	159,110	215,287	195,775	45,791	36,665
	PRIOR:		8,780		19,540		10,760
	TOTAL:	169,496	167,890	215,287	215,315	45,791	47,425

(AMOUNTS IN THOUSANDS)

Senate Environment and Public Work		1985 BA	1985 OUTLAYS	1986 BA	1986 OUTLAYS	DIFFERENCE COL2 - COL1 BA	DIFFERENCE COL2 - COL1 OUTLAYS
NATURAL RESOURCES AND ENVIRONMENT
Water resources
Department of Defense--Civil
Corps of Engineers--Civil
Rivers and harbors contributed funds
96 8862 0 7 301
	NEW:	52,000	19,815	291,000	160,344	239,000	140,529
	PRIOR:		32,185		32,185		0
	TOTAL:	52,000	52,000	291,000	192,529	239,000	140,529
Permanent appropriations (Water resources)
96 9921 0 2 301
	NEW:	2,100	48	2,193	50	93	2
	PRIOR:		2,252		2,052		-200
	TOTAL:	2,100	2,300	2,193	2,102	93	-198
Recreational resources
Department of the Interior
United States Fish and Wildlife Service
Operations and maintenance of quarters
14 5047 0 2 303
	NEW:	20,915	18,824	21,084	18,976	169	152
	PRIOR:		0		2,091		2,091
	TOTAL:	20,915	18,824	21,084	21,067	169	2,243
Contributed funds
14 8216 0 7 303
	NEW:	3,838	2,686	4,011	2,808	173	122
	PRIOR:		734		1,152		418
	TOTAL:	3,838	3,420	4,011	3,960	173	540
Department of Defense--Civil
Forest and Wildlife Conservation, Military Reservations
Wildlife conservation
97 5095 0 2 303
	NEW:	1,650	1,500	1,675	1,523	25	23
	PRIOR:		269		148		-121
	TOTAL:	1,650	1,769	1,675	1,671	25	-98
COMMUNITY AND REGIONAL DEVELOPMENT
Community development
Other Independent Agencies
Pennsylvania Avenue Development Corporation
Gifts and donations
42 8112 0 7 451
	NEW:	0	0	1	1	1	1
	PRIOR:		119		0		-119
	TOTAL:	0	119	1	1	1	-118
COMMITTEE TOTAL.. 76 Senate Environment and Public Works Committee
	NEW:	80,503	42,873	319,964	183,702	239,461	140,829
	PRIOR:		35,559		37,628		2,069
	TOTAL:	80,503	78,432	319,964	221,330	239,461	142,898

CBO/BUDGET ANALYSIS DIV(MAR40R) CBO EST. OF PRES. WHERE BUDGET YEAR DATA
(UNIFIED BUDGET) IS GREATER THAN CURRENT YEAR DATA
P63 SORTED BY: SCOM,FUNC,SFUN,TID
(AMOUNTS IN THOUSANDS)

Senate Finance Committee		1985 BA	1985 OUTLAYS	1986 BA	1986 OUTLAYS	DIFFERENCE COL2 - COL1 BA	DIFFERENCE COL2 - COL1 OUTLAYS
MEDICARE
Medicare
Department of Health and Human Services
Health Care Financing Administration
Federal supplementary medical insurance trust fund
20 8004 0 7 572
	NEW:	24,384,000	14,722,076	25,258,000	25,711,000	874,000	10,988,924
	PRIOR:		7,818,924		-662,000		-8,480,924
	TOTAL:	24,384,000	22,541,000	25,258,000	25,049,000	874,000	2,508,000
INCOME SECURITY
General retirement and disability insurance (excluding socia
Other Independent Agencies
Railroad Retirement Board
Railroad social security equivalent benefit account
60 8010 0 7 601
	NEW:	5,761,000	5,303,956	5,896,000	5,589,776	135,000	285,820
	PRIOR:		293,000		153,044		-139,956
	TOTAL:	5,761,000	5,596,956	5,896,000	5,742,820	135,000	145,864
Federal employee retirement and disability
Legislative Branch
United States Tax Court
Tax Court judges survivors annuity fund
23 8115 0 7 602
	NEW:	251	31	261	30	10	-1
	PRIOR:		0		0		0
	TOTAL:	251	31	261	30	10	-1
Other income security
Department of the Treasury
Internal Revenue Service
Payment where credit exceeds liability for tax
20 0906 0 1 609
	NEW:	1,116,000	1,116,000	1,322,000	1,322,000	206,000	206,000
	PRIOR:		0		0		0
	TOTAL:	1,116,000	1,116,000	1,322,000	1,322,000	206,000	206,000
GENERAL GOVERNMENT
Central fiscal operations
United States Customs Service
Refunds, transfers and expenses, unclaimed, abandoned and se
20 8789 0 7 803
	NEW:	7,322	7,322	7,988	7,988	666	666
	PRIOR:		0		0		0
	TOTAL:	7,322	7,322	7,988	7,988	666	666
Office of the Secretary
Gifts and bequests
20 8790 0 7 803
	NEW:	1,000	1,000	2,000	2,000	1,000	1,000
	PRIOR:		0		0		0
	TOTAL:	1,000	1,000	2,000	2,000	1,000	1,000
NET INTEREST
Interest on the public debt
Interest on the Public Debt
Interest on the public debt
20 0550 0 1 901
	NEW:	180,931,000	180,931,000	204,416,000	204,416,000	23,485,000	23,485,000
	PRIOR:		0		0		0
	TOTAL:	180,931,000	180,931,000	204,416,000	204,416,000	23,485,000	23,485,000
COMMITTEE TOTAL.. 78 Senate Finance Committee
	NEW:	212,200,573	202,081,385	236,902,249	237,048,794	24,701,676	34,967,409
	PRIOR:		8,111,924		-508,956		-8,620,880
	TOTAL:	212,200,573	210,193,309	236,902,249	236,539,838	24,701,676	26,346,529

(AMOUNTS IN THOUSANDS)

Senate Foreign Relations Committee		1985 BA	1985 OUTLAYS	1986 BA	1986 OUTLAYS	DIFFERENCE COL2 - COL1 BA	DIFFERENCE COL2 - COL1 OUTLAYS
INTERNATIONAL AFFAIRS
Foreign economic and financial assistance
Funds Appropriated to the President
Peace Corps
Peace Corps miscellaneous trust funds
11 9972 0 7 151
	NEW:	550	450	600	600	50	150
	PRIOR:		0		0		0
	TOTAL:	550	450	600	600	50	150

CBO/BUDGET ANALYSIS DIV(MAR40R)
(UNIFIED BUDGET)
P63
CBO EST. OF PRES. WHERE BUDGET YEAR DATA IS GREATER THAN CURRENT YEAR DATA
SORTED BY: SCOM,FUNC,SFUN,TID
(AMOUNTS IN THOUSANDS)

Senate Foreign Relations Committee		1985 BA	1985 OUTLAYS	1986 BA	1986 OUTLAYS	DIFFERENCE COL2 - COL1 BA	DIFFERENCE COL2 - COL1 OUTLAYS
International financial programs
Military Sales Programs
Foreign military sales trust fund
11 8242 0 7 155
	NEW:	12,834,000	1,515,000	12,978,000	1,586,000	144,000	71,000
	PRIOR:		10,385,000		10,414,000		29,000
	TOTAL:	12,834,000	11,900,000	12,978,000	12,000,000	144,000	100,000
COMMITTEE TOTAL.. 80	Senate Foreign Relations Committee
	NEW:	12,834,550	1,515,450	12,978,600	1,586,600	144,050	71,150
	PRIOR:		10,385,000		10,414,000		29,000
	TOTAL:	12,834,550	11,900,450	12,978,600	12,000,600	144,050	100,150

(AMOUNTS IN THOUSANDS)

Senate Governmental Affairs Commit		1985 BA	1985 OUTLAYS	1986 BA	1986 OUTLAYS	DIFFERENCE COL2 - COL1 BA	DIFFERENCE COL2 - COL1 OUTLAYS
COMMERCE AND HOUSING CREDIT
Postal Service
Other Independent Agencies
Postal Service
Postal Service
18 4020 0 3 372
	NEW:	1,402,824	0	1,787,389	212,591	384,565	212,591
	PRIOR:		320,161		965,470		645,309
	TOTAL:	1,402,824	320,161	1,787,389	1,178,061	384,565	857,900
INCOME SECURITY
Federal employee retirement and disability
Office of Personnel Management
Office of Personnel Management
Civil service retirement and disability fund
24 8135 0 7 602
	NEW:	39,430,000	23,070,000	41,204,000	22,690,204	1,774,000	-379,796
	PRIOR:		0		1,197,796		1,197,796
	TOTAL:	39,430,000	23,070,000	41,204,000	23,888,000	1,774,000	818,000
GENERAL GOVERNMENT
General property and records management
Other Independent Agencies
National Archives and Records Administration
National archives gift fund
88 8127 0 7 804
	NEW:	184	0	335	0	151	0
	PRIOR:		370		430		60
	TOTAL:	184	370	335	430	151	60
COMMITTEE TOTAL.. 82	Senate Governmental Affairs Committee
	NEW:	40,833,008	23,070,000	42,991,724	22,902,795	2,158,716	-167,205
	PRIOR:		320,531		2,163,696		1,843,165
	TOTAL:	40,833,008	23,390,531	42,991,724	25,066,491	2,158,716	1,675,960

(AMOUNTS IN THOUSANDS)

Senate Judiciary Committee		1985 BA	1985 OUTLAYS	1986 BA	1986 OUTLAYS	DIFFERENCE COL2 - COL1 BA	DIFFERENCE COL2 - COL1 OUTLAYS
INCOME SECURITY
Federal employee retirement and disability
The Judiciary
Judiciary Trust Funds
Judicial survivors' annuities fund
10 8110 0 7 602
	NEW:	14,306	3,801	15,681	3,956	1,375	155
	PRIOR:		0		0		0
	TOTAL:	14,306	3,801	15,681	3,956	1,375	155
ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE
Criminal justice assistance
Department of Justice
Office of Justice Programs
Crime victims fund
15 5041 0 2 754
	NEW:	70,000	15,000	100,000	60,000	30,000	45,000
	PRIOR:		0		0		0
	TOTAL:	70,000	15,000	100,000	60,000	30,000	45,000
COMMITTEE TOTAL.. 86	Senate Judiciary Committee
	NEW:	84,306	18,801	115,681	63,956	31,375	45,155
	PRIOR:		0		0		0
	TOTAL:	84,306	18,801	115,681	63,956	31,375	45,155

CBO/BUDGET ANALYSIS DIV(MAR40R) CBO EST. OF PRES. WHERE BUDGET YEAR DATA
(UNIFIED BUDGET) IS GREATER THAN CURRENT YEAR DATA
P63 SORTED BY: SCOM,FUNC,SFUN,TID
(AMOUNTS IN THOUSANDS)

Senate Labor and Human Resources C		1985		1986		DIFFERENCE COL2 - COL1
		BA	OUTLAYS	BA	OUTLAYS	BA	OUTLAYS
INCOME SECURITY
General retirement and disability insurance (excluding socia
Department of Labor
Employment Standards Administration
Special workers' compensation expenses
16 9971 0 7 601
	NEW:	58,000	24,363	68,000	29,363	10,000	5,000
	PRIOR:		28,637		33,637		5,000
	TOTAL:	58,000	53,000	68,000	63,000	10,000	10,000
NET INTEREST
Other interest
Department of Education
Department of Education
Other interest to promote education of the blind
91 9990 8 7 908
	NEW:	-10	-10	0	0	10	10
	PRIOR:		0		0		0
	TOTAL:	-10	-10	0	0	10	10
COMMITTEE TOTAL.. 87	Senate Labor and Human Resources Committee
	NEW:	57,990	24,353	68,000	29,363	10,010	5,010
	PRIOR:		28,637		33,637		5,000
	TOTAL:	57,990	52,990	68,000	63,000	10,010	10,010

(AMOUNTS IN THOUSANDS)

Senate Rules and Administration Co		1985		1986		DIFFERENCE COL2 - COL1
		BA	OUTLAYS	BA	OUTLAYS	BA	OUTLAYS
EDUCATION, TRAINING, EMPLOYMENT, AND SOCIAL SERVICES
Research and general education aids
Legislative Branch
Library of Congress
Gift and trust fund accounts
03 9971 0 7 503
	NEW:	7,378	0	7,628	0	250	0
	PRIOR:		7,299		7,830		531
	TOTAL:	7,378	7,299	7,628	7,830	250	531
COMMITTEE TOTAL.. 88	Senate Rules and Administration Committee
	NEW:	7,378	0	7,628	0	250	0
	PRIOR:		7,299		7,830		531
	TOTAL:	7,378	7,299	7,628	7,830	250	531

(AMOUNTS IN THOUSANDS)

Senate Veterans Affairs Committee		1985		1986		DIFFERENCE COL2 - COL1
		BA	OUTLAYS	BA	OUTLAYS	BA	OUTLAYS
VETERANS BENEFITS AND SERVICES
Income security for veterans
Veterans Administration
Veterans Administration
National service life insurance fund
36 8132 0 7 701
	NEW:	1,248,900	0	1,297,200	0	48,300	0
	PRIOR:		981,600		1,042,700		61,100
	TOTAL:	1,248,900	981,600	1,297,200	1,042,700	48,300	61,100
Other veterans benefits and services
General post fund, national homes
36 8180 0 7 705
	NEW:	14,000	11,458	15,000	12,458	1,000	1,000
	PRIOR:		1,042		1,042		0
	TOTAL:	14,000	12,500	15,000	13,500	1,000	1,000
COMMITTEE TOTAL.. 90	Senate Veterans Affairs Committee
	NEW:	1,262,900	11,458	1,312,200	12,458	49,300	1,000
	PRIOR:		982,642		1,043,742		61,100
	TOTAL:	1,262,900	994,100	1,312,200	1,056,200	49,300	62,100

CBO/BUDGET ANALYSIS DIV(MAR40R) CBO EST. OF PRES. WHERE BUDGET YEAR DATA
(UNIFIED BUDGET) IS GREATER THAN CURRENT YEAR DATA
P63 SORTED BY: SCOM,FUNC,SFUN,TID
(AMOUNTS IN THOUSANDS)

Temporary Select Committee on Indi	1985		1986		DIFFERENCE COL2 - COL1
	BA	OUTLAYS	BA	OUTLAYS	BA	OUTLAYS
COMMUNITY AND REGIONAL DEVELOPMENT
Area and regional development
Department of the Interior
Bureau of Indian Affairs
Miscellaneous permanent appropriations (Area and regional de
14 9925 0 2 452
NEW:	39,633	19,817	40,195	20,098	562	281
PRIOR:		22,050		19,785		-2,265
TOTAL:	39,633	41,867	40,195	39,883	562	-1,984
COMMITTEE TOTAL.. 92 Temporary Select Committee on Indian Affairs
NEW:	39,633	19,817	40,195	20,098	562	281
PRIOR:		22,050		19,785		-2,265
TOTAL:	39,633	41,867	40,195	39,883	562	-1,984

(AMOUNTS IN THOUSANDS)

Senate Small Business Committee	1985		1986		DIFFERENCE COL2 - COL1
	BA	OUTLAYS	BA	OUTLAYS	BA	OUTLAYS
COMMERCE AND HOUSING CREDIT
Other advancement of commerce
Department of the Treasury
Federal Financing Bank Activities
Section 503 Loan Guarentees, FFB
20 9933 0 3 376
NEW:	291,000	285,000	304,000	-640,000	13,000	-925,000
PRIOR:		0		0		0
TOTAL:	291,000	285,000	304,000	-640,000	13,000	-925,000
COMMITTEE TOTAL.. 94 Senate Small Business Committee
NEW:	291,000	285,000	304,000	-640,000	13,000	-925,000
PRIOR:		0		0		0
TOTAL:	291,000	285,000	304,000	-640,000	13,000	-925,000

(AMOUNTS IN THOUSANDS)

UNIFIED BUDGET TOTAL	1985		1986		DIFFERENCE COL2 - COL1
	BA	OUTLAYS	BA	OUTLAYS	BA	OUTLAYS
UNIFIED BUDGET TOTAL
NEW:	924,486,168	706,249,196	1,042,794,981	807,983,247	118,308,813	101,734,051
PRIOR:		142,476,854		133,666,440		-8,810,414
TOTAL:	924,486,168	848,726,050	1,042,794,961	941,649,687	118,308,813	92,923,637

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I yield myself time off the resolution.

ORDER OF PROCEDURE

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to vote on amendment No. 44 at 6:05 p.m. tonight without intervening debate, motion, appeal, point of order, or other action.

Having made their request, before the Chair rules, I indicates then to the distinguished minority leader if there be no further action on this measure tonight that I would like a short period of time for routine morning business, if there is some, say 15 minutes, with statements therein limited to 5 minutes each; then, plan to come in at 9:30 in the morning.

As I understand, there is a special order for the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. PROXMIRE] in routine morning business for not to exceed 15 minutes; then, start on Senate Concurrent Resolution 32 at 10 a.m.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, reserving the right to object, I will not object. This request has been discussed with Senators on my side, several of them with whom I have personally discussed it, and with whom the distinguished Senator from Florida [Mr. CHILES] and I have discussed. So I will not interpose the objection.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the majority leader? Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. DOLE. I also indicate to my colleagues that this will be the last rollcall vote of the day. I will ask following the vote and the motion to reconsider, and the motion to table, that we have a period for routine morning business not to exceed 15 minutes.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, will the distinguished majority leader ask unanimous consent that any Senator who wishes to do so may include in the RECORD prior to the vote a statement as if read?

Mr. DOLE. That is an excellent idea. I have a couple of those.

Mr. President, I make that unanimous-consent request.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Under the previous order, the hour of 6:05 p.m. having arrived, the question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Kansas, Mr. DOLE. On this question, the yeas and nays have been ordered, and the clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk called the roll.

Mr. SIMPSON. I announce that the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. EAST] is absent due to illness.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Are there any other Senators in the Chamber who wish to vote?

The result was announced—yeas 50, nays 49, as follows:

[Rollcall Vote No. 34 Leg.]

YEAS—50

Abdnor	Gramm	Packwood
Andrews	Grassley	Pressler
Armstrong	Hatch	Quayle
Boschwitz	Hatfield	Roth
Chafee	Hawkins	Rudman
Cochran	Hecht	Simpson
Cohen	Heinz	Specter
D'Amato	Helms	Stafford
Danforth	Humphrey	Stevens
Denton	Kassebaum	Symms
Dole	Laxalt	Thurmond
Domenici	Lugar	Trible
Durenberger	Mattingly	Wallop
Evans	McClure	Warner
Garn	McConnell	Weicker
Goldwater	Murkowski	Wilson
Gorton	Nickles

NAYS—49

Baucus	Glenn	Melcher
Bentsen	Gore	Metzenbaum
Biden	Harkin	Mitchell
Bingaman	Hart	Moynihan
Boren	Heflin	Nunn
Bradley	Hollings	Pell
Bumpers	Inouye	Proxmire
Burdick	Johnston	Pryor
Byrd	Kasten	Riegle
Chiles	Kennedy	Rockefeller
Cranston	Kerry	Sarbanes
DeConcini	Lautenberg	Sasser
Dixon	Leahy	Simon
Dodd	Levin	Stennis
Eagleton	Long	Zorinsky
Exon	Mathias
Ford	Matsunaga

NOT VOTING—1

East

So the amendment (No. 44) was agreed to.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote.

Mr. DOMENICI. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

(The following occurred earlier:)

Mr. BYRD. Will the majority leader yield for a unanimous-consent request concerning another matter which I discussed with him?

Mr. DOLE. I am happy to yield to the distinguished minority leader.

DESIGNATION OF MAY 7, 1985, AS VIETNAM VETERANS RECOGNITION DAY

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that a resolution which I will introduce before the close of business today, which would designate May 7, 1985, as Vietnam Veterans Recognition Day remain at the desk until further disposition hopefully on tomorrow, and that it appear printed in the RECORD following the vote on the matter concerning which Mr. DOLE has now presented a request.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the minority leader? Hearing none, it is so ordered.

VIETNAM VETERANS RECOGNITION DAY

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I am introducing a resolution today which is long overdue and is a symbol of my concern that our Nation's Vietnam veterans be afforded the recognition they are due for their patriotic service.

Next Tuesday, May 7, 1985, marks the 10th anniversary of the official end of America's involvement in the conflict in Vietnam. Some 3.4 million American men and women served in the Vietnam theater during that long war—the longest conflict this Nation has been involved in since we gained our independence. More than 57,000 Americans lost their lives there, and an additional 2,400 Americans are still listed as missing in action in Southwest Asia. Some 300,000 were wounded and some 75,000 have incurred permanent physical disabilities as a result of their service. Many more thousands still suffer psychological harm resulting from their experiences in Vietnam.

Regardless of the ultimate verdict of history about U.S. involvement in that war, the service that patriotic Americans performed is deserving of their country's recognition.

Mr. President, the Nation is now beginning to review in a more dispassionate and even-handed manner the history of our involvement in the Vietnam conflict. We are still learning the lessons of that conflict. For too long we have taken the painless road of avoiding that history. It is a healthy sign, I believe, that there has been a recent upsurge in commentary and analysis of our role in Vietnam. If we cannot examine our past, then we will be unable to chart our future with wisdom.

It is, then, appropriate that we now take steps to honor our veterans, and the memory of those who did not return from Vietnam. This resolution would designate next Tuesday, May 7, as "Vietnam Veterans Recognition Day." It is a modest measure, but an essential step in the healing process which is so important for our country.

The text of the joint resolution introduced by Mr. BYRD, for himself, Mr. CRANSTON, Mr. LEAHY, Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Mr. EXON, Mr. DIXON, Mr. NUNN, and Mr. HOLLINGS, follows:

S.J. RES. 128

Whereas over 3 million American fighting men and women who served in the Vietnam theatre for over a decade acquitted themselves in the highest traditions of American service personnel;

Whereas more than 57,000 Americans lost their lives there, and an additional 2,400 Americans are still listed as missing in action in Southeast Asia.

Whereas thousands of Vietnam veterans still suffer physically and psychologically from the effects of the war, including many who are permanently disabled;

Whereas regardless of the ultimate verdict of history about United States involvement in that war, the service that patriotic Americans performed in the Vietnam theatre is deserving of continued and reemphasized grateful recognition;

Whereas the nation is now beginning to review in a more dispassionate and even-handed manner the history of our involvement in the Vietnam conflict;

Whereas for too long the nation failed to honor the service of and respond appropriately to the needs of Vietnam veterans and was instead anxious to place the Vietnam experience behind it;

Whereas May 7, 1985 marks the tenth anniversary of the official end of America's involvement in the conflict in Vietnam:

Now, therefore, be it Resolved by the Senate and the House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That May 7, 1985 is designated "Vietnam Veterans Recognition Day" and the President is authorized and requested to issue a proclamation calling upon the people of the United States to observe such a day with appropriate activities.

(Conclusion of earlier proceedings.)

ROUTINE MORNING BUSINESS

Mr. DOLE. I ask unanimous consent that there be a period for routine morning business not to extend beyond 15 minutes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

MESSAGES FROM THE PRESIDENT

Messages from the President of the United States were communicated to the Senate by Mr. Saunders, one of his secretaries.

EXECUTIVE MESSAGES REFERRED

As in executive session, the Acting President pro tempore laid before the Senate messages from the President of the United States submitting sundry nominations which were referred to the appropriate committees.

(The nominations received today are printed at the end of the Senate proceedings.)

ANNUAL REPORT OF THE NATIONAL SCIENCE FOUNDATION—MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT—PM 41

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States, together with an accompanying report; which was referred to the Committee on Labor and Human Resources:

To the Congress of the United States:

I am pleased to send to you the annual report of the National Science Foundation for Fiscal Year 1984. This report describes research supported by the Foundation in the mathematical, physical, biological, social, behavioral, and information sciences; in engineering; and in education in those fields.

Achievements such as the ones described in this report are the basis for much of our Nation's strength—its economic growth, military security, and the overall well-being of our people.

We face challenges in science, engineering, and technology, but I am confident about our ability to meet those challenges. The National Science Foundation has been and will remain a key part of the national effort to keep vital our great capabilities in research and productivity and to stay ahead of world competition through innovation and new discoveries.

RONALD REAGAN,

THE WHITE HOUSE, April 30, 1985.

REPORT ON U.S. GOVERNMENT ACTIONS TO SECURE THE RETURN OF ANY SERVICEMEN STILL HELD CAPTIVE IN SOUTHEAST ASIA—MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT—PM 42

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States, together with an accompanying report; which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations:

To the Congress of the United States:

In accordance with Section 1525 of the Department of Defense Authorization Act of 1985, I am submitting the attached report detailing actions taken by the United States Government in pursuit of our national goal of returning any servicemen who may still be held captive in Southeast Asia; the fullest possible accounting of those still missing; and the repatriation of all recoverable remains of those who died serving our Nation.

In doing so, I would like to reemphasize my personal dedication to this great national effort and my confidence that the actions of those involved throughout the Executive branch of Government in the resolution of this issue reflect this same dedication. In this effort, there can be no partisan or parochial views or any special interests, but only the interest of the entire American people to see to it that all of us do our duty toward those who served this Nation so well in time of war and their families who look to us to help secure the answers they so rightfully seek and deserve.

RONALD REAGAN.

THE WHITE HOUSE, April 30, 1985.

EXECUTIVE AND OTHER COMMUNICATIONS

The following communications were laid before the Senate, together with accompanying papers, reports, and documents, which were referred as indicated:

EC-980. A communication from the chairman of the National Advisory Council on Bilingual Education transmitting, pursuant to law, the ninth annual report of the Council on Bilingual Education in the United States; to the Committee on Labor and Human Resources.

EC-981. A communication from the National Advisory Council on Vocational Eductation transmitting, pursuant to law, the Council's 1984 annual report; to the Committee on Labor and Human Resources.

EC-982. A communication from the Executive Director of the Intergovernmental Advisory Council on Education transmitting, pursuant to law, the Council's 1984 annual report; to the Committee on Labor and Human Resources.

EC-983. A communication from the presiding officer of the Advisory Council on Education Statistics transmitting, pursuant to law, the Council's 1984 annual report; to the Committee on Labor and Human Resources.

EC-984. A communication from the chairman of the National Advisory Council on Continuing Education transmitting, pursuant to law, the Council's 1984 annual report; to the Committee on Labor and Human Resources.

EC-985. A communication from the Assistant Secretary of Education transmitting, pursuant to law, the 1984 Department of Education annual report; to the Committee on Labor and Human Resources.

EC-986. A communication from the Under Secretary of Labor transmitting, pursuant to law, a report on experimental projects under the Older Americans Act; to the Committee on Labor and Human Resources.

EC-987. A communication from the Assistant Secretary of Education transmitting, pursuant to law, the 1984 annual report of the Asbestos Hazards School Safety Task Force; to the Committee on Labor and Human Resources.

EC-988. A communication from the Administrator of the Veterans' Administration transmitting a draft of proposed legislation to revise eligibility for VA medical care; to the Committee on Veterans Affairs.

EC-989. A communication from the Comptroller General of the United States transmitting, pursuant to law, a report entitled "Overview and Perspectives on the Food Stamp Program"; to the Committee on Agriculture, Nutrition, and Forestry.

EC-990. A communication from the Comptroller General of the United States transmitting, pursuant to law, a report entitled "Examination of the Panama Canal Commission's Financial Statements for the Years Ended September 30, 1983 and 1982"; to the Committee on Armed Services.

EC-991. A communication from the Acting General Counsel of the Treasury transmitting a draft of proposed legislation authorizing appropriations for the U.S. Mint for fiscal years 1986 and 1987; to the Committee on Banking, Housing, and Urban Affairs.

EC-992. A communication from the Acting General Counsel of the Treasury transmitting a draft of proposed legislation to authorize printing the back side of U.S. currency by a method other than the intaglio process; to the Committee on Banking, Housing, and Urban Affairs.

EC-993. A communication from the President and Chairman of the Export-Import Bank of the United States transmitting, pursuant to law, a report on certain transactions involving exports to Mexico; to the Committee on Banking, Housing, and Urban Affairs.

EC-994. A communication from the Secretary of Commerce transmitting a draft of proposed legislation to amend the Saltonstall-Kennedy Fund Act to allow expenditure of funds for marine fishery resource programs; to the Committee on Commerce, Science, and Transportation.

EC-995. A communication from the Secretary General of the U.S. Olympic Committee transmitting, pursuant to law, the 1984 Olympic Committee financial statement; to the Committee on Commerce, Science, and Transportation.

EC-996. A communication from the Acting Deputy Associate Director of the Minerals Management Service transmitting, pursuant to law, a report on 33 proposed refunds of excess royalty payments to certain corporations; to the Committee on Energy and Natural Resources.

EC-997. A communication from the Acting Deputy Associate Director of the Minerals Management Service transmitting, pursuant to law, a report on five proposed refunds of excess royalty payments to certain corporations; to the Committee on Energy and Natural Resources.

EC-998. A communication from the Secretary of the Interior transmitting, pursuant to law, the 1984 report on Outer Continental Shelf Oil and Gas Leasing and Production; to the Committee on Energy and Natural Resources.

EC-999. A communication from the Secretary of Commerce transmitting a draft of proposed legislation to increase the authority of the Secretary of Commerce to collect on loans under the Public Works and Economic Development Act of 1965 and the Trade Act of 1974; to the Committee on Environment and Public Works.

EC-1000. A communication from the Chairman of the Railroad Retirement Board transmitting a draft of proposed legislation to conform the Federal income tax treatment of rail industry pensions to that of private pensions; to the Committee on Finance.

EC-1001. A communication from the Secretary of the Railroad Retirement Board transmitting, pursuant to law, a report on the computer matching program for VA Compensation and Railroad Retirement and Survivor Benefit Records; to the Committee on Governmental Affairs.

EC-1002. A communication from the Comptroller General of the United States transmitting, pursuant to law, a report on the Office of Personnel Management Activities under the Civil Service Reform Act, fiscal year 1984; to the Committee on Governmental Affairs.

EC-1003. A communication from the Director of the Administrative Office of the U.S. Courts transmitting a draft of proposed legislation to increase compensation of attorneys providing representation under the Criminal Justice Act; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

EC-1004. A communication from the Secretary of Health and Human Services transmitting a draft of proposed legislation to amend the Federal Food, Drug, and Cosmetic Act; to the Committee on Labor and Human Resources.

EC-1005. A communication from the Deputy Secretary of Defense transmitting, pursuant to law, a report on three violations of law involving expenditure of funds in excess of those appropriated or in advance of appropriation; to the Committee on Appropriations.

EC-1006. A communication from the Deputy Secretary of Defense transmitting, pursuant to law, a report on three violations of law involving overobligation of appropriated funds; to the Committee on Appropriations.

EC-1007. A communication from the Deputy Secretary of Defense transmitting, pursuant to law, a report on four violations of law involving the overobligation of appropriated funds; to the Committee on Armed Services.

EC-1008. A communication from the General Counsel of the Department of Defense transmitting a draft of proposed legislation to extend certain expiring authorizations; to the Committee on Armed Services.

EC-1009. A communication from the Deputy Director of the Administrative Office of the U.S. Courts transmitting, pursuant to law, a report on activities under the Right to Financial Privacy Act; to the Committee on Banking, Housing, and Urban Affairs.

EC-1010. A communication from the Secretary of Transportation transmitting a draft of proposed legislation to improve cost recovery for Federal Aviation Administration programs; to the Committee on Commerce, Science, and Transportation.

EC-1011. A communication from the Secretary of Transportation transmitting, pursuant to law, the 1984 Maritime Administration annual report; to the Committee on Commerce, Science, and Transportation.

EC-1012. A communication from the Assistant Secretary of the Interior transmitting, pursuant to law, a draft of proposed legislation to authorize certain construction in the San Luis Unit, Central Valley Project; to the Committee on Energy and Natural Resources.

EC-1013. A communication from the Acting Director of the Office of Personnel Management transmitting a draft of proposed legislation to make permanent the method for converting established annual rates of pay for Federal employees into hourly, daily, and biweekly pay rates; to the Committee on Governmental Affairs.

EC-1014. A communication from the Acting Archivist of the United States transmitting a draft of proposed legislation to permit domestic dissemination of USIA records; to the Committee on Governmental Affairs.

EC-1015. A communication from the Deputy Director of the Administrative Office of the U.S. Courts transmitting, pursuant to law, the annual report on applications for court orders to permit interception of wire or oral communications; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

EC-1016. A communication from the Acting General Counsel of the Treasury transmitting a draft of proposed legislation to authorize appropriations for the Customs Service for fiscal years 1986 and 1987; to the Committee on Finance.

EC-1017. A communication from the Secretary of Education transmitting, pursuant to law, a report on final funding priorities for handicapped special studies program; to the Committee on Labor and Human Resources.

EC-1018. A communication from the Secretary of Education transmitting, pursuant to law, a report on final regulations for certain education programs; to the Committee on Labor and Human Resources.

INTRODUCTION OF BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTIONS

The following bills and joint resolutions were introduced, read the first and second time by unanimous consent, and referred as indicated:

By Mr. GORE:

S. 1031. A bill to provide for the continuous assessment of critical trends and alternative futures; to the Committee on Governmental Affairs.

By Mr. DANFORTH:

S. 1032. A bill to establish a commission to study amusement ride safety, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Commerce; Science, and Transportation.

By Mr. KERRY (for himself and Mr. PRESSLER):

S. 1033. A bill to amend the Emergency Veterans' Job Training Act of 1983 to establish a veterans' career development and training program; to amend title 38, United States Code, to establish a Veterans' Computerized Job Bank Program, to enhance readjustment appointments of veterans to positions of employment in the Federal Government, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Veterans' Affairs.

By Mr. PRESSLER:

S.J. Res. 126. Joint resolution to condemn Bulgarian brutality toward their Turkish minority; to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

By Mr. DANFORTH (for himself, Mr. EAGLETON, Mr. DIXON, and Mr. SIMON):

S.J. Res. 127. Joint resolution to grant the consent of Congress to certain additional powers conferred upon the bi-State development agency by the State of Missouri and Illinois; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. BYRD (for himself, Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Mr. CRANSTON, Mr. LEAHY, Mr. EXON, Mr. DIXON, Mr. NUNN, and Mr. HOLLINGS):

S.J. Res. 128. Joint resolution to designate May 7, 1985 as "Vietnam Veterans Recognition Day"; ordered held at the desk.

By Mr. NUNN (for himself, Mr. JOHNSTON, Mr. BENTSEN, and Mr. BOREN):

S.J. Res. 129. Joint resolution to promote internal reconciliation within Nicaragua, on the basis of democratic principles, in furtherance of a peaceful resolution of the conflict in Central America; to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

SUBMISSION OF CONCURRENT AND SENATE RESOLUTIONS

The following concurrent resolutions and Senate resolutions were read, and referred (or acted upon), as indicated:

By Mr. BAUCUS (for himself, Mr. BENTSEN, and Mr. MOYNIHAN):

S. Res. 151. Resolution to express the sense of the Senate regarding the Bonn Economic Summit; to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

By Mr. ANDREWS:

S. Con. Res. 46. Concurrent resolution to express the sense of the Congress regarding Americans missing in Southeast Asia; to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

STATEMENTS ON INTRODUCED BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTIONS

By Mr. GORE:

S. 1031. A bill to provide for the continuous assessment of critical trends and alternative futures; to the Committee on Governmental Affairs.

CRITICAL TRENDS ASSESSMENT ACT

● Mr. GORE. Mr. President, I am introducing today a bill that would get the Federal Government to do something it rarely does indepth—consider the future.

We often lurch from one crisis to another. Meanwhile, new problems bubble beneath the surface for years and we barely recognize them in our preoccupation with the present day's crisis. Then, suddenly, they burst forth, whether it's Social Security funding, energy supplies and prices, or trade imbalances.

For example, we thought for years that the Earth contained inexhaustible resources and could cope with whatever abuses we heaped on it and into it. We have since discovered the enormous quantity of toxic wastes oozing into our water supplies. We learned about soil erosion and later about finite fossil fuel resources.

Our Nation's energy picutre was wrenched first by lower supplies, then by higher prices. Demand eventually dropped and we were sent reeling by having to pay for power plants we no longer needed.

As baby boomers matured and entered the working world, school enrollment dropped and schools closed in their wake. Now, the baby boomers are having children of their own and we find a shortage of elementary school teachers that we could have anticipated but didn't.

One year we infused money into the Nation's railway system. Another year we debated ending our rail subsidy by shutting down the system.

And these four examples are only the tip of the iceberg.

Sometimes when we try to glimpse into the future we get more confused than when we started. Computer models in executive agencies often develop conclusions that are widely inconsistent with one another. Deregulation, understaffing and the Paperwork Reduction Act have taken their toll, reducing the quality of Federal data available on some issues.

Our shortsightedness does not necessarily result from the fact that we aren't doing enough studies or collecting enough information. From the Census Bureau to the Social Security Administration, the Federal Government often seems awash in statistics.

But what are we doing with them? How are we, as elected leaders, assessing today the critical trends that tomorrow will become crises and the day after require our immediate response?

It is precisely because we are often so institutionally shortsighted that I am today introducing legislation that would provide for the continuous assessment of critical trends and alternative futures. It is similar to a bill I introduced while in the House 2 years ago. Unfortunately, that bill did not move very quickly, but that is not unusual for efforts of this kind.

Shortly after this century began, in fact, President Theodore Roosevelt created a national commission to study the future of the country's natural resources. The group met with congressional opposition to government by commission and eventually wilted.

The Critical Trends Assessment Act would not constitute government by commission. The office it would create would not usurp powers from any Federal agency. It would not be a method to invoke centralized planning into the Federal Government. I invite you to study the bill carefully. The word "planning" never appears. And the office would not be, I hope, the sole source for thinking about the future.

I envision it as a coordinator, an instigator, a facilitator for those of us in government and in the public at large who believe that present-day trends deserve more than seat-of-the-pants reactions. I see the office as a mechanism to encourage useful debate among people in the Federal Government as well as in the private sector, focusing our attention beyond immediate concerns, making us better prepared for the future.

Specifically, the bill would establish within the Executive Office of the President an Office of Critical Trends Analysis, with a $5 million annual budget. The office would be authorized to advise the President "of the potential effect of Government policies on critical trends and alternative futures."

The office would produce, every 4 years, an "Executive Branch Report on Crictical Trends and Alternative Futures." The Joint Economic Committee of Congress would produce a similar report, with its own findings, every 2 years.

Both reports would be expected to identify and analyze critical trends and alternative futures for the next 20 years in light of economic, technological, political, environmental, demographic and social causes and consequences. They would analyze these trends based on current conditions, evaluate current Government policies and consider any alternative approaches.

An Advisory Commission on Critical Trends Analysis would be created with Executive, congressional and private sector representation. The advisory Commission would assist the office and promote public discussion of critical trends.

I have seen the value of getting Congress to look into the future. About 2 years ago the Congressional Clearinghouse on the Future, which I chaired, published a "Future Agenda" as seen by committees and subcommittees of the House. This was a valuable exercise in getting the committees to focus beyond day-to-day concerns and look at long-term trends.

We know that land fueled the agricultural revolution and capital fueled the industrial revolution. There is growing awareness that information is fueling our present revolution. But what are we doing with it? We are gathering data, we are making studies and we are shoving it all aside so we can handle the crises of the present day.

I think Congress and the White House can show more foresight than that.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the bill be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 1031

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE.

This Act may be cited as the "Critical Trends Assessment Act".

SEC. 2. FINDINGS AND PURPOSES.

The Congress finds and declares that—

(1) while the Government has available to it enormous information resources, there is a need to supplement existing capabilities to provide a systematic and comprehensive use of that information to guide policymakers concerning critical trends and alternative futures;

(2) these information resources can and should be made publicly available in a form suitable for use by the public and private sectors of the United States economy;

(3) therefore, it is necessary to establish mechanisms to evaluate available information, to focus attention on areas in which information is inadequate, and to identify and analyze critical trends and alternative futures based upon the best available information.

SEC. 3. FUNCTIONS OF THE OFFICE OF CRITICAL TRENDS ANALYSIS.

(a) There is established in the Executive Office of the President the Office of Critical Trends Analysis (hereafter in this title referred to as the "Office"). The Director and Deputy Director of the Office shall be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate.

(b) The Office shall be responsible for—

(1) the preparation of the executive branch report as required by section 4;

(2) the review and analysis of Government policies as required by section 5; and

(3) the organization and utilization of the Advisory Commission as required by section 6.

(c) The President shall authorize the Office to utilize the information, property, facilities, services, and personnel of each department and agency in the executive branch to the extent necessary in carrying out such functions. In addition, the Director is authorized to appoint and fix the compensation of employees of the Office.

(d) There are authorized to be appropriated not to exceed $5,000,000 for fiscal year 1986 and each of the succeeding fiscal years for the purpose of carrying out section 3 through 6 of this Act.

SEC. 4. PREPARATION OF REPORT.

(a) Not later than the end of 1990 and each fourth year thereafter, the Office shall prepare for publication and Executive Branch Report on Critical Trends and Alternative Futures. The report shall contain—

(1) an indentification and analysis, of critical trends and alternative futures for the ensuing twenty-year period;

(2) a description of the relationship of such trends and alternative futures to the economic, technological, political, environmental, demographic, and social causes and consequences;

(3) an analysis of such trends and alternative futures with respect to present and future problem areas and potential future opportunities;

(4) an evaluation of the effects of existing and alternative Government policies on such trends; and

(5) an identification of the information and a discussion of the analysis upon which conclusions in the report are based.

(b) Such reports shall be based upon information obtained from sources outside the Federal Government and upon information obtained from Federal departments and agencies.

(c) Prior to the publication of the report required by this section, the Director of the Office shall make a draft copy of such report available to interested persons for the purposes of review and comment. Any significant comments received from interested persons or a summary therof shall be included as an appendix to the published report.

(d) The President shall submit such report, together with his comments or recommendations thereon, to each House of the Congress and such report shall be made available within the Government and to the public as a public document.

(e) The Office shall also publish such interim reports as it considers necessary and appropriate.

SEC. 5. REVIEW AND ANALYSIS OF GOVERNMENT POLICIES.

The Office shall be responsible for advising the President of the potential effects of Government policies on critical trends and alternative futures. The Office shall—

(1) analyze available information to identify present policies and policy options for the United States in a relation to critical trends and alternative futures;

(2) review Federal laws, regulations, programs, and other activities of the Federal Government to determine their long-term effects;

(3) prepare reports for the President as necessary and appropriate;

(4) insure that the Federal departments, agencies, and establishments with responsibilities in the area of policy under consideration are provided an opportunity to comment on the potential effects of Government policies on critical trends and alternative futures;

(5) consider the comments of such Federal departments, agencies, and establishments in performing its functions under this section; and

(6) include the official comments of such Federal departments, agencies, and establishments in any reports provided to the President by the Office under the authority of this section.

SEC. 6. ADVISORY COMMISSION ON CRITICAL TRENDS ANALYSIS.

(a) The Office shall be responsible for the establishment of the Advisory Commission on Critical Trends Analysis.

(b) The Advisory Commission shall—

(1) provide advice to the Office with respect to its operations; and

(2) promote the public discussion and public awareness of critical trends and the use of analyses of such trends to create alternative futures.

(c) The Advisory Commission shall be composed of nineteen members, as follows:

(1) Five members of the Advisory Commission shall be the heads of Federal agencies designated by the President.

(2) Three members of the Advisory Commission shall be Members of the Senate, appointed by the majority leader and minority leader of the Senate, acting jointly, at least one of whom shall be a member of the minority party.

(3) Three members of the Advisory Commission shall be Members of the House of Representatives appointed by the Speaker of the House of Representatives, at least one of whom shall be a member of the minority party who is appointed in consultation with the leader of the minority party.

(4) Eight members of the Advisory Commission shall be individuals appointed by the President from among individuals who—

(A) are representative of business, labor, academic institutions, community organizations, and other private institutions and organizations; and

(B) have background and experience which has provided such individuals with knowledge concerning long-range data collection and analysis or the management of large enterprises, or with other experience relevant for membership on the Advisory Commission.

(d) Members of the Advisory Commission shall be appointed for a term of three years, except that—

(1) the term of office of the members first appointed under subsection (c)(1) shall expire, as designated by the President at the time of appointment, two at the end of one year, two at the end of two years, and one at the end of three years;

(2) the term of members first appointed under subsection (c)(2) shall expire, as designated by the majority leader and the minority leader of the Senate at the time of appointment, one at the end of one year, one at the end of two years, and one at the end of three years;

(3) members appointed under subsection (c)(3) shall be appointed for a term of two years, and the term of members first appointed under such subsection shall expire, as determined by the Speaker of the House of Representatives at the time of appointment, one at the end of one year, and two at the end of two years; and

(4) the term of members first appointed under subsection (c)(4) shall expire, as designated by the President at the time of appointment, three at the end of one year, two at the end of two years, and three at the end of three years.

No individual may be appointed to serve more than two terms on the Advisory Commission.

(e) The Advisory Commission shall elect one of its members as Chair of the Advisory Commission.

(f) Any vacancy in the Advisory Commission shall not affect its power to function. A vacancy in the Advisory Commission shall be filled in the manner in which the original appointment was made.

SEC. 7. PREPARATION OF CONGRESSIONAL REPORT.

(a) Not later than the end of 1989 and each second year thereafter, the Joint Economic Committee shall prepare for publication a Legislative Branch Report on Critical Trends and Alternative Futures.

(b) The legislative branch report shall examine the information and methods of analysis used in preparation of the executive branch report.

(c) The legislative branch report may include a response to the contents and conclusions of the executive branch report.

(d) The legislative branch report may contain—

(1) an identification and analysis of critical trends and alternative futures for the ensuing twenty-year period;

(2) a description of the relationship of such trends and alternative futures to the economic, technological, political, environmental, demographic, and social causes and consequences;

(3) an analysis of such trends and alternative futures with respect to present and future problem areas and potential future opportunities;

(4) an evaluation of the effects of existing and alternative Government policies on such trends; and

(5) an identification of the information and a discussion of the analysis upon which conclusions in the report are based.

(e) Such reports shall be based upon information obtained from sources outside the Federal Government and upon information obtained from Federal departments and agencies.

(f) The Congressional Budget Office, the General Accounting Office, the Congressional Research Service of the Library of Congress, the Office of Technology Assessment, the Congressional Clearinghouse on the Future, and other entities within the legislative branch shall make available such information as may be required for the purpose of carrying out this section.

(g) Upon approval by the committee, such report shall be submitted to each House of the Congress and shall be made available within the Government and to the public as a public document.●

By Mr. DANFORTH:

S. 1032. A bill to establish a commission to study amusement ride safety, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Commerce, Science, and Transportation.

AMUSEMENT RIDE SAFETY COMMISSION ACT

● Mr. DANFORTH. Mr. President, today I am pleased to introduce the Amusement Ride Safety Commission Act.

Although there is disagreement as to the extent to which amusement ride safety is a matter for Federal regulation and as to which agencies should be involved, there is no dispute about the need for ride safety. Nearly 200 million people a year frequent amusement parks in this country and they deserve assurance that the industry adheres to the highest possible safety standards and that amusement ride safety is effectively maintained.

The legislation I am introducing today is intended to provide this assurance. It is patterned after legislation introduced in the House by Congressman HENRY HYDE. This measure would establish a temporary Commission to examine the present status of amusement ride regulation at the local, State, and Federal level, to study and review industry safety standards, and to assess the need for and potential effectiveness of any Federal involvement in amusement ride safety.

During an 18-month period, this Commission would conduct a comprehensive investigation of the scope and adequacy of safety measures employed to protect the public from unreasonable risks of injury from amusement rides. The Commission would be given the authority to hold hearings and to subpoena witnesses. Interested parties also would be given the authority to submit their views. At the end of this 18-month period, the Commission would present a final report on its findings and recommendations to the President and Congress.

The Commission would be composed of five members: The Director of the National Bureau of Standards, who would be the chairman, the Chairman of the Consumer Product Safety Commission, who would be the vice chairman, and three others to be appointed by the President. The three Presidential appointees are to be a State official who administers an amusement ride safety program, an industry safety expert, and a representative of consumer groups.

In the past, I have questioned the resources and expertise of the Consumer Product Safety Commission to investigate accidents at fixed-site amusement parks, and last year I introduced a bill to give the National Bureau of Standards authority to investigate serious accidents at fixed-site amusement parks at the request of State or local authorities.

While I remain convinced that the CPSC is not the appropriate agency to investigate such accidents and that safety at mixed-site amusement parks is primarily a matter for State and local regulation, I believe that a study by a National Commission involving both Federal and State officials seems an appropriate way to address this question, no matter what one's point of view may be. It is a reasonable way to accomplish a common goal—greater safety for all our citizens.

Mr. President, I urge my colleagues to support this legislation, and I request that the bill be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 1032

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That this Act may be cited as the "Amusement Ride Safety Commission Act".

FINDINGS

SEC. 2. The Congress finds that—

(1) the occurrence of amusement ride accidents in recent years has prompted inquiry into the necessity and desirability of Federal legislation to regulate the amusement ride industry;

(2) the regulation of such rides has traditionally been the responsibility of State and local governments and of the amusement ride industry;

(3) it is uncertain whether any Federal agency has sufficient resources or expertise to regulate the amusement ride industry;

(4) Federal involvement in the inspection and regulation of amusement rides could be costly and inefficient;

(5) voluntary comprehensive ride safety standards have been promulgated by the American Society of Testing and Materials and such standards should be evaluated by the Federal Government; and

(6) a temporary Commission to review the scope and adequacy of safety regulations and standards in the amusement ride industry could clarify the need, or lack of need, for Federal legislation regarding amusement ride safety.

ESTABLISHMENT OF COMMISSION

SEC. 3. (a) There is established a National Commission on Amusement Ride Safety (hereinafter referred to as the "Commission").

(b) The Commission shall be composed of five members as follows:

(1) the Director of the National Bureau of Standards, who shall be chairman of the Commission;

(2) the Chairman of the Consumer Product Safety Commission (or the Chairman's designee), who shall be vice chairman of the Commission; and

(3) three members to be appointed by the President as follows:

(A) one from among State officials who administer State amusement ride safety inspection programs;

(B) one from among professionals in the amusement ride industry who have education, training, or experience in amusement ride safety matters; and

(C) one from among persons who represent consumers.

(c) Any vacancy in the Commission shall not affect its powers.

(d) Three members of the Commission shall constitute a quorum.

DUTIES OF THE COMMISSION

SEC. 4. (a)(1) The Commission shall conduct a comprehensive investigation of the scope and adequacy of safety measures employed to protect the public from unreasonable risks of injury from amusement rides. Such investigation shall include a review of—

(A) Federal, State, and local laws regulating the amusement ride industry;

(B) existing voluntary comprehensive amusement ride safety standards; and

(C) self-regulation mechanisms within such industry.

(2) Such investigation shall determine for each law, standard, and self-regulation mechanism reviewed under paragraph (1)(A) through (C) of this subsection—

(A) the scope of its coverage;

(B) the effectiveness of any available sanctions or enforcement mechanisms; and

(C) the adequacy of powers to investigate violations.

In addition, the investigation shall determine the uniformity of application and quality of enforcement of the reviewed laws, standards, and self-enforcement mechanisms.

(b) As soon as practicable after the date of enactment of this Act, the Committee shall publish in the Federal Register an announcement of the investigation described in subsection (a) of this section, and shall afford an opportunity for any interested persons to submit views on the subject of the investigation.

(c) The Committee may transmit to the President and to the Congress such interim reports as it considers advisable, and shall transmit its final report to the President and to the Congress not later than 18 months after the date of enactment of this Act. The final report shall contain a detailed statement of the findings and conclusions of the Commission with respect to the adequacy of existing amusement ride safety standards and regulations, together with such recommendations for legislative, administrative, or other action as it considers appropriate.

POWERS OF THE COMMISSION

SEC. 5. (a) The Commission may, for the purpose of carrying out this Act, hold such hearings, sit and act at such times and places, take such testimony, and receive such evidence as the Commission considers appropriate. The Commission may administer oaths or affirmations to witnesses appearing before it. In holding such hearings, the Commission, upon a vote of a quorum of its members, may—

(1) order any corporation, business, or individual to submit, within a reasonable period, such reports or answers to questions as the Commission may request, in such form and such manner as the Commission may prescribe;

(2) require by subpoena the attendance and testimony of witnesses and the production of any evidence relevant to the execution of its duties; and

(3) order any person to give testimony by deposition to any person designated by the Commission to administer oaths and to take such deposition.

(b) The Commission shall publish notice of any proposed hearing in the Federal Register and shall afford a reasonable opportunity for interested persons to present relevant testimony and data.

(c)(1) If a person issued a subpoena under subsection (a)(2) of this section refuses to obey such subpoena or is guilty of contumacy, any court of the United States within the judicial district within which the hearing is conducted or within the judicial district within such person is found or resides or transacts business may (upon application of the Commission) order such person to appear before the Commission to produce evidence or to give testimony relating to the matter under investigation. Any failure to obey such order to the court may be punished by such court as a contempt thereof.

(2) Subpoenas of the Commission shall be served in the manner provided for subpoenas of a district court under the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure for the district courts of the United States.

(d) The Commission may pay witnesses the same fees and travel expenses as are paid in like circumstances in the courts of the United States.

(e) The Commission may request from any department, agency, or independent instrumentality of the Federal Government any information it considers necessary to carry out its functions under this Act. Each such department, agency, or independent instrumentality shall cooperate with the Commission and, to the extent permitted by law, shall furnish such information to the Commission.

(f) The Commission may delegate any of its functions to individual members of the Commission.

COMPENSATION OF MEMBERS; REIMBURSEMENT OF TRAVEL EXPENSES

SEC. 6. (a) Members of the Commission shall serve without compensation.

(b) While away from their homes or regular places of business in the performance of services for the Commission, members of the Commission shall be reimbursed for travel expenses, including per diem in lieu of subsistence, as authorized by section 5703 of title 5, United States Code, for persons employed intermittently in the Government service.

ADMINISTRATION

SEC. 7. (a) The Commission may appoint and fix the compensation of a staff director who shall be paid an amount not to exceed the minimum rate of basic pay payable for level GS-15 of the General Schedule pursuant to section 5332 of title 5, United States Code.

(b) The head of any Federal agency may detail, on a reimbursable basis, any of its personnel to assist the Commission in carrying out its duties under this Act.

(c) The Commission shall cease to exist upon submitting its final report required under section 4(c) of this Act.●

By Mr. KERRY (for himself and Mr. PRESSLER):

S. 1033. A bill to amend the Emergency Veterans' Job Training Act of 1983 to establish a veterans' career development and training program; to amend title 38, United States Code, to establish a veterans' computerized job bank program, to enhance readjustment appointments of veterans to positions of employment in the Federal Government, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Veterans' Affairs.

VETERANS' CAREER DEVELOPMENT TRAINING AND JOB BANK ACT

Mr. KERRY. Mr. President, on behalf of myself and Senator PRESSLER, I am proud to introduce the Veterans' Career Development Training and Job Bank Act of 1985, which amends and extends the Emergency Veterans' Training Act of 1983.

On this day, 10 years after the fall of Saigon, it is especially important that we remember the veterans who served their country in the Vietnam war and who in part as a result of that service have never been able to reintegrate themselves completely in American society since their return.

Thankfully, most Vietnam veterans have finally "come home" in the fullest sense, holding down jobs they are satisfied with, putting down roots, establishing families. But for a significant minority of veterans, their return to the United States has never been accompanied by full integration in U.S. society. According to a recent poll by ABC and the Washington Post, this group makes up about 10 percent of all Vietnam-era veterans, and about 15 percent of those veterans who saw heavy combat. It is these veterans that this act seeks to help.

The GI bill helped many of these veterans receive an education. But too often the education the veterans of Vietnam received never paved the way for the kind of jobs that led to making it in America, to the kind of work that makes up a career. And there were many reasons for this.

One of the most unfortunate was that for a long time, veterans were actually discriminated against in American society, rejected by those who did not want to even think about the Vietnam war or its veterans.

To those historic reasons, another has been added—our changing national economy, where traditional manufacturing jobs have often been replaced by service jobs. Indeed, some of the best jobs we will have in the future may well be in the high-tech industries of this country. As we have seen in Massachusetts, these jobs can create a vibrant economy.

What this act does is help those veterans who are still unemployed or underemployed 10 years after the end of the Vietnam war by providing training for careers in the private sector—not low-paying, menial, or make-work jobs. The bill does this by providing critical economic support for the training process, making training economically feasible for employers who need trained employees, but who ordinarily might not be able to devote the resources to training them.

The act is designed to make it easier for Vietnam and Korean-era veterans to find good jobs by establishing a state-of-the-art job bank, using national data bases and the most sophisticated computer networks now available. This data bank, while initially available only to veterans, could demonstrate the capabilities of a nationwide job bank for an even broader group of clients down the road.

The companion legislation that is being filed by Senator PRESSLER today, which I am proud to cosponsor, is also important. These bills will make it possible for those veterans who need mental health outpatient services to receive them from the Veterans' Administration, and direct that the Federal Government undertake a comprehensive review of health problems which especially affect veterans who served in Indochina. Such a review, including the study of the post-traumatic stress disorder that has caused so much anguish to some veterans and their families, is one step in developing a national plan for the treatment of PTSD, a plan which is urgently needed.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that a copy of this legislation and the accompanying text be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 1033

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That this Act may be cited as the "Veterans' Career Development Training and Job Bank Act of 1985.".

SEC. 2. (a) Section 1 of the Emergency Veterans' Job Training Act of 1983 (97 Stat. 443; 29 U.S.C. 1721 note) is amended by striking out "Emergency Veterans' Job Training Act of 1983" and inserting in lieu thereof "Veterans' Career Development and Training Act.".

(b) Section 2 of such Act is amended to read as follows:

"PURPOSES

"SEC. 2. The purposes of this Act are—

"(1) to address the problem of severe and continuing unemployment, underemployment, and career displacement among veterans by providing incentives to employers to hire and train certain unemployed or underemployed wartime veterans for stable and permanent careers that require significant training and to prepare the veterans for career advancement;

"(2) to provide an opportunity for such veterans to attain or regain their full employment potential and to increase their earned income and economic self-sufficiency;

"(3) to substantially improve the quality of opportunities accorded veterans by Federal Government employment, training, and placement programs;

"(4) to meet the manpower and training requirements of the growing national economy and the requirements of industries for a work force having new technological skills, enhanced productivity, and stability;

"(5) to reduce the need to furnish unemployment compensation and social support services to veterans and to alleviate the social and economic consequences of unemployment and underemployment of such veterans; and

"(6) to increase tax revenues by promoting higher earnings of veterans through retraining the veterans for and placing the veterans in jobs in careers at income levels commensurate with income levels in the careers from which such veterans have been displaced or with income levels the veterans should reasonably have attained considering their civilian or military work experience, education, and training.".

(c) Subsection (a)(1) of section 5 of such Act is amended to read as follows:

"(a)(1) To be eligible for participation in a job training program under this Act, a veteran must be a Korean conflict or Vietnam-era veteran—

"(A) whose employment has been terminated or who has been laid off from employment or has received a notice of termination or layoff from employment, who is eligible for or has exhausted his or her entitlement to unemployment compensation, and who is unlikely to return to work in the same industry or occupation in which the veteran worked before the termination or layoff;

"(B) whose employment has been terminated, or who has received a notice of termination of employment, as a result of any permanent closure of a manufacturing or other production facility;

"(C) who is unemployed and has limited opportunities, by reason of age or otherwise, for employment or for reemployment in the occupation in which the veteran formerly worked or a similar occupation in the area in which such veteran resides;

"(D) who is underemployed and has a service-connected disability;

"(E) who served in the Indochina theater of operations and is underemployed and whose personal income is below the lower living standard income level determined annually by the Secretary of Labor (adjusted for regional, metropolitan, urban, age, and rural differences and for the veteran's status and family status); or

"(F) whose income and employment status, based on guidelines established by the Administrator in consultation with the Assistant Secretary of Labor for Veterans' Employment, is significantly below the level that would reasonably be expected of such veteran based on the veteran's education, age, training, vocational rehabilitation, or military or civilian work experience.".

(d) Section 14 of such Act is amended to read as follows:

"COUNSELING AND OTHER ASSISTANCE

"SEC. 14. (a) The Administrator and the Secretary may, upon request, provide employment counseling services to any veteran eligible to participate under this Act in order to assist such veteran in selecting a suitable program of job training under this Act.

"(b) A disabled veteran who is eligible to participate under this Act shall be entitled to receive services and assistance set out in section 1504 of title 38, United States Code.

"(c) A veteran who is not disabled and is eligible to participate under this Act shall be entitled to receive counseling services under section 1663 of title 38, United States Code.

"(d) The Administrator shall provide such resources and personnel as are necessary and appropriate to carry out the counseling assessment and job matching functions under the veterans' job bank and job matching program authorized under section 2010A of such title.".

(e) Section 16 of such Act is amended—

(1) in the first sentence, by inserting ", $75,000,000 for fiscal year 1986, and $100,000,000, for each of fiscal years 1987 and 1988" after "and 1985";

(2) in the second sentence, by striking out "1987" and inserting in lieu thereof "1989"; and

(3) by adding at the end thereof of the following: "Not more than 10 percent of the funds appropriated for fiscal year 1986 pursuant to an authorization in this section and not more than 5 percent of the funds appropriated for fiscal years 1987 and 1988 pursuant to an authorization in this section may be used by the Administrator to provide counseling, job matching, or supportive services, or to pay outreach or necessary and appropriate administrative expenses directly relating to the implementation of this Act.".

(f) Section 17 of the Emergency Veterans' Job Training Act of 1983 is amended by striking out "1985" each place it appears and inserting in lieu thereof "1987".

SEC. 3. (a)(1) Chapter 41 of title 38, United States Code, is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new section:

"§ 2010A. Veterans' job bank and job matching program

"(a) The Assistant Secretary of Labor for Veterans' Employment is authorized to establish and carry out, in consultation with the Administrator, the Secretary of Defense, the Secretary of Education, and such public, private, and nonprofit organizations, associations, and employers as the Assistant Secretary considers appropriate, a nationwide computerized job bank and job matching program. The information contained in a job bank established under such program shall be organized by region, by State, and by locality.

"(b) In carrying out a job bank and job matching program established under subsection (a) of this section, the Assistant Secretary shall use electronic data processing and telecommunications systems to the maximum extent practicable—

"(A) to identify job vacancies and the location of—

"(i) unemployed or underemployed veterans,

"(ii) members of reserve components of the Armed Forces, and

"(iii) individuals recently discharged or released from service in the Armed Forces, who are available to fill those vacancies;

"(B) to provide an expeditious means for matching the qualifications of those individuals with employer requirements and job opportunities; and

"(C) to refer and place such individuals in jobs.

"(c)(1) A job bank established under subsection (a) of this section shall include a current list of all suitable job vacancies with Federal Government contractors and subcontractors of Federal Government contractors and shall indicate which contractors and subcontractors are subject to the affirmative action requirements of section 2012(a) of this title.

"(2) The job bank may include—

"(A) an occupational information file;

"(B) occupational projections of the numbers and types of jobs available, organized on regional, State, local, and other appropriate bases;

"(C) labor supply information organized by occupation;

"(D) data bases correlating military occupational specialities with comparable civilian occupations and training programs;

"(E) a data base of employers, the primary occupations they employ, and related information; and

"(F) a data base of post-secondary vocational and professional training programs and of colleges and the instructional programs offered by the colleges.

"(3) The Assistant Secretary of Labor for Veterans' Employment should design the job bank to permit employers to post employment and training opportunities directly to the job bank.".

(2) The table of sections at the beginning of such chapter is amended by adding at the end thereof the following:

"2010A. Veterans' job bank and job matching program.".

(b) There is authorized to be appropriated for fiscal year 1986 not more than $4,000,000 to develop and carry out the veterans' job bank and job matching program established under section 2010A of title 38, United States Code, as added by subsection (a).

VETERAN'S READJUSTMENT APPOINTMENTS TO POSITIONS OF EMPLOYMENT IN THE FEDERAL GOVERNMENT

SEC. 4. (a) Section 2014(b)(1) of title 38, United States Code, is amended—

(1) by striking out "GS-9" in clause (A) and inserting in lieu thereof "GS-11"; and

(2) by striking out "who is" in clause (C) and all that follows in that clause through "line of duty.".

(b) The amendments made by subsection (a) shall apply with respect to appointments made after September 30, 1985.

THE PROBLEM OF VIETNAM VETERANS READJUSTMENT ASSISTANCE

In December of 1983 unemployment among Vietnam era veterans reached its highest point in history (890,000). Sometime within the last twelve months 1 in 4 Vietnam veterans (1.5 million-2 million) was without employment. Vietnam era veterans unemployment and underemployment represents unique and very serious problems confronting the labor force. Vietnam era veteran underemployment and cyclical unemployment is so significant that it is a valid leading indicator of the nation's economy. In good economic times veterans unemployment is 20 percent lower than comparably aged non-veterans. During recessions veterans' unemployment rises to 20 percent above non-veterans. Veterans unemployment begins to increase 3 months before non-veterans as the economy enters a recession and begins to decrease 2 months before non-veterans as the economy enters a recovery. This trend has held steady for more than a decade. It indicates serious instability in the veterans' career situations and a cycle of underemployment the results in unemployment during periods of economic downturn.

The American workforce is undergoing a period of fundamental restructuring from manufacturing to service-related jobs. This change has resulted in the permanent loss of hundreds of thousands of jobs held by veterans that have been part of the economy for thirty years. Neither veterans readjustment programs nor public employment and training programs anticipated, let alone addressed the loss of millions of working class jobs, and the need to train and retrain workers for careers of the future.

America faced a similar challenge 40 years ago with the prospect of having to integrate 15 million World War II veterans into the civilian workforce. The response to that challenge was one of the most significant pieces of social and manpower development legislation in history the World War II GI Bill. The WW II GI Bill provided education, training and employment assistance to nearly 7 million veterans phasing them into the economy with the skills necessary to facilitate the greatest economic and technological growth in America's history. The WW II GI Bill revolutionized higher education, expanding college level training programs by 300% between 1945 and 1950, and made a college education possible for almost every middle class family after 1950.

What the WW II GI Bill did for the demand for higher education after WW II, the Vietnam era GI Bill should have done for the demand for trade, technical, vocational and professional skills in today's high tech and rapidly changing labor market.

Unfortunately, the Vietnam war veteran never benefitted from the far-sighted wisdom and planning that went into the development of the WW II GI Bill. For many Vietnam era and disabled veterans, Vietnam era GI Bill benefits were neither relevant to their readjustment or rehabilitation needs nor to the skill demands of today's labor market.

The Vietnam era GI Bill was originally enacted in 1966 as the "Cold War GI Bill" after a strong lobbying campaign by higher education associations. The intent of the new GI Bill was not to address the readjustment and rehabilitation needs of 9 million veterans who would serve during the Vietnam era but rather to offset substantial declines in college enrollments brought by expiration of Korean War GI Bill benefits. The Cold War GI Bill was designed to induce 4 million "Cold War Veterans" who served between 1955 and 1964 to enter college by paying $100 a month.

The assistance for returning Vietnam veterans was flawed in many aspects since the GI Bill was designed to induce college enrollment rather than facilitate readjustment. while the GI Bill was reasonably adequate for single veterans or veterans with significant supplemental financial resources seeking a college education at a low cost public school, it was substantially limited in its assistance to others. The Vietnam era GI Bill discriminated against:

1. Veterans in States without low cost public colleges or community colleges;

2. Veterans desiring training at private colleges and universities;

3. Veterans requiring high-cost short-term trade, technical, vocational or professional training;

4. Veterans separated during the height of the Vietnam war (1966 to 1972);

5. Veterans with wives and families to support.

The WW II GI Bill paid both tuition expenses at almost every public or private college or trade, technical or professional institution in the nation and paid an equal monthly living allowance. The Vietnam era GI Bill paid only a single monthly allowance out of which the veteran had to pay both educational expenses and living expenses. The greater the cost of the veteran's tuition and educational expenses, the less he or she had to live on. This, in effect, priced veterans without supplemental financial resources out of many schools or induced them to pursue training at inexpensive schools that were ill suited to their readjustment needs.

Veterans with families to support (the majority of Vietnam veterans) needed an average of $250 ($450 in 1984 dollars) a month in additional income to supplement their GI Bill benefits whereas a single veteran at a low cost school could often afford to live on his or her benefits alone. Private colleges and trade, technical, vocational and professional training programs often had tuitions of $1500 to $3000, exceeding the annual GI Bill allowance, and leaving the veteran with no money for living expenses.

The GI Bill made matters worse for veterans needing trade, technical, vocational or professional training by requiring over 20 hours of classroom participation in those institutions for full-time benefits as compared to only 12 hours a week in a college level classroom to qualify for full time benefits. Many veterans unable to acquire technical, vocational, training at public institutions fell prey to unscrupulous profit making schools and correspondence courses. Some training programs. "Approved for Veterans Benefits" were more interested in getting GI Bill dollars from the veteran than in providing quality training to the veteran. Hundreds of millions of dollars were lost to training programs that did not provide adequate training, or opportunities for employment upon completion.

In addition to inadequate benefits many Vietnam veterans who were separated at the height of the war met with hostility on college campuses by anti-war students, and met with discrimination in employment by employers who were prejudiced by sensationist portrayals of the readjustment problems of Vietnam veterans.

It was not until 1974 that a concerted effort was made to restructure the "Cold War GI Bill" as an effective and relevant readjustment program for hundreds of thousands of needy Vietnam era veterans who were unable to effectively use their earned readjustment entitlements. Comprehensive legislation was introduced in both the House and Senate to provide tuition assistance and accelerated entitlement.

Congressman Lester Wolff, a principal sponsor of the reform efforts, told Congress:

"Outdated and shortsighted provisions of the present GI Bill hit hardest at the great majority of Vietnam veterans who are either married with family responsibilities who are seeking blue collar jobs but need technical training.

"As a result of misplaced emphasis on undergraduate college training at the expense of vocational and technical training, the GI Bill is unwittingly a major factor in the lives of a quarter of a million vets now out of work.

"It is simply absurd to continue our increasingly misplaced emphasis in turning out liberal arts graduates with limited job potential when we know from the Department of Labor that 60 percent of our Nation's future job opportunities will come in service and new technology blue collar fields."

A National Survey of Veterans conducted by the Veterans' Administration in 1979 found that only 35.3 percent of the veterans who received college training under the GI Bill were able to put that training to substantial use in the first job they received after training. Another 8% were able to put their training to some use.

Billions of dollars were spent on college level training and hundreds of thousands of veterans were misled into believing that a college degree would automatically lead to a professional career. Neither the Federal Government (especially the VA) nor the educational establishment faced up to the implications of the job gap or the fate of their graduates.

After 1972 with the end of the war and graduation of most of the baby boom generation colleges began again to face declining enrollments.

In an effort to attract as students the same Vietnam era veterans that many colleges had actively scorned in the late 60s and early 70s public colleges, especially community and junior colleges aggressively pursued veterans. Many public institutions are funded by their states or communities based upon the number of full time equivalents (FTEs) they have enrolled. The more students they recruited the more money the schools received.

Often veterans were enticed into community colleges primarily on the incentive of obtaining their GI Bill benefits check rather than for clear and relevant educational or vocational objectives. Rarely was appropriate career counseling, assessment or guidance given veterans that would have insured that their education and training would have led to an appropriate career upon completion.

Too often veterans pursued a liberal arts education because liberal arts programs enabled them to use their benefits for the longest periods of time and had the most liberal entrance and grading policies. The vast majority of Vietnam era veterans were high school graduates (80%). However the majority came from working class backgrounds and often lacked college preparatory backgrounds especially in math and science to pursue engineering, computer science careers, or other majors where there is a demand for recently graduated students.

Many college-educated veterans found themselves now, (having lost the fight for college level careers with the more affluent and educated peers), competing for menial working class jobs that required a minimum of education, and often against young high school graduates. Having families to support and a strong work ethic, these veterans took what ever job they could find.

Many public employment, training and placement programs have contributed to the veteran's cycle of menial jobs, structural underemployment and cyclical unemployment. Previously and currently almost all national employment, training and placement programs which include veterans (CETA Comprehensive Employment and Training Act), its successor JTPA (Job Training Partnerships Act), and TJTC (Targeted Jobs Tax Credit) have as their primary objective the achievement of worthwhile social goals. These programs have been restricted by law to addressing the needs of less than 10 percent of potential workforce. Their focus is upon the socially and economically disadvantaged; persons under the age of 24; those whose combined family income does not exceed 70 percent of the lower living standard and: "those who have limited English language proficiency, or are displaced homemakers, school dropouts, teenage parents, handicapped, offenders, alcoholics, or addicts."

The intent of these programs is to take persons with limited or no work experience, limited or no jobs skills, with the aforementioned handicaps and introduce them to the workforce at an entry level.

The social and economic level of the employment obtained through public programs is below the social and economic status the majority of veterans (or their families had acquired) before entering the serivce, let alone after. What is a significant opportunity for upward mobility for the vast majority of clients served by social goal programs is an equally significant probability for downward mobility for most Vietnam era, disabled or recently separated veterans.

According to the Census Bureau and the Veterans Administration the median family income in 1981 for veterans aged 35-39 was $29,850. In families where the veteran was sole wage earner, income was $26,980. Only 15% of all Vietnam era veterans had family incomes of less than $15,000 in 1981, and only 6% had family, incomes of less than $10,000.

According to the Bureau of Labor Statistics only about 30% of persons experiencing unemployment in a given year have annual family incomes of less than $10,000 (primarly single parents); 30 percent have annual family incomes between $10,000 and $20,000. And 40% of the families with at least one member unemployed in a given year have family incomes in excess of $20,000.

The vast majority of unemployed and underemployed veterans will never fall to the social or economic level where an appropriate resolution to their employment, training and placement problems would be provided through JTPA. However, Vietnam era veterans are among the most likely of any significant group in the labor force to experience the greatest income loss as a consequence of long-term unemployment and job displacement.

THE VETERANS CAREER DEVELOPMENT, TRAINING AND JOB BANK ACT OF 1985

This legislation will extend and enhance the Emergency Veterans Job Training Act of 1983, create a computerized Veterans National Job Bank and enhance counseling, assessment, outreach and supportive services, and improve Veterans Readjustment Authority Appointments.

The legislation is in many ways similar to H.R. 1408 approved by the House Veterans Affairs Education, Training, and Employment Subcommittee on April 3, 1985.

The purpose of the Veterans Career Development and Training Act of 1985 S. is "to address the problem of severe and continuing unemployment, underemployment and career displacement among veterans by providing, in the form of payments to defray the cost of training, incentives to employers to hire and train for stable and permanent positions that involve significant training, certain wartime veterans who have been unemployed or underemployed and have little prospect of finding gainful employment or realizing the full employment potential and economic self-sufficiency without the assistance accorded under this Act.

The legislation authorizes appropriations of $75,000,000 in fiscal year 1986 and $100 million in fiscal years 1987 and 1988. The authorization level of $75 million for fiscal year 1986 is one-half of the $150 million which was authorized but not appropriated under the Emergency Veterans Job Training Act of 1983.

An appropriation of $75 million would have the veterans readjustment benefit outlays for fiscal year 1986, $81 million less than outlays for veterans readjustment benefits in fiscal year 1985 and $417 million less than outlays for veterans readjustment benefits in fiscal year 1984.

The primary objective of the Veterans Career Development and Training Act of 1985 is the development and training for permanent and stable careers. Employment, training and placement initiatives must enable Vietnam era and Korean war veterans to realize their full employment and training potential commensurate with their abilities, aspirations and the income needs of their families.

These objectives cannot be achieved if veterans are served in the context of JTPA social welfare programs that offer only entry level training and wages ($9,800) below the poverty level for the average veteran and only one half the median income of the average veteran ($22,000). Careers which pay $17,000 to $25,000 a year (or enable veterans to attain that level in a year or two) are the appropriate goal for veteran employment training and placement programs to attain. This legislation will provide a viable mechanism to fundamentally restructure veterans employment training and placement initiatives.

There are only three major structural changes made to the Emergency Veterans Job Training Act. One is the expansion of the eligibility critera. The second is the mandate for an effective counseling assessment and supportive service system. Third is the creation of a National Veterans Job Bank.

EXPANSION OF ELIGIBILITY CRITERIA

The eligibility criteria for the "Veterans Career Development and Training Act" incorporate the same eligibility criteria for displaced workers authorized by Title II—Employment and Training Assistance for Dislocated Workers under the Job Training Partnership Act.

The new eligibility criteria for participation under the Veterans Career Development and Training Act are that a veteran must be a Korean conflict or a Vietnam era veteran who:

(A) has been terminated or laid off or who has received a notice of termination or layoff from employment, is eligible for or has exhausted his or her entitlement to unemployment compensation, and is unlikely to return to his or her previous industry or occupation;

(B) has been terminated, or who has received a notice of termination of employment, as a result of any permanent closure of a plant or facility;

(C) is unemployed and has limited opportunities for employment or reemployment in the same or similar occupation in the area in which such veteran resides, including any older veteran who may have substantial barriers to employment by reason of age;

In addition to the eligibility criteria adopted from the Job Training Partnership Act Dislocated Worker program, the Veterans Career Development and Training Act provides special eligibility provisions for underemployed service connected disabled veterans and veterans who served in the Indochina theater of operations—two groups that have the greatest employment and underemployment problems. The Act authorizes eligibility in the case of:

(D) an underemployed veteran with a service connected disability or an underemployed veteran who served in the Indochina theater of operations and whose personal income is below the "lower living standard income level" (established by the Department of Labor), or

(E) a disabled or Vietnam theater veteran whose income and employment status under guidelines determined by the Assistant Secretary of Labor for Veterans Employment and the Administrator is significantly below the level that would reasonably be expected of such veteran based upon the individual's education, age, training, vocational rehabilitation, and/or previous military or civilian work experience, and that such underemployed veteran's participation under Development and Training Act is determined to be necessary for the veteran to attain his or her employment potential.

Hundreds of thousands of Vietnam theater and disabled veterans who pursued college level or trade technical, vocational training under their GI bill benefits have been unable to attain employment commensurate with their training and career potential. Billions of dollars of GI Bill training will go to waste unless these underemployed veterans are able to participate in a Career Development and Training program with an employer. With this training, whether to develop new skills, complete or enhance previous GI Bill training, they can establish more productive and stable employment, often for the first time in their chosen career field. The revenue enhancements as well as the increased productivity, self-esteem, economic self-sufficiency will in the long run more than compensate for initial outlays for these veterans. Underemployed veterans are often the best prospects for success in career training programs. They have demonstrated their commitment to hold employment over those who may have motivational and other problems which have contributed to their long term unemployment. Veterans with serious social welfare or service connected problems would be better served by JTPA or VA Vocational Rehabilitation programs.

COUNSELING

The Veterans Career Development, Training and Job Bank Act of 1985 authorizes a much more extensive effort on the part of the Veterans Administration and the Department of Labor to provide critically needed counseling, assessment, supportive services, job matching and follow-up during training. The accompanying documentation establishes that the VA and DOL have extensive authority to provide such services or contract for them. The legislation authorizes 10% of the appropriations for the program in 1986 ($7.5 Million) may be used by the Administrator to provide counseling, job matching, supportive services, outreach and/or necessary and appropriate administrative expenses directly related to the implementation of the Act.

VETERANS JOB BANK

The Veterans Job Bank is the most critical component of restructuring Veteran employment training placement and job matching programs. It has the capability of revolutionizing employment and training and accessing to millions of employers and training and job opportunities previously unreached by federal programs.

The system will be available in 4 or 5 months. It is currently under development by Partnerships Data Net utilizing the computer facilities and resources of CompuServe of Columbus Ohio (the nation's largest public access interactive computer network system).

The Job bank will maintain lists of available vererans, job and training vacancies, and provide an expeditious means of matching the qualifications of veterans with employer requirements and job opportunties.

The Veterans Job Bank Program will have the capability of:

1. Assessing a veteran by education, past work experience, military training and experience, and/or aptitude tests, and matching that veteran to an appropriate occupation(s) out of 12,375 occupations defined in the Dictionary of Occupational Titles.

2. Matching specific occupations to industries and specific employers that would employ those occupations. The system will have information supplied by Dun and Bradstreet on 5 million employers.

3. Matching more than 8000 Military Occupational Specialities to over 1000 civilian occupations and identifying specific employers that would employ those occupations.

4. Enhancing active and reserve Armed Forces recruiting efforts by providing tangible civilian employment opportunties for reservists and veterans based upon the military training and experience.

5. Identify industries and individuals critical to mobilization and improve placement and training of persons in those industries.

6. Develop good career opportunities in the large segments of the private sector traditionally not accessed by federal employment and training programs.

VETERANS READJUSTMENT AUTHORITY

The legislation would permit veterans eligible for veterans readjustment appointments the authority to enter Federal Service at a GS-11 rather than the current GS-9 level and removes the restriction barring veterans with more than 14 years of education from participating in VRA. This will enable many disabled and Vietnam veterans with substantial education, training, and work experience to enter the Federal government at levels commensurate with their potential. Previously VRA was restricted to GS-5 or below jobs thus restraining most applicants to menial employment opportunties such as custodians, security guards, messengers, and elevator operators. Priority will be given to service connected disabled veterans over non service connected by the legislation.

The effective date of the legislation will be September 30, 1985.

By Mr. PRESSLER:

S.J. Res. 126. Joint resolution to condemn Bulgarian brutality toward their Turkish minority; to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

BULGARIAN DISCRIMINATION AGAINST TURKISH MINORITY

Mr. PRESSLER. Mr. President, today I am introducing a joint resolution which condemns the Bulgarian Government's treatment of its Turkish minority. A similar joint resolution is being introduced in the House of Representatives by Representative SILJANDER.

Citizens of Turkish descent comprise 8.6 percent of the Bulgarian population, or approximately 1 million people. They and their ancestors have lived there since the 14th century and are the largest minority present in that country.

Today, massive human rights violations are being perpetrated against the Turks by Bulgarian authorities. There is currently a nationwide campaign underway to force the Turkish minority to change their names to Bulgarian ones. Coercion and physical intimidation are commonplace. Systematic delays and denials of government service, blocking of bank accounts, dismissal from jobs, and the murder of Turks by the Bulgarian militia are the order of the day. In addition, the right to practice the Islamic religion has been severely restricted.

All this is happening despite the People's Republic of Bulgaria status as a signatory to numerous international agreements which specifically prohibit discrimination against minority citizens. Among these are the 1947 Paris Peace Treaty, the U.N. Declaration on Human Rights, and the Helsinki Declaration of the Conference on Security and Cooperation in Europe.

Mr. President, these human rights atrocities should not and cannot be tolerated. The joint resolution before us would put the Senate on record as condemning these practices, as well as calling on the President to use appropriate diplomatic means to express U.S. opposition to the discrimination against Turkish Bulgarians. I urge our distinguished colleagues to join me in this humanitarian cause by supporting this measure.

By Mr. NUNN (for himself, Mr. JOHNSTON, Mr. BENTSEN, and Mr. BOREN):

S.J. Res. 129. Joint resolution to promote internal reconciliation within Nicaragua, on the basis of democratic principles, in furtherance of a peaceful resolution of the conflict in Central American; to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

PROMOTING INTERNAL RECONCILIATION IN NICARAGUA

Mr. NUNN. Mr. President, last week, the Senate passed, but the House rejected, a proposal to provide humanitarian aid to the democratic resistance in Nicaragua. I believe it was a mistake to have rejected such aid.

It passed the Senate, but by a narrow vote, 53 to 46. Prior to the vote, I made a speech in which I suggested that the President seek a compromise approach which moved the diplomatic and economic option to the front burner and the military option to the back burner.

The purpose of my proposal was to develop a sustainable policy that enjoyed the support of the Congress and the American people. A number of other Members of Congress made similar suggestions. Regretfully, no such compromise was reached, and, as a result, our policy toward Central America is in disarray.

However, in listening to the debate last week, I was struck that most Senators agreed on what our policy objectives in Central America ought to be. No one likes the Sandinistas. They have betrayed their revolution. All Senators seemed to agree that we should support democracy in Nicaragua and the rest of Central America, that Nicaragua cannot become a base for the Soviet Union or Cuba or their surrogates, that the Sandinistas must not threaten or subvert their neighbors, and that they should live up to the promises they made to the OAS in 1979 to adopt a pluralistic, representative government.

The problem is how we should accomplish these objectives. That is where the failure is. The administration has yet to produce a policy which enjoys sufficient support of the American people and the Congress to make it sustainable. Today, a joint resolution which is sponsored by Senators BENTSEN, BOREN, JOHNSTON and myself that can help develop such a policy. If this is adopted, it will permit the President to conduct a foreign policy with the knowledge that it enjoys sufficient support in the Congress and the American people. It could be easily carried forward into fiscal year 1986, thus avoiding another floor fight in a few weeks.

Let me turn to my proposal.

Aid to the Contras must be only part of a regionwide strategy to deal with the challenges we face.

No one should have any doubt about those challenges. We face the struggle between brave men and women fighting for democracy and a better life on one side and, on the other side, the enemies of freedom both of the left and right. And no one should have any doubt about where American stands in that conflict. We stand with the forces of democracy.

We have stood with the democratic center in El Salvador and in Nicaragua, we must stand with the democratic resistance. There has been much rhetoric about the Contras. The President has suggested that they are just like our Founding Fathers. Others regard them as right-wing terrorists. I believe the President overstates the case, but the facts are that genuine democrats, men like Arturo Cruz, who were imprisoned by Somoza and were early supporters of the Sandinistas, now believe that the Contras offer the true path of democracy. Because men like Cruz are the leaders of the Contras, it is our obligation to help them.

In my judgment, we must design a policy that continues pressure on the Sandinistas but moves American promotion of military action to the back burner.

Our policy must avoid the "Lebanon syndrome" in which the President and Congress established arbitrary and unrealistic time limits to complex foreign policy goals.

The American people must believe that all avenues of diplomatic, economic, political pressure have been exhausted if there is to be any lasting support for military-related options. That is not the case today. Right or wrong, the American people perceive that the military option through the Contras has been on the front burner and is the President's course of first resort.

The challenge is to move the military option to the back burner but keep it on the stove.

The proposal we are introducing today would achieve these objectives.

Let me explain the principal elements of this joint resolution.

First, it releases the $14 million fenced last year, but limits use of those funds only for humanitarian assistance which is defined as food, clothing, medicine, and other humanitarian assistance. It does not include any weapons, weapons systems or ammunition.

Second, it urges the President to vigorously pursue diplomatic and economic steps including negotiations to implement the Contadora objectives, and to develop trade and economic measures to pressure the Government of Nicaragua, including an embargo carried out by the United States and our allies. The President is also urged to suspend military maneuvers in Honduras and off Nicaragua's coast if the Government of Nicaragua agrees to a cease-fire, opens a dialog with the democratic resistance and suspends the state of emergency. Finally, the President is urged to call upon the democratic resistance to remove from their ranks any individuals who have engaged in serious human rights abuses, and the President is urged to resume the bilateral discussions between the United States and the Government of Nicaragua.

Third, the President is required to report to Congress every 90 days and, fourth, if he determines that negotiations based on the Contadora principles or the other economic and diplomatic steps have failed to resolve the conflict, the President may return to Congress to request additional assistance for the resistance forces. Expedited procedures are set out for the consideration of that request.

This resolution incorporates elements from the major proposals that were considered last week, including the resolution favored by the administration, the one advanced by Senator BYRD on behalf of several democrats and the recommended economic sanctions suggested by Senator BENTSEN and myself. Finally, it does not include the language of Senate Joint Resolution 106—to which many Senators objected—that would have authorized "supporting, directly or indirectly, military or paramilitary operations in Nicaragua."

I am hopeful, therefore, that this resolution will enjoy broad bipartisan support.

This approach is a regional approach. All parties are required to do certain things. The Sandinistas are required to do only what they have already promised to do. The democratic resistance is obligated to insure that it is a truly democratic movement by purging from their ranks individuals who are responsible for human rights abuses. The United States must pursue bilateral negotiations with the Sandinistas and be prepared to suspend maneuvers if the Sandinistas take the steps that I have mentioned.

This approach calls the Sandinistas' hand. They say they are democratic. I say OK, let them prove it. This humanitarian aid will sustain the democratic resistance; it will keep the flame of liberty and hope alive.

Moreover, humanitarian aid instead of military aid should facilitate negotiations both within the Contadora framework and between the United States and the Sandinistas. Humanitarian aid will also serve as an indication of good faith on the part of the United States that we favor a negotiated settlement rather than a military overthrow. Finally, it permits the aid to be used as a lever to pursue our objectives.

This resolution puts military aid in the background but leaves the military option open. If the President concludes that the economic and diplomatic paths fail he may come back to Congress and request additional assistance. If he has made a good faith effort to exhaust these courses and if the Sandinistas do not modify their behavior, then the President's request for additional assistance will meet a very different reception in the Congress.

Mr. President, this resolution is designed to develop a long-term course, one that can enjoy broad bipartisan support and provide the President the basis to conduct a coherent, sustainable foreign policy. I urge my colleagues to support it.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the joint resolution be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the joint resolution was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S.J. RES. 129

Whereas the Organization of American States on June 23, 1979, called for the installation of a democratic government in Nicaragua; and

Whereas the Sandinista government of Nicaragua committed itself to a system of democracy, justice and social progress in a program transmitted to the Secretary General of the Organization of American States on July 12, 1979, and reaffirmed that commitment by subscribing to the Contadora Document of Objectives of September 9, 1983, which calls for respect for human rights, democratic systems of government and national reconciliation, as integral aspects of a peaceful solution to the conflict in Central America; and

Whereas the Sandinista government of Nicaragua, in disregard of these commitments, has embarked upon policies of alignment with the Soviet Union and Cuba, support for the subversion of the governments of neighboring countries, a massive military buildup and the suppression of human rights and denial of effective opportunities for popular participation in the decision making process; and

Whereas these policies, which threaten the stability of the region, have led to deep divisions within Nicaragua society, including armed resistance to the Sandinista government; and

Whereas the Nicaraguan bishops on April 22, 1984 called for a dialogue among all Nicaraguans, and reiterated that call on March 22, 1985, in expressing their willingness to mediate in such a dialogue; and

Whereas a broadly based group of democratic resistance leaders on March 1, 1985, proposed a dialogue with the Sandinista government under the mediation of the Nicaraguan Bishops Conference and offered a ceasefire; and

Whereas, the President has expressed his intention to reopen bilateral talks with the Government of Nicaragua; and

Whereas the United States is one of the largest trading partners of Nicaragua; and

Whereas Congress believes that the United States should undertake a full faith effort to use economic and diplomatic pressure on the Sandinistas and that military solutions should be considered only as a last resort; and

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the prohibitions, conditions and limitations contained in section 8066 of the Department of Defense Appropriations Act, 1985 (Public Law 98-473), and in section 801 of the Intelligence Authorization Act for fiscal year 1985 (Public Law 98-618) shall cease to apply upon enactment of this joint resolution, subject to the provisions of Section 2.

SECTION 2. The $14,000,000 made available by the enactment of this joint resolution may be obligated only for humanitarian assistance. The President shall provide for independent monitoring of the use of such funds by the National Security Council. Nothing herein shall be deemed to impair in any way the oversight powers of the Congress.

SECTION 3. Be it further resolved the President of the United States is urged—

(a) to vigorously pursue the use of diplomatic and economic steps to resolve the conflict in Nicaragua, including negotiations to:

1. implement the Contadora Document of Objectives of September 8, 1983, and, at the same time,

2. develop trade and economic measures in close consultation and cooperation with other nations which will encourage the Government of Nicaragua to take the necessary steps to resolve the conflict, including:

(i) a total boycott and embargo of United States trade with Nicaragua;

(ii) a call upon the Organization of American States or the other states of Central America, or both, to institute a total trade boycott and embargo of Nicaragua;

(iii) a call upon the other countries of the free world not to trade with Nicaragua.

(b) to suspend military maneuvers in Honduras and off Nicaragua's coast if the Government of Nicaragua agrees: to a cease fire, to open a dialogue with the democratic resistance, and to suspend the state of emergency.

(c) to call upon the democratic resistance in Nicaragua to remove from their ranks any individuals who have engaged in serious human rights abuses.

(d) to resume bilateral discussions with the Government of Nicaragua with a view to encouraging—

1. a church-mediated dialogue between the Government of Nicaragua and the democratic resistance, in support of internal reconciliation as called for by the Contadora Document of Objectives; and

2. a comprehensive, verifiable agreement among the nations of Central America, based on the Contadora Document of Objectives.

SECTION 4. The President shall submit a report to the Congress every 90 days on any activity carried out under this resolution. Such report shall include a report on the progress of efforts to reach a negotiated settlement as set forth in section 3, a detailed accounting of the disbursement of humanitarian assistance, and steps taken by the democratic resistance as described in section 3.c.

SECTION 5. As used in this resolution, the term humanitarian assistance means the provision of food, clothing, medicine, and other humanitarian assistance. It does not include any weapons, weapons systems, ammunition, or any other equipment or material which can be used to inflict serious bodily harm or death.

SECTION 6. At any point after the enactment of this resolution, if the President determines that negotiations based on the Contadora principles of September 9, 1983 have failed to produce an agreement, or if other trade and economic measures have failed to resolve the conflict, the President may request the Congress to authorize additional assistance for the democratic resistance, in such amount and of such a nature as he deems appropriate. The President's request shall include a detailed statement as to why the negotiations or other measures have failed to resolve the conflict in the region.

SECTION 7. (a) A joint resolution which is introduced within 3 calendar days after the Congress receives a Presidential request described in Section 6 and which, if enacted, would grant the President the authority to take any or all of the actions described in Section 6 shall be considered in accordance with procedures contained in Section 8066 of Public Law 98-473: Provided, however, that—

(i) References in that Section to the Committee on Appropriations of each House shall be deemed to be references to the appropriate committee or committees of each House; and

(ii) Amendments to the joint resolution are in order.

(b) This Section is enacted by Congress as an exercise of the rulemaking power of the Senate and House of Representatives, respectively, and as such it is deemed a part of the rules of each House, respectively, but applicable only with respect to the procedure to be followed in that House in the case of a resolution described in subsection (a), and it supersedes other rules only to the extent that it is inconsistent with such rules; and

(c) With full recognition of the constitutional right of either House to change the rules (so far as related to the procedure of that House) at any time, in the same manner and to the same extent as in the case of any other rule of that House.

● Mr. BENTSEN. Mr. President, a week ago today, the Members of this body considered a program designed to convince the Sandinistas to live up to promises made when they assumed power in 1979. The Senate voted in favor of this program, expressing its clear, collective opinion that activities of the Government of Nicaragua are not in the best interests of the other countries of Central America and are a threat to the peace of the region and the long-term security of this hemisphere.

The resolution that the Senate adopted that night was conditioned upon promises made by the President of the United States in a letter to the majority leader of this body. Some Members argued that more than a letter should be required on this issue, that indeed we needed a definite, limited, and statutory provision. The resolution that I join in introducing today with my distinguished colleague from Georgia [Mr. NUNN] is designed to allay those fears and to indicate to the Government of Nicaragua that we are still quite concerned about their actions and that we will not ignore what is happening so close to our own borders.

It is ironic to consider what happened shortly after the Congress took action on the President's request for humanitarian aid for the Contras. Hardly had the voices died out in this Chamber than Nicaraguan President Daniel Ortega announced that he was on his way to Moscow to request some $200 million in direct economic assistance from the Soviet Union.

This is simply additional evidence that the Sandinistas are not the "nonaligned" group that they pretend and profess to be. This only confirms what they have stated in the past: that they are dedicted Marxist-Leninists and that left to their own devices they will consolidate their power in Nicaragua and become another Soviet satellite in the Western Hemisphere.

I believe that we, in the Congress, need to take another look at this issue, and this joint resolution represents an opportunity for this new look. This joint resolution represents a comprehensive approach to the problems posed for us by the behavior of the Government of Nicaragua. It includes the trade sanctions which I proposed in a separate resolution, and it includes humanitarian assistance to enable the democratic resistance forces in Nicaragua to continue their struggle on behalf of the pluralistic society promised by the 1979 revolution. This resolution lets the Sandinistas know that we will continue to apply pressure on them until they decide to live up to the promises of their own revolution.

Ignoring the issue of Nicaragua will not make it go away. The Sandinistas have not shown any disposition to reduce the level of their military buildup nor to stop supporting the regional insurgencies that are attempting to overthrow their neighbors nor to send home the Soviet bloc and Cuba military advisers who are so much in evidence in Managua. They are only going to change their behavior when they become convinced that it is in their best interests to do so. This joint resolution is a step in that direction.●

ADDITIONAL COSPONSORS

S. 5

At the request of Mr. CRANSTON, the name of the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. BURDICK] was added as a cosponsor of S. 5, a bill to require the executive branch to enforce applicable equal employment opportunity laws and directives so as to promote pay equity by eliminating wage-setting practices which discriminate on the basis of sex, race, ethnicity, age, or disability and result in discriminatory wage differentials.

S. 361

At the request of Mr. MOYNIHAN, the name of the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. KASTEN] was added as a cosponsor of S. 361, a bill to amend the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 to make permanent the deduction for charitable contributions by nonitemizers.

S. 408

At the request of Mr. WEICKER, the name of the Senator from Maine [Mr. MITCHELL] was added as a cosponsor of S. 408, a bill to amend the Small Business Act to provide program levels, salary and expense levels, and authorizations for the Small Business Administration's programs for fiscal years 1986, 1987, and 1988, and for other purposes.

S. 415

At the request of Mr. WEICKER, the name of the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. DODD] was added as a cosponsor of S. 415, a bill to amend the Education of the Handicapped Act to authorize the award of reasonable attorneys' fees to certain prevailing parties, and to clarify the effect of the Education of the Handicapped Act on rights, procedures, and remedies under other laws relating to the prohibition of discrimination.

S. 434

At the request of Mr. D'AMATO, the name of the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. BINGAMAN] was added as a cosponsor of S. 434, a bill to extend the authorization of the Robert A. Taft Institute Assistance Act.

S. 625

At the request of Mrs. HAWKINS, the name of the Senator from Michigan [Mr. LEVIN] was added as a cosponsor of S. 625, a bill to include the offenses relating to sexual exploitation of children under the provisions of RICO and authorize civil suits on behalf of victims of child pornography and prostitution.

S. 680

At the request of Mr. THURMOND, the name of the Senator from Alaska [Mr. STEVENS] was added as a cosponsor of S. 680, a bill to achieve the objectives of the Multi-Fiber Arrangement and to promote the economic recovery of the U.S. textile and apparel industry and its workers.

S. 725

At the request of Mr. BENTSEN, the name of the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. LAUTENBERG] was added as a cosponsor of S. 725, a bill to authorize appropriations to carry out the Endangered Species Act of 1973 during fiscal years 1986, 1987, 1988, 1989, and 1990.

S. 729

At the request of Mr. DURENBERGER, the name of the Senator from Colorado [Mr. ARMSTRONG] was added as a cosponsor of S. 729, a bill to amend the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 to make permanent the rules relating to imputed interest and assumption of loans, and for other purposes.

S. 765

At the request of Mr. KASTEN, the names of the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. DURENBERGER], the Senator from Alaska [Mr. STEVENS], and the Senator from Maryland [Mr. MATHIAS] were added as cosponsors of S. 765, a bill to provide for coordinated management and rehabilitation of the Great Lakes and for other purposes.

S. 885

At the request of Mr. KERRY, the name of the Senator from Vermont [Mr. STAFFORD] was added as a cosponsor of S. 885, a bill to establish a moratorium during the fiscal years 1985 and 1986 on the testing of anti-satellite weapons against objects in space.

S. 908

At the request of Mr. MCCONNELL, the name of the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. THURMOND] was added as a cosponsor of S. 908, a bill to provide market expansion and income protection for farmers, assure consumers an abundance of food and fiber at reasonable prices, and for other purposes.

S. 965

At the request of Mr. D'AMATO, the name of the Senator from Arizona [Mr. DECONCINI] was added as a cosponsor of S. 965, a bill to amend title 38, United States Code, to remove an inequity in the Veterans' Administration program to provide assistance to certain disabled veterans in acquiring specially adapted residences.

S. 978

At the request of Mr. HATCH, the name of the Senator from Utah [Mr. GARN] was added as a cosponsor of S. 978, a bill to designate the building known as the Federal Building in Salt Lake City, Utah as the "Wallace F. Bennett Federal Building."

S. 1005

At the request of Mr. NICKLES, the name of the Senator from Idaho [Mr. SYMMS] was added as a cosponsor of S. 1005, a bill to amend the Davis-Bacon Act to modify the provisions of such act prescribing the minimum wages to be paid laborers, mechanics, and helpers employed on public construction projects, and for other purposes.

S. 1018

At the request of Mr. GORTON, the name of the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. ROCKEFELLER] was added as a cosponsor of S. 1018, a bill to amend the National Labor Relations Act to clarify the meaning of the term "guard" for the purpose of permitting certain labor organizations to be certified by the National Labor Relations Board as representatives of employees other than plant guards.

SENATE JOINT RESOLUTION 46

At the request of Mr. MATSUNAGA, the names of the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. BUMPERS] and the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. GORE] were added as cosponsors of Senate Joint Resolution 46, joint resolution relating to NASA and cooperative Mars exploration.

SENATE JOINT RESOLUTION 78

At the request of Mr. SYMMS, the names of the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. ANDREWS] and the Senator from California [Mr. CRANSTON] were added as cosponsors of Senate Joint Resolution 78, joint resolution to provide for the designation of June 10 through 16, as "National Scleroderma Week."

SENATE JOINT RESOLUTION 83

At the request of Mr. DOLE, the name of the Senator from Utah [Mr. HATCH] was added as a cosponsor of Senate Joint Resolution 83, joint resolution designating the week beginning on May 5, 1985, as "National Asthma and Allergy Awareness Week."

SENATE JOINT RESOLUTION 87

At the request of Mr. MURKOWSKI, the name of the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. SASSER] was added as a cosponsor of Senate Joint Resolution 87, joint resolution to provide for the designation of July 19, 1985, as "National POW/MIA Recognition Day."

SENATE JOINT RESOLUTION 92

At the request of Mr. DENTON, the names of the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. THURMOND] and the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. KENNEDY] were added as cosponsors of Senate Joint Resolution 92, joint resolution to designate October 1985 as

"National Foster Grandparents Month."

SENATE JOINT RESOLUTION 107

At the request of Mrs. HAWKINS, the name of the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. THURMOND] was added as a cosponsor of Senate Joint Resolution 107, joint resolution to designate the month of May, 1985 as "Older Americans Month."

SENATE JOINT RESOLUTION 116

At the request of Mr. BYRD, the name of the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. ROCKEFELLER] was added as a cosponsor of Senate Joint Resolution 116, joint resolution to assure the cost of living adjustments for Social Security recipients.

SENATE JOINT RESOLUTION 118

At the request of Mrs. HAWKINS, the name of the Senator from Alabama [Mr. DENTON] was added as a cosponsor of Senate Joint Resolution 118, joint resolution to designate May 25, 1985, as "Missing Children Day."

SENATE JOINT RESOLUTION 123

At the request of Mr. MOYNIHAN, the names of the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. THURMOND] and the Senator from California [Mr. CRANSTON] were added as cosponsors of Senate Joint Resolution 123, joint resolution to designate Dr. Jonas Salk Day.

SENATE JOINT RESOLUTION 124

At the request of Mr. KENNEDY, the name of the Senator from Maine [Mr. MITCHELL] was added as a cosponsor of Senate Joint Resolution 124, joint resolution to designate "National Day of Peace."

SENATE JOINT RESOLUTION 125

At the request of Mr. LEAHY, the names of the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. COCHRAN], the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. KENNEDY], the Senator from Michigan [Mr. RIEGLE], and the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. ZORINSKY] were added as cosponsors of Senate Joint Resolution 125, joint resolution designating the week of June 23, 1985, through June 29, 1985, as "Helen Keller Deaf-Blind Awareness Week."

SENATE CONCURRENT RESOLUTION 20

At the request of Mr. CRANSTON, the names of the Senator from Idaho [Mr. SYMMS], and the Senator from Vermont [Mr. LEAHY] were added as cosponsors of Senate Concurrent Resolution 20, concurrent resolution expressing the sense of the Congress that payments by the Veterans' Administration to veterans as compensation for service-connected disabilities should remain exempt from Federal income taxation.

SENATE CONCURRENT RESOLUTION 28

At the request of Mr. CRANSTON, the name of the Senator from Alaska [Mr. STEVENS] was added as a cosponsor of Senate Concurrent Resolution 28, concurrent resolution expressing the sense of the Congress that May 18, 1985, should be commemorated as the 20th anniversary of the establishment of the Head Start Program and reaffirming congressional support for the Head Start Program.,

SENATE RESOLUTION 130

At the request of Mr. Wallop, the name of the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. GORE] was added as a cosponsor of Senate Resolution 130, resolution relative to the Sport Fish Restoration Trust Fund.

SENATE RESOLUTION 134

At the request of Mr. Byrd, the name of the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. ROCKEFELLER] was added as a cosponsor of Senate Resolution 134, resolution to assure the cost of living adjustments for Social Security recipients.

SENATE CONCURRRENT RESOLUTION 46—EXPRESSING THE SENSE OF THE CONGRESS REGARDING AMERICANS MISSING IN SOUTHEAST ASIA

Mr. ANDREWS submitted the following concurrent resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations:

S. CON. RES. 46

Whereas the President has declared the issue of 2,483 Americans missing and unaccounted for in Indochina a matter of highest national priority and has initiated high level dialogue on this issue with the Governments of the Lao People's Democratic Republic and the Socialist Republic of Vietnam;

Whereas the Congress, on a bipartisan basis, fully supports these initiatives to determine the fate of Americans still missing in Indochina and realizes that the fullest possible accounting can only be achieved with the cooperation of the Indochinese governments; and

Whereas the Government of the Socialist Republic of Vietnam has pledged to accelerate efforts to cooperate with the United States Government in resolving this humanitarian issue, separate from other issues dividing our two countries, and the Government of the Lao People's Democratic Republic has taken some positive actions to assist the United States Government in resolving the status of missing Americans: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That it is the sense of the Congress that the President should—

(1) ensure that officials of the United States Government consciously and fully carry out his pledge of highest national priority to resolve the issue of 2,483 Americans still missing and unaccounted for in Indochina;

(2) work for the immediate release of any Americans who may still be held captive in Indochina and for the immediate return of all American servicemen and civilians who have died in Southeast Asia whose remains have not been returned; and

(3) make every effort to secure the further cooperation of the Lao People's Democratic Republic and the Socialist Republic of Vietnam in resolving this humanitarian issue of fundamental importance.

SEC. 2. The Congress calls on the Socialist Republic of Vietnam to fulfill their pledge to accelerate cooperation with the United States in achieving the fullest possible accounting for Americans missing or unaccounted for in Indochina.

Mr. ANDREWS. Mr. President, I speak today as sponsor of a concurrent resolution regarding Americans still missing and unaccounted for in Southeast Asia. Today is particularly significant in the life of the Nation, because it marks the 10th anniversary of the U.S. departure from Saigon. The truth is, Mr. President, the United States really did not depart Vietnam because, as we are all aware, there are nearly 2,500 Americans still missing and unaccounted for in Indochina. President Reagan has assigned the highest national priority to the effort to obtain the fullest possible accounting of these missing Americans and he has pledged his full resources for this report.

Mr. President, my concurrent resolution simply reaffirms the President's commitment to our POW/MIA's and reinforces congressional priorities for our POW/MIA's; namely, to bring home any Americans who remain in captivity; to have the fullest possible accounting of the missing; and to return the remains of those who died in Indochina home to us in the United States.

Mr. President, in 1984, six North Dakota servicemen listed as POW/MIA's in Southeast Asia were honored with a special congressional medal presented to their families at Grand Forks Air Force Base. All of those still unaccounted for in Southeast Asia deserve far more than medals. For they are true American heroes who have performed above and beyond he call of duty for their country. Mr. President, they are the giants in whose shadow all Americans stand.

Mr. President, the State Department has indicated that Vietnam and Laos have agreed to cooperate in accounting for the missing in their countries. We applaud that pledge of cooperation. But we also recognize how painfully slow that process will be. Therefore, the United States must continue to press Vietnam and Laos to proceed with all deliberate speed with their accounting. This concurrent resolution urges them to do just that.

Mr. President, our great American poet Carl Sandburg wrote that "Valor is a gift. Those having it never know for sure whether they have it till the test comes." The test has come for almost 2,500 Americans. And if indeed valor is a gift, it is one that has been given to all Americans by these brave individuals.

We have not forgotten their ongoing sacrifice and we will never forget our debt to them.

SENATE RESOLUTION 151—REGARDING THE BONN ECONOMIC SUMMIT

Mr. BAUCUS (for himself, Mr. BENTSEN, and Mr. MOYNIHAN) submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations:

S. RES. 151

Whereas the President's Council of Economic Advisers has reported that the real rate of exchange of the dollar increased by almost 60 percent between 1980 and 1984;

Whereas the Congressional Budget Office and the President's Council of Economic Advisers have stated that the large budget deficit has been a major cause of the high interest rates which they report have been a major cause of this increase in the real rate of exchange of the dollar;

Whereas this overvaluation of the dollar acts as a tax on American exports and a subsidy for foreign imports;

Whereas this overvaluation has resulted in the loss of an estimated two million American jobs since 1980—approximately 1.5 million of them in the manufacturing sector;

Whereas America's traditional strength in agricultural exports has been seriously eroded by the overvaluation of the dollar, with the result that the President's Council of Economic Advisers estimates that American agricultural exports have declined by about $8.5 billion from the levels of three years ago;

Whereas currency misalignments, including the overvaluation of the dollar, have led to major competitive dislocations in the United States and world economies and have increased trade tensions between the United States and its trading partners; and

Whereas those critical currency issues have been largely ignored in the Administration's approach to international discussions of economic and trade policy: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That it is the sense of the Senate that a decrease in the Federal deficit is a necessary but not a sufficient condition to bring down the value of the dollar and that the President should at the Bonn Summit initiate a preliminary discussion on the problem of currency misalignments, exchange rate volatility, and possible cooperative approaches to these problems.

AMENDMENTS SUBMITTED

FIRST CONCURRENT RESOLUTION ON THE BUDGET

DOLE (AND OTHERS) AMENDMENT NO. 44

Mr. DOLE (for himself, Mr. DOMENICI, Mr. ARMSTRONG, Mr. BOSCHWITZ, Mr. CHAFEE, Mr. COCHRAN, Mr. DANFORTH, Mr. EVANS, Mr. GARN, Mr. GRAMM, Mr. HATCH, Mr. HECHT, Mr. HEINZ, Mr. HELMS, Mr. HUMPHREY, Mr. LAXALT, Mr. LUGAR, Mr. MATTINGLY, Mr. MCCLURE, Mr. MCCONNELL, Mr. MURKOWSKI, Mr. PACKWOOD, Mr. ROTH, Mr. RUDMAN, Mr. SIMPSON, Mr. STEVENS, Mr. SYMMS, Mr. THURMOND, Mr. TRIBLE, Mr. WALLOP, and Mr. WARNER), proposed an amendment to amendment No. 43 proposed by them to the instructions to recommit the concurrent resolution (S. Con. Res. 32) setting forth the congressional budget for the U.S. Government for the fiscal years 1986, 1987, and 1988 and revising the congressional budget for the fiscal year 1985, as follows:

In the pending amendment, do the following:

In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted, insert the following:

On page 2, line 8, strike the figure and insert "$736,200,000,000".

On page 2, line 9, strike the figure and insert "$793,600,000,000".

On page 2, line 10, strike the figure and insert "$866,300,000,000".

On page 2, line 11, strike the figure and insert "$955,900,000,000".

On page 2, line 14, strike the figure and insert "$0".

On page 2, line 15, strike the figure and insert "$900,000,000".

On page 2, line 16, strike the figure and insert "$2,000,000,000".

On page 2, line 17, strike the figure and insert "$3,400,000,000".

On page 2, line 21, strike the figure and insert "$44,800,000,000".

On page 2, line 22, strike the figure and insert "$51,000,000,000".

On page 2, line 23, strike the figure and insert "$56,100,000,000".

On page 2, line 24, strike the figure and insert "$61,300,000,000".

On page 3, line 5, strike the figure and insert "$186,200,000,000".

On page 3, line 6, strike the figure and insert "$200,700,000,000".

On page 3, line 7, strike the figure and insert "$216,900,000,000".

On page 3, line 8, strike the figure and insert "$248,300,000,000".

On page 3, line 11, strike the figure and insert "$1,055,600,000,000".

On page 3, line 12, strike the figure and insert "$1,076,000,000,000".

On page 3, line 13, strike the figure and insert "$1,139,000,000,000".

On page 3, line 14, strike the figure and insert "$1,216,100,000,000".

On page 3, line 17, strike the figure and insert "$949,100,000,000".

On page 3, line 18, strike the figure and insert "$969,000,000,000".

On page 3, line 19, strike the figure and insert "$1,013,100,000,000".

On page 3, line 20, strike the figure and insert "$1,055,700,000,000".

On page 3, line 24, strike the figure and insert "$212,900,000,000".

On page 3, line 25, strike the figure and insert "$175,400,000,000".

On page 4, line 1, strike the figure and insert "$146,800,000,000".

On page 4, line 2, strike the figure and insert "$99,800,000,000".

On page 4, line 5, strike the figure and insert "$1,849,300,000,000".

On page 4, line 6, strike the figure and insert "$2,088,000,000".

On page 4, line 7, strike the figure and insert "$2,316,300,000,000".

On page 4, line 8, strike the figure and insert "$2,529,300,000,000".

On page 4, line 11, strike the figure and insert "$25,500,000,000".

On page 4, line 12, strike the figure and insert "$238,700,000,000".

On page 4, line 13, strike the figure and insert "$228,300,000,000".

On page 4, line 14, strike the figure and insert "$213,100,000,000".

On page 4, line 21, strike the figure and insert "$52,900,000,000".

On page 4, line 23, strike the figure and insert "$69,200,000,000".

On page 4, line 25, strike the figure and insert "$68,200,000,000".

On page 5, line 3, strike the figure and insert "$30,000,000,000".

On page 5, line 5, strike the figure and insert "$74,500,000,000".

On page 5, line 7, strike the figure and insert "$68,200,000,000".

On page 5, line 10, strike the figure and insert "$27,400,000,000".

On page 5, line 12, strike the figure and insert "$74,400,000,000".

On page 5, line 14, strike the figure and insert "$68,200,000,000".

On page 5, line 17, strike the figure and insert "$25,600,000,000".

On page 5, line 19, strike the figure and insert "$79,000,000,000".

On page 5, line 21, strike the figure and insert "$68,200,000,000".

On page 6, line 6, strike the figure and insert "$292,600,000,000".

On page 6, line 7, strike the figure and insert "$252,000,000,000".

On page 6, line 8, strike the figure and insert "$0".

On page 6, line 10, strike the figure and insert "$0".

On page 6, line 12, strike the figure and insert "$0".

On page 6, line 15, strike the figure and insert "$312,800,000,000".

On page 6, line 16, strike the figure and insert "$276,100,000,000".

On page 6, line 17, strike the figure and insert "$0".

On page 6, line 19, strike the figure and insert "$0".

On page 6, line 21, strike the figure and insert "$0".

On page 6, line 24, strike the figure and insert "$334,900,000,000".

On page 6, line 25, strike the figure and insert "$298,400,000,000".

On page 7, line 1, strike the figure and insert "$0".

On page 7, line 3, strike the figure and insert "$0".

On page 7, line 5, strike the figure and insert "$0".

On page 7, line 8, strike the figure and insert "$359,600,000,000".

On page 7, line 9, strike the figure and insert "$321,400,000,000".

On page 7, line 10, strike the figure and insert "$0".

On page 7, line 12, strike the figure and insert "$0".

On page 7, line 14, strike the figure and insert "$0".

On page 7, line 17, strike the figure and insert "$25,300,000,000".

On page 7, line 18, strike the figure and insert "$18,000,000,000".

On page 7, line 20, strike the figure and insert "$11,500,000,000".

On page 7, line 22, strike the figure and insert "$10,300,000,000".

On page 7, line 24, strike the figure and insert "$0".

On page 8, line 1, strike the figure and insert "$21,000,000,000".

On page 8, line 2, strike the figure and insert "$17,800,000,000".

On page 8, line 4, strike the figure and insert "$8,200,000,000".

On page 8, line 6, strike the figure and insert "$12,300,000,000".

On page 8, line 8, strike the figure and insert "$0".

On page 8, line 10, strike the figure and insert "$20,200,000,000".
On page 8, line 11, strike the figure and insert "$17,100,000,000".
On page 8, line 13, strike the figure and insert "$7,800,000,000".
On page 8, line 15, strike the figure and insert "$12,300,000,000".
On page 8, line 17, strike the figure and insert "$0".
On page 8, line 19, strike the figure and insert "$20,500,000,000".
On page 8, line 20, strike the figure and insert "$16,600,000,000".
On page 8, line 22, strike the figure and insert "$7,900,000,000".
On page 8, line 24, strike the figure and insert "$12,300,000,000".
On page 9, line 2, strike the figure and insert "$0".
On page 9, line 5, strike the figure and insert "$9,100,000,000".
On page 9, line 6, strike the figure and insert "$8,700,000,000".
On page 9, line 7, strike the figure and insert "$0".
On page 9, line 9, strike the figure and insert "$0".
On page 9, line 11, strike the figure and insert "$0".
On page 9, line 13, strike the figure and insert "$8,000,000,000".
On page 9, line 14, strike the figure and insert "$8,700,000,000".
On page 9, line 15, strike the figure and insert "$0".
On page 9, line 17, strike the figure and insert "$0".
On page 9, line 19, strike the figure and insert "$0".
On page 9, line 21, strike the figure and insert "$9,000,000,000".
On page 9, line 22, strike the figure and insert "$8,800,000,000".
On page 9, line 23, strike the figure and insert "$0".
On page 9, line 25, strike the figure and insert "$0".
On page 10, line 2, strike the figure and insert "$0".
On page 10, line 4, strike the figure and insert "$9,300,000,000".
On page 10, line 5, strike the figure and insert "$9,000,000,000".
On page 10, line 6, strike the figure and insert "$0".
On page 10, line 8, strike the figure and insert "$0".
On page 10, line 10, strike the figure and insert "$0".
On page 10, line 13, strike the figure and insert "$1,600,000,000".
On page 10, line 14, strike the figure and insert "$6,500,000,000".
On page 10, line 16, strike the figure and insert "$2,100,000,000".
On page 10, line 18, strike the figure and insert "$100,000,000".
On page 10, line 20, strike the figure and insert "$0".
On page 10, line 22, strike the figure and insert "$5,200,000,000".
On page 10, line 23, strike the figure and insert "$5,100,000,000".
On page 10, line 25, strike the figure and insert "$2,100,000,000".
On page 11, line 2, strike the figure and insert "$4,100,000,000".
On page 11, line 4, strike the figure and insert "$0".
On page 11, line 6, strike the figure and insert "$5,200,000,000".
On page 11, line 7, strike the figure and insert "$4,600,000,000".
On page 11, line 9, strike the figure and insert "$1,400,000,000".
On page 11, line 11, strike the figure and insert "$0".
On page 11, line 13, strike the figure and insert "$0".
On page 11, line 15, strike the figure and insert "$4,900,000,000".
On page 11, line 16, strike the figure and insert "$4,200,000,000".
On page 11, line 18, strike the figure and insert "$1,000,000,000".
On page 11, line 20, strike the figure and insert "$0".
On page 11, line 22, strike the figure and insert "$0".
On page 11, line 25, strike the figure and insert "$12,700,000,000".
On page 12, line 1, strike the figure and insert "$13,100,000,000".
On page 12, line 3, strike the figure and insert "$100,000,000".
On page 12, line 5, strike the figure and insert "$0".
On page 12, line 7, strike the figure and insert "$0".
On page 12, line 9, strike the figure and insert "$12,100,000,000".
On page 12, line 10, strike the figure and insert "$12,400,000,000".
On page 12, line 12, strike the figure and insert "$100,000,000".
On page 12, line 14, strike the figure and insert "$0".
On page 12, line 16, strike the figure and insert "$0".
On page 12, line 18, strike the figure and insert "$12,500,000,000".
On page 12, line 19, strike the figure and insert "$12,200,000,000".
On page 12, line 21, strike the figure and insert "$100,000,000".
On page 12, line 23, strike the figure and insert "$0".
On page 12, line 25, strike the figure and insert "$0".
On page 13, line 2, strike the figure and insert "$12,700,000,000".
On page 13, line 3, strike the figure and insert "$12,300,000,000".
On page 13, line 4, strike the figure and insert "$0".
On page 13, line 6, strike the figure and insert "$0".
On page 13, line 8, strike the figure and insert "$0".
On page 13, line 11, strike the figure and insert "$24,800,000,000".
On page 13, line 12, strike the figure and insert "$21,000,000,000".
On page 13, line 14, strike the figure and insert "$13,800,000,000".
On page 13, line 16, strike the figure and insert "$5,700,000,000".
On page 13, line 18, strike the figure and insert "$0".
On page 13, line 20, strike the figure and insert "$16,500,000".
On page 13, line 21, strike the figure and insert "$13,800,000,000".
On page 13, line 23, strike the figure and insert "$11,700,000,000".
On page 13, line 25, strike the figure and insert "$8,000,000,000".
On page 14, line 2, strike the figure and insert "$0".
On page 14, line 4, strike the figure and insert "$16,400,000,000".
On page 14, line 5, strike the figure and insert "$14,500,000,000".
On page 14, line 7, strike the figure and insert "$10,200,000,000".
On page 14, line 9, strike the figure and insert "$8,000,000,000".
On page 14, line 11, strike the figure and insert "$0".
On page 14, line 13, strike the figure and insert "$13,600,000,000".
On page 14, line 14, strike the figure and insert "$11,500,000,000".
On page 14, line 16, strike the figure and insert "$9,100,000,000".
On page 14, line 18, strike the figure and insert "$8,000,000,000".
On page 14, line 20, strike the figure and insert "$0".
On page 14, line 23, strike the figure and insert "$12,600,000,000".
On page 14, line 24, strike the figure and insert "$5,600,000,000".
On page 15, line 2, strike the figure and insert "$6,500,000,000".
On page 15, line 4, strike the figure and insert "$27,000,000,000".
On page 15, line 6, strike the figure and insert "$68,200,000,000".
On page 15, line 8, strike the figure and insert "$7,200,000,000".
On page 15, line 9, strike the figure and insert "$2,600,000,000".
On page 15, line 11, strike the figure and insert "$2,500,000,000".
On page 15, line 13, strike the figure and insert "$25,200,000,000".
On page 15, line 15, strike the figure and insert "$68,200,000,000".
On page 15, line 17, strike the figure and insert "$3,900,000,000".
On page 15, line 18, strike the figure and insert "$100,000,000".
On page 15, line 20, strike the figure and insert "$2,500,000,000".
On page 15, line 22, strike the figure and insert "$26,700,000,000".
On page 15, line 24, strike the figure and insert "$68,200,000,000".
On page 16, line 1, strike the figure and insert "$4,300,000,000".
On page 16, line 2, strike the figure and insert "$2,000,000,000".
On page 16, line 4, strike the figure and insert "$2,700,000,000".
On page 16, line 6, strike the figure and insert "$28,400,000,000".
On page 16, line 8, strike the figure and insert "$68,200,000,000".
On page 16, line 11, strike the figure and insert "$29,600,000,000".
On page 16, line 12, strike the figure and insert "$26,100,000,000".
On page 16, line 14, strike the figure and insert "$300,000,000".
On page 16, line 16, strike the figure and insert "$300,000,000".
On page 16, line 18, strike the figure and insert "$0".
On page 16, line 20, strike the figure and insert "$26,600,000,000".
On page 16, line 21, strike the figure and insert "$25,600,000,000".
On page 16, line 23, strike the figure and insert "$200,000,000".
On page 16, line 25, strike the figure and insert "$300,000,000".
On page 17, line 2, strike the figure and insert "$0".
On page 17, line 4, strike the figure and insert "$27,100,000,000".
On page 17, line 5, strike the figure and insert "$27,000,000,000".
On page 17, line 7, strike the figure and insert "$100,000,000".
On page 17, line 9, strike the figure and insert "$300,000,000".
On page 17, line 11, strike the figure and insert "$0".
On page 17, line 13, strike the figure and insert "$26,300,000,000".

On page 17, line 14, strike the figure and insert "$26,500,000,000".
On page 17, line 16, strike the figure and insert "$100,000,000".
On page 17, line 18, strike the figure and insert "$300,000,000".
On page 17, line 20, strike the figure and insert "$0".
On page 17, line 23, strike the figure and insert "$8,400,000,000".
On page 17, line 24, strike the figure and insert "$8,700,000,000".
On page 18, line 2, strike the figure and insert "$1,800,000,000".
On page 18, line 4, strike the figure and insert "$200,000,000".
On page 18, line 6, strike the figure and insert "$0".
On page 18, line 8, strike the figure and insert "$5,400,000,000".
On page 18, line 9, strike the figure and insert "$7,600,000,000".
On page 18, line 11, strike the figure and insert "$800,000,000".
On page 18, line 13, strike the figure and insert "$200,000,000".
On page 18, line 15, strike the figure and insert "$0".
On page 18, line 17, strike the figure and insert "$5,800,000,000".
On page 18, line 18, strike the figure and insert "$6,800,000,000".
On page 18, line 20, strike the figure and insert "$700,000,000".
On page 18, line 22, strike the figure and insert "$200,000,000".
On page 18, line 24, strike the figure and insert "$0".
On page 19, line 1, strike the figure and insert "$6,200,000,000".
On page 19, line 2, strike the figure and insert "$6,200,000,000".
On page 19, line 4, strike the figure and insert "$800,000,000".
On page 19, line 6, strike the figure and insert "$200,000,000".
On page 19, line 8, strike the figure and insert "$0".
On page 19, line 12, strike the figure and insert "$31,600,000,000".
On page 19, line 13, strike the figure and insert "$30,300,000,000".
On page 19, line 15, strike the figure and insert "$1,100,000,000".
On page 19, line 17, strike the figure and insert "$8,600,000,000".
On page 19, line 19, strike the figure and insert "$0".
On page 19, line 21, strike the figure and insert "$28,600,000,000".
On page 19, line 22, strike the figure and insert "$29,800,000,000".
On page 19, line 24, strike the figure and insert "$1,100,000,000".
On page 20, line 2, strike the figure and insert "$8,900,000,000".
On page 20, line 4, strike the figure and insert "$0".
On page 20, line 6, strike the figure and insert "$29,400,000,000".
On page 20, line 7, strike the figure and insert "$28,700,000,000".
On page 20, line 9, strike the figure and insert "$1,100,000,000".
On page 20, line 11, strike the figure and insert "$9,200,000,000".
On page 20, line 13, strike the figure and insert "$0".
On page 20, line 15, strike the figure and insert "$29,800,000,000".
On page 20, line 16, strike the figure and insert "$29,000,000,000".
On page 20, line 18, strike the figure and insert "$1,100,000,000".
On page 20, line 20, strike the figure and insert "$9,400,000,000".
On page 20, line 22, strike the figure and insert "$0".
On page 20, line 25, strike the figure and insert "$33,600,000,000".
On page 21, line 1, strike the figure and insert "$33,500,000,000".
On page 21, line 2, strike the figure and insert "$0".
On page 21, line 4, strike the figure and insert "$200,000,000".
On page 21, line 6, strike the figure and insert "$0".
On page 21, line 8, strike the figure and insert "$34,900,000,000".
On page 21, line 9, strike the figure and insert "$35,000,000,000".
On page 21, line 10, strike the figure and insert "$0".
On page 21, line 12, strike the figure and insert "$200,000,000".
On page 21, line 14, strike the figure and insert "$0".
On page 21, line 16, strike the figure and insert "$37,100,000,000".
On page 21, line 17, strike the figure and insert "$36,700,000,000".
On page 21, line 18, strike the figure and insert "$0".
On page 21, line 20, strike the figure and insert "$300,000,000".
On page 21, line 22, strike the figure and insert "$0".
On page 21, line 24, strike the figure and insert "$39,200,000,000".
On page 21, line 25, strike the figure and insert "$38,700,000,000".
On page 22, line 1, strike the figure and insert "$0".
On page 22, line 3, strike the figure and insert "$300,000,000".
On page 22, line 5, strike the figure and insert "$0".
On page 22, line 8, strike the figure and insert "$71,800,000,000".
On page 22, line 9, strike the figure and insert "$65,200,000,000".
On page 22, line 10, strike the figure and insert "$0".
On page 22, line 12, strike the figure and insert "$0".
On page 22, line 14, strike the figure and insert "$0".
On page 22, line 16, strike the figure and insert "$81,600,000,000".
On page 22, line 17, strike the figure and insert "$68,000,000,000".
On page 22, line 18, strike the figure and insert "$0".
On page 22, line 20, strike the figure and insert "$0".
On page 22, line 22, strike the figure and insert "$0".
On page 22, line 24, strike the figure and insert "$90,500,000,000".
On page 22, line 25, strike the figure and insert "$74,100,000,000".
On page 23, line 1, strike the figure and insert "$0".
On page 23, line 3, strike the figure and insert "$0".
On page 23, line 5, strike the figure and insert "$0".
On page 23, line 7, strike the figure and insert "$93,300,000,000".
On page 23, line 8, strike the figure and insert "$81,600,000,000".
On page 23, line 9, strike the figure and insert "$0".
On page 23, line 11, strike the figure and insert "$0".
On page 23, line 13, strike the figure and insert "$0".
On page 23, line 17, strike the figure and insert "$162,800,000,000".
On page 23, line 18, strike the figure and insert "$128,600,000,000".
On page 23, line 20, strike the figure and insert "$14,300,000,000".
On page 23, line 22, strike the figure and insert "$0".
On page 23, line 24, strike the figure and insert "$0".
On page 24, line 2, strike the figure and insert "$156,300,000,000".
On page 24, line 3, strike the figure and insert "$118,100,000,000".
On page 24, line 5, strike the figure and insert "$1,800,000,000".
On page 24, line 7, strike the figure and insert "$0".
On page 24, line 9, strike the figure and insert "$0".
On page 24, line 12, strike the figure and insert "$166,500,000,000".
On page 24, line 13, strike the figure and insert "$121,900,000,000".
On page 24, line 15, strike the figure and insert "$2,300,000,000".
On page 24, line 17, strike the figure and insert "$0".
On page 24, line 19, strike the figure and insert "$0".
On page 24, line 22, strike the figure and insert "$174,700,000,000".
On page 24, line 23, strike the figure and insert "$125,600,000,000".
On page 24, line 25, strike the figure and insert "$1,800,000,000".
On page 25, line 2, strike the figure and insert "$0".
On page 25, line 4, strike the figure and insert "$0".
On page 25, line 8, strike the figure and insert "$195,500,000,000".
On page 25, line 9, strike the figure and insert "$189,300,000,000".
On page 25, line 10, strike the figure and insert "$0".
On page 25, line 12, strike the figure and insert "$0".
On page 25, line 14, strike the figure and insert "$0".
On page 25, line 17, strike the figure and insert "$207,600,000,000".
On page 25, line 18, strike the figure and insert "$197,700,000,000".
On page 25, line 19, strike the figure and insert "$0".
On page 25, line 21, strike the figure and insert "$0".
On page 25, line 23, strike the figure and insert "$0".
On page 26, line 2, strike the figure and insert "$225,300,000,000".
On page 26, line 3, strike the figure and insert "$206,500,000,000".
On page 26, line 4, strike the figure and insert "$0".
On page 26, line 6, strike the figure and insert "$0".
On page 26, line 8, strike the figure and insert "$0".
On page 26, line 11, strike the figure and insert "$266,200,000,000".
On page 26, line 12, strike the figure and insert "$216,100,000,000".
On page 26, line 13, strike the figure and insert "$0".
On page 26, line 15, strike the figure and insert "$0".
On page 26, line 17, strike the figure and insert "$0".
On page 26, line 20, strike the figure and insert "$27,200,000,000".
On page 26, line 21, strike the figure and insert "$26,300,000,000".

On page 26, line 23, strike the figure and insert "$1,300,000,000".
On page 26, line 25, strike the figure and insert "$16,800,000,000".
On page 27, line 2, strike the figure and insert "$0".
On page 27, line 4, strike the figure and insert "$26,900,000,000".
On page 27, line 5, strike the figure and insert "$26,300,000,000".
On page 27, line 7, strike the figure and insert "$1,300,000,000".
On page 27, line 9, strike the figure and insert "$15,300,000,000".
On page 27, line 11, strike the figure and insert "$0".
On page 27, line 13, strike the figure and insert "$26,900,000,000".
On page 27, line 14, strike the figure and insert "$26,300,000,000".
On page 27, line 16, strike the figure and insert "$1,200,000,000".
On page 27, line 18, strike the figure and insert "$17,400,000,000".
On page 27, line 20, strike the figure and insert "$0".
On page 27, line 22, strike the figure and insert "$26,900,000,000".
On page 27, line 23, strike the figure and insert "$26,400,000,000".
On page 27, line 25, strike the figure and insert "$1,200,000,000".
On page 28, line 2, strike the figure and insert "$20,100,000,000".
On page 28, line 4, strike the figure and insert "$0".
On page 28, line 7, strike the figure and insert "$6,600,000,000".
On page 28, line 8, strike the figure and insert "$6,400,000,000".
On page 28, line 9, strike the figure and insert "$0".
On page 28, line 11, strike the figure and insert "$0".
On page 28, line 13, strike the figure and insert "$0".
On page 28, line 15, strike the figure and insert "$6,800,000,000".
On page 28, line 16, strike the figure and insert "$6,700,000,000".
On page 28, line 17, strike the figure and insert "$0".
On page 28, line 19, strike the figure and insert "$0".
On page 28, line 21, strike the figure and insert "$0".
On page 28, line 23, strike the figure and insert "$6,900,000,000".
On page 28, line 24, strike the figure and insert "$6,900,000,000".
On page 28, line 25, strike the figure and insert "$0".
On page 29, line 2, strike the figure and insert "$0".
On page 29, line 4, strike the figure and insert "$0".
On page 29, line 6, strike the figure and insert "$7,000,000,000".
On page 29, line 7, strike the figure and insert "$7,000,000,000".
On page 29, line 8, strike the figure and insert "$0".
On page 29, line 10, strike the figure and insert "$0".
On page 29, line 12, strike the figure and insert "$0".
On page 29, line 15, strike the figure and insert "$5,800,000,000".
On page 29, line 16, strike the figure and insert "$5,800,000,000".
On page 29, line 17, strike the figure and insert "$0".
On page 29, line 19, strike the figure and insert "$0".
On page 29, line 21, strike the figure and insert "$0".
On page 29, line 23, strike the figure and insert "$5,300,000,000".
On page 29, line 24, strike the figure and insert "$5,300,000,000".
On page 29, line 25, strike the figure and insert "$0".
On page 30, line 2, strike the figure and insert "$0".
On page 30, line 4, strike the figure and insert "$0".
On page 30, line 6, strike the figure and insert "$5,400,000,000".
On page 30, line 7, strike the figure and insert "$5,300,000,000".
On page 30, line 8, strike the figure and insert "$0".
On page 30, line 10, strike the figure and insert "$0".
On page 30, line 12, strike the figure and insert "$0".
On page 30, line 14, strike the figure and insert "$5,600,000,000".
On page 30, line 15, strike the figure and insert "$5,500,000,000".
On page 30, line 16, strike the figure and insert "$0".
On page 30, line 18, strike the figure and insert "$0".
On page 30, line 20, strike the figure and insert "$0".
On page 30, line 23, strike the figure and insert "$6,400,000,000".
On page 30, line 24, strike the figure and insert "$6,400,000,000".
On page 30, line 25, strike the figure and insert "$0".
On page 31, line 2, strike the figure and insert "$0".
On page 31, line 4, strike the figure and insert "$0".
On page 31, line 6, strike the figure and insert "$6,500,000,000".
On page 31, line 7, strike the figure and insert "$6,500,000,000".
On page 31, line 8, strike the figure and insert "$0".
On page 31, line 10, strike the figure and insert "$0".
On page 31, line 12, strike the figure and insert "$0".
On page 31, line 14, strike the figure and insert "$2,000,000,000".
On page 31, line 15, strike the figure and insert "$3,200,000,000".
On page 31, line 16, strike the figure and insert "$0".
On page 31, line 18, strike the figure and insert "$0".
On page 31, line 20, strike the figure and insert "$0".
On page 31, line 22, strike the figure and insert "$2,100,000,000".
On page 31, line 23, strike the figure and insert "$2,100,000,000".
On page 31, line 24, strike the figure and insert "$0".
On page 32, line 2, strike the figure and insert "$0".
On page 32, line 4, strike the figure and insert "$0".
On page 32, line 8, strike the figure and insert "$129,700,000,000".
On page 32, line 9, strike the figure and insert "$129,700,000,000".
On page 32, line 10, strike the figure and insert "$0".
On page 32, line 12, strike the figure and insert "$0".
On page 32, line 14, strike the figure and insert "$0".
On page 32, line 17, strike the figure and insert "$142,300,000,000".
On page 32, line 18, strike the figure and insert "$142,300,000,000".
On page 32, line 19, strike the figure and insert "$0".
On page 32, line 21, strike the figure and insert "$0".
On page 32, line 23, strike the figure and insert "$0".
On page 33, line 2, strike the figure and insert "$153,000,000,000".
On page 33, line 3, strike the figure and insert "$153,000,000,000".
On page 33, line 4, strike the figure and insert "$0".
On page 33, line 6, strike the figure and insert "$0".
On page 33, line 8, strike the figure and insert "$0".
On page 33, line 11, strike the figure and insert "$155,200,000,000".
On page 33, line 12, strike the figure and insert "$155,200,000,000".
On page 33, line 13, strike the figure and insert "$0".
On page 33, line 15, strike the figure and insert "$0".
On page 33, line 17, strike the figure and insert "$0".
On page 33, line 20, strike the figure and insert "$300,000,000".
On page 33, line 21, strike the figure and insert "$300,000,000".
On page 33, line 22, strike the figure and insert "$0".
On page 33, line 24, strike the figure and insert "$0".
On page 34, line 2, strike the figure and insert "$0".
On page 34, line 5, strike the figure and insert "−$1,400,000,000".
On page 34, line 6, strike the figure and insert "−$1,400,000,000".
On page 34, line 7, strike the figure and insert "$0".
On page 34, line 9, strike the figure and insert "$0".
On page 34, line 11, strike the figure and insert "$0".
On page 34, line 14, strike the figure and insert "−$1,200,000,000".
On page 34, line 15, strike the figure and insert "−$1,200,000,000".
On page 34, line 16, strike the figure and insert "$0".
On page 34, line 18, strike the figure and insert "$0".
On page 34, line 20, strike the figure and insert "$0".
On page 34, line 23, strike the figure and insert "−$200,000,000".
On page 34, line 24, strike the figure and insert "−$100,000,000".
On page 34, line 25, strike the figure and insert "$0".
On page 35, line 2, strike the figure and insert "$0".
On page 35, line 4, strike the figure and insert "$0".
On page 35, line 8, strike the figure and insert "−$32,400,000,000".
On page 35, line 9, strike the figure and insert "−$32,400,000,000".
On page 35, line 10, strike the figure and insert "$0".
On page 35, line 12, strike the figure and insert "$0".
On page 35, line 14, strike the figure and insert "$0".
On page 35, line 17, strike the figure and insert "−$35,000,000,000".
On page 35, line 18, strike the figure and insert "−$35,000,000,000".
On page 35, line 19, strike the figure and insert "$0".

On page 35, line 21, strike the figure and insert "$0".
On page 35, line 23, strike the figure and insert "$0".
On page 36, line 2, strike the figure and insert "−$37,800,000,000".
On page 36, line 3, strike the figure and insert "−$37,800,000,000".
On page 36, line 4, strike the figure and insert "$0".
On page 36, line 6, strike the figure and insert "$0".
On page 36, line 8, strike the figure and insert "$0".
On page 36, line 11, strike the figure and insert "−$41,100,000,000".
On page 36, line 12, strike the figure and insert "−$41,100,000,000".
On page 36, line 13, strike the figure and insert "$0".
On page 36, line 15, strike the figure and insert "$0".
On page 36, line 17, strike the figure and insert "$0".
On page 36, line 19, strike the date and insert "June 30, 1985".
On page 37, line 11, strike the first figure and insert "$3,899,000,000".
On page 37, line 11, strike the second figure and insert "$4,610,000,000".
On page 37, line 12, strike the figure and insert "$3,773,000,000".
On page 37, line 13, strike the figure and insert "$6,540,000,000".
On page 37, line 14, strike the first figure and insert "$4,258,000,000".
On page 37, line 14, strike the second figure and insert "$10,326,000,000".
On page 37, line 20, strike the first figure and insert "$0".
On page 37, line 20, strike the second figure and insert "$376,000,000".
On page 37, line 21, strike the figure and insert "$0".
On page 37, line 22, strike the figure and insert "$894,000,000".
On page 37, line 23, strike the first figure and insert "$0".
On page 37, line 23, strike the second figure and insert "$1,424,000,000".
On page 38, line 10, strike the first figure and insert "$10,122,000,000".
On page 38, line 10, strike the second figure and insert "$4,213,000,000".
On page 38, line 11, strike the figure and insert "$11,353,000,000".
On page 38, line 12, strike the figure and insert "$7,416,000,000".
On page 38, line 13, strike the figure and insert "$12,509,000,000".
On page 38, line 14, strike the figure and insert "$9,566,000,000".
On page 38, line 24, strike the first figure and insert "$2,622,000,000".
On page 38, line 24, strike the second figure and insert "$2,216,000,000".
On page 38, line 25, strike the figure and insert "$1,416,000,000".
On page 39, line 1, strike the figure and insert "$1,077,000,000".
On page 39, line 2, strike the first figure and insert "$1,633,000,000".
On page 39, line 2, strike the second figure and insert "$1,368,000,000".
On page 39, line 13, strike the first figure and insert "$2,962,000,000".
On page 39, line 13, strike the second figure and insert "$2,253,000,000".
On page 39, line 14, strike the figure and insert "$2,723,000,000".
On page 39, line 15, strike the figure and insert "$2,579,000,000".
On page 39, line 16, strike the first figure and insert "$2,720,000,000".
On page 39, line 16, strike the second figure and insert "$2,814,000,000".
On page 40, line 2, strike the first figure and insert "$719,000,000".
On page 40, line 2, strike the second figure and insert "$306,000,000".
On page 40, line 3, strike the figure and insert "$1,208,000,000".
On page 40, line 4, strike the figure and insert "$1,451,000,000".
On page 40, line 5, strike the first figure and insert "$1,720,000,000".
On page 40, line 5, strike the second figure and insert "$2,112,000,000".
On page 40, line 15, strike the figure and insert "$0".
On page 40, line 16, strike the first figure and insert "$8,117,000,000".
On page 40, line 16, strike the second figure and insert "$0".
On page 40, line 17, strike the figure and insert "$18,934,000,000".
On page 40, line 18, strike the first figure and insert "$0".
On page 40, line 18, strike the second figure and insert "$28,137,000,000".
On page 41, line 3, strike the figure and insert "$192,000,000".
On page 41, line 4, strike the figure and insert "$47,000,000".
On page 41, line 5, strike the first figure and insert "$275,000,000".
On page 41, line 5, strike the second figure and insert "$109,000,000".
On page 41, line 6, strike the figure and insert "$282,000,000".
On page 41, line 7, strike the figure and insert "$140,000,000".
On page 41, line 16, strike the first figure and insert "$375,000,000".
On page 41, line 16, strike the second figure and insert "$0".
On page 41, line 17, strike the figure and insert "$3,101,000,000".
On page 41, line 18, strike the first figure and insert "$1,325,000,000".
On page 41, line 18, strike the second figure and insert "$0".
On page 41, line 19, strike the figure and insert "$7,332,000,000".
On page 41, line 20, strike the first figure and insert "$1,370,000,000".
On page 41, line 20, strike the second figure and insert "$0".
On page 41, line 21, strike the figure and insert "$9,097,000,000".
On page 42, line 6, strike the first figure and insert "$3,404,000,000".
On page 42, line 6, strike the second figure and insert "$1,299,000,000".
On page 42, line 7, strike the figure and insert "$3,826,000,000".
On page 42, line 8, strike the figure and insert "$3,446,000,000".
On page 42, line 9, strike the first figure and insert "$4,291,000,000".
On page 42, line 9, strike the second figure and insert "$4,231,000,000".
On page 42, line 19, strike the figure and insert "$882,000,000".
On page 42, line 20, strike the figure and insert "$1,258,000,000".
On page 42, line 21, strike the first figure and insert "$2,034,000,000".
On page 42, line 21, strike the second figure and insert "$2,101,000,000".
On page 42, line 22, strike the figure and insert "$2,594,000,000".
On page 42, line 23, strike the figure and insert "$2,275,000,000".
On page 43, line 7, strike the figure and insert "$858,000,000".
On page 43, line 8, strike the figure and insert "$791,000,000".
On page 43, line 9, strike the first figure and insert "$1,332,000,000".
On page 43, line 9, strike the second figure and insert "$1,496,000,000".
On page 43, line 10, strike the figure and insert "$1,725,000,000".
On page 43, line 11, strike the figure and insert "$1,987,000,000".
On page 43, line 20, strike the figure and insert "$192,000,000".
On page 43, line 21, strike the figure and insert "$87,000,000".
On page 43, line 22, strike the first figure and insert "$201,000,000".
On page 43, line 22, strike the second figure and insert "$151,000,000".
On page 43, line 23, strike the figure and insert "$211,000,000".
On page 43, line 24, strike the figure and insert "$181,000,000".
On page 44, line 10, strike the figure and insert "$3,899,000,000".
On page 44, line 11, strike the figure and insert "$4,610,000,000".
On page 44, line 12, strike the first figure and insert "$3,773,000,000".
On page 44, line 12, strike the second figure and insert "$6,540,000,000".
On page 44, line 13, strike the figure and insert "$4,258,000,000".
On page 44, line 14, strike the figure and insert "$10,326,000,000".
On page 44, line 19, strike the first figure and insert "$0".
On page 44, line 19, strike the second figure and insert "$376,000,000".
On page 44, line 20, strike the figure and insert "$0".
On page 44, line 21, strike the figure and insert "$894,000,000".
On page 44, line 22, strike the first figure and insert "$0".
On page 44, line 22, strike the second figure and insert "$1,424,000,000".
On page 45, line 8, strike the first figure and insert "$9,159,000,000".
On page 45, line 8, strike the second figure and insert "$4,028,000,000".
On page 45, line 9, strike the figure and insert "$9,730,000,000".
On page 45, line 10, strike the figure and insert "$6,870,000,000".
On page 45, line 11, strike the first figure and insert "$10,379,000,000".
On page 45, line 11, strike the second figure and insert "$8,550,000,000".
On page 45, line 21, strike the figure and insert "$2,838,000,000".
On page 45, line 22, strike the figure and insert "$1,316,000,000".
On page 45, line 23, strike the first figure and insert "$3,183,000,000".
On page 45, line 23, strike the second figure and insert "$3,202,000,000".
On page 45, line 24, strike the figure and insert "$3,549,000,000".
On page 45, line 25, strike the figure and insert "$3,865,000,000".
On page 46, line 9, strike the figure and insert "$5,188,000,000".
On page 46, line 10, strike the figure and insert "$8,187,000,000".
On page 46, line 11, strike the first figure and insert "$3,871,000,000".
On page 46, line 11, strike the second figure and insert "$10,159,000,000".
On page 46, line 12, strike the figure and insert "$3,958,000,000".
On page 46, line 13, strike the figure and insert "$13,539,000,000".
On page 46, line 23, strike the figure and insert "$192,000,000".
On page 46, line 24, strike the figure and insert "$47,000,000".

On page 46, line 25, strike the first figure and insert "$275,000,000".
On page 46, line 25, strike the second figure and insert "$109,000,000".
On page 47, line 1, strike the figure and insert "$282,000,000".
On page 47, line 2, strike the figure and insert "$140,000,000".
On page 47, line 11, strike the figure and insert "$0".
On page 47, line 12, strike the first figure and insert "$64,000,000".
On page 47, line 12, strike the second figure and insert "$0".
On page 47, line 13, strike the figure and insert "$3,699,000,000".
On page 47, line 14, strike the first figure and insert "$0".
On page 47, line 14, strike the second figure and insert "$5,203,000,000".
On page 47, line 25, strike the first figure and insert "$540,000,000".
On page 47, line 25, strike the second figure and insert "$292,000,000".
On page 48, line 1, strike the figure and insert "$559,000,000".
On page 48, line 2, strike the figure and insert "$402,000,000".
On page 48, line 3, strike the first figure and insert "$634,000,000".
On page 48, line 3, strike the second figure and insert "$526,000,000".
On page 48, line 14, strike the first figure and insert "$401,000,000".
On page 48, line 14, strike the second figure and insert "$379,000,000".
On page 48, line 15, strike the figure and insert "$293,000,000".
On page 48, line 16, strike the figure and insert "$352,000,000".
On page 48, line 17, strike the first figure and insert "$394,000,000".
On page 48, line 17, strike the second figure and insert "$450,000,000".
On page 49, line 2, strike the figure and insert "$375,000,000".
On page 49, line 3, strike the first figure and insert "$0".
On page 49, line 3, strike the second figure and insert "$3,037,000,000".
On page 49, line 4, strike the first figure and insert "$1,325,000,000".
On page 49, line 4, strike the second figure and insert "$0".
On page 49, line 5, strike the figure and insert "$7,183,000,000".
On page 49, line 6, strike the first figure and insert "$1,370,000,000".
On page 49, line 6, strike the second figure and insert "$0".
On page 49, line 7, strike the figure and insert "$8,850,000,000".
On page 49, line 17, strike the first figure and insert "$1,895,000,000".
On page 49, line 17, strike the second figure and insert "$469,000,000".
On page 49, line 18, strike the figure and insert "$3,091,000,000".
On page 49, line 19, strike the figure and insert "$1,950,000,000".
On page 49, line 20, strike the first figure and insert "$4,170,000,000".
On page 49, line 20, strike the second figure and insert "$3,161,000,000".
On page 50, line 5, strike the figure and insert "$882,000,000".
On page 50, line 6, strike the figure and insert "$1,258,000,000".
On page 50, line 7, strike the first figure and insert "$2,034,000,000".
On page 50, line 7, strike the second figure and insert "$2,101,000,000".
On page 50, line 8, strike the figure and insert "$2,594,000,000".
On page 50, line 9, strike the figure and insert "$2,275,000,000".
On page 50, line 18, strike the figure and insert "$858,000,000".
On page 50, line 19, strike the figure and insert "$791,000,000".
On page 50, line 20, strike the first figure and insert "$1,332,000,000".
On page 50, line 20, strike the second figure and insert "$1,496,000,000".
On page 50, line 21, strike the figure and insert "$1,725,000,000".
On page 50, line 22, strike the figure and insert "$1,987,000,000".
On page 51, line 6, strike the figure and insert "$0".
On page 51, line 7, strike the first figure and insert "$7,600,000,000".
On page 51, line 7, strike the second figure and insert "$0".
On page 51, line 8, strike the figure and insert "$14,456,000,000".
On page 51, line 9, strike the first figure and insert "$0".
On page 51, line 9, strike the second figure and insert "$21,809,000,000".
On page 51, line 17, strike the figure and insert "$313,500,000,000".
On page 51, line 19, strike the figure and insert "$335,600,000,000".
On page 51, line 20, strike the figure and insert "$360,400,000,000".
On page 52, line 1, strike the figure and insert "$136,700,000,000".
On page 52, line 3, strike the figure and insert "$138,200,000,000".
On page 52, line 4, strike the figure and insert "$143,100,000,000".
On page 54, line 20, strike the figure and insert "8".

ADDITIONAL STATEMENTS

DAN ROSTENKOWSKI

● Mr. SIMON. Mr. President, one of the distinguished leaders of the House of Representatives is a Congressman from Illinois, DAN ROSTENKOWSKI, who has shown a firmness in leadership in the revenue field that I applaud.

He was one of those in Speaker O'NEILL's delegation who met with Soviet General Secretary Mikhail S. Gorbachev.

His observations, which were printed in the Chicago Sun-Times, will be of interest to my colleagues in both the House and the Senate who read the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

The encouraging side of Congressman ROSTENKOWSKI's observations is that Gorbachev was on top of the issues and was an effective communicator. That makes reconciliation more possible, but it also means we have a tough adversary.

Congressman ROSTENKOWSKI's call for more communication between our nations is a sound suggestion. I urge my colleagues to read the article.

Mr. President, I ask that the ROSTENKOWSKI observations be printed in the RECORD.

The article follows:

[From the Chicago Sun-Times, Apr. 21, 1985]

GORBACHEV WARMS UP TO MORE TALKS

(By Dan Rostenkowski)

The first signs of spring were appearing in Moscow as Soviet General Secretary Mikhail S. Gorbachev met with the congressional delegation I was a part of.

"The ice has started to move," he said, referring more to the relationship between our two countries than the weather. He spent nearly four hours developing this theme. By the time we were done, he'd convinced me that he was trying to encourage a further thaw.

His tone was conversational rather than confrontational. But he didn't waste much time on idle chatter. He had a clear agenda in front of him, with the key points underlined in red, yellow or green ink.

He showed no signs of interest in reforming the Soviet system to help advance the peace process. Instead, he said, each side should mind its internal business and not meddle in the affairs of the other. He doesn't want to change our ways and doesn't think we should try to change theirs. Immigration policy, he said, was one such issue.

Gorbachev suggested that political leaders in both our nations had a common interest in holding down military expenditures, while military men in both lobbied to increase them.

Perhaps, he said, the differences were greater between the military and civilian leaders on each side than between the governments of our two nations.

He was disappointed that President Reagan had rejected his suggestion of a military-spending freeze, but it wasn't threatening. Gorbachev has apparently given a lot of thought to how to deal with our president. He said he's read a study called "America in the Eighties." It was pepared for the president and it's about 600 pages long. I haven't read it yet.

Clearly, he was using us to send a simple message—he wants to talk with Americans more. He encouraged us to ask Americans to listen to what he's saying instead of reflexively rejecting it. Gorbachev said easing international tensions is a priority. He's concluded that the United States and the U.S.S.R. continue to be adversaries in many areas, but that doesn't mean we must be enemies.

America has made a mistake in trying to use economic sanctions to change Soviet behavior, Gorbachev said. Such moves just don't work and may backfire. The American firms involved lose the business. Foreign firms enjoy new opportunities to sell to the Soviets and the Soviets become just that much more determined to go their way with a minimal reliance on the United States.

He didn't directly address the several points of friction in the world like Central America and Afghanistan. Nor did he complain about American actions in other parts of the world.

He did spend quite a bit of time criticizing the Reagan "star wars" proposal, though. At one point he referred to a remark by Defense Secretary Caspar W. Wineberger made in defending the space initiative. "If the Russians create such a defense system, our world would be more dangerous," Gorbachev quoted Wineberger.

"Why is it dangerous if we do it, and not if you do it?" he asked. None of us attempted to answer. We were there to listen and engage in a friendly exchange. No one wanted to pick a fight.

What did I learn from our extensive conversation? Did Gorbachev mean everything he said? I don't know. I hope so.

I was convinced that he is a very effective communicator. He has a good grasp of the issues that divide our nations. He has mastered the rhetoric of reconciliation.

I got the feeling he'd like to visit the United States. I think he should. Reagan should probably visit the Soviet Union, too. That way the people of our two nations could make their own decisions about the challenges we face and how we can best respond to them.

Gorbachev called for more communication between our two nations. Based on what I learned in our conversation, that is one Soviet initiative I can endorse without qualification.●

U.S. REFUGEE POLICY

● Mr. SPECTER. I submit for the RECORD my statement before the Judiciary Subcommittee on Immigration and Refugee Policy. I also submit for the RECORD the witness list for the hearing on Extended Voluntary Departure Issues on Monday, April 22, 1985, along with my question for INS commissioner Nelson and Assistant Secretary of State Elliot Abrams and accompanying correspondence.

STATEMENT OF SENATOR ARLEN SPECTER BEFORE JUDICIARY SUBCOMMITTEE ON IMMIGRATION AND REFUGEE POLICY

At the outset, I thank you, Mr. Chairman, for holding these important hearings at my request. You have an impressive list of witnesses and I commend your efforts to deal with these troubling issues of U.S. refugee policy and procedures, particularly those raised by the arrests in January of some 60 aliens across the country in an effort to crack down on the Sanctuary movement.

I was in Philadelphia on January 14, 1985, when a Guatemalan family—Mr. and Mrs. Morelos and their three-year-old child—were arrested and taken into custody by the Immigration and Naturalization Service as part of this nationwide crackdown.

According to information provided to me, a warrant of arrest was issued for the husband and wife, Mr. and Mrs. Morelos, on grounds of illegal entry. The wife and three-year-old child were then taken into custody. Later, Mr. Morelos surrendered to Immigration and Naturalization authorities when he found out that his wife and children were in custody.

On the facts as presented to me, Mr. Morelos had a valid claim for asylum on the basis of a well-founded fear of persecution based on his prior political activities and expression of political opinions in Guatemala. Mr. Morelos' contention of torture was corroborated by scars which I personally observed on his body.

When I discussed this case with an INS agent in Philadelphia, I was advised that a warrant of arrest was issued because Mr. Morelos had not made an application for asylum.

In my judgment, a law enforcement agency like INS should not issue a warrant of arrest for a person until an investigation discloses a violation of law without a valid defense. As District Attorney of Philadelphia, I made it a stringent rule to inquire as to the surrounding circumstances to find out about potential defenses before obtaining warrants of arrest or taking people into custody.

As a matter of fundamental fairness, it is my opinion that the Government of the United States should not take people into custody unless there is a valid basis for doing so after a thorough investigation including potential defenses. It seems to me that it is not sufficient to justify the INS action on the basis that Mr. Morelos had the burden of filing an application for asylum. He is an alien and does not really understand the intricacies of the law; and, if he did, he could hardly be expected to file such an application considering the fact that virtually no such applications are granted and the filing itself would doubtless activate an enforcement proceeding against him.

The action of the Immigration and Naturalization Service was particularly offensive in taking his wife and child into custody. It is an horrendous experience to be arrested and the three-year-old child who was subjected to the arrest will doubtless bear the scars of the incident for many years, to say nothing of the trauma on the mother.

I have written INS Commissioner Alan Nelson urging a review of INS procedures so that legal proceedings are authorized only where an investigation discloses a violation without a valid defense. If legal proceedings are instituted, a summons rather than a warrant of arrest should be used unless there is a valid reason to believe that the person will flee or that bail is realistically necessary to guarantee the appearance of that individual at the next proceeding. In the case of the Morelos family, there was no such reason to be concerned about flight since the Immigration and Naturalization Service had known of their whereabouts since September 1984. In any event, the posting of the $3,000 in bail by other parties was hardly any guarantee of the appearance of the Morelos family for the next proceeding so that the justification for the warrant of arrest was not at all well-founded.

As to the filing of asylum petitions, I have urged INS to adopt procedures which maintain confidentiality (in camera proceedings) so that foreign governments will not know of the contentions of their nationals so as to avoid reprisals and fear of filing such applications.

Beyond these procedures, I have also written Secretary of State George Shultz, along with Commissioner Nelson, about the applicable policies which, as I understand it, lead to only 0.4 percent of Guatemalan applications for asylum having been granted in 1984 and only 2.5 percent of the applications for asylum from Salvadorans having been granted in 1984. In light of the social unrest in those countries and the activism of many of their citizens, it strikes me as a shockingly low figure to have such a small number of applications for asylum granted.

In both letters, I raised the question whether consideration has been given to halting deportations of Guatemalans through a grant of extended volutary departure or any other procedure. It seems to me that extended voluntary departure would be appropriate for Guatemalans as it has been applied for those who have fled from other countries with such pervasive social unrest affecting so large a segment of the citizens.

On March 14, 1985, I questioned Elliott Abrams, Assistant Secretary of State for Human Rights and Humanitarian Affairs, about this remarkably low approval rate in 1984 for asylum applications filed by Salvadorans and Guatemalans, and whether it could reflect and appropriate application of a fair standard. Mr. Abrams suggested that a GAO study of the asylum process would be "a good idea" and I have requested just such a study.

I would like to submit for the record copies of my letter to GAO Comptroller General Charles A. Bowsher requesting a study of the standards and procedures applied by INS and the State Department when reviewing asylum applications, as well as copies of my letters to Secretary Shultz and Commissioner Nelson, and their responses.

The civil strife in Central America has displaced thousands of inhabitants. In visits to Central America in May and August of 1983, I witnessed first-hand the breakdown of justice in El Salvador, and when I returned I succeeded in getting the Congress to withhold 30% of our aid to that country until the guardsmen charged with the murder of the four churchwomen were tried. In addition, I have seen to it that $9 million in aid was earmarked for judicial reform in El Salvador so that the rule of law can begin to replace the reign of terror perpetuated by rampant illegal killings.

I am also deeply troubled by reports coming out of Guatemala of the disappearance of two journalists, both from Pennsylvania, while working on a story in that country, and about the murders of a number of member of the Grupode Apoyo Muto, an association of relatives of "disappeared" Guatemalans.

According to figures compiled by the U.S. Embassy, 622 people have been listed as missing since General Ascar Mejia Victores came to power in August 1983 through a coup d'etat. I understand other western embassies say the number is even higher.

It is essential that we treat the displaced victims of the civil strife in Central America fairly and with compassion. I was an original cosponsor of legislation to halt the deportation of Salvadorans pending a study of the circumstances and condition of displaced Salvadorans in Central America and here in the U.S. I have cosponsored this legislation again in the 99th Congress.

Again, I commend you for holding these much needed hearings, and I appreciate the opportunity to testify and to ask questions of Elliott Abrams, Assistant Secretary of State for the Bureau of Human Rights and Humanitarian Affairs, and of Commissioner Alan Nelson of the Immigration and Naturalization Service.

HEARING ON EXTENDED VOLUNTARY DEPARTURE ISSUES

WITNESS LIST

1. The Honorable Dennis DeConcini.

First panel

2. The Honorable Elliott Abrams, Assistant Secretary of State, Bureau of Human Rights and Humanitarian Affairs.

3. The Honorable Alan C. Nelson, Commissioner, Immigration and Naturalization Service.

Second panel

4. Michael Myers, Washington Representative, Church World Service.

5. Morton Halperin, Acting Director, American Civil Liberties Union.

Third panel

6. Georges Fauriol, Senior Fellow, Center for Strategic and International Studies.

7. Lynn Bouchey, Chairman, Council for Inter-American Security.

Afternoon panel

1. The Honorable Arlen Specter.

2. The Honorable Alan Nelson, Commissioner, accompanied by Maurice Inman, General Counsel, Immigration and Naturalization Service.

3. The Honorable Elliott Abrams, Assistant Secretary of State.

QUESTION FOR BOTH COMMISSIONER NELSON AND SECRETARY ABRAMS

In my letter of February 1, 1985, I expressed particular concern about the arrest of the Morelos family, including their three-year-old child.

I asked both State and INS to review Mr. Morelos' claim for asylum to determine whether his claim is valid. As I noted in my letter, I personally saw the scars Mr. Morelos said were the result of torture.

I can understand the need for confidentiality with regard to a pending application. Without going into detail, have you reviewed Mr. Morelos' claim, and is it your opinion that it is valid?

If not, can you tell us why not?

2. Also for both witnesses:

Also in my letter, I asked INS and State to work together to develop procedures to ensure the confidentiality of asylum applications and proceedings so that home country governments do not learn who has applied for asylum in the U.S. and has, in most cases, made allegations of abuse by that government, in order to avoid reprisals and the fear of filing such applications.

What is the status of these efforts?

3. For both witnesses:

Another reason refugees from Guatemala and El Salvador are reluctant to apply for asylum is that so few applications are approved.

As I noted in my letter, I am told only 0.4 percent of Guatemalan applications and 2.5 percent of Salvadoran applications were granted in 1984.

Given the civil war in El Salvador, and the general political unrest in that country and in Guatemala, as well as the recent disappearance of two Pennsylvania journalists and murders of members of the Grupo de Apoyo Mutuo, a politically active group pressing the Guatemalan government for information on the disappearances of their loved ones, which seems indicative of the general political turmoil documented by respected outside groups—given this evidence of social unrest and activism, how can you explain these remarkably low approval rates?

If the problem is lack of corroborating evidence—understandably difficult for a refugee who has fled in a hurry and cannot bring in neighbors, etc. as supporting witnesses of persecution threats—have INS and State considered alternative ways of verifying these claims so as to avoid deportation of those who have legitimate asylum claims but lack a signed death threat?

4. For Secretary Abrams

I am concerned about the asylum application review procedures which call for the State Department to review each and every application and render an "advisory opinion."

While foreign policy may appropriately play a role in our overall immigration policy, it should not be a part of our asylum policy, which is based on nonpolitical humanitarian obligations.

What efforts are made, or procedures established, to avoid a desk officer being influenced by foreign policy concerns when making a recommendation on an asylum application?

Do you know of any cases in which the State Department has recommended denial of an application and INS went ahead and approved that application?

If so, approximately what percentage of State advisory opinions are "overruled" by INS?

U.S. SENATE,
Washington, DC.

Hon. ALAN C. NELSON,
Commissioner, Immigration and Naturalization Service, Washington, DC.

DEAR COMMISSIONER NELSON: I am deeply concerned about the policy and procedures involved in the recent arrest of some 60 aliens across the country and particularly about the arrest of a Guatemalan family in Philadelphia, Pennsylvania on January 14, 1985.

According to information provided to me, a warrant of arrest was issued for a husband and wife, Mr. and Mrs. Morelos, on grounds of illegal entry. The wife and a three-year-old child were then taken into custody. Later, Mr. Morelos surrendered to Immigration and Naturalization authorities when he found out that his wife and child were in custody.

On the facts as presented to me, Mr. Morelos has a valid claim for asylum on the basis of a well-founded fear of persecution based on his prior political activities and expressions of political opinions in Guatemala. Mr. Morelos' contention of torture was corroborated by scars which I personally observed on his body.

When I discussed this case with an INS agent in Philadelphia, I was advised that a warrant of arrest was issued because Mr. Morelos had not made an application for asylum.

In my judgment, a law enforcement agency like INS should not issue a warrant of arrest for a person until an investigation discloses a violation of law without a valid defense. As District Attorney of Philadelphia, I made it a stringent rule to inquire as to the surrounding circumstances to find out about potential defenses before obtaining warrants of arrest or taking people into custody.

As a matter of fundamental fairness, it is my opinion that the Government of the United States should not take people into custody unless there is a valid basis for doing so after a thorough investigation including potential defenses. It seems to me that it is not sufficient to justify the INS action on the basis that Mr. Morelos had the burden of filing an application for asylum. He is an alien and does not really understand the intricacies of the law; and, if he did, he could hardly be expected to file such an application considering the fact that virtually no such applications are granted and the filing itself would doubtless activate an enforcement proceeding against him.

The action of the Immigration and Naturalization Service was particularly offensive in taking his wife and child into custody. It is an horrendous experience to be arrested and the three-year-old child who was subjected to the arrest will doubtless bear the scars of the incident for many years, to say nothing of the trauma on the mother.

I strongly urge that you as the Director of the Immigration and Naturalization Service review your procedures so that legal proceedings are authorized only where an investigation discloses a violation without a valid defense. If legal proceedings are instituted, a summons rather than a warrant of arrest should be used unless there is a valid reason to believe that the person will flee or that bail is realistically necessary to guarantee the appearance of that individual at the next proceeding. In the case of the Morelos family, there was no such reason to be concerned about flight since the Immigration and Naturalization Service had known of their whereabouts since September 1984. In any event, the posting of the $3,000 in bail by other parties was hardly any guarantee of the appearance of the Morelos family for the next proceeding so that the justification for the warrant of arrest was not at all well-founded.

As to the filing of asylum petitions, I urge you to adopt procedures which maintain confidentiality (in camera proceedings) so that foreign governments will not know of the contentions of their nationals so as to avoid reprisals and fear of filing such applications.

Beyond these procedures, I am also troubled by the applicable policies which, as I understand it, lead to only 0.4 percent of Guatemalan applications for asylum having been granted in 1984 and only 2.5 percent of the applications for asylum from Salvadorans having been granted in 1984. In light of the social unrest in those countries and the activism of many of their citizens, it strikes me as a shockingly low figure to have such a small number of applications for asylum granted. I would be interested to know what standards are used and whether Mr. Morelos would have qualified, under existing standards, considering his contentions of torture which were corroborated by his scars:

I would be further interested to know whether consideration has been given to halting deportations of Guatemalans through a grant of extended voluntary departure or any other procedure. It seems to be that extended voluntary departure would be appropriate for Guatemalans as it has been applied for those who have fled from other countries with such pervasive social unrest affecting so large a segment of the citizens.

I would very much appreciate your prompt response to the questions raised in this letter.

Sincerely,

ARLEN SPECTER.

U.S. SENATE,
Washington, DC.

Hon. GEORGE P. SHULTZ,
Secretary, Department of State, Washington, DC.

DEAR SECRETARY SHULTZ: I am deeply concerned about the policy and procedures involved in the recent arrest of some 60 aliens across the country and particularly about the arrest of a Guatemalan family in Philadelphia, Pennsylvania on January 14, 1985. While the arrests were carried out by Immigration and Naturalization Service, the procedures employed are inexorably intertwined with our immigration policies in which the State Department plays a key role.

According to information provided to me, a warrant of arrest was issued for a husband and wife, Mr. and Mrs. Morelos, on grounds of illegal entry. The wife and a three-old child were then taken into custody. Later, Mr. Morelos surrendered to Immigration and Naturalization authorities when he found out that his wife and child were in custody.

On the facts as presented to me, Morelos has a valid claim for asylum on the basis of a well-founded fear of persecution based on his prior political activities and expressions of political opinions in Guatemala. Mr. Morelos' contention of torture was corroborated by scars which I personally observed on his body.

When I discussed this case with an INS agent in Philadelphia, I was advised that a warrant of arrest was issued because Mr. Morelos has not made an application for asylum.

In my judgment, as I have written INS Commissioner Alan Nelson, a law enforcement agency like INS should not issue a warrant of arrest for a person until an investigation discloses a violation of law without a valid defense. As District Attorney of Philadelphia, I have made it a stringent rule to inquire as to the surrounding circumstances to find out about potential defenses before obtaining warrants of arrest or taking people into custody.

As a matter of fundamental fairness, it is my opinion that the Government of the United States should not take people into custody unless there is a valid basis for doing so after a thorough investigation including potential defenses. It seems to me that it is not sufficient to justify the INS action on the basis that Mr. Morelos had the burden of filing an application for asylum. He is an alien and does not really understand the intricacies of the law; and, if he did, he could hardly be expected to file such an application considering the fact that virtually no such applications are granted and the filing itself would doubtless activate an enforcement proceeding against him.

This is where the States Deparment's involvement is particularly relevant. I am troubled by the applicable policies which, as I understand it, lead to only 0.4 percent of Guatemalan applications for asylum having been granted in 1984 and only 2.5 percent of the applications for asylum from Salvadorans having been granted in 1984. In light of the social unrest in those countries and the activism of many of their citizens, it strikes me as a shockingly low figure to have such a small number of applications for asylum granted. I would be interested to know what standards are used in the State Department's review of applications and whether Mr. Morelos would have qualified, under existing standards, considering his contentions of torture which were corroborated by his scars.

In addition, I urge you to work with Commissioner Nelson to adopt procedures that maintain the confidentiality of asylum applications (in camera proceedings), so that foreign governments will not know of the contentions of their nationals so as to avoid reprisals and fear of filing such applications.

I would be further interested to know whether consideration has been given to halting deportations of Guatemalans through a grant of extended voluntary department or any other procedure. It seems to me that extended voluntary departure would be appropriate for Guatemalans as it has been applied for those who have fled from other countries with such pervasive social unrest affecting so large a segment of the citizens.

I would very much appreciate your prompt response to the questions raised in this letter.

Sincerely,

ARLEN SPECTER.

U.S. DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Washington, DC, March 1, 1985.

Hon. ARLEN SPECTER,
U.S. Senate.

DEAR SENATOR SPECTER: Thank you for your letter of February 1, 1985 expressing your deep concern about the arrests of some 60 illegal aliens and in particular about the arrest of a Guatemalan family in Philadelphia, Mr. and Mrs. Morelos and their child.

We note in your letter your belief that Mr. Morelos has a valid claim for asylum based on a well-founded fear of persecution because of his prior political activities and opinions in Guatemala. You also urge us to work with I.N.S. Commissioner Nelson to adopt procedures that maintain the confidentiality of asylum applications.

The Department keeps the contents and its views on asylum applications confidential in order to protect the applicant or his relatives. Attorneys for asylum applicants are particularly insistent upon the need for strict confidentiality, and we must maintain this policy. We are confident that the I.N.S maintains a similar policy.

With respect to the asylum claim by Mr. Morelos and his family, we will be prepared to review the case when the record and file are sent to us by I.N.S. Philadelphia, in accordance with established procedures in these matters. You may be assured that at such time we will take fully into account your views on the validity of the asylum request. However, since we have not had an opportunity to review the application and any supporting documents, we are not in a position to comment on the merits of the case.

We will continue our careful review of applications for asylum on a case-by-case basis, and monitor developments and conditions in the region. This is not always an easy task. However, the procedures for a considered and just determination of asylum requests for Central Americans are in place, and they are applied by our officers in a compassionate and understanding manner.

Sincerely,

J. EDWARD FOX,
Acting Assistant Secretary,
Legislative and Intergovernmental Affairs.

U.S. DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Washington, DC, March 8, 1985.

Hon. ARLEN SPECTER,
U.S. Senate.

DEAR SENATOR SPECTER: Thank you for your letter of January 18, 1985 in which you state your deep concern about the arrests of illegal aliens on January 14, 1985. You inquire about asylum procedures, the granting of extended voluntary departure to Guatemalan and Salvadoran aliens in this country, and you refer to the "sanctuary' movement as the target for arrests.

We realize that violence is an enormous problem in Central America, and that many have fled their country to avoid civil strife. There is also a long history of migration to the United States by aliens seeking work. Many try to remain here by applying for asylum or seeking extended voluntary departure (EVD) status, which temporarily suspends deportation.

The reason most often cited for granting EVD to Salvadorans, or any other Central American, is the claim that those who have been deported have suffered persecution on return to their country. However, repeated studies of the treatment and condition of deported Salvadorans have disclosed no such pattern. In the most recent U.S. Embassy survey of about 500 El Salvadoran deportees, not a single case of physical abuse or murder was found. Many deportees could not be located because they had given fictitious or incomplete addresses, and some 39 people had already returned illegally to the United States. Despite the problem in locating some deportees, the study simply does not suggest a pattern of targeted persecution of the deported Salvadorans.

In 1983 the Attorney General and the Secretary of State carefully considered the question of EVD status for Central American aliens and determined that such status was not then appropriate. Their views are still valid at this time and I enclose copies of their letters.

In addition, there is a program in place in El Salvador, conducted by the Intergovernmental Committee for Migration (ICM), a highly respected international organization. ICM meets every Salvadoran who has been sent home by the United States, and each is offered resettlement assistance. Each returnee reports to ICM once a month for six months, discussing any difficulties which he or she may have. If any returnees had been harmed or disappeared, it surely would be made known publicly.

Our international commitments do not permit the forced expulsion of a refugee to a country or frontier where persecution is likely to occur. In addition, the Refugee Act of 1980 provides for the granting of asylum status to those who establish a well-founded fear of persecution upon return to their country of nationality for reasons of race, religion, nationality, membership of a particular social group, or political opinion. By law, the responsibility for establishing a well-founded fear of persecution rests with each applicant. The Department of State reviews each and every asylum application and renders an advisory opinion on the merits of the application. However, the decision on the asylum request is made by the I.N.S. director concerned who takes into consideration our advisory opinion. Since the decision on the asylum application is a matter for I.N.S., you may wish to consult with that Service to ascertain the statistical data on these cases.

The United States is well aware of its legal and treaty obligations and responsibilities, including the prohibition against the forced expulsion of refugees. We have a long-standing record of support for relief activities on behalf of refugees and a generous resettlement policy. No other country has provided as much assistance, or as many resettlement opportunities, to refugees as the United States.

We cannot concur with the position taken by some churches to harbor or conceal illegal aliens from Central America or elsewhere. Our conduct in this matter should be guided by the rule of law. Since the question of harboring or concealing illegal aliens may involve a breach of federal law, you may also wish to consider requesting the Department of Justice to comment on the implications of the actions.

We will continue our careful review of applications for EVD and asylum on a case-by-case basis, and monitor developments and conditions in the region. This is not always an easy task. However, the procedures for a considered and just determination of EVD and asylum request for Central Americans are in place, and they are applied by our officers in a compassionate and understanding manner.

Sincerely,

J. EDWARD FOX,
Acting Assistant Secretary, Legislative and Intergovernmental Affairs.

U.S. SENATE,
Washington, DC, April 4, 1985.

Hon. CHARLES A. BOWSHER,
Comptroller General, General Accounting Office, Washington, DC.

DEAR MR. BOWSHER: I am writing to request a GAO study into the practices and procedures of the Immigration and Naturalization Service and the Department of State for judging claims for asylum in the United States, especially concerning Central America.

The civil strife in Central America has displaced thousands of inhabitants. In visits to Central America in May and August of 1983, I witnessed first-hand the breakdown of justice in El Salvador, and when I returned I succeeded in getting the Congress to withhold 30% of our aid to that country until the guardsmen charged with the murder of the four churchwomen were tried. In addition, I have seen to it that $9 million in aid was earmarked for judicial reform in El Salvador so that the rule of law can begin to replace the reign of terror perpetuated by rampant illegal killings.

It is essential that we treat the displaced victims of the civil strife in Central America fairly and with compassion. I was an original cosponsor of legislation to halt the deportation of Salvadorans pending a study of the circumstances and condition of displaced Salvadorans in Central America and here in the U.S. I have cosponsored this legislation again in the 99th Congress.

I am also deeply concerned about the policy and procedures involved in the arrests of some 60 displaced aliens—mostly Salvadorans and Guatemalans—across the country earlier this year in an effort to crack down on the Sanctuary movement, and particularly about the arrest of a Guatemalan family in Philadelphia on January 14, 1985. I have written Secretary of State George Shultz and Immigration and Naturalization Commissioner Alan Nelson complaining about these arrests and the fundemantal offensiveness of taking a Guatemalan mother and her three-year-old child into custody, as was done in Philadelphia.

I have also requested Senate hearings on the issues raised by the INS arrests, and Senator Simpson, Chairman of the Judiciary Subcommittee on Immigration and Refugee Policy, has agreed to schedule such hearings in the near future.

I met with the Guatemalan family arrested in Philadelphia in January—and, on the facts as represented to me, the father, Mr. Morelos, has a valid claim for asylum on the basis of a well-founded fear of persecution based on his prior political activities and expressions of political opinions in Guatemala. Mr. Morelos' contention of torture was corroborated by scars which I personally observed on his body.

I am troubled by the applicable policies which, as I understand it, lead to only 0.4 percent of Guatemalan applications for asylum having been granted in 1984 and only 2.5 percent of the applications for asylum from Salvadorans having been granted in 1984. In light of the social unrest in those countries and the activism of many of their citizens, it strikes me as a shockingly low figure to have such a small number of applications for asylum granted.

On March 14, 1985, I questioned Elliott Abrams, Assistant Secretary of State for Human Rights and Humanitarian Affairs, about this remarkably low approval rate in 1984 for asylum applications filed by Salvadorans and Guatemalans, and whether it could reflect an appropriate application of a fair standard. Mr. Abrams suggested that a GAO study of the asylum process would be "a good idea."

I am attaching a list of specific areas the GAO report should cover. This kind of thorough analysis is long overdue.

If you have any questions, please contact me, or have your staff contact Suzanne Spaulding at 224-5863.

I appreciate your prompt consideration of this request.

Sincerely,

ARLEN SPECTER.

AREAS GAO REPORT SHOULD COVER

Specifically, I request that the GAO report include the following information:

1. The standard and criteria being applied by INS in granting claims of asylum;

2. Whether the same standard and criteria is applied across the board to asylum applications regardless of the home country of the applicant; if not, please examine and report the differences and reasons for deviance;

3. Whether the approval rate for asylum applications generally and/or by country varies significantly from one INS district office to another, and the reasons for any such variation;

4. The standard and criteria applied by the State Department in recommending approval or denial of asylum applications;

5. Whether the same standard and criteria is applied by the State Department to all applications, regardless of the home country of the applicant, and is applied in the same manner, e.g., same requirements for corroboration and objective evidence, same criteria for severity of threat, etc., and the nature of and reasons for divergence; and

6. Whether the same procedures are consistently followed within the State Department and the INS, respectively, when considering all asylum applications. If not, describe circumstances under which procedures vary and cite the nature of and reasons for divergence.●

RESOLUTIONS APPROVED BY SOUTH CAROLINA HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

● Mr. HOLLINGS. Mr. President, on behalf of Senator THURMOND and myself, I would like to call to the attention of the Senate these seven resolutions unanimously approved by the South Carolina House of Representatives.

The resolutions follow:

H. 2620

Whereas, on Tuesday, March 19, 1985, legislation of significant importance was introduced in the Congress which would limit the growth of textile and apparel imports into the United States; and

Whereas, Senator Strom Thurmond of South Carolina introduced Senate Bill 680 in the Senate with twenty-five other cosponsors and Representative James T. Broyhill of North Carolina introduced companion House Bill 1562 in the House of Representatives with one hundred twenty-two other co-sponsors, the large number of cosponsors being indicative of the strong support for these bills; and

Whereas, this legislation, known as the Textile and Apparel Trade Enforcement Act, would apply to all exporting countries except Canada and the European Economic Community and would:

(1) Limit shipments from the twenty largest textile-producing countries to 1983 levels.

(2) Broaden textile quotas to cover a wider range of textile and apparel imports.

(3) Reallocate some of the existing import share to smaller countries.

(4) Require the federal government to set up a special import-licensing system to police the import limits; and

Whereas, there can be no question that if steps are not taken immediately to set strict limits on textile and apparel imports into this country, the United States will lose its single most important manufacturing industry; and

Whereas, the members of the General Assembly, by this resolution, express their belief that the immediate enactment into law of either Senate Bill 680 or House Bill 1562 is urgently needed, is in the best interest of our country, and is necessary now to prevent the further erosion of one of our basic manufacturing industries. Now Therefore, be it

Resolved by the House of Representatives, the Senate concurring:

That the members of the General Assembly hereby memorialize the Congress to enact without delay Senate Bill 680 or companion House Bill 1562 which would limit textile and apparel imports into the United States.

Be it further resolved that copies of this resolution be forwarded to the President of the United States, to each United States Senator from South Carolina, each member of the House of Representatives from South Carolina, the Senate of the United States, and the House of Representatives of the United States.

H. 2592

Whereas, one and four-tenths percent of the American population, including more than forty thousand South Carolinians, are unable to use conventional printed library materials because of visual or physical handicaps; and

Whereas, print handicapped readers, including some five hundred thousand Americans and eight thousand South Carolinians, depend upon the fifty-six regional libraries which constitute the Library of Congress Network of Libraries for the Blind and Physically Handicapped to provide reading materials for education, information, and recreation; and

Whereas, the federal government and the individual states have traditionally shared in the support of this important library service, with books and periodicals on disk or tape, the machines necessary to read them, and braille books being supplied by the Library of Congress National Library Service for the Blind and Physically Handicapped and with staff, housing, and operating costs being supplied by the states; and

Whereas, library service for blind and handicapped readers is dependent on distribution of reading materials and equipment by mail, and the fifty-six regional libraries send more than twenty million items annually through the United States Postal Service; and

Whereas, the Administration's fiscal year 1986 budget proposes to eliminate all postal revenue foregone appropriations (postal subsidies) which would mean the "Free Matter for the Blind" mailing privilege, provided by Congress since 1904, would end as of October 1, 1985; and

Whereas, the states and territories are not financially able to assume on short notice the cost of mailing library materials to handicapped users (more than one hundred fifty thousand dollars a year for South Carolina); and

Whereas, the time and labor involved in individually weighing and canceling each of the twenty million items sent to patrons and then returned to the libraries would be a great addition to the work load of the United States Postal Service as well as that of the individual libraries; and

Whereas, many blind and handicapped readers on limited incomes would not be financially able to pay the return postage, totaling one hundred twenty thousand dollars a year for all readers, and in many instances would not be able to make arrangements for the materials to be returned to the post office for weighing and stamping and would probably be deprived of library service as a result. Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the House of Representatives, the Senate concurring:

That the members of the General Assembly request the United States Congress and the present Administration to take the necessary steps to insure that postal revenue foregone appropriations are provided to continue the "Free Matter for the Blind" mailing privilege which makes possible library service for blind and physically handicapped citizens of the United States.

Be it further resolved, that copies of this resolution be forwarded to the President of the United States, to each member of the South Carolina Congressional Delegation, the Speaker of the House of Representatives of the United States, and the President of the Senate of the United States.

H. 2711

Whereas, South Carolina is a predominantly rural state whose counties have a large percentage of federally-owned lands; and

Whereas, rural South Carolina counties are heavily dependent upon federally-shared revenues to replace the tax base which the federally-owned lands have displaced; and

Whereas, proposed cuts in federally-shared revenues from U.S. Forest Service timber cutting activities would further reduce the revenues which would be distributed to rural areas from the present level of two hundred twenty-five million dollars to sixty million dollars; and

Whereas, the effect of these proposed cuts in federal revenue sharing and in shared revenues from U.S. Forest Service timber cutting activities will have a disastrous effect on South Carolina's state and local governments, possibly resulting in tax increases of more than one hundred percent. Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the House of Representatives, the Senate concurring:

That the members of the General Assembly hereby request the President and the Congress to consider the disastrous effects on South Carolina and its rural areas of proposed federal cutbacks in revenue sharing and in shared revenues from U.S. Forest Service timber cutting activities.

Be it further resolved that the President and Congress are urged to continue funding shared revenues from U.S. Forest Service timber cutting activities at the present level of two hundred twenty-five million in order to prevent drastic tax increases on the state and local level in South Carolina.

Be it further resolved that copies of this resolution be forwarded to the President of the United States, to each United States Senator from South Carolina, each member of the House of Representatives from South Carolina, the Senate of the United States, and the House of Representatives of the United States.

H. 2471

Whereas, it is vital that the leaders of this great nation adopt a national strategy of peace that would:

(1) Inspire, focus, and unite the national will and determination to achieve this goal of peace and freedom;

(2) Achieve overall military and technological superiority over the Soviet Union;

(3) Create a strategic defense and a civil defense which would protect United States citizens against nuclear war at least as well as the Soviets defend their citizens;

(4) Accept no arms control agreement which in any way jeopardizes this security of the United States or its allies or locks the United States into a position of military inferiority;

(5) Reestablish effective security and intelligence capabilities;

(6) Pursue positive nonmilitary means to roll back the growth of Communism;

(7) Help our allies and other non-Communist countries defend themselves against Communist aggressions;

(8) Maintain a strong economy and protect our overseas sources of energy and other vital raw materials; and

Whereas, it will take an enormous effort to achieve the adoption of a National Strategy of Peace Through Strength. Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the House of Representatives, the Senate concurring:

That the members of the General Assembly memorialize the President and the Congress to take whatever measures that may be appropriate and necessary to adopt a National Strategy of Peace Through Strength.

Be it further resolved that copies of this resolution be forwarded to the President, the Speaker of the House of Representatives, the President of the Senate, and each member of the congressional delegation from South Carolina.

H. 2372

Whereas, the federal government in its relations with the states very often requires the states to take certain action by legislation or otherwise by a specified date or risk the loss of federal funds in certain areas: and

Whereas, although in most of these cases the goal to be accomplished through the federally mandated action is worthy, commendable, and necessary, the fact remains that the Constitution of the United States reserves to the states the right to take or not take many of these actions without interference on the part of the federal government; and

Whereas, the members of the South Carolina General Assembly, by this resolution, hereby call on the Congress to cease the above practices which tend to usurp the power reserved to the States under the United States Constitution. Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the House of Representatives, the Senate concurring:

That the Congress of the United States is memorialized to cease the practice of requiring the States to take certain actions through legislation or otherwise or risk the loss of federal funds because in many cases the federally mandated actions are reserved to the power of the States under the United States Constitution.

Be it further resolved that a copy of this resolution be forwarded to each United States Senator from South Carolina, each member of the House of Representatives of Congress from South Carolina, the Senate of the United States and the House of Representatives of the United States.

H. 2530

Whereas, federal supplemental compensation (FSC) is a program whereby the federal government pays additional unemployment compensation benefits without cost to employers for a period of eight weeks to those people who have exhausted their other federal and state unemployment compensation benefits; and

Whereas, the FSC program was passed in the early 1980's in coordination with another program of federal unemployment compensation known as federal extended benefits; and

Whereas, federal extended benefits is a federal-state program where the employer pays one-half of the benefits and the federal government pays the other half of the benefits but federal law mandates that federal extended benefits stop when insured state unemployment drops below a level of five percent; and

Whereas, South Carolina's present level of insured state unemployment is approximately three and one-third percent which means that no federal extended benefits are now available in this State; and

Whereas, unfortunately the FSC program under the enabling federal legislation is also due to expire at the end of March, 1985; and

Whereas, for the FSC program to expire when federal extended benefits are not now available in South Carolina would be a particularly harsh blow to those citizens of this State who have exhausted their state unemployment compensation benefits; and

Whereas, although the FSC program may need some adjustments in order to be more responsive to economic conditions that actually exist in terms of its triggering mechanism, the General Assembly of South Carolina nevertheless believes that it is in the best interest of the people of South Carolina and the United States for the federal supplemental compensation program to be extended by Congress for at least an additional period of one year with any amendment thereto that the Congress deems appropriate and necessary. Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the House of Representatives, the Senate concurring:

That the members of the General Assembly hereby memorialize the Congress of the United States to extend the Federal Supplemental compensation (FSC) program for at least an additional period of one year.

Be it further resolved that a copy of this resolution be forwarded to each United States Senator from South Carolina, each member of the House of Representatives of Congress from South Carolina, the Senate of the United States and the House of Representatives of the United States.

H. 2636

Whereas, the State of South Carolina's economic prosperity is totally linked with the vitality of the agriculture industry; and

Whereas, currently the agriculture industry is in the worst economic slump in recent years because of stresses created by a combination of limited credit, high interest rates, the strong dollar, falling land and equipment values, low prices, and unfair foreign competition; and

Whereas, a single state government can do little to protect its farmers from those conditions because the problems in agriculture exist nationwide; and

Whereas, agricultural policy for the Nation is determined in Washington, D.C. by the administration, the Congress, and the Department of Agriculture; and

Whereas, the nation's farmers have not shared in the benefits of the recovery that some other sectors of the nation's economy have enjoyed; and

Whereas, the agricultural policymakers in the federal government have not developed effective solutions to the problems of limited credit, high interest rates, the strong dollar, falling values, low prices, and unfair foreign competiton to effect a recovery in the agriculture industry. Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the House of Representatives, the Senate concurring:

1. That the General Assembly of the State of South Carolina urges the federal government to take action to relieve the economic stresses that burden this nation's farmers;

2. That Congress take action to mitigate unfair tax consequences resulting from the sale of real and personal property to alleviate agricultural debt;

3. That Congress continue the federal tax credit on ethanol as an octane booster and fuel extender for gasoline;

4. That Congress, in its movement toward a market oriented agriculture system, give protection to the competitive position of the American farmers consistent with that accorded farmers in foreign nations;

5. That Congress recognize that the coordinated USDA and farmer supported boll weevil eradication program is not sufficient to make cotton production profitable unless our American textile industry is given stronger support in its battle against unfair foreign competition;

6. That Congress react to the subsidized exportation of Canadian lumber into this country, resulting in a forty-two percent market share in South Carolina;

7. That Congress continue conservation assistance during these perilous times when farmers are unable to afford such practices alone;

8. That Congress reinstitute voluntary supply management programs in order to reduce the overstock of commodities that drag down to unprofitable levels;

9. That Congress develop and adopt a long term food and agricultural policy that incorporates domestic needs and international market development.

Be it further resolved that copies of this resolution be forwarded to the presiding officers of both Houses of the Congress of the United States and to each member of Congress representing South Carolina.●

RULES OF THE JOINT COMMITTEE ON PRINTING

● Mr. MATHIAS. Mr. President, I am pleased to report to the Senate that the Joint Committee on Printing has organized for the 99th Congress. For the benefit of my Senate colleagues, I am submitting the committee rules and I ask unanimous consent that they be printed in the RECORD.

The material follows:

CONTENTS OF RULES

Rule 1. Committee rules.
Rule 2. Regular committee meetings.
Rule 3. Quorum.
Rule 4. Proxies.
Rule 5. Open and closed meetings.
Rule 6. Alternating chairmanship and vice chairmanship by Congresses.
Rule 7. Parliamentary questions.
Rule 8. Hearings: Public announcements and witnesses.
Rule 9. Official hearing record.
Rule 10. Witnesses for committee hearings.
Rule 11. Confidential information furnished to the committee.
Rule 12. Broadcasting of committee hearings.
Rule 13. Committee reports.
Rule 14. Confidentiality of committee reports.
Rule 15. Committee staff.
Rule 16. Committee chairman.

RULE 1. COMMITTEE RULES

(a) The rules of the Senate and House insofar as they are applicable, shall govern the committee.

(b) The committee's rules shall be published in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD as soon as possible following the committee's organizational meeting in each odd-numbered year.

(c) Where these rules require a vote of the members of the committee, polling of members either in writing or by telephone shall not be permitted to substitute for a vote taken at a committee meeting, unless the ranking minority member assents to waiver of this requirement.

(d) Proposals for amending committee rules shall be sent to all members at least one week before final action is taken thereon, unless the amendment is made by unanimous consent.

RULE 2. REGULAR COMMITTEE MEETINGS

(a) The regular meeting date of the committee shall be the second Wednesday of every month when the House and Senate are in session. A regularly scheduled meeting need not be held if there is no business to be considered and after appropriate notification is made to the ranking minority member. Additional meetings may be called by the chairman as he may deem necessary or at the request of the majority of the members of the committee.

(b) If the chairman of the Committee is not present at any meeting of the committee, the vice-chairman or ranking member of the majority party on the committee who is present shall preside at the meeting.

RULE 3. QUORUM

(a) Five members of the committee shall constitute a quorum which is required for the purpose of closing meetings, promulgating committee orders, or changing the rules of the committee.

(b) Three members shall constitute a quorum for purposes of taking testimony and receiving evidence.

RULE 4. PROXIES

(a) Written or telegraphic proxies of committee members will be received and recorded on any vote taken by the committee, except at the organization meeting at the beginning of each Congress or for the purpose of creating a quorum.

(b) Proxies will be allowed on any such votes for the purpose of recording a member's position on a question only when the absentee committee member has been informed of the question and has affirmatively requested that he be recorded.

RULE 5. OPEN AND CLOSED MEETINGS

(a) Each meeting for the transaction of business of the committee shall be open to the public except when the committee, in open session and with a quorum present, determines by roll call vote that all or part of the remainder of the meeting on that day shall be closed to the public. No such vote shall be required to close a meeting that relates solely to internal budget or personnel matters.

(b) No person other than members of the committee, and such congressional staff and other representatives as they may authorize shall be present in any business session which has been closed to the public.

RULE 6. ALTERNATING CHAIRMANSHIP AND VICE CHAIRMANSHIP BY CONGRESSES

(a) The chairmanship and vice chairmanship of the committee shall alternate between the House and the Senate by Congresses. The senior member of the minority party in the House of Congress opposite to that of the chairman shall be the ranking minority member of the committee.

(b) In the event the House and Senate are under different party control, the chairman and vice-chairman shall represent the majority party in their respective Houses. When the chairman and vice-chairman represent different parties, the vice-chairman shall also fulfill the responsibilities of the ranking minority member as prescribed by these rules.

RULE 7. PARLIAMENTARY QUESTIONS

Questions as to the order of business and the procedures of the committee shall in the first instance be decided by the chairman, subject always to an appeal to the committee.

RULE 8. HEARINGS: PUBLIC ANNOUNCEMENTS AND WITNESSES

(a) The chairman, in the case of hearings to be conducted by the committee, shall make public announcement of the date, place, subject matter of any hearing to be conducted on any measure or matter at least one week before the commencement of that hearing unless the committee determines that there is good cause to begin such hearing at an earlier date. In the latter event the chairman shall make such public announcement at the earliest possible date. The staff director of the committee shall promptly notify the Daily Digest of the Congressional Record as soon as possible after such public announcement is made.

(b) So far as practicable all witnesses appearing before the committee shall file advance written statements of their proposed testimony at least 48 hours in advance of their appearance and their oral testimony shall be limited to brief summaries. Limited insertions of additional germane material will be received for the record, subject to the approval of the chairman.

RULE 9. OFFICIAL HEARING RECORD

(a) An accurate stenographic record shall be kept of all committee proceedings and actions. Brief supplemental materials when required to clarify transcript may be inserted in the record subject to the approval of the chairman.

(b) Each member of the committee shall be provided with a copy of the hearings transcript for the purpose of correcting errors of transcription and grammar, and clarifying questions or remarks. If any other person is authorized by a committee member to make his corrections the staff director shall be so notified.

(c) Members who have received unanimous consent to submit written questions to witnesses shall be allowed two days within which to submit these to the staff director for transmission to the witnesses. The record may be held open for a period not to exceed two weeks awaiting the responses by witnesses.

(d) A witness may obtain a transcript copy of his testimony given at a public session or, if given at an executive session, when authorized by the committee. Testimony received in closed hearings shall not be released or included in any report without the approval of the committee.

RULE 10. WITNESSES FOR COMMITTEE HEARINGS

(a) Selection of witnesses for committee hearings shall be made by the committee staff under the direction of the chairman. A list of proposed witnesses shall be submitted to the members of the committee for review sufficiently in advance of the hearings to permit suggestions by the committee members to receive appropriate consideration.

(b) The chairman shall provide adequate time for questioning of witnesses by all members, including minority members, and the rule of germaneness shall be enforced in all hearings.

(c) Whenever a hearing is conducted by the committee upon any measure or matter, the minority on the committee shall be entitled, upon unanimous request to the Chairman before the completion of such hearings, to call witnesses selected by the minority to testify with respect to the measure or matter during at least one day of hearing thereon.

RULE 11. CONFIDENTIAL INFORMATION FURNISHED TO THE COMMITTEE

The information contained in any books, papers, or documents furnished to the committee by any individual, partnership, corporation, or other legal entity shall, upon the request of the individual, partnership, corporation, or entity furnishing the same, be maintained in strict confidence by the members and staff of the committee, except that any such information may be released outside of executive session of the committee if the release thereof is effected in a manner which will not reveal the identity of such individual, partnership, corporation, or entity in connection with any pending hearing or as a part of a duly authorized report of the committee if such release is deemed essential to the performance of the functions of the committee and is in the public interest.

RULE 12. BROADCASTING OF COMMITTEE HEARINGS

The rule for the broadcasting of committee hearings shall be the same as Rule XI, clause 3 of the Rules of the House of Representatives.

RULE 13. COMMITTEE REPORTS

(a) No committee report shall be made public or transmitted to the Congress without the approval of a majority of the committee except when Congress has adjourned; Provided, that any member of the committee may make a report supplementary to or dissenting from the majority report. Such supplementary or dissenting reports should be as brief as possible.

(b) Factual reports by the committee staff may be printed for distribution to committee members and the public only upon authorization of the chairman either with the approval of a majority of the committee or with the consent of the ranking minority member.

RULE 14. CONFIDENTIALITY OF COMMITTEE REPORTS

No summary of a committee report, prediction of the contents of a report, or statement of conclusions concerning any investigation shall be made by a member of the committee or by any staff member of the committee prior to the issuance of a report of the committee.

RULE 15. COMMITTEE STAFF

(a) The committee shall have a professional and clerical staff; under the supervision of a staff director. Staff operating procedures shall be determined by the staff director, with the approval of the chairman of the committee, and after the notification to the ranking minority member with respect to basic revisions of existing procedures. The staff director under the general supervision of the chairman, is authorized to deal directly with agencies of the Government and with non-Government groups and individuals on behalf of the committee.

(b) The chairman, on behalf of his party's members, shall be entitled to designate not more than two, and the ranking minority member, on behalf of his party's members, shall be entitled to designate not more than two of the following senior staff members: Staff Director, General Counsel, Deputy Staff Director, Assistant Staff Director or Associate General Counsel, and Special Assistant.

(c) All other staff members shall be selected on the basis of their training, experience, and attainments, without regard to race, religion, sex, color, national origin or political affiliations, and shall serve all members of the committee in an objective, non-partisan manner.

RULE 16. COMMITTEE CHAIRMAN

The chairman of the committee may establish such other procedures and take such actions as may be necessary to carry out the foregoing rules or to facilitate the effective operation of the committee. Specifically, the chairman is authorized, during the interim periods between meetings of the committee, to act on all requests submitted by any executive department, independent agency, temporary or permanent commissions and committees of the Federal Government, the Government Printing Office, and any other Federal entity, pursuant to the requirements of applicable Federal law and regulations.●

THE IMPACT OF PRESIDENT REAGAN'S FISCAL YEAR 1986 BUDGET ON POOR CHILDREN

● Mr. SIMON. Mr. President, on March 18, 1985, Marian Wright Edelman, president of the Children's Defense Fund, and a leader in the movement to secure the rights of children in poverty, spoke at the Woman's National Democratic Club in an eloquent way about the impact of President Reagan's fiscal year 1986 budget on poor children. With child poverty at the highest rate in 18 years, President Reagan has intentionally or unintentionally targeted poor children and families for the fifth consecutive year for billions in new budget cuts. This occurs at a time when the cost of lifting every poor American child out of poverty would be less than half of the proposed increase in defense spending in 1986. This occurs at a time when a single working mother with three children and a below-poverty income of $10,500 paid $1,186 in taxes, more than Boeing, General Electric, DuPont, Texaco, Mobil, and AT&T together paid in 1983, though earnings of these huge corporations totaled $13.7 billion in net profits.

No Senator or Representative can turn his or her back on Ms. Edelman's message to the Woman's National Democratic Club and to the American people. I respectfully urge your thoughtful attention to the speech, and ask that it be printed in the RECORD.

The Speech follows:

SPEECH BY MARIAN WRIGHT EDELMAN, PRESIDENT CHILDREN'S DEFENSE FUND

President Reagan's Fiscal Year 1986 budget is a moral travesty.

Although more children die each year from poverty than from traffic fatalities and suicide combined—twice more children die from poverty than die from heart disease and cancer combined—for the fifth consecutive year, in the face of the highest child poverty rate in 18 years, President Reagan has targeted poor children and families again for billions in new budget cuts.

Under the Fiscal Year 1986 Reagan budget, children will lose $5.2 billion. In 1990, children will lose $37.6 billion in federal support. This is on top of $10 billion a year in cuts already made in survival programs for children and families since 1980.

If the Reagan budget priorities succeed, by 1990 every American will be spending 19 percent less on poor children and families and 86 percent more on defense.

By Fiscal Year 1990, the military budget will increase by $344.2 billion or 239 percent, to make American children more secure from external enemies. But American children also need defense against internal enemies of poverty, infant mortality, abuse, and homelessness.

Over a five-year period, more American children die from poverty than the total number of American battle deaths in the Vietnam War. Yet, our national leaders dream about a multi-billion dollar "Star Wars" system to make our defenses impenetrable against enemy missiles. Why can't they dream of a smaller achievable war against child poverty—a war that saves and enhances rather than takes and threatens human life? Every poor American child could be lifted out of poverty in 1986 for less than half of the proposed defense spending increase for that one year alone.

American babies need defense against preventable infant mortality and birth defects. By 1990, 22,000 American babies will die primarily because of low birthweight. We can prevent at least one in eight of these infant deaths and thousands of handicapping contributions simply by providing their mothers prenatal care. For seven percent or 25 days of the defense budget increase next year, every poor mother and baby could be provided Medicaid, and thus prenatal care coverage. Instead, the Reagan budget proposes to cut Medicaid again by $6 billion over the next three years although 700,000 children have already lost their Medicaid cards since 1980. Currently, 9 million poor children—two out of three—have no regular health insurance coverage. The proposed Medicaid cuts would put an additional 10 million children at risk of losing coverage. How many four-pound babies will it take to balance the federal budget?

American children need defense against preventable diseases. In this Reagan decade we are building 17,000 new nuclear weapons at an estimated cost of $71 billion. But the new Reagan budget allows for only a single month's stockpile of vaccination serum. As a result, two million fewer children will be immunized for DPT in 1986 than in the previous year.

American children need to be protected against increasing child abuse. An estimated 1.5 million children were reported abused and neglected in 1983, an increase of 200,000 children over the previous year. Yet the Reagan Administration is cutting child abuse programs by 15 percent.

American children need to be protected against the enemy of homelessness. According to a 1984 Department of Housing and Urban Development study, 22 percent of the homeless in shelter, not including runaway shelters, are children under 18. Over 66,000 children are currently living without permanent shelter. But the President's budget seeks to emasculate low-income housing programs, and to rip another $325 million hole in the tattered survival net of Aid to Families with Dependent Children (AFDC). AFDC recipients, 66 percent of whom are children, have already been cut by $1.7 billion since 1980. They receive an average daily benefit of $3.67.

In addition, the President's budget also proposes to freeze the Title XX Social Services Block Grant at $2.7 billion, $200 million below its Fiscal Year 1981 level. Title XX is the major source of direct federal funding for child care. The Fiscal Year 1986 budget also proposes to cut Title XX training funds by $25 million and consolidate with it the Community Services Block Grant.

While decimating federal programs for needy children and families, the new Reagan budget also ignores the skyrocketing federal tax burden on the working poor while the taxes of the rich have been cut. The amount of federal tax paid by those with incomes below the federal poverty line increased 58 percent from 1980 to 1982 alone.

In 1984, a working single mother with three children and a below-poverty income of $10,500 paid $1,186 in taxes, more than Boeing, General Electric, DuPont, Texaco, Mobil, and A T & T altogether paid in 1983, although these huge corporations earned $13.7 billion in profits.

Peter Grace, the head of W. R. Grace Company, made $684 million in profits from 1981 to 1983, paid no net federal income tax, received $12.5 million back from government in negative income taxes through rebates or sales of "excess" tax benefits. If we just raised the Grace Company tax rate to zero, we could pay for nine million of the free school lunches President Reagan and the Congress cut from children. Does the new budget correct this inequity?

The President's budget turns its back on children in need and will push millions more children towards the ragged edge of survival or worse.

WHAT DO WE DO?

A Children's Defense Budget, which you have in your packet, includes the Children's Survival Bill, a blueprint for federal investment in prevention and youth self-sufficiency that restores some of the $10 billion taken from children and poor families in 1981 and 1982.

The Children's Survival Bill outlines a range of specific steps to give young people skills and employment opportunities to enable them to contribute to rather than depend on the community. It seeks to expand successful programs like Head Start, WIC, child care, maternal and child health programs, and includes modest new demonstration programs to prevent teen pregnancy and school dropouts and to build self-sufficient youth. Tax fairness for the poor and single parent families is a strong priority. To offset the $14 billion cost of the Bill's provisions, CDF offers $40 billion in specific deficit reduction proposals.

We would hope that you will work to help enact the bill's provisions.

I would place particular emphasis on some of the key health provisions. Specifically, we must urge Congress to:

Make absolutely no cuts in preventive programs that provide lifesaving services to pregnant women and babies, including Medicaid, Title V. Maternal and Child Health, Community Health Centers and AFDC.

Amend Medicaid immediately to provide coverage for all pregnant women and infants living below federal poverty levels. The $800 million for Medicaid coverage of pregnant women and infants living below the poverty level is about the cost of three B-1 bombers. President Reagan has asked for production money for 48 of them in the FY 1986 budget alone. Three fewer will not cripple our national defense. Lack of health care will cripple many children.

Amend Medicaid to provide pregnant women with all medically necessary care, including medical care, education and outreach. Too many states are forced to limit services to inadequate levels, and care is not comprehensive enough.

Provide $200 million in additional funds for WIC which now serves only 1 in 3 eligible women. To do this would cost less than 2 of the 48 MX missiles President Reagan has in his FY 1986 budget.

Add $77 million for the Title V Maternal and Child Block Grant and Community and Migrant Health Centers. These are the providers of "last resort" or our 9 million uninsured and underinsured children and more than 6 million uninsured pregnant women. The $77 million is about half what the defense contractors spent on public relations activities in 1983, or the amount we spent to subsidize baseball and hockey tickets for corporate executives.

Add a new $100 million demonstration program to fund comprehensive school based health clinics for adolescents. This is equivalent to the costs of our military bands.

The total tab all of these minimal short-term recommendations is $1.3 billion from Fiscal Year 1986, about equal to the taxes we lose on business lunch deductions or 15 days of the defense increase.

In tandem with the federal legislative goals outlined in the CSB, CDF has set two other goals for immediate and long-term action by every element of American society as part of an overall strategy to alleviate child poverty and to strengthen families: The prevention of adolescent pregnancy and the reduction of infant mortality and low birthweight births which stem from lack of access to prenatal care and poverty. Specifically, we urge:

Testing of a range of community and policymaker strategies designed to prevent teen pregnancy and build youth self sufficiency. In 1983, 525,000 babies were born to teen mothers, 10,000 to girls 14 and under. Over 300,000 of the teens who give birth annually have not completed high school. 36,000 have not completed the eighth grade. Thirty-one percent of all babies born to teens are paid for by Medicaid at an annual cost of $200 million. Sixty percent of all AFDC mothers had their first child as a teenager.

Implementation of a massive prenatal care outreach and action campaign to reduce infant mortality, birth defects, and escalating health costs. Babies born to mothers without prenatal care are 3 times more likely to suffer low birthweight, death, and birth defects than those whose mothers received such care. Prenatal care can prevent thousands of infant deaths and defects and save millions of dollars in intensive care. For example, it cost $600 to provide a pregnant woman with complete prenatal care, including vitamins and nutritional supplements. But it may cost $20,000 to care for a premature infant just in the first 20 days of life.

Every child and youth needs hope and a sense that positive future options are available to them. Ensuring their stake in the future is at the heart of the new Children's Survival Bill. A detailed summary of the bill included in Chapter 4.

WHAT CAN YOU DO BACK HOME?

Step One: Reflect hard within ourselves, our families and communities, organizations, and religious congregations about the personal beliefs and national ideals we want to see America reflect. We must then try "little by little", in Forty Day's words, to live them and be moved to act in two arenas: In the personal arena through greater service and outreach to those around us who are more needy, and in the political arena to ensure a more just society. One without the other is not enough to transform America.

Step Two: Become informed. Careful homework is necessary if we are to protect children and the poor. You will hear countless arguments from politicians and others who seek to justify unjust budget priorities. We have shown you how to answer them in the budget book.

Step Three: Hold your Senators and Representatives accountable for their votes for or against children and the poor. The budget process drives the nation's priorities at home and abroad. It is our national Rorschach test. How well hungry children in Mississippi and Ethiopia will be fed, whether we will finance just or repressive regimes in Latin America, whether our nuclear arsenal will continue to grow or shrink, are affected significantly by the budget votes your Representatives will cast in your name this year. Let them know where you stand.

Each year, CDF publishes a record of how your Senators and Representatives vote on children and poor families. Please request and study it. So often politicians make flowery general speeches about supporting children while voting against specific children's needs. It is the specific votes that count. Forty-six Senators and 152 Representatives had a voting record of 50 percent or less in support of programs critical to children's well-being in 1984.

Just as it is important to study and monitor the federal budget process, it is equally important to monitor state and local budget processes on behalf of children. We hope in the future that children's advocates will conduct analyses of every governor's budget and monitor the votes of their state legislators on children.

Step Four: Join CDF's New Children's Action Network and help build stronger grass roots support for children's programs in the Congress. CDF has taken steps to strengthen the legislative voice for children in the 99th Congress through the CDF Action Council, our new lobbying arm. For $20 a year, you will receive Action Now Alerts, Voting Records, Legislative Analyses, and regular Action Network Updates.

Step Five: Start a local prenatal care campaign or begin a local adolescent pregnancy child watch project. While we must mount an effective legislative voice for children and pursue a positive agenda to build healthy children and self-sufficient youth in the Congress, we must also be taking strong community action to ensure healthy babies through prenatal care and to prevent teen pregnancy. CDF has launched a major new program initiative to prevent teen pregnancy. As part of that effort, we have prepared two publications to help you carry out local action projects: An Adolescent Pregnancy Child Watch Manual and a Comprehensive Prenatal Care Campaign Kit.

Adolescent Pregnancy Child Watch is a project to help local communities learn more about adolescent pregnancy and develop effective action agendas to prevent children from having children. Currently, 41 Child Watch projects are in process in 20 states, in collaboration with the Association of Junior Leagues, the National Council of Negro Women, the March of Dimes, and the National Coalition of 100 Black Women. We would welcome your involvement. Similarly, a comprehensive Prenatal Care Campaign Kit is available to help you begin a prenatal care campaign in your community. It includes data on how your state ranks on teen pregnancy, infant mortality, low birthweight, prenatal care access, AFDC, and Medicaid participation levels. These two efforts are critical pieces in any effort to prevent and alleviate epidemic child and maternal poverty.

Step Six: Do not be discouraged. Pray and fight hard for children. Although we now face new ideological and budget assaults on children and family programs equal to or greater than those in the first term of the Reagan Administration, how hard and persistently we fight will determine the outcome for poor children. You do not have to have a lot of resources or education to make a difference for children. You can write one letter and get five others to do the same. You can help one hungry or homeless child in your community. The faith to move mountains is the reward of those who have moved little hills. Do not be intimidated by powerful opponents into doing nothing for children. President Eisenhower said in 1958: "What counts is not necessarily the size of the dog in the fight. It's the size of the fight in the dog."

Because children can't vote or lobby, we must fight extra hard. And we must not hesitate to take on those in high places who practice a perverted gospel of taking from poor children to give to the rich and the military. Ronald Reagan is only President. For those of us who take our guidance from a higher source, there is no cause for fear or discouragement. But our prayers will only work if we do.

Step Seven: Aim high. Be confident we can win for children. How blessed we are to have such a challenging and worthwhile cause to believe in and serve. President Reagan wants to invest over $3.2 trillion dollars in new weapons of death over this decade of no use to the hungry children of this world. We want to invest $14 billion in new weapons of life: Education, health care, family support, jobs, and food. President Reagan wants to protect big corporations from federal taxes; we want to protect poor working mothers and fathers. President Reagan is trying to take away school lunches, immunizations, and health care from poor children; we are campaigning for a right to prenatal care so that every baby can have a healthy beginning. Why should we lower our goals or be intimidated by the politics of the moment?

Dr. Benjamin E. Mays, the former president of Morehouse College, in Atlanta, Georgia, summed up our mission and message: "It must be borne in mind," Dr. Mays said, "that the tragedy of life doesn't lie in not reaching your goal. The tragedy lies in having no goal to reach. It isn't a calamity to die with dreams unfulfilled, but it is a calamity not to dream. It is not a disaster to be unable to capture your ideal, but it is a disaster to have no ideal to capture. It is not a disgrace not to reach the stars, but it is a disgrace to have no stars to reach for. Not failure, but low aim, is sin."●

NATIONAL ARBOR DAY

● Mr. HATFIELD. Mr. President, I would like to ask my colleagues to join in sponsoring Senate Joint Resolution 122, introduced by Mr. BRADLEY, which proclaims the last Friday of April each year as "National Arbor Day."

Establishing an annual National Arbor Day will help to reawaken the public's interest in the value of trees, and their contributions to the many aspects of daily life. It will generate publicity reemphasizing the attitude that we need to restore our dwindling tree population. National and uniform recognition of Arbor Day provides a vehicle for promotion of reforms in our outmoded practices to protect and conserve America's trees.

Trees are one of God's most beautiful and useful creations. Not only do they add majesty and grandeur to our Nation's landscape, they provide for a bounty of practical uses as well. Trees help halt soil erosion, offer cooling shade, slow the cold winter wind, and supply food and timber. Though trees are the oldest known life form, new uses are being discovered daily. Attractive high standard flowering trees, for example, are being used in business areas and shopping malls to soften the harsh atmosphere of glass, steel, and concrete.

There are more than 25,000 nurseries in the United States, occupying more than 200,000 acres of land. Over 20,000 different kinds of trees have been identified and there are more than 1,000 different species native to the United States. Our country is home to more than 150 billion trees.

The value of our country's trees is not sufficiently recorded by numbers alone. Trees are the cornerstone of conservation. They provide one of the key segments in nature's delicate preservation cycle, helping to offset the effects of human pollution. Approximately 78 trees are needed to absorb the carbon dioxide and produce the oxygen needed to maintain balance in the atmosphere for each person in the United States. More than 100,000 trees are needed to cancel the atmospheric pollution created by one commercial jet flying round trip from New York to Los Angeles.

There is a certain spirituality about trees. There are few things more comforting than a walk through a forest. The beauty and splendor of our Nation's trees have inspired some of literature's most moving works. Trees tower over us, outlive us, and in many ways represent the closest link to eternity we have on this Earth. By planting a tree, one can leave a lasting legacy for future generations.

J. Sterling Morton, who founded Arbor Day over a century ago, said, "Other holidays repose upon the past; Arbor Day proposes for the future."

Yet the statistics documenting forest damage continue to grow at a staggering rate the world over. Trees are often leveled in the sacred name of progress. More than 1 million acres of the green and growing are paved with masonry, concrete, and asphalt every year.

These trends only underscore the need to proclaim an annual National Arbor Day. Besides fueling society's interest related to broad conservation purposes, such a day points to the need for all citizens of all ages to maintain and protect portions of our great national forest land. It is a day dedicated to trees, their beauty and usefulness, and their preservation.●

TOWN MEETINGS

● Mr. LEAHY. Mr. President, Vermont town meetings serve as a national barometer on major issues, and as an example of an inherent strength of our grassroots democracy.

Recently, Vermont Educational Television [ETV] devoted a program to this unique institution.

On March 7, citizens from all over Vermont traveled to the ETV studio in Winooski to debate, in a town meeting format, the following resolution:

Resolved: Vermonters favor that the United States renounce the option of first use of nuclear weapons.

After a spirited debate, viewers were asked to vote on the resolution by calling the studio. The response was overwhelming; 334 favored the resolution, 72 were against it.

Regardless of whether you agree with the resolution, it is clear that this participatory format has wide audience appeal, and reinforces the spirit of democracy that continues to flourish in Vermont, and, I believe strongly, throughout our Nation.●

VERY SPECIAL ARTS FESTIVAL

● Mr. RIEGLE. Mr. President, on May 15, 1985, the Third Annual Very Special Arts Festival will be held in Detroit. This event is designed to allow individuals an opportunity to experience various art forms and to share in personal creative expression. Over 500 handicapped children, their parents, and teachers will gather to enjoy hands on activities in both visual and performing arts at the Community Arts Building of the Michigan State Fair Grounds.

This event culminates months of planning and in-school workshops where both teachers and students have learned creative arts and personal expression from professional artists. The day long festival is sponsored by the Detroit Recreation Department, Detroit Public Schools, Wayne County Intermediate Schools, Archdiocese of Detroit, Michigan Council for the Arts, New Detroit Inc., Michigan Alliance for Arts in Education, Southeast Michigan Arts Forum, Wayne State University, Michigan State Fair, and Young Audiences of Michigan.

The Detroit Very Special Arts Festival is part of a national concept developed by the National Committee on Arts With the Handicapped.

The Michigan project began in 1977 with two intermediate school districts piloting arts programs for the handicapped. Today, there are 26 sites throughout the State with over 18,000 students and 2,500 educators participating.

This year's event will include over 20 professional artists and 50 community volunteers who will operate art station workshops in the areas of music, dance and movement, drama, puppetry, printing, clowning, acrylics, and other visual art forms. In addition, there will be performances by handicapped- and nonhandicapped-art groups, and student art work will be displayed.

Through the arts, both handicapped and nonhandicapped individuals can participate as equals without regard to physical strength and ability, while experiencing the same feelings of satisfaction, creative expression, and self-worth. It is important that we realize the arts are an important part of the fabric of life.

I salute those individuals responsible for making this event a success, providing exceptional learning experiences for all those involved.●

BUDGET RESOLUTION—ORDER OF PROCEDURE TOMORROW

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I indicated to the distinguished minority leader that there would be no further action on this measure tonight. We shall come in at 9:30 a.m. We shall be back on the resolution at 10 o'clock. I guess it is safe to say that the first amendment tomorrow will be on Social Security. There are a number of Members on each side who would like to offer the Social Security amendment. I have been discussing this matter with the distinguished Senator from New York [Mr. D'AMATO] and the distinguished Senator from Florida [Mrs. HAWKINS]. There are a number of amendments on this side. I think it is fair to assume that will be the first amendment offered tomorrow, then we hope to move on to a few other amendments.

I thank all of my colleagues for their patience. Again, I indicate to Members on both sides of the aisle that it is my hope we can complete action on this budget resolution. It does not look like we will be able to do it this week, but if we can, we will stay in late tomorrow night and late on Thursday night. I am aware of a number of concerns about midafternoon Friday and beyond, and perhaps we can address those. I will be visiting with the distinguished minority leader sometime before tomorrow ends, but I would plan tomorrow night to be here quite late because there are a number of amendments. There will be a lot of votes. I hope that Senators will have enough notice now to make arrangements for tomorrow and Thursday well into the evening, say, 10, 11, midnight those 2 nights. There will be no more votes tonight.

ORDERS FOR WEDNESDAY

ORDER FOR RECESS UNTIL 9:30 A.M.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that when the Senate completes its business today, it stand in recess until 9:30 a.m., on Wednesday, May 1.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

ORDER FOR RECOGNITION OF SENATOR PROXMIRE

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, further I ask unanimous consent that after the recognition of the two leaders under the standing order, there be a special order in favor of the distinguished Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. PROXMIRE] for not to exceed 15 minutes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

ORDER FOR ROUTINE MORNING BUSINESS

Mr. DOLE. Following the special order for Mr. PROXMIRE, if time permits, I ask unanimous consent that there be a period for the transaction of routine morning business not to extend beyond the hour of 10 a.m., with statements limited therein to 5 minutes each.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

PROGRAM

Mr. DOLE. Following routine morning business, I indicate to my colleagues that we will resume consideration of Senate Concurrent Resolution 32, the budget resolution. I say very earnestly that rollcall votes can be expected throughout the day, and into the evening tomorrow evening, and there is a possibility that rollcall votes could occur before the hour of 12 noon.

RECESS UNTIL 9:30 A.M. TOMORROW

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, there being no further business to come before the Senate, I move that we stand in recess, in accordance with the previous order, until 9:30 a.m.

The motion was agreed to; and, at 6:34 p.m., the Senate recessed, to reconvene on Wednesday, May 1, 1985, at 9:30 a.m.

NOMINATIONS

Executive nominations received by the Senate April 30, 1985:

DEPARTMENT OF STATE

Robert L. Pugh, of Virginia, a career member of the Senior Foreign Service, class of Counselor, to be Ambassador Extraordinary and Plenipotentiary of the United States of America to the Islamic Republic of Mauritania

THE JUDICIARY

Samuel B. Sterrett, of Maryland, to be a judge of the U.S. Tax Court for a term expiring 15 years after he takes office reappointment.

COPYRIGHT ROYALTY TRIBUNAL

Rose Marie Monk, of Texas, to be a commissioner of the Copyright Royalty Tribunal for the term of 7 years from September 27, 1984, vice Thomas C. Brennan, term expired.

POSTAL RATE COMMISSION

Patti Birge Tyson, of Texas, to be a commissioner of the Postal Rate Commission for the term expiring November 22, 1990, vice James H. Duffy, term expired

IN THE NAVY

The following-named officer, under the provisions of title 10, United States Code, section 601, to be assigned to a position of importance and responsibility designated by the President under title 10, United States Code, section 601:

To be vice admiral

Vice Adm. John M. Poindexter, xxx-xx-x... xxx-.../1110, U.S. Navy.

EXTENSIONS OF REMARKS

THE DEMOCRATS' FUTURE

HON. CHARLES E. BENNETT

OF FLORIDA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, April 30, 1985

● Mr. BENNETT. Mr. Speaker, in the Christian Science Monitor of April 18, 1985, they were kind enough to publish an article I wrote. I feel so deeply about the contents that I ask permission to have the article included at this point in the RECORD:

THE DEMOCRATS' FUTURE: IT MUST BE EARNED

(By Charles E. Bennett)

Too much strident rhetoric has been wasted lately on how and if the Democratic Party can recapture the voters' respect at the ballot box. Too little has been said about whether we deserve that respect.

Some have said that the party has drifted from the mainstream of American political values, which, they say, are now more closely mirrored by the Republican Party. They conclude that the Democrats should adopt a course of middle ground, more in line with the Republicans. Future electoral victories will not come about because Democrats become more like Republicans.

Our party has nothing to be ashamed of. The method of a party is to win elections—the purpose of a party is to find the truth of public weal and to achieve it. This is what should interest Democrats today, and as we fulfill that purpose we will win at the ballot box.

In addition to the issues, fresh and dynamic candidates are important, too. Nothing underscores this more than the current, popular President. With such new faces as Bill Bradley, Richard Gephardt, John D. Rockefeller IV, and Charles Robb, not to mention those who have already aspired in this arena, the Democratic Party is hardly lacking in good presidential prospects.

But acknowledging the necessity of strong candidates with popular concerns is not to say that one party should ape the other. It is important that we have two strong political parties. Democrats are proud to trace their origins to the early 1790s, when the party helped achieve the adoption of the Bill of Rights. Those were days of political philosophy, in which the Newcastle Patriotic Society wisely resolved that "the collision of opposite opinions produces the spark which lights the torch of truth."

The Democratic Party today must help light the torch of truth for our times.

As the future becomes the present, the responsibilities of a political party change and new duties must be matched with proven ideals. Instead of synthesizing views, the Democratic Party has stagnated with a proliferation of voices, positions, and programs, some of which outlived their usefulness.

Sen. Edward Kennedy has recently espoused a new stance of moderation. But it is not just moderation we need. We need a firm dedication to principles and the leadership of people who have supported those principles and our nominees even though unfavorable climates.

The failure to do our own housecleaning gave Ronald Reagan a target of opportunity. Calling himself a conservative, he was elected to cut the fat from a bureaucratic, tax-hungry government, an objective still desired by Americans. Former Congresswoman Barbara Jordan expressed it best when she said, "People do not want to have great new spending programs. That is not our future. People want lean and mean government."

President Reagan is no conservative. He is a radical. Witness his 1981 tax bill, the most radical fiscal measure effected by any US government. How radical was it? Because of that bill, the General Electric Company paid no taxes at all for a three year period—1981 through 1983—on its $6.5 billion net income; other corporations have done even better, while many middle-income people are worse off than before.

Further evidence of Reagan's radicalism shows up in his recent MX victory. Billions of dollars will now be siphoned from necessary systems for this highly vulnerable and faulted weapon, which adds redundancy to US nuclear deterrence. Meanwhile, there continues to exist a dangerous deficiency in our conventional capability.

These two defense errors are tied together. Gen. Bernard Rogers, NATO commander in Europe, has repeatedly said that the Soviets could overrun Europe in a matter of days. The US planned response is to go quickly and without hesitation to nuclear war. It was a dangerously radical scheme of the President to spend that money on a disaster like the MX instead of on the conventional weapons that could help prevent a nuclear war. No country can win a nuclear war.

By championing conventional deterrence without abandoning nuclear deterrence, Democrats accurately show themselves to be strong on defense, much stronger than an administration which asserts that it will be the first nation to use nuclear weapons.

A second plank of a proposed Democratic platform would address the deficit. All Presidents, from Washington through Carter, amassed a national debt of only a trillion dollars. Ronald Reagan, largely because of his 1981 tax cut bill, has doubled the national debt. This, of course, with the help of those congressmen who voted for it. I did not.

There are several bills pending before Congress that could help reduce the debt by tax reform. HR 18, for example, is essentially a reform bill that taxes only the well-to-do who have escaped all taxes, and it would bring in about $125 billion over the next five years. In a poll last month, more than 79 percent voted for a reform like this, the highest figure for any item in the poll. Democrats should seize the public's support for this issue and waste no time in enacting legislation.

Finally, along with a strong defense posture that would allow us to fight when attacked (and not resort to the immorality that is nuclear destruction) and a strong fiscal policy against the deficit, we Democrats should try to have legislative answers in the tradition of the idealistic heritage of the party.

Democrats must not turn their backs on people who are being left behind as our "Great Society" takes strides into the future. While technology may improve life for most Americans, we must not forget that the rest of us must benefit as well. Every American should have a real chance to strive to become a vital working part of the great future of the American experiment.

We must find a way to ensure that all who want to work can find a reasonable income from employment, preferably in the private sector. Subsidies should not be ruled out. For instance, I have a bill in Congress that would take back some of the excessive tax write-offs of the 1981 tax bill unless each corporation that benefits could demonstrate that new jobs had been provided by the windfall.

Our platform should be that simple. Think of it, a national platform for the Democratic Party with only 15 words: strong national defense, war on deficits and waste, and a lifting hand to willing workers. Our 1984 platform had so many words—33 pages of them—that I, for one, never read it.

About a hundred years ago Alexis de Tocqueville wrote something that has special meaning for our party today: "The political parties which I style great are those which cling to principles more than consequences; to general, and not to especial cases; to ideas, and not to men. These parties are usually distinguished by a nobler character, by more generous passions, more genuine convictions."

That is the kind of party the Democrats have been. We will win again at the ballot box—not because we pander to every passing request but because we have high principles and stand squarely behind them. To paraphrase John Houseman's TV commercial, we will meet with success when and if we earn it.●

BOSTON SCHOLAR COMMENTS ON WELFARE AND THE POOR

HON. BARNEY FRANK

OF MASSACHUSETTS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, April 30, 1985

● Mr. FRANK. Mr. Speaker, in the Boston Herald for Sunday, April 28, 1985, Dean Hubie Jones of the School of Social Work at Boston University published an insightful article on the question of welfare.

Hubie Jones is a man who has done important work in Massachusetts on behalf of the poor in this country, and he is a careful scholar as well as a passionate advocate. I believe that the arguments he makes are extremely persuasive, both with regard to welfare and with regard to the broader issue of the role of Government, and I ask that these remarks be printed here.

● This "bullet" symbol identifies statements or insertions which are not spoken by the Member on the floor.

POOR LUXURIATE ON WELFARE? NONSENSE

(By Hubie Jones)

Two weeks ago, U.S. Sen. Daniel Patrick Moynihan and Marian Wright Edelman, president of the Children's Defense Fund, came to Harvard University and sounded the alarm concerning the tragic plight of families and children in America.

Indeed the statistical evidence is disturbing. Some 13.3 million children, one out of five, live in poverty—an increase of 3.3 million since 1979. Close to half of our marriages end in divorce or separation. More than 12 million children are growing up in female-headed households and 55 percent of these children are poor.

More American children die each year from poverty than from traffic fatalities and suicide combined. In 1983, 1.5 million children were reported abused and neglected, an increase of 200,000 from the year before.

One out of every 20 pregnant women and one out of every 10 black pregnant women receive either no pre-natal care or none until the final three months of pregnancy.

Based on current trends, 200,000 American babies will die in the next six years, primarily because they are born too small to survive. Half of the 500,000 yearly teenage births are to unmarried teenagers. Less than half of black pre-school children are adequately immunized against diptheria, pertussis, tetanus and polio.

What has gone wrong? To what can we attribute this stunning decline in the quality of living for so many among us?

Many commentators, David Brudnoy among them, blame governmental intervention as the culprit. They claim that welfare benefits and social programs have robbed people of incentives to work and to achieve self-development, creating an enduring class of parasites. They would have the public believe that the poor luxuriate on welfare benefits indefinitely. This is all sheer nonsense.

Only 3.7 million families—a fraction of all poor families—are reached by welfare assistance. More than half of these families are white. AFDC benefits reach 7 million children, only 53 percent of poor children. Each year, about one-third of all AFDC families leave the rolls and are replaced by other families. A national study found that half of the families on AFDC stay in the program for less than two years.

These facts confirm that welfare payments are primarily meeting a temporary need for economic support as families prepare themselves for more independent living. Nevertheless, myths die hard and the critics continue to say, "Once on welfare, always on welfare.

In most states AFDC payments are intolerably low and fail to provide sufficient funds to meet basic human needs. The maximum AFDC benefit for a family of three is less than 75 percent of the poverty level in all but four states. Even the combined value of food stamps and AFDC is less than the federal poverty level in every state except Alaska. Because benefits have not kept pace with inflation, families receiving them have lost one-third of their purchasing power since 1970.

In short, the crisis we face is due in large measure to the crumbling economic foundation upon which the family rests. Structural unemployment—a permanent feature of the American economy—denies at least 6 million citizens access to jobs. Research studies have shown that all Americans are imbued with a strong work orientation and would rather work at a decent job than take a government dole but the jobs are not there.

Furthermore, the income of the working poor is being eroded by an unfair tax system. Today, a family of four (two parents, two children) with earned income at the 1984 poverty level of $10,613 pays $1,076 in federal taxes: 10 percent of its income. Five years ago, this same family with earnings at the 1979 poverty line paid federal taxes of less than 2 percent of its income.

Due to President Reagan's tax policy, no other income group has suffered such an increasing tax burden during this time. In contrast, the 1981 tax law resulted in the corporate share of federal revenues falling by half—and some corporations continue to pay little or no taxes.

The Social Security tax which is a flat-rate, regressive tax has increased substantially over the last 20 years, thus taking a growing share of the earnings of low-income workers, as well as others.

The economic foundation for families has been further undermined by the Reagan administration's cutbacks in social programs and income benefits targeted for poor families and children, including the AFDC programs, food stamps, childhood nutrition, health care, youth and adult job training, etc. The current Reagan budget proposes more cuts in social programs that benefit low income citizens.

The Reagan administration's new Bible is Charles Murray's recent book, "Losing Ground." Murray claims that social problems have grown worse over the years because of the federal government's social programs and welfare benefits. He advocates the dismantling of the strategy of governmental intervention to assist citizens at the bottom of the economic ladder.

The "nothing works" crowd should consider the following: millions of elderly citizens and children escaped poverty in the 1960s and 1970s because of Social Security and medical entitlements.

The reality is that the federal government exists to carry out four basic functions, among others: (1) provide goods and services to promote the general welfare, (2) protect its citizens from internal and external dangers, (3) support a healthy economy and (4) decide how much and in what ways it will tax its citizens to provide services.

Consequently, government is an interventionist invention designed to make choices that impact on the lives of all our citizens. The eternal debate is always about whether governmental policy choices distribute benefits and burdens fairly across the citizenry—a debate no less vigorous in 1985 than in 1885.

Since the Great Depression, it has been accepted that when private market dynamics overlook or overburden any segment of the population the government must act as a powerful corrective to reverse negative conditions.

The debate about how government should intervene in carrying out its basic responsibilities is always permissible and understandable. But that debate should be based on solid facts not myths.

There is no room for debate about whether government has a right to intervene to improve the lot of families and children because that is given by virtue of the preamble of the U.S. Constitution which states that the federal government exists "to promote the general welfare."

The tragic conditions for American families and children will not change for the better without government intervention that distributes benefits and burdens more fairly to those citizens at the middle and bottom of the economic ladder. Not to do so risks losing more ground and the soul of the nation.●

GUNS VERSUS BUTTER TRADEOFF

HON. MAJOR R. OWENS

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, April 30, 1985

● Mr. OWENS. Mr. Speaker, every year, Seymour Melman, a professor of industrial engineering at Columbia University in New York does a summary of the possible exchanges in social and health services that could be made for different defense expenditures. His summary of the guns versus butter tradeoffs should make each and every one of us stop and consider just what it is that we give up when we decide to spend money on weapons.

Public works have long been evaluated in terms of the cost/benefit ratios that can be anticipated. A dam, a road, or any other project comes with costs and is supposed to produce benefits. Generally, a public project is not pursued if it does not produce benefits greater than the costs. Perhaps we might utilize this mode of analysis in evaluating the costs and benefits of defense expenditures.

Professor Melman's annual essay follows:

[From the New York Times, Apr. 23, 1985]

THE BUTTER THAT'S TRADED OFF FOR GUNS

(By Seymour Melman)

In a long national sleep, Americans have dreamed that the nation could have both guns and butter indefinitely—that military spending is an efficient device for spurring the whole economy. But President Reagan's militarism has shattered this hoary illusion. Not only is it literally taking bread out of the mouths of children, it also is severely damaging the whole economy and imposing a wide range of punishing social costs.

Nowhere is the contradiction better shown than in the Administration's proposed fiscal 1986 budget, which could cut $32 billion from civilian obligations and hand it over to the military—this at a time when diverse industries are toppling like dominoes, when the nation's epidemic noncompetitiveness is smashing chances for productive livelihoods for millions of people. In other words, the budget offers more evidence that Pentagon spending still relentlessly loots the means of production. Even if Capitol Hill negotiations with the White House manage to shave some dollars, the final figures are not likely to alter the basic pattern significantly.

All the while, the Government carefully avoids any discussion of an alternative to the arms race and continued economic decay: coupling a joint process of agreed arms reduction with conversion from a military to a civilian economy.

The guns-or-butter choice once consigned to a timeless future can no longer be ignored, for the "long run" is now, and the nation cannot have it both ways, as the accompanying sample of the trade-offs generated by the Administration's budgets illustrates.

460 meals for the homeless in Grand Central Terminal—$439—One 155-mm. (conventional) high-explosive shell.

The Senate Republicans' 1986 budget proposal for freezing the cost-of-living adjustments in Social Security and similar pension payments, which would push 420,000 people into poverty, plus suggested cuts in farm-income subsidies as well as in Federal funds for housing—$25 billion—The MX Peacekeeper missile program.

Proposed cut in funds for mass-transit systems—$2.8 billion—Navy (EA6B) airplane program for surveillance and communications jamming.

Proposed 1986 cuts in guaranteed student loans and in campus-based financial aid for students—$2.3 billion—1986 budget for the M-1 Abrams heavy tank.

Proposed 1986 cuts in funds for veterans' medical care and housing—$336 million—220 Phoenix air-to-air missiles.

Proposed 1986-87 cuts in Federal funding for subsidized lunches for New York City school-children—$8.7 million—800 Army multiple-launch rockets.

Proposed 1986 cut in Medicare services—$4 billion—Proposed low-altitude antisatellite weapons.

Proposed cuts in small-business loans and Job Corps services—$1.1 billion—The Department of Defense's Latin American programs for 1986.

Proposed Federal cuts in housing for the elderly and handicapped, and the cut in energy assistance for poor people—$1.5 billion—One projected (LHD-1) Marine amphibious assault ship.

1982-86 cuts in federal job training and in funds for public-service employment in New York City—$1.2 billion—18 Navy F-14 jet fighters in 1986.

The proposed 1986 cut in Amtrak and in modernization of the Northeastern railway corridor—$741 million—26 Navy air-cushion landing craft.

Proposed 1986 cuts in natural-resource and in environmental controls, and in recreational facilities—$1.4 billion—The Army's 1986 funding for chemical-bacteriological weapons and research, and for rebuilding 48 (CH-47) heavy-lift helicopters.

Proposed elimination of the Federal share of a 15-year national plan for sewage treatment to meet minimum Clean Water Act standards—$30 billion—The Navy's Aegis (CG-47) cruiser program.

Proposed 1986 cut in Acquired Immune Deficiency Syndrome (AIDS) research and control activities—$10 million—5 air-launched cruise missiles.

Mayor Koch's 10-year plan repairing New York City's infrastructure—$40.6 billion—The Stealth radar evading bomber program.

Federal funds needed by Connecticut for rebuilding bridges and roads—$3.7 billion—1986 planned research and development for the Strategic Defense initiative ("Star Wars") program.

Annual additional funding needed to abate deterioration in Federal, state and local public facilities—$18 billion—3 nuclear-powered aircraft carriers with their planes and support ships, plus the Navy's antisubmarine-airplane (P-3C) program.

Annual additional funds needed to restore acceptable maintenance of New York City's public schools—$440 million—2B-1B intercontinental bombers.

Governor Cuomo's plan for new low-income housing in New York City—$4 billion—Half of the 1986 funding for additions to the United States' stock of 37,000 nuclear warheads.

Estimated cost of cleaning up 10,000 toxic-waste dumps that contaminate the nation's soil and water—$100 billion—The Navy's Trident II submarine and F-18 jet fighter programs.

Proposed 1986-88 cut in New York City Medicaid funding, reducing medical services to the poor—$1.2 billion—Half of the Air Force's 1986 heavy-transport (C-5B) airplane budget.

1982-85 cuts in Federal income and nutrition programs that left 20 million people hungry among the 35.3 million living in poverty—$12.2 billion—The Army's Patriot ground-to-air missile system.

Estimated cost of renovating an average five-room medium-income Manhattan West Side apartment—$42,287—One (F-16 jet fighter) antenna pulley puller tool; one antenna clamp alignment tool; one antenna puller height gauge; one antenna hexagon wrench.

What is needed to abate the growth of hunger: a one-third increase in funding for the Federal school-lunch program, food-stamp program, and Women, Infants and Children (WIC) program—$5.3 billion—The Army's single-channel ground and airborne radio system.●

SOLIDARITY RIDES THE AIRWAVES

HON. JIM COURTER

OF NEW JERSEY

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, April 30, 1985

● Mr. COURTER. Mr. Speaker, so ubiquitous are social controls in the cities of Poland that an observer might well wonder how he is to distinguish the General Jaruzelski regime without martial law from the General Jaruzelski regime with it. But even four decades of effort have not suppressed the natural spiritedness and ingenuity of the Polish nation, and people the world over greet with hope every suggestion of independence or resistance in Poland.

I would like the RECORD for today to include this recent dispatch from Munich by columnists Rowland Evans and Robert Novak. It offers a fascinating view into the Polish underground.

[From the Washington Post, April 24, 1985]

SOLIDARITY RIDES THE AIRWAVES

MUNICH.—A video transmitter from Solidarity's daring underground was smuggled to the roof of a Warsaw building recently and flashed the message "Solidarity Survives!" onto the TV screens of Polish viewers of the government-contolled evening "news."

This and other embarrassing penetrations of government TV and radio throughout Poland show that the most active underground movement in history against an entrenched communist regime is making a mockery of Warsaw's claim to control every aspect of Polish life.

When we were barred this month from entering Poland because the regime of Gen. Wojciech Jaruzelski denied our request for a visa, it was in effect the imposition of censorship. So we came to the next best place for a look at communism's worst and harshest casualty—and at the Solidarity underground movement, which will not go away. That place is Munich, and in Munich it is the U.S.-financed Radio Free Europe. The radio is the indispensable source of news that keeps some people of Poland informed about what other people of Poland are doing to advance the communist world's most courageous resistance.

Portable transmitters, both video and radio, are gifts smuggled into Poland courtesy of the AFL-CIO and its anticommunist president, Lane Kirkland. They fit into a small attaché case and are capable of sending a steady signal for four minutes on frequencies used for the regime's own news broadcasts. Solidarity activists, facing the risk of jail or worse if they get caught with the transmitters, have worked out an ingenious safeguard: a transmitter is placed in a high building, the antenna stuck out a window. The broadcast begins with the touch of a button, and the operator leaves.

When the police arrive, the four-minute broadcast has run its course, getting word through to perhaps tens of thousands or more that one of the world's most ruthless and proficient secret police is unable to silence public dissent. The police get the transmitter, but the conspirator moves on, unknown and unscarred.

The anti-Jaruzelski underground movement is a wondrous instrument in its diversity, resilience and ubiquity. Almost everything it does worth noting is a topic for Radio Free Europe. Consider the underground press, one leading publisher of which was reportedly arrested on April 13 as he visited his children in a Warsaw apartment. But for every clandestine publisher of forbidden words arrested, a dozen more are violating Jaruzelski's censors.

There are, we were informed here, an average of no less than 1,000 pages every week of government-banned, underground material being sent to Radio Free Europe alone, and that must represent only a fraction of the total. Between January 1982 and last June, 690 complete books, every one a prospect for government book-burning, were published and sent hand-to-hand around the most decentralized dissident movement in the world. Included were works by Arthur Koestler, Alexander Solzhenitzyn, Milovan Djilas, Jan Nowak, a hero of Poland's underground in World War II, and many Soviet and Czechoslovak dissidents.

The uncensorable underground movement may not be quite so pervasive and vibrant as in the days when martial law was imposed by the bankrupt Jaruzelski regime in December 1981. Its importance today, however, may be even greater as a demonstration of popular expression at a time when expression of any kind is more forbidden even than three years ago.

Evidence for this is a document titled "The Danger in the Social-Political Sphere in 1985," dated March 18. Distribution was limited to top government and Communist Party officials. It describes Jaruzelski's nightmare: the apathy of the Polish people in following their government's bidding; the failure of political and cultural organs sponsored by the regime: costly sabotage of economic programs: the power of the Catholic Church.

Jaruzelski's nightmare translates into the dreams of the underground movement—alive, well and uncensorable.●

HONORING FRANK E. MUNOZ UPON RECEIVING THE MEXICAN-AMERICAN BAR ASSOCIATION'S BENITO JUAREZ AWARD

HON. ESTEBAN EDWARD TORRES

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, April 30, 1985

● Mr. TORRES. Mr. Speaker, recently I was honored to participate in the awards banquet of the Mexican-American Bar Association where they presented the most coverted Benito Juarez Award to Attorney Frank Munoz.

There is no other individual who I think is more deserving than Frank in being the recipient of an award named after a great Mexican lawyer partriot who rose to the Presidency of Mexico. Frank epitomizes those ideals similar to Juarez's convictions and deep compassion for his fellow man.

Mr. Speaker, Frank Munoz was born in Los Angeles in 1927, the fifth of nine brothers. At the age of 8 he traveled every day with his family the long trek from Los Angeles to La Puente to pick walnuts. Other times it was out to Moore Park for the tomato crop.

At the age of 15 he quit school and went to work in the shipyards and warehouses of Los Angeles.

At 18 he was drafted into the U.S. Navy and upon discharge he quickly resumed his education, returning to earn his high school diploma at Roosevelt High School.

Working his way through the University of Southern California, he toiled as an upholsterer and was active in his union. In 1950 he married Connie Prado, raised two daughters Lillian and Sandra and finally was admitted to the California bar in 1958. In later years Diane and Lisa were born.

Frank at an early point in his career was an active political and community organizer, that is, Mexican-American Political Association [MAPA], Congress of Mexican-American Unity [CMAU], American Civil Liberties Union [ACLU], the East Los Angeles Community Union [TELACU], Mexican-American Legal Defense and Education Fund [MALDEF], California's for Liberal Representation [CLR] and served as chairman of the board of the city of Los Angeles Housing Authority.

Mr. Speaker, young people today entering the legal profession will take satisfaction that early pioneers like Frank broke down the doors to discrimination in education, in the legal profession, in the judicial system by organizing the Mexican-American Bar Association, by serving on the national executive board of MALDEF in its first years under a Ford Foundation grant. He was a member of important lawyer associations, State bar committees and judicial review boards.

Mr. Speaker, two prominent Governors of California have seen fit to appoint Frank to important entities. Gov. Edmund "Pat" Brown named Frank to the California State Social Welfare Board (1964-65); Gov. Edmund "Jerry" Brown named him to the board of the California Legal Services Corporation (1980-82).

Mr. Speaker, it is an honor for me to have been a witness to the many accomplishments of this man throughout his struggling career, his caring family and his commitment to the betterment of law. Benito Juarez would have been proud too. Therefore, I ask my colleagues here in the House of Representatives assembled to join me in wishing Frank Munoz continued good wishes.●

H.R. 2164

HON. MATTHEW J. RINALDO

OF NEW JERSEY

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, April 30, 1985

● Mr. RINALDO. Mr. Speaker, I recently introduced H.R. 2164, a bill to accelerate the removal of Social Security trust funds from the unified budget of the U.S. Government. I have taken this action because I believe the time has come to free Social Security from the politics surrounding budget debates, and to maintain public faith in the security of the public trust fund upon which 36 million senior citizens depend.

When Social Security was established in 1935, it was an independent agency, and its fiscal operations were considered in a separate budget. This independence from other Federal programs underscored the fact that American workers had earned their benefits through contributions. They were not subject to the whims and inconsistencies of economic policy and politics.

With the inclusion of Social Security in the unified budget in fiscal year 1969, this situation was fundamentally altered. Almost from the start, critics of the unified budget claimed it was part of a shell game devised to hide the deficits run up by the Vietnam war. From its inception, the unified budget has fostered charges and counter-charges regarding manipulation of the system for achieving paper savings in Federal spending.

The time has come for this charade to stop. Just 2 years ago, Congress enacted legislation to return financial soundness to Social Security. Yet some are again asking senior citizens to sacrifice in order to hide the deficit spending in other programs.

This situation has led to frustration and outrage for current beneficiaries. Every day I receive letters from senior citizens expressing a sense of hopelessness and confusion over the future of Social Security, and asking why Social Security is a tool for planning the Federal budget.

This situation is completely unfair to senior citizens. The longer we permit Social Security to be a part of the budget debate, the more we damage public faith in this vital institution.

Robert Ball, former commissioner of Social Security, has succinctly stated this point:

> People are paying today for benefits which may not come due for forty years or more. They need to have confidence that these payments will be made. The contributors can hardly be expected to retain confidence in Social Security if there is debate about the level of benefits, eligibility requirements and future commitments all under the pressure of the competitive annual budget process.

Social Security certainly is not immune to reform. As with any Federal program, it should be reviewed frequently to insure its fiscal soundness. While surplus revenues are invested in Government securities, Social Security does not belong in the same category as Amtrak. It should not be a target for Members of Congress and the executive branch who look to it to justify excess spending in other policy areas. The inclusion of Social Security in protracted budget battles has been, and continues to be, a misguided and unfair approach to the management of our senior citizens' financial future.

The legislation passed by Congress 2 years ago will remove Social Security trust funds from the unified budget in fiscal year 1993. Under the terms of the bill I am introducing, this legislation would take effect in fiscal year 1986, in order to expedite the protection our senior citizens deserve.

Let us return to the original Social Security system. The time is now to give Social Security the fiscal independence it needs to remain a program of confidence for all Americans. I urge my colleagues to join me in supporting this bill which will hasten the return to justice of the title of this system, Social Security.●

MARLOW BOYER: PEACEMAKER

HON. WALTER E. FAUNTROY

OF THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, April 30, 1985

● Mr. FAUNTROY. Mr. Speaker, Marlow Boyer died 3 weeks ago at the age of 25. Now we must carry the torch of hope for peace through his "People to People" work. Our sympathy is extended to his loving family and friends but Marlow's message is for all of us.

I offer below a tribute to Marlow written by Colman McCarthy in the Washington Post on March 17, 1985, which expresses very eloquently the contributions of this young man in such a brief life span. I would hope that my colleagues on both sides of the aisle will find this a message of hope.

[From the Washington Post, Mar. 17, 1985]

LEGACY OF A PEACEMAKER

(By Colman McCarthy)

Not a minute too soon, a $10,000 donation has come into the life of Marlow Boyer. At 25, he is an honors graduate of the University of Washington in Seattle, a skilled writer and photographer, the son of a senior writer at National Geographic and a peacemaker who believes Americans and Russians will share a safer future as friends, not enemies. Boyer has been suffering for the past 10 months from Ewing's sarcoma, a rare cancer. He has been told by doctors at the National Cancer Institute that death may come soon. At the moment, he is an outpatient living at home in Bethesda with his parents.

The story of the $10,000 gift and Boyer's work for peace would be worth telling regardless of his illness. That he does have cancer—and has written and lectured about it—adds a haunting beauty to the idealism of a young man using his last days to take out a brick or two in the wall of hatred between Americans and Russians.

In the spring of 1983, Boyer was one of 31 citizens from Seattle who traveled to four cities in the Soviet Union—Moscow, Leningrad, Samarkand and Tashkent. The purpose of the excursions was a people-to-people exchange on the need to eliminate the us-and-them lies, fears and hostilities that leaders of each country perpetuate about the other. Seattle and Tashkent, in addition to being sister cities and regional centers of culture, are sites where weapons of annihilation are built or based. While in Tashkent, a city of the interior that is geographically closer to Mongolia than to Moscow, Boyer and his party distributed copies of 4,000 letters of peace that had been signed by 42,000 citizens of Seattle.

In recent years, cross-cultural programs have been common—from the Volga Peace Cruise to the USA-USSR Citizens Dialogue, founded by Carol Pendell of the Women's International League for Peace and Freedom. There have been the well-publicized and worthwhile trips of everyone from Billy Graham to Samantha Smith.

The Seattle-Tashkent exchange is unique because of "People to People," an inspiring audio-visual show that breathes openheartedness. It is Boyer's production. It combines exquisite photography with narration, music and the comments of Russians and Americans recorded live on location. The program has a stunning professionalism to it, worthy of the son of a journalist who for 33 years has been a master craftsman at National Geographic. "People to People" is one of the few pieces of film work that record the development of personal relationships between Russians and Americans.

The $10,000 came to Boyer through the assistance of the Forum Institute, a Washington-based research and policy organization. The money is to be used in converting the still-photography of "People to People" into a film and a videotape. It can then be distributed nationally in a way now impossible in a slide-show format.

Moviemaking was not the way Marlow Boyer has planned to spend whatever time is left to him. But he has chosen to listen both to the urgings of his own hopes and to the encouraging priase given to his peace film by everyone from the cultural attaché of the Soviet Embassy to officials at the State Department. Boyer's convictions are in the tradition of classic peacemaking: that the force of beauty—as revealed in his film—and that the mere force of dialogue among human beings are more effective forces for peace than weapons. Hope is the ultimate deterrent, not the bomb.

Boyer is a credible peacemaker because of the remarkable tranquility he is displaying about the destruction cancer is now inflicting on this body. I spent five hours with him the other evening. There was not a word of self-pity or remorse. He had a writer's fascination with a new subject, in his case the medical maneuverings of cancer treatment. He tells of participating in "a truly guinea pig-like way in a 'phase one study' of a new drug that has only recently been introduced to human populations. It has never been administered to patients with Ewing's sarcoma. The tests they are performing have more to do with documenting the various levels of toxicity and the side effects that can be caused by the drug than they are with the actual treatment of the disease. As (one doctor) put it, 'There are significant benefits to be gained by your participating in the study—it's just that the benefits will not necessarily accrue to you personally.' Fair enough. It beats sitting on my ass and watching the grass grow."

With "People to People" assured of a wider and wider audience, the life of Marlow Boyer will also be better known. Fewer idealists are more deserving of the nation's thanks, and fewer peacemakers have defied greater odds—either in their own future or the planet's.●

ADDRESSING THE DRUG PROBLEM: LET'S TRY ENFORCEMENT INCENTIVES

HON. HENRY J. HYDE

OF ILLINOIS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, April 30, 1985

● Mr. HYDE. Mr. Speaker, the kidnaping and murder in Mexico of DEA Agent Enrique Camarena Salazar, has focused attention on the ugly war against illegal drug trafficking. In the wake of this tragedy, Mexican-American relations became strained, with some U.S. officials implying that the lethargic initial investigation of Camarena's whereabouts by Mexican law enforcement officials was because of their ties to Mexican drug kingpins. Arrests of Mexican policemen in connection with Camarena's assassination lend further credence to these apparent links.

Meanwhile, the House Foreign Affairs Committee, of which I am a member, has issued a grim staff study evaluating U.S. overseas narcotics programs. Among its most salient findings is the fact that corruption is a "pervasive" and common problem facing nations fighting narcotics production and trafficking.

The Mexican Government, for example, is cited as having "long experienced a problem with corruption and inefficiency, and these shortcomings have not escaped the drug traffickers, who in fact have exploited them to their advantage." The report goes on to say that "it is clear that corruption is the single biggest obstacle to effective antinarcotics efforts in Mexico. According to information received by the study mission, every narcotics investigation has been compromised due to advance warning by Mexican Government officials involved in drug raids."

Corruption is a problem on the home front too. Recently, the Post reported that an ex-FBI agent pleaded guilty "to charges of possessing and distributing more than 90 pounds of cocaine and receiving $850,000 in bribes and payoffs while working as an FBI undercover agent." Elsewhere in the same story, FBI Director William Webster notes that "the corrupting power of drug money is one of the obvious reasons why this number one crime problem must be conquered in our country."

In short, we are losing this battle, and it seems there are now available only two options: more of the same—namely continue to hurl money and rhetoric in the same old way at the problem and hope to turn the situation, or adopt the suggestion of Washington civic leader Brant Coopersmith—recently highlighted by Columnist William Raspberry—that we legalize certain drugs and try to control their use and abuse.

William F. Buckley, Jr., has joined in the call for legalization—"Legalize Dope," Washington Post, April 1, 1985—and if this is the best answer we have we are in deeper trouble than anyone has yet imagined. Buckley reminds us that "ours is a free society in which oodles of people kill themselves with tobacco and booze." But while legalizing narcotics may reduce the price of cocaine to that of rat poison, the cost to society in terms of more ruined lives and increased demands for medical and rehabilitation treatment will be explosive. Eliminating a problem by redefining it out of the Criminal Code is more surrender than solution.

I, therefore, would like to offer an alternative to address this most urgent and intractable problem. Specifically, I have introduced the Drug Enforcement Incentive Act of 1985 (H.R. 1621), legislation which, if implemented, will provide generous cash rewards to domestic and foreign narcotic agents, as well as other individuals, who make outstanding contributions to the fight against illegal drug traffic in and to the United States. Such awards would not only be given to those risking their lives, but also to those resisting the heavy pressure to cooperate with the traffickers or to turn a blind eye to their activities. The money for these awards would be derived from the proceeds resulting from selling the property forfeited to the United States, or cash seized, as a consequence of illegal drug trafficking.

The Attorney General would pay these awards, consulting, when appropriate, with representatives of the various U.S. agencies and components involved in narcotics control. In deciding how much should be awarded and to whom, the Attorney General would be required to take into account the value of the sums and objects forfeited to the United States, as well as arrests resulting from the exceptional conduct for which the award is made. Provisions would also be made to award survivors, like Mrs. Camarena and her three children, of someone who died before receiving his or her award.

Legislation enacted in October 1984, known as the Comprehensive Crime Control Act does allow for forfeited property to be used for award purposes, essentially for informants. My proposal would amend that law to broaden the coverage of potentially eligible recipients and lift award ceilings.

Why reward someone for doing what he or she should be doing anyway as an officer who takes an oath to uphold the law? That's a valid question, and the answer is that we are dealing with situation involving extreme danger and staggeringly large sums of money; more money in fact than most people see in a lifetime. Let's face it, human nature renders us all vulnerable to intimidation and the insidious temptations of pervasive corruption, and these awards would be a form of moral and physical endangerment pay. Recipients could be rewarded handsomely for aggressively enforcing the law and putting their lives on the line. In the long run, it will be cheaper for society to let such individuals share in the bounty flowing from their actions. Moreover, all of this can be done without any significant additional cost to the taxpayer as the drug traffickers will be paying literally and figuratively for these awards.

We have seen what the notion of incentives can do in the economic and arms control areas—why not employ the same powerful force in overcoming the tidal wave of drug crime that is engulfing our society?

Effectively waging war against illicit drug trafficking requires a multifaceted attack. This proposal adds one more arrow to the quiver. It is the kind of weapon that can make a significant difference. I think it's worth a try.●

THE OIL PIPELINE REGULATORY REFORM ACT OF 1985

HON. JOHN B. BREAUX

OF LOUISIANA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, April 30, 1985

● Mr. BREAUX. Mr. Speaker, today, I introduce, together with several of my colleagues, the Oil Pipeline Regulatory Reform Act of 1985. The bill proposes some reform and modification of the way Government regulates oil pipeline transportation rates. The emphasis is on regulatory reform.

The oil pipeline industry is regulated today as a result of congressional amendments to the Hepburn Act of 1906, which amended the Interstate Commerce Act. Now, three-quarters of a century later it is time for the Congress to review thoroughly the statutory and regulatory regime which governs the industry, change some provisions, and retain others. The bill proposes a more balanced approach of continued Government regulation and marketplace competition.

The bill is a starting point in the proposed review and amendment process. It is a beginning. It is critical, though, that congressional activity commence on the bill and that it be pursued in a timely manner.

Legislatively, the bill proposes to repeal FERC's authority to suspend rates, except in the case of discriminatory practices, in which case shipper complaints and FERC itself may initiate Government action. Also, the bill would repeal FERC's authority to set transportation rates. FERC's authority to protect against discriminatory practices is retained and the Justice Department's authority to implement antitrust safeguards remain. Oil pipelines would remain common carriers, as they are under the law today.

Adequate intermodal and intramodal competition exists today in the oil transportation industry. Oil pipelines compete amongst themselves for crude and product business. Water carriers, which are unregulated as to transportation rates, compete with pipelines. Trucks and rail also compete but in a much more limited manner.

Industry figures, based on Government and industry data, show water carriers transporting just over 50 percent of the crude and petroleum products in 1983, the date for which the latest data is available. Oil pipelines carried just over 45 percent of crude and petroleum product in 1983. Trucks and rail represented, together, about 3 percent of that traffic.

Other factors contribute to this need for oil pipeline rate regulatory reform. The industry itself has undergone considerable change. Today, there are an estimated 213,000 miles of oil pipeline in the United States regulated by either Federal or State laws. Over 140 oil pipeline companies are involved in interstate commerce and regulated by the Federal Government. Entry and exit into the oil pipeline business is open. Oil pipelines carry about 25 percent of intercity freight, which represents about 3 percent of intercity freight revenue. Capital investment is intensive, about $22 billion.

Consumer impact of oil pipeline transportation rates, as estimated by FERC, comprise approximately 1.5 cents of the pump price for gasoline, based on transportation rates in the lower 48 States.

Oil pipelines are the only segment of the oil industry which remains under Government regulation. Oil prices were decontrolled several years ago. There is no need to continue regulation of oil pipeline rates for transportation services. In the 79 years since the industry first was incorporated into the Government's regulatory structure, the industry has grown and expanded. It has served the Nation efficiently, economically, and competitively.

Mr. Speaker, there is no need to prolong unnecessary Government regulation of any industry or enterprise simply for regulation's sake, which is the case today with oil pipeline rate regulation by the Federal Government. The bill would authorize only change where it is needed and where continued regulation is not. It proposes a more balanced approach to the issue of Federal control by allowing marketplace competition to work in conjunction with Government oversight and safeguards. The bill takes the proper direction for oil pipeline rates and is offered in the spirit of regulatory reform.

I ask that Members give the bill their consideration and join in its support.●

THE REPUBLIC OF SOUTH AFRICA: A PERSONAL VIEW

HON. CHARLES B. RANGEL

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, April 30, 1985

● Mr. RANGEL. Mr. Speaker, I rise to share a most poignant speech delivered by the daughter of the 1984 Nobel Peace Prize laureate, Dr. Desmond Tutu at Howard University on November 4, 1984.

Miss Mpho Tutu, an engineering student at Howard gives a compelling description of life under apartheid rule in her homeland of South Africa. American involvement in that country has escalated, thereby, further condoning the very centerpiece of apartheid—separatism—which encourages institutional barriers across every level: territorial laws, which have created separate housing; migrant labor laws, which have created separate employment; and, secondary and higher education laws, which have created separate schools. The Government's recent abolishment of laws against interracial marriages is but a small, token policy gesture; the apartheid system is comprehensive and is interwoven into the entire fabric of South African life. If we better understand the impact of living under this system, we will better utilize our business advantages in South Africa's economy.

I submit Miss Tutu's gripping tale, a first-hand account of this destructive situation, for inclusion in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD:

SERMON PREACHED BY MPHO TUTU

PSALM 43

Give judgement for me, O God and defend my cause against an ungodly people deliver me from the deceitful and the wicked.

For you are the God of my strength
Why have you put me from you?
And why do I go so heavily while the enemy oppress me?

God, am I your stepchild? I look at the situation at home (in South Africa) with growing horror, the draconian laws which leave families fatherless for eleven months of the year, throw hundreds into jail daily for lack of a passbook or the right stamp; call my mother and her children "unnecessary appendages" and dump them, like so much garbage, on barren land; which turn my sisters into prostitutes, and starve my brothers in economically non-viable home-lands, which detain my aunts and uncles without trial to be found batterd and dead in their cells. While my babies starve, South Africa exports food. God, sometimes I am so tempted to ask you, am I your stepchild?

1 Thes 2:14-15 ". . . For you suffered the same things from your own countrymen as they did from the Jews who killed both the Lord Jesus and his prophets and have persecuted us, and they please not God and are contrary to all men." Paul is talking here about the church of the Thessalonians and likening it to the churches in Judea; but he could equally have been describing South Africa and her apartheid regime.

Our leaders, you might call them prophets, have been detained, killed, or relocated to the twilight existence of a banning order.

The laws which govern us would be, to quote my father, "the envy of many a fascist state!"

South Africa calls itself a Christian country and the government claims to have Biblical justification for apartheid. I always wonder which Bible they read!

What I want to do today is expand what I have said above, to prick your conscience; no, to hammer your conscience until you want to find out more, until you ache to act. South Africa is almost Orwellian in character. The colour of your skin determines who you may love, where you may live, where you may work. The Government decides what you may read and what you see in the cinema and on TV.

Who you may love? The Immorality Act and the Mixed Marriages Act say that there is to be no love across the colour line. "Aparthate": the correct pronunciation of the word summarizes the essence of the system—keep them apart so they may hate each other. The essence of my God is love. Give judgement for me, O God.

The Group Areas Act leaves houses standing empty in areas designated "White" while in the areas designated Black, Coloured, or Indian, people spend years on a waiting list in the hope that new houses will be built.

The Group Areas Act forces families out of homes they have built over generations because the area has been redesignated "White." One hopes one can find a house in the township with a garage to let. A family, a family which once had a home, now living in somebody's back yard . . . all of you crammed into one small room to cook, eat, sleep, wash, study—a family displaced by the arbitrariness of South African law. Give judgment for me, O God . . . The hated pass laws, which tell me from the day I turn sixteen, where I may work, where I may sleep, where I may live. One stamp in a little brown book and I am "endorsed out" of the city of my birth; "endorsed out" of even the possibility of a job. I carry no pass; I do not exist. The wrong stamp and presence in the town in which I was born becomes a criminal act. A democratically elected government, which neither I nor my parents had any part in democratically electing, decides that I have no right to live in the land of my forefathers. Give judgement for me, O God. And defend my cause. . . .

The Homeland or Bantustan policy has declared Black women and children unnecessary appendages to their husbands and fathers and has therefore dumped them—it's called relocation in South Africa—in a "homeland" far from any place that they've ever called home.

These homelands, as a South African government study has shown, are economically non-viable, arid areas where opportunities for work range from scarce to non-existent and subsistence is barely possible.

Yes, you've heard of Sun City—South Africa's Soho—where White South Africans go to convince themselves that the Bantustans "work," blithely ignoring the object poverty outside the gates. Where White South Africans go to find Black prostitutes—what is immoral a few miles away suddenly becomes perfectly moral, prostitutes and all. Where Black South Africans go because inside those gates—if they have the money, they can become people. Where Black South Africans go because the acid fumes of an evil system have become unbearable and they allow themselves to forget that what smells like fresh air is the smell of hunger.

O God, give judgment for me and defend my cause against an ungodly people.

Deliver me from the deceitful and the wicked.

Give judgment for me, O God.

And the homeland policy feeds the migrant labor policy which feeds the homeland policy. For eleven months of the year a father and a husband becomes less than that. He lives, five or six or eleven to a room in a single-sex hostel that denies his manhood. He lives five or six or eleven to a room in a compound of many such hostels locked in at night like a prisoner. His visitors may not enter the compound. It is like a dormitory with a curfew. . . . A curfew on a 30-year-old man? His family may not visit—where would they stay? "Those whom God has joined together, let no man put asunder. . . ."

You don't have to tell that to the woman clutching her baby against the bitter cold of Cape wind . . . Is this the tenth time the police have come in the middle of the night to bring the roof crashing down about your head? Is this the twentieth time you'll be rebuilding in the morning? Is this the 100th time you're walking back—baby, household goods and all from the Transkei, Ciskei, Venda or wherever it is you were left waterless, destitute, hungry and cold, and how many times more?

"For you are the God of my strength."

America invests heavily in South Africa. The Reagan Administration last year pushed through an IMF loan to South Africa that is almost equal to the increase in South Africa's military budget for last year. The Reagan Administration is "constructively engaged" purportedly to bring about peaceful change. South Africa is neither peaceful, nor has it changed.

We have asked for economic pressure on the South African government to bring the government to the conference table and forestall a bloody confrontation.

Foreign companies in South Africa—General Motors, General Electric, Shell, Mobil and the gang to name a few tell us that if they withdrew from South Africa, Blacks would be hardest hit. Considering the profits foreign companies make by operating in South Africa, one can understand their sudden flash of altruism. One percent of the black people in South Africa are employed by foreign corporations. Better to starve with the end in sight than to be fettered in padded chains for life.

Rev. Sullivan introduced the Sullivan Principles for American companies operating in South Africa. The Sullivan Principles cannot be imposed and are not policed. They are really nothing more than a salve for the collective conscience of American corporations. They do nothing to change the system. It is nothing to me that I can use the same toilet as a White person, or share a meal in the same canteen. I still have to show my pass to a policeman with nothing better to do than to ask for it. I still have to travel endless miles on overcrowded buses to an ugly township at the end of each day. I still have to go back to my cramped three-room house to cook on a smoky coal stove. I still know my children only by candlelight. She still goes home to her servant-filled mansion.

Why do I go so heavily while the enemy oppresses me with the poison that children both Black and White are fed, masquerading as an education? In other parts of the world it's called indoctrination, brainwashing . . . but then White people are past masters at distorting history. If you are Black, you are taught how to be a slave; if you are White, you learn to be a slavemaster. In some Black schools overcrowding has reached such proportion that split sessions had to be introduced: half the students attend morning classes, the other half go in the afternoon. It is astonishing that any Black child manages to complete elementary school, let alone high school.

The riots that exploded across South Africa in 1976 and have simmered angrily since are no surprise . . . the anger is there; it will continue to be there until the system changes. If the system does not change peacefully now, it will change violently later.

In South Africa peaceful protest has become virtually impossible. The riots of 1976 began as a peaceful protest. Children marching to protest a poisonous education. Children carrying placards and singing freedom songs, children fleeing from tear gas and police dogs, children fighting automatic weapons and armoured trucks with jeers, stones and generations of rage, children lying dead in the streets.

Hector Peterson was eight years old.
He died on June 16th, 1976 on a street in Soweto.
Hector Peterson was shot in the back.
Hector Peterson was running from the police.
Hector Peterson was eight years old.
The policeman who killed him shot him in self-defense.

I pray that you understand what a gift your education is. I pray that you understand how important your education is for Black people the world over. I pray that you understand that you're not in school because your father is a doctor or your mother is a lawyer or you were so brilliant that you won a scholarship.

You see, Black people, from slavery on up, have been paying for your education . . . and they have payed for it in blood.

1 Thes 2:12: "That ye would walk worthy of God who hath called you unto His kingdom and glory." That is all we ask. Psalm 43.

Why are thou cast down, O my Soul?
And why are thou disquieted within me?
Hope in God: for I shall yet praise Him who is the help of my countenance, and my God.

My belief keeps me from despairing for my country. My Bible tells me times without number that justice will prevail. I am created in God's own image, and God is in me. I am a child of God; I pray for the strength to act like one.

Hope in God . . .
Who is the help of my countenance, and my God.

ANNIVERSARY OF THE U.S. SOIL CONSERVATION SERVICE

HON. DOUG BEREUTER

OF NEBRASKA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, April 30, 1985

● Mr. BEREUTER. Mr. Speaker, this month marks the 50th anniversary of the Soil Conservation Service [SCS] in the United States. The SCS was born out of the depths of the Great Dustbowl and Depression of the 1930's when the winds along the high plains were carrying away billions of tons of top soil each year.

Since 1935, the SCS has had the responsibility for developing and carrying out a national soil and water conservation program in cooperation with landowners and operators and other land users and developers. The SCS also assists in agricultural pollution control, environmental improvement, and rural community development.

The Soil and Water Conservation Program is carried on through technical help to locally organized and operated conservation districts; local sponsors of watershed protection projects and resource conservation and development projects; and consultative assistance to other individuals and groups. About 3,000 conservation districts cover more than 2 billion acres in the 50 States, Puerto Rico, and the Virgin Islands.

Of all the programs that are administered by the U.S. Department of Agriculture none have been so universally accepted, effective, and beneficial in promoting soil and water conversation as those of the SCS. It is ironic, however, that in the year of its 50th anniversary that proposals have been made to severely cut the budget of the SCS. In terms of percentages, the proposed cut in the SCS budget is one of the most severe.

In 1984, expenditures were $851 million, and about $814 million is planned for fiscal year 1985. The 1986 budget proposes an expenditure of $454 million for soil and water conservation of which over one-half is for close-out costs.

The impact for my State of Nebraska would be enormous. Early estimates of the impact of the Reagan budget cuts for SCS indicate a reduction from the 400 staff years employed by SCS now to about 100 staff years in the fiscal year 1986. In effect this would mean about one employee per country. State offices would likely be consolidated into regional offices and the present county offices would also likely be consolidated into subregional offices within the State removing further SCS expertise from the land.

We all recognize the need to reduce the expenditures of the Federal Government and to cut our deficit. But as we move forward this year with the budget and the 1985 farm bill let us do so in a prudent, not frivolous manner. With soil conservation we cannot afford to be pennywise and pound foolish, for once our soil is gone it will take a millionium to replenish.

The need to reduce the national debt is certainly pressing, but to drastically reduce the Nation's effort to preserve our soil and water resources in order to show a relatively small reduction in the Nation's expenditures would be very shortsighted. Conservation of our vital natural resources is fully as important to our country's long-term sruvival as most of the items in our national defense budget. If we abandon our soil and water conservation efforts, we can look to other regions of the world and see the devastating effects which result from poor conservation practices.

The current famine in Ethiopia and other parts of sub-Sahara Africa began with a lack of rain but has worsened because rain that does fall is no longer absorbed by the soil. The search for fuel led to deforestation which allowed rainwater to wash away productive soil. The African food crisis is a direct result of soil erosion coupled with rapid population growth and the overall neglect of agriculture by African governments. Nearly 40 million out of 531 million Africans are now dependent upon grain from abroad.

Franklin Roosevelt reminded the State Governors in 1937 that, "The nation that destroys its soil destroys itself." We must not forget the examples of history from other great civilizations who exhausted their soil and water resources.●

A TRIBUTE TO KAREY WORTON

HON. RICHARD STALLINGS

OF IDAHO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, April 30, 1985

● Mr. STALLINGS. Mr. Speaker, I would like to take this opportunity to commend Karey Worton of Idaho Falls, ID, on her selection as the Idaho representative to the Veterans of Foreign Wars Voice of Democracy Contest.

This competition is sponsored annually by the VFW on a nationwide basis. It gives high school students the opportunity to prepare a short speech which helps them better understand the concepts of freedom and democracy upon which this Nation was founded.

Miss Worton joined some 300,000 other students in the competition this year. Speeches were based on the theme "My Pledge to America." I commend Miss Worton for her excellent speech and the important points she made in her essay. I appreciate her concern for the Constitution and her commitment to upholding the principles fought for by our Founding Fathers.

I am proud to have Miss Worton as constituent and am inserting a copy of her excellent speech in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD to share with my colleagues:

MY PLEDGE TO AMERICA

(By Karey Worton)

I was deep in thought as I wandered toward the Capitol Building. It was my last night in the capital city, and just as my vacation was drawing to a close, I too was looking for an ending. I was searching for conclusions to the feelings that had been stirring in me over the past three weeks. Tours, lectures and even memories of history and government classes filled my mind. What was it that I really owed this country?

Moving closer, I began to see images of many figures sitting solemnly on the Capitol steps. A second look revealed outdated wigs, socks and breeches. My excitement grew as figure after historic figure appeared. The words and stories I had heard and read so often gave each face a special meaning. Everyone of these people had made an individual contribution to this nation.

One of the faces I recognized from the worn pages of my history text was Thomas Jefferson's. He gave so much to our nation. The Declaration of Independence was his masterpiece. The idea, however, was certainly not his alone; this nation was formed by many people.

On Jefferson's right sat Richard Henry Lee. It was Lee who had proposed ". . . that this United Colonies are and of a right ought to be free and independent states."

The man who had seconded Lee's proposal, John Adams, sat nearby with his wife

Abigail. John Adams was among the first to favor independence from Great Britain and referred to himself as John Yankee.

Looking farther down the group, I saw John Hancock, the first signer of the Declaration. He wrote his name large so that King George III would be able to read it without his spectacles. In Hancock's home state of Massachusetts, the federal Constitution was bitterly opposed. It may have been Hancock's prestige that led it to a narrow victory in 1788.

The Federalist Papers, a group of essays written by James Madison, Alexander Hamilton and John Jay, also did much to persuade Americans to accept the Constitution and the new form of government that it offered.

John Jay later became our first Chief Justice. As I found his face in the crowd, I realized the magnitude of the job he had taken on. It was his responsibility to interpret and uphold our new Constitution.

With growing understanding, the historic words of Chief Justice John Marshall echoed in my mind. "The people made the Constitution and they can unmake it. It is the creature of their will and lives only by their will."

Suddenly, I knew what it was that I owed this country. There are currently many challenges facing our special form of democracy. Who am I to let the freedom these men fought for and the Constitution they toiled over, die and wither into just another chapter in the history books? The Declaration of Independence has already been written and Richard Henry Lee has made the historic proposal for freedom; but, there is still much I can do. I may not be able to make landmark decisions like Justice Jay, but I can learn about our judicial system and help others understand and appreciate our unique system of justice. I can't sign my name boldly at the bottom of the Constitution like my forefathers, yet the very democracy they created allows me to uphold our Constitution by voting, by staying informed and by getting involved in our goverment. Jefferson and Lee used their writing and speaking skills to gain support for independence and democracy. Today the first amendment guarantees me the right to use my pen and raise my voice to fight for what I feel is right. I will fight for what I know these men were striving for. They were striving for freedom and equality and that fight is far from over.

"I pledge," I whispered to myself as the images faded, "to uphold these ideals and this great Constitution. I pledge my time, my energy and my allegiance to this country, the United States of America. This vacation I would be going home with more than souvenirs. I was going home with a new responsibility and a great feeling inside.●

THE COMPREHENSIVE TEST BAN TREATY

HON. HENRY J. HYDE

OF ILLINOIS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, April 30, 1985

● Mr. HYDE. Mr. Speaker, since World War II the nuclear weapons states have amassed large numbers of sophisticated and deadly nuclear weapons, which the President has characterized as destabilizing. Unquestionably the existence of these weapons poses a risk. At the same time, the balance of nuclear threat and counterthreat has for years been the means to maintain a stable, albeit precarious, peace between East and West. These arsenals pose the dilemma: Their purpose is to deter war, which they have thus far done well; yet if they should fail in that purpose, and the threat of their use be carried out, the potential destruction would be unthinkable. Faced with this dilemma, what is the responsible test ban policy to follow?

One approach is to stop testing nuclear warheads unilaterally, and hope that the Soviet Union does the same. Advocates believe this will end nuclear competition and will eventually reduce and perhaps eliminate our dependence upon nuclear weapons for security. The goal I quite support, but the means I do not.

Another approach would be to sign a treaty now, relying on current capabilities for verifying compliance with a comprehensive test ban, and trusting that current stockpiles would continue to provide the deterrence on which we depend. My concern here is that any move to reduce the high, but balanced nuclear threat should not have the effect of reducing it for one side more than the other, and thus, perversely, serve to decrease security and stability. This could happen, for example, if one side had nuclear weapons which declined in reliability while the other did not, or if one side were able to conduct low-level testing while the other did not. When we depend so strongly upon our nuclear deterrent, when the means for verifying a test ban are not yet perfected, when the need for effective verification is made so apparent by the glaring compliance questions raised by Soviet actions—at such a time an immediate test ban would be an irresponsible action. Another, more responsible approach is the one which the President is now following. He seeks balanced, verifiable, and stabilizing reductions in the nuclear arsenals which threaten both sides. At the same time he supports a total test ban as a long-term goal, which would be achieved in a context that would enhance, not hazard our security—at a time when verification problems have been laid to rest, and when we have sufficiently reduced our dependence upon nuclear weapons. In the meantime, we should and do seek to support and strengthen those testing limitations already in place—the Limited Test Ban Treaty, which prohibits all nuclear explosions in the atmosphere, under water, and in outer space; and the two threshold test treaties, one to limit yields of nuclear weapon tests, and the other to limit nuclear explosions for peaceful purposes.

This approach avoids the dangers involved in unilateral actions, and safeguards Western societies against possible violations by the Soviet Union. It is prudent, methodical, and, most importantly, is in our best interest. Accordingly, I offer for your consideration the following resolution:

H.J. RES. —

Joint resolution expressing the sense of the Congress that a complete cessation of nuclear test explosions must be related to the ability of the U.S. to maintain credible deterrent forces and that any test ban agreement must be verifiable and must be made in the context of deep and verifiable arms reductions

Whereas, a viable nuclear deterrent is at present necessary for the security of the United States;

Whereas, the U.S., in seeking its long-term goal of a ban on the testing of nuclear weapons, must improve its present abilities to verify such a ban;

Whereas, the U.S. Government has concluded, based upon a thorough evaluation of the evidence, that the Soviet Union has repeatedly violated the Threshold Test Ban Treaty;

Whereas, the interest of the U.S. in verification improvements has been demonstrated by repeated proposals to the Soviet Union to bring verification of the Threshold Test Ban Treaty up to adequate standards;

Whereas, the U.S. has proposed on-site nuclear test inspections by Soviet and U.S. experts;

Whereas, the President appealed to the Soviet Union at the United Nations on September 24, 1984, to "cooperate in this undertaking and to reciprocate in a manner that will enable the two countries to establish the basis for verification for effective limits on underground nuclear testing." Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

1. Continue U.S. efforts to gain agreement by the Government of the Soviet Union to measures which will improve verification of the Threshold Test Ban Treaty and the Peaceful Nuclear Explosions Treaty;

2. Continue to urge the Soviet Union to comply with the 150 kiloton threshold limit of the Threshold Test Ban Treaty;

3. Continue U.S. programs which work to improve the verification capabilities for worldwide monitoring of compliance with a nuclear test ban;

4. Continue U.S. nuclear testing programs for maintenance and modernization of the U.S. deterrent force while simultaneously working toward the long-term goals of a verifiable nuclear test ban within the context of deep and verifiable arms reductions.●

COMPREHENSIVE ALZHEIMER'S ASSISTANCE, RESEARCH AND EDUCATION ACT OF 1985—CARE

HON. EDWARD R. ROYBAL

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, April 30, 1985

● Mr. ROYBAL. Mr. Speaker, on behalf of the over 3 million Alzheimer's victims and their families, today I rise to introduce the Comprehensive Alzheimer's Assistance, Research and Education Act of 1985—CARE. Developed in partnership with the Alzheimer's Disease and Related Disorders Association, this legislation is a critical step forward in winning the war against Alzheimer's Disease and related disorders. As such, it attacks the disease and its effects from several fronts.

First, it focuses national attention on the problem by establishing a National Alzheimer's Education Program—a program modeled after the very successful National High Blood Pressure Education Program.

Second, this legislation initiates up to 10 State Alzheimer's Programs and therefore brings in an important set of allies—the States. Over the next few years, a State, Federal and private partnership should greatly improve the use of existing services as well as open up access to the crucial area of respite care.

Third, the effort to attack the causes and find effective treatments of these dreaded diseases is advanced through an expansion of the Alzheimer's Research Centers of Excellence" Program to as many as 20 centers. Going even further, special research grants are authorized in new areas of research such as family stress management.

Finally, this bill launches Alzheimer's related research into the Medicare and Medicaid Programs—the Federal Government's primary vehicle for ensuring access to necessary health care services. Though a wide range of Alzheimer's related research, demonstrations and waivers are authorized, this legislation specifically targets the issues surrounding nursing home reimbursement, respite care coverage, and Medicare and Medicaid eligibility for the Alzheimer's patient.

If there is one issue in this year of budget cutting which deserves special handling, it is the care of the Alzheimer's victim and their families. I call upon this Congress to demonstrate its compassion by ensuring the passage of the Comprehensive Alzheimer's Assistance, Research and Education Act of 1985—CARE.

The care bill is summarized as follows:

SUMMARY OF COMPREHENSIVE ALZHEIMER'S ASSISTANCE, RESEARCH, AND EDUCATION ACT OF 1985 (CARE)

PURPOSE

To provide for improved care and assistance for Alzheimer's victims and their families.

SUMMARY

Alzheimer's disease is one of a number of degenerative neurological disorders that affect a large number of middle age and elderly individuals. The symptoms of Alzheimer's disease and these related disorders (ARD) are primarily psychological in nature. They include worsening changes in personality, memory deterioration, disorientation, and impaired impulse control and judgment. As the disease progresses, changes in intellectual functioning take place with even more severe changes. Victims may wander, develop erratic moods, become difficult to manage and incontinent with loss of bladder and bowel control. The disease eventually renders its victims helpless.

While Congress has directed much research towards the causes and care of these disorders, it has become apparent that the many issues involved in the research, treatment and management of these disorders have reached a point where a coordinated effort, including the states, the federal government and private groups, is warranted. A lag between the accumulation of knowledge about these disorders and dissemination to the medical community and public has resulted in misdiagnosis and lack of access to treatment management options for many patients. The nature of the disorder has left families with an extreme psychological, physical and economical burden that warrants a systematic examination of models of care and reimbursement policies.

Responding to the overwhelming need to assist the victims of Alzheimer's disease and related disorders, the CARE bill, developed in partnership with the Alzheimer's Disease and Related Disorder Association (ADRDA) and on behalf of the more than 120 Chapters nationwide, proposes the following initiatives:

To create a national educational program effort for ARD.

To create model state programs encouraging the development and coordination of resources.

To expand the program of research to identify the causes, prevention and treatment of ARD.

To develop methods of service delivery that will promote the health and well-being of ARD's victims and their families by encouraging care in the home and reducing the stress on the families of patients with ARD.

To advance training to health care professionals and para-professionals to improve the diagnosis, treatment and management of ARD.

PROVISIONS

National Alzheimer's Education Program. This provision requires the establishment of a National program that would foster and coordinate research, training, and education programs relating to the cause, treatment and diagnosis of ARD. It establishes an Information Clearinghouse to collect information from research and treatment programs and makes this information available to health care professionals, professional organizations and the general public. The program provides technical assistance to public and private organizations engaged in the collection and dissemination of related information.

State Alzheimer's Programs. This provision provides for grants to State to encourage development and coordination of resources to assist victims of ARD and their families. State programs include the following elements:

Coordination of existing services and development of diagnostic, treatment, care management, legal counseling, and educational services to care providers, victims, and their families.

Making available respite care services for the ARD patient. (Up to 25% of the grant may be used for this purpose.)

A review of state policies on the financing and reimbursement of the costs of health care for patients with ARD and identifying other policy changes that would improve the care of patients with ARD.

Dissemination of information to victims, their families, health care providers, organizations established for patients with ARD and to the general public on services available to ARD patients.

These grants shall be made available for 3 years initially and will be subject to an annual evaluation by the Department of Health and Human Services.

MEDICARE AND MEDICAID DEMONSTRATION PROJECTS

This provision mandates that the Department of Health and Human Services conduct Alzheimer's related research, demonstrations, and waiver projects. At least three such projects are to be conducted to examine the following:

Coverage of alternative methods of health care for ARD patients including services designed to maintain the patient in the home.

Coverage of nursing home care. (Current reimbursement policy precludes reimbursement by Medicare until medical management of the condition is warranted; or by Medicaid until the financial resources of the victim are depleted.)

Appropriate reimbursement levels for nursing homes with ARD patients.

RESEARCH ON ALZHEIMER'S DISEASE AND RELATED DISORDERS

This provision requires the Department of Human Services to develop a plan of research and to implement it through the National Institutes of Health, the National Institute on Aging, and the National Institute of Mental Health. The plan includes a proposal for the training of researchers in the related specialty areas.

The national research effort includes an extension of the current Centers program. It allows for an increase in the number of Alzheimer's Centers to 20. These are to be administered by the National Institute on Aging in collaboration with NIMH, NINCDS and NIAID. The responsibilities of the Centers include:

Research into cause, prevention, diagnosis, treatment and management of ARD.

Training health care personnel.

Dissemination of clinical information.

Coordination with other Centers and related public and private facilities.

In addition to the aforementioned grants and Centers, the Program makes grants for applied research related to ARD Including:

Research on family stress management and the development of health care and social support systems.●

A TRANSITION OF POWER IN THE KREMLIN

HON. JOHN EDWARD PORTER

OF ILLINOIS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, April 30, 1985

● Mr. PORTER. Mr. Speaker, the recent transition of power in the Kremlin raises hope for a new era of respect for human rights in the Soviet Union.

The Jewish community in the Soviet Union is particularly anxious to see an improvement in this area. They hope that they will benefit from a relaxation of the Soviet's policy of refusing them the right to emigrate. On this note, I would like to call my colleagues' attention to a recent article in the Chicago Tribune by Howard Tyner which discusses the views of members of the Jewish community regarding their new leader.

I would like to submit Mr. Tyner's article for the record:

[From the Chicago Tribune, Mar. 20, 1985]

GORBACHEV FAILS TO LIFT SOVIET JEWS' HOPES

(By Howard A. Tyner)

Moscow.—At this city's central synagogue Saturday night, there was the usual talk about emigration. If the leadership change here has raised a few hopes or lifted any spirits among Soviet Jews, it wasn't readily apparent.

"We think of ourselves as a kind of currency that the Soviet government is keeping to be spent at some time in the future," said Boris, a former chemist with a passion for reading English-language magazines.

"How and when we are spent depends on the circumstances, not the man in charge."

The new man in charge, Mikhail Gorbachev, has stirred hopes in the West for better relations with the Kremlin. But Jews here, who know that emigration increases whenever the international climate improves, remain skeptical about what lies ahead.

"We will believe he means something different when he does something different, not before," another man outside the synagogue said.

Since the mid-1970s, the synagogue on Arkhipova Street has served as an informal gathering place for Soviet refuseniks—Jews refused permission to emigrate. Last Saturday night, clustered in small knots in front of the building's granite columns, they exhibited little emotion about the leadership turnover.

The picture for Soviet Jews who want to emigrate is not a bright one. The rate of emigration, often considered a barometer of East-West relations in general, has sunk to nearly zero.

Western figures show only 88 Jews were allowed to leave in February and 61 the month before. According to the Intergovernmental Committee for Migration, the total for all of last year was only 908.

During the 1970s, when detente was more the order of the day, almost 250,000 Jews emigrated, reaching a peak of 51,300 in 1979. That was the year the Kremlin ordered its troops into Afghanistan, provoking a sharp reaction by the West and sending the international scene into tension-filled gloom.

Beginning in 1980, the number of exit permits plunged sharply to a recent average of 80 a month.

How many of the estimated 2.5 million Jews still living in the Soviet Union want to leave is a matter of debate. Twice in the last 18 months, a Soviet official has insisted publicly that virtually all those who sought to emigrate have done so already.

But Jewish organizations in the West contend that 350,000 Jews have embarked on the long and difficult emigration process, which routinely results in loss of jobs and ostracism by friends and colleagues.

During the last year or so, police have cracked down on activists promoting Jewish religion and history. Particular attention has been focused on unofficial teachers of Hebrew who hold courses in private apartments.

Since October, 1983, six of them have been arrested and sent to labor camps on charges ranging from possession of narcotics to resisting arrest.

Some of those waiting to leave say they have been summoned by officials and told that exit permits on a large scale never again will be issued. The implication is that they should abandon their plans and return to their former lives as normal Soviet citizens.

But most refuseniks cling tenaciously to the idea that a resumption of warmer superpower relations will open the emigration door again at least a crack—and that they will be the ones allowed to leave.

The resumption of U.S.-Soviet arms talks in Geneva last week fed such hopes. There also were reports in January that a Soviet official had told a visiting American it would be "no problem" for emigration to go back up to 50,000 annually if bilateral ties were improved.

But Western experts here said this probably was designed to get the powerful Jewish lobby in the U.S. to bring more pressure on Washington for East-West accord.

That would include an improved climate for trade, which, many of the experts contend, is Moscow's real goal in lifting its ties with the U.S. out of the deep freeze of the last several years.

How Gorbachev's elevation will affect this is unclear. His background as a technocrat suggests he will push for an improvement in trade without necessarily trying to re-establish a 1970s-style East-West detente.

In that case, Jewish emigration could play a role. But no one is willing to predict if Gorbachev will opt to allow a token increase in departures as a gesture of his intentions or wait until the climate improves before responding with more exit permits.

Meanwhile, for the refusenik community there is little choice but to drop in as usual at the synagogue on Saturday nights, swap stories—and wait.

"Nobody asks currency whether it wants to be spent or not, or how," says Boris.●

THE PRESS AND THE CONGRESS

HON. CHARLES B. RANGEL

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, April 30, 1985

● Mr. RANGEL. Mr. Speaker, at a time when negative perceptions of the press abound, I want to take this opportunity to commend those journalists who do uphold the cherished standards of accuracy, objectivity, and honesty.

In the past, the press has been the battleground for many a constructive debate; information reported has won widespread support for our initiatives and support for other ideas have been lost. But the competent role of journalism has never been more important. The American public has been better informed and knowledgeable about the everchanging world in which we live. I believe in the first amendment and the rights and privileges pertaining thereof. As long as journalists use their influential positions to promote fairness and an exploration for the truth, American interests will be responsibly served. An accurately informed readership is an astute electorate.

I submit the following article, by columnist Mr. Earl Caldwell of the New York Daily News, as an excellent example of what good investigative journalism can do, for inclusion in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

A MESSAGE FOR THE MEDIA

It was a cold day in January, and by then, the Bernhard Goetz case was weeks old, which meant that it was still heating up. This was a Saturday, and it's because of something Murray Kempton said that it sticks in the mind.

In the world of newspaper columnists, Murray Kempton is special. He's a true intellectual. But what sets Kempton's column apart is that it's almost always based on reporting. Kempton still goes everywhere to see for himself and to ask his own questions. In the world of newspaper columnists, that makes you special.

On the cold day last January, I was headed in one direction on W. 82d St. and Kempton was headed in the other. We met on Broadway, on the island in the middle of the street. It was not just cold; it was snowy, too. Kempton was wearing a big overcoat. He had a pipe in his mouth, no hat and a runny nose, but talk of Bernhard Goetz kept us there on the street a very long time. I told Kempton it was too cold for us to be standing there. He told me I didn't know how to dress.

He also told me something else. He said he had looked up the official report of the time Bernhard Goetz was mugged—the mugging Goetz said had prompted him to arm himself. Kempton was curious. He wanted to know, and so he did what good reporters always do. He went downtown and looked up the facts. He got a surprise. "It was nothing," he said. And then Kempton explained as only he can.

It was his contention that anytime there is anything of substance involved, the cops tend to overwrite their reports. He uses as an example a time he himself had been had by some of the bad guys. He said the report the cops wrote was so strong that when he was asked to sign it, he had to tell them he couldn't do it. It was too much of an exaggeration of what had happened.

But with the Goetz mugging, he said, there was nothing in the report. It happened. Goetz had been mugged, but the police record said it had been a very minor thing.

A woman on a talk show one night said that, in the earlier mugging, Goetz had been lucky to escape with his life. She said he was thrown through a plate-glass window and beaten, and as she went on, Murray Kempton's words came to mind. It was because he had done what good reporters always do. He had gone and checked the facts.

All this comes back because, by yesterday, it appeared that the Goetz case was finally pointed in the direction it should have been right from the start. But from the start, the problem was the reporting.

Usually, reporters start with the event. In the Goetz case, it was different. The whole story was reported backwards. Instead of digging into what went on inside the subway car right from the start, it was the reaction to the shootings that the reporters started with. Instead of starting with the question, "Who was Bernard Goetz?" the reporting started with what Goetz had become, which meant reporting on a hero.

Reporting itself never changes. It doesn't matter how many computers or tape recorders or other fancy equipment a newspaper has. Reporting is still footwork. Some in the business call it the dirty work. What it involves is going out and looking up documents and going out and asking questions and going out and standing and watching. It takes a lot of time, and often days can be spent but the reporter comes away empty. But that's the way reporting works.

The case involving Eleanor Bumpurs was the other side. The old woman was shotgunned by the cops under very questionable circumstances, and the reporters went after the facts. As it turned out, the reporting on the Bumpurs story was very good, and that was part of the reason the Bumpurs case turned out so differently from the Goetz case.

In the Goetz case, there were places for reporters to go. The train where the shooting was done had other passengers. Those other passengers were witnesses, but they were never tracked down. They became the missing links in the story. Had reporters tracked them down, if other versions of the shootings had come out, that would have had an impact on a lot of what followed. The district attorney, the mayor and a United States senator from New York all might have acted differently had the reporting that was required been there.●

SECOND THOUGHTS ABOUT AID TO THE CONTRAS

HON. WM. S. BROOMFIELD

OF MICHIGAN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, April 30, 1985

● Mr. BROOMFIELD. Mr. Speaker, the recent vote on aid to the Contras was a mistake. The shortsightedness of the vote, however, is quickly coming to the attention of many of my colleagues in the House. I want to share an article on this subject from the Washington Times concerning House Speaker THOMAS O'NEILL'S concerns about the broken promises of the Sandinistas, and their closed society.

Cutting off aid to the freedom fighters in Nicaragua was a slap in the face to the democratic forces in that country. It was also a pat on the back to Comandante Ortega and company. Should Contra activities soon end, there will be no viable pressure on the Sandinistas to live up to their promises to the OAS and others regarding freedom of the press, human rights, and a variety of other important issues.

After thanking those in the Congress who voted against assistance to the Contras, Ortega flew off to Moscow for millions of dollars in economic assistance. Let's face the facts. Nicaragua is in the Soviet camp, lock, stock, and barrel.

While we debated ad infinitum the pros and cons of giving the Contras $14 million in humanitarian aid, the Soviets may in fact provide $200 million to bolster Nicaragua's failing economy, and the Ortega regime, which is rapidly losing popularity.

In the past few years, Ortega has shown a real sense of compromising when he felt that the pressure was on. His initial show of flexibility came after the Grenada operation; more recently, when the Contras' activities expanded and the war was carried to new areas of Nicaragua, he also showed more flexibility.

Let's keep the pressure up. This is not the time to cut off assistance to the only group pressuring that Communist government. I was gratified to hear in last week's debate comments from my Democratic colleagues that they personally did not approve of the Sandinista government, or of its close ties with the Eastern bloc, and its domestic politics. I trust that my Democratic colleagues in the House will reconsider their vote. Let's again take a fresh look at the Contra question and its value as a form of direct pressure on Managua. Should Managua continue its present course of breaking promises, exporting revolution, and denying liberties to its citizens, let us reconsider the entire issue of Contra aid.

If, as reported, the Speaker is also concerned about the Sandinistas sidestepping their commitments, let us all work together in America's interest, and take a bipartisan stand on Marxist-Leninst Nicaragua.

[From the Washington Times, Apr. 29, 1985]

O'NEILL WARNS ORTEGA ON OPENING SOCIETY

MANAGUA, NICARAGUA.—House Speaker Thomas P. O'Neill this weekend warned the Sandinista government "had better make good on its promises" because Congress can change its mind overnight on aiding the Nicaraguan resistance.

In a Voice of America broadcast heard here and later quoted in La Prensa, a private enterprise newspaper, the Democratic leader contended that the Marxist regime needs to fulfill its pledges to open its society.

The statement was seen as an indication here that Mr. O'Neill is concerned about Sandinista promises of further democratization that bolstered congressional opposition to U.S. aid to the Nicaraguan resistance.

According to reports here yesterday, Mr. O'Neill pointed out that President Daniel Ortega of Nicaragua wrote several American senators, pledging increased freedom of the press and greater pluralism in party politics.

Meanwhile, Nicaraguan officials indicated that they expect the Nicaraguan civil war to continue even though they won an important victory against the Reagan administration's efforts to provide $14 million to the resistance.

Foreign Minister Miguel D'Escoto declared, following the vote in the House, "Let us have no illusions. The war has not ended. The war continues. The CIA is still directing the mercenaries and seeking other ways of funding.

"President Reagan . . . said that independently of the vote in Congress he would never abandon his brothers, as he likes to call the CIA mercenaries," Mr. D'Escoto added.

In the past the Sandinistas have sidestepped the kind of commitments they made to Congress. And few, if any, of the promises made by Mr. Ortega to various Americans are expected to be fulfilled, observers here said.

Sandinista spokesmen add that because the Senate voted to approve aid, the killing of the U.S. assistance by the House is insufficient to fulfill the U.S. part of the bargain proposed by Mr. Ortega.

The Sandinista explanations are described here by their opponents as "typical double talk" and a "doublecross" of American congressmen. Opposition groups maintain Mr. O'Neill's broadcast warning indicates he may feel deceived.

The Nicaraguan resistance leaders have declared they will fight on without the promised $14 million but their cause is expected to be injured in the long-term by the unwillingness of the U.S. Congress to support them.

In any case, resistance leaders contend that the attention created by the debate in the United States over aid will make it easier for them to raise funds to continue their efforts to defeat the Sandinista government.

Early in the week. Mr. Ortega repeated his offer of amnesty for members of the resistance who surrendered and one of the commanders was reported to have indicated some interest, according to sources in Managua.

Before Mr. Ortega left Managua for the Soviet Union to seek aid last week, he also announced that the government would meet the promise made earlier in the year and would be sending 100 Cuban advisers home.

The Washington Times reported last week that Sandinista forces are massing opposite resistance positions along the Nicaraguan-Honduras border and have fired across the border into Honduras.

Thousands of families have been moved from rural areas with resistance sympathies in an effort to deny supplies to the anti-Sandinista fighters as Managua appears to be getting set for a major military encounter.

Although the Nicaraguan resistance has been successful in its efforts to hamper the nation's economy, most observers contend the Sandinistas' military resources are far superior to those of the resistance.—BARNARD L. COLLIER.●

ANNIVERSARY FOR THE SOIL CONSERVATION SERVICE

HON. DOUG BEREUTER

OF NEBRASKA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, April 30, 1985

● Mr. BEREUTER. Mr. Speaker, Saturday was the 50th anniversary of the U.S. Department of Agriculture's Soil Conservation Service. Over the years that Agency has done a commendable job of developing and carrying out our Nation's soil and water conservation program.

The York, NE, York Newstimes recently published a column by Cheryl Stubbendieck of the Nebraska Farm Bureau that makes clear the importance of the Soil Conservation Service to Nebraska and the United States both today, yesterday, and tomorrow.

I request permission to have the article reprinted in the RECORD.

ANNIVERSARY LOOKS TO FUTURE

(By Cheryl Stubbendieck)

The Soil Conservation Service celebrates 50 years of service this month with attractive humility—rather than touting the federal agency itself, anniversary events are focusing on the soil conservation movement in the U.S.

The movement traces its history to the Dust Bowl Era of the 1930s, but 1935 was really the pivotal year, according to Jeff Obrecht and Pat McGrane, Nebraska SCS public affairs specialists, who are co-authors of "50 Years of Soil Conservation, Keeping the Soil on the Farm." In 1935 Congress authorized establishing the SCS as an agency of the USDA.

In the early years of America, Nebraska especially suffered little from the ravages of wind and water erosion. Its vast native prairies protected the soil so that it generally withstood most of nature's assaults.

When man plowed the prairies, he removed what Obrecht and McGrane call "the protective veil of bluestem and other grasses." Human population increased, land was less available and the land under cultivation was under pressure to produce more and more. World War I brought the need to bring larger crops to market year in and year out. Long, straight crop rows were popular and contour farming was largely ignored. Trees and windbreaks planted by the pioneers were viewed as impediments.

Soil erosion from heavy spring and summer rains was noticeable in the 1920s, but was consistent with the attitude of the era: soil was generally classified with the rest of our natural resources as inexhaustible.

The financial collapse of 1929 brought the roof down on farmers in debt, the SCS authors recall, and what land the bank didn't repossess, Mother Nature did by foreclosing on the rain. Wind and drought spawned the Dust Bowl, which finally brought the need for soil and water conservation into the public consciousness.

President Franklin D. Roosevelt implemented public works programs to combat the Dust Bowl and the Great Depression. And in 1933, the Department of the Interior earmarked $5 million of relief funds to form the Soil Erosion Service, which later acquired the more positive name of Soil Conservation Service. In 1935, the agency was transferred to the department of agriculture.

Still, the SCS was conceived as only temporary. In a move to have it made permanent, its chief, Hugh Hammond Bennett, arranged to testify before a Senate committee on a day when a major dust storm was fast approaching the East Coast. As he spoke, the skies of Washington darkened in the afternoon as yellow soil from the Dust Bowl filtered into the city. The next month, the Soil Conservation Act of 1935 was passed without a dissenting vote and was signed by the president on April 27.

In Nebraska, the SCS managed all but a few of the Civilian Conservation Corps camps in Nebraska. CCC workers developed demonstrations of practical methods of soil conservation on farms, worked on private lands in cooperation with landowners, and helped with erosion control research. In all, they constructed 52,091 erosion control check dams and planted more than 19 million trees for gully erosion control in Nebraska.

Nowadays, Nebraska is green and bountiful, compared with 50 years ago. But there is no assurance that the climatic conditions of the '30s won't occur again and the need for soil conservation continues and intensifies.

With this in mind, the 50th anniversary celebration in Nebraska looks to the future. Cooperative agreements with the University of Nebraska and the Nebraska State Historical Society Foundation are providing a forceful reminder of the need for soil conservation.

Located northeast of Lincoln, NU's Rogers Memorial Farm will serve as a modern-day conservation farm—many current conservation practices already are in place because of on-going NU research. The nearby Historical Society Foundation's "Logeschulte-Weese" Living History Farm will be an early day farm, showing cropping and conservation practices used in the 1930s. Both will be used for educational programs.●

OUTSTANDING COMMUNITY MOTHERS IN L.A.

HON. AUGUSTUS F. HAWKINS

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, April 30, 1985

● Mr. HAWKINS. Mr. Speaker, I wish to take this opportunity to recognize four women in my 29th Congressional District of California, for their continuing efforts to improve our community. These women will be honored at an awards luncheon May 11, 1985, as four Outstanding Community Mothers. The recipients are: Mrs. Thelma Hall, Mrs. Nodie Lee Goodson, Mrs. Julia Lee, and Ms. Eleanor S. Stevens. Each of these women have held a special place in the heart of our community. Their dedication to children and family has been the reinforcing factor in strengthening our future for ourselves and our youth.

Mrs. Thelma Hall has owned and managed a day care center for 14 years. She is a member of the Second A.M.E. Church, holding the position of trustee and steward. She has served as a den leader, coach, and commissioner for the Los Angeles Area Council, Boy Scouts of America, where she received the Silver Beaver Award and holds the Scout's Key. Mrs Hall is also a member of the Mary Campbell Missionary Society, the 49th Street Block Club, and the Good Neighbor Council, Inc., in Los Angeles.

Mrs. Nodie Lee Goodson holds a masters of arts degree. She has attended various universities, including California State University, at Los Angeles and UCLA. Mrs. Goodson's organization memberships include the National Council of Negro Women, the NAACP, and the Phi U Omicron home economics fraternity. She is presently the chairperson of the Jordon Locke Community Adult School Faculty Association. She has also served as the chairperson of several school advisory councils and as director of the Southern California Conference Branch of the Young People's Department of the A.M.E. Church, establishing its first scholarship fund.

Mrs. Julia Lee attended the Los Angeles City College, earning an associates degree in child development. Her organization memberships include the S.C.L.C., the NAACP the P.T.A., the Black Women's Forum, and the National Labor Union for California Women. Mrs. Lee has received many awards, including a Certificate of Recognition for outstanding community service from Assemblywoman Maxine Waters, 48th district, and a Certificate of Service Award for participation in title I programs for the Los Angeles Unified School District. Mrs. Lee was also instrumental in helping to obtain the Belbrew Library, the Children's Center at 111th Street, and the cafeteria at Russell Street School.

Ms. Eleanor S. Stevens holds an associates degree in art from Fresno State University and an associate degree in medicine from the Los Angeles Trade Technical School. She served as district manager for United Systems, Inc., being the first black woman to hold that position. Presently, Ms. Stevens is the owner and president of Stevens Personalized Services. The company offers companionship, domestic services, home health care, transportation, and entertainment for senior citizens and the general public. Her organization memberships include the National Association of Female Executives, the Business Management Association, and the Good Neighbor Council, in Los Angeles. Ms. Stevens has been named in "Who's Who in the West" and "Community Leaders of the World." She also serves as past worthy matron of the Order of the Eastern Star.

These women have displayed the kind of character needed to foster hope and renewal in our community. With their support, we have seen and improvement of the quality of life in our district. I commend them on their fine efforts and encourage them to continue working toward inspiring a brighter furture, not only for our youth, but for us all.●

REMARKS OF CONGRESSMAN GEORGE MILLER, CHAIRMAN, SELECT COMMITTEE ON CHILDREN, YOUTH, AND FAMILIES

HON. LANE EVANS

OF ILLINOIS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, April 30, 1985

● Mr. EVANS of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, the Select Committee on Children, Youth, and Families recently held hearings in Anaheim, CA to address the special problems of families with disabled children. At that time, our colleague, Mr. MILLER of California, delivered a speech before the Council for Exceptional Children, an outstanding group of educators who have devoted themselves to serving the needs of special children. I would like to take this opportunity to enter Mr. MILLER's speech into the RECORD. I believe it summarizes clearly and succinctly the need for continued Federal assistance to provide for the educational needs of exceptional children.

Mr. Speaker, this year marks the 10th anniversary of Public Law 94-142: The Education for All Children's Act. This law was passed with bipartisan support in response to the deplorable state of our country's special education system. It has guaranteed handicapped children and their families the means to enforce the basic rights to which they are entitled in our public schools. This administration, however, has acted repeatedly to "reform," cut and eliminate, Public Law 94-142 programs for the handicapped. We must work instead to protect these highly beneficial programs and to preserve the important gains that have been made in special education during the last decade.

REMARKS OF CONGRESSMAN GEORGE MILLER, CHAIRMAN, SELECT COMMITTEE ON CHILDREN, YOUTH, AND FAMILIES, BEFORE THE COUNCIL FOR EXCEPTIONAL CHILDREN, ANAHEIM, CA, APRIL 19, 1985

I am delighted to be here today, among many old friends, many new friends, and so many concerned about the wellbeing of children.

It is a special honor to join you this year, a year which marks the tenth anniversary of the Education for All Handicapped Children's Act. And a year during which you will be privileged to have as your president, Mike Grimes, a Californian, an exceptional professional, an exceptional friend—and a constituent. The perfect combination.

This year marks an anniversary for me as well. Ten years ago I came to Congress for the first time. I was the new kid on the block, the block being the Education and Labor Committee, just when Congress was putting the finishing touches on P.L. 94-142.

The Council for Exceptional Children, and Fred Weintraub took me by the hand and taught me about school programs for handicapped children, and about the struggles of educators who have dedicated their lives to these children, with little recognition and even less compensation.

Just last year we worked together again to assure that handicapped students would get the vocational training they need, through the Vocational Education Act. We believed then, as we do now, that all children deserve to be educated together, regardless of their disability, and that this prevention approach is more humane and cost-effective than any other.

We believed then, as we do now, that when we address the needs of children, we must consider as well the role of parents. Parents must be involved in the educational decisions affecting their children. They must have the right and ability to seek redress of their grievances if their children are not afforded the free appropriate public education to which they are entitled.

With this 10th anniversary of 94-142, what has become clear is that this is not a liberal program. This is not a Democratic program. This is a program crafted by a bipartisan coalition in response to a terrible documented need.

The law was hardly created out of some national whim.

By the time the law passed, 33 States had already developed mandates of their own to serve handicapped children.

But special educators, parents, and local school boards worked together to achieve protections for handicapped children who had been excluded from school, and adequate funding to give handicapped children the individualized attention they need.

What was the need? What was the compelling interest?

In 1973, at least one million handicapped children were excluded from school.

Thousands of special education classes, where they were provided, were held in basements and boiler rooms.

Many, too many children were hidden away in institutions—a much more costly form of care, and with little if any education provided.

Thousands of children were inappropriately classified as mentally retarded: Particularly Spanish-surnamed children in New Mexico. And black children were classified as handicapped at two to three times the rate of white children.

We heard repeatedly about the insufficient funds available from local resources to meet the high cost needs of handicapped children, and that school districts would continue to leave these needs unmet, or only partially filled, and then at the expense of other groups of children.

In response to these grisly facts, under a Republican President, a coalition of liberals and conservatives, together believed that we had responsibilities to these families and these children. And passed 94-142.

Repeatedly throughout this ten years, and as recently as our own Select Committee hearings, families have told me that "but for this law" they would have no way to bring the fruits of education, and the possibility of participation in mainstream American life to their children. "But for this law" parents of disabled children would have even less basis to struggle for the fundamental supports which they need to enable their families to maintain some stability.

The Education for All Handicapped Children's Act has proven its success.

It is now a right, imperfect as it may be. Tomorrow it could be history. This administration has taught us that what does not get protected, gets eliminated. You must remain strong. And you must continue to work in concert with the families of the children you serve.

This law is the floor—the foundation—of what families with disabled children need. But, still, poor and minority children, many of whom have a much rougher start in life, continue to be placed disproportionately in special education, all too many the result of misclassification.

Still, access to educational services has yet to reach all those who are eligible, not only among disabled children of school age, but especially among very young children, and youth between the ages of 18 and 21.

Still, misunderstanding, and lack of information about the benefits of integration too often cause disabled children to miss formative opportunities to be with their nondisabled peers.

The non-education support services families need—health insurance, child care, respite services, to name a few—are in even shorter supply, especially for children who are younger or older than school age.

But we can build from this foundation. We can fill these gaps, if we keep our basic principles always in mind.

Even with this, the Congress has failed to fulfill its part of the bargain.

We have never provided the Federal funds under 94-142 at nearly the level authorized.

Laws establishing rights, and requiring institutions to change their behavior, are fragile and take time to implement

But something much more evil is occurring.

From the day they took office, this administration has tried not just to reform this program, but they have demonstrated a fundamental hostility to handicapped children and their families.

How have they shown their hostility?

Their initial proposal in 1981 was to repeal 94-142, eliminating totally any mandate to provide educational services to children identified as handicapped. That proposal was dead on arrival in the Congress of the United States.

Then they proposed to block grant it, and slash the funds by 25 percent.

But the Congress, on a bipartisan basis, refused.

Next they tried to eliminate the due process protections for parents. But the coalition of educators and parents and the disabled community was strong, and beat back this proposal.

This year they are attempting to eliminate the ability of parents to bring grievances, by forbidding attorneys' fees. That's a sure way to prevent low-income and minority parents from making their case.

These views are again being expressed at high levels in the administration in some of the most unbelievable rhetoric yet to come out of public officials mouths. Some believe that because disabled children need Government supports to enable them to learn and to achieve independence, that they themselves are the problem—a view defended at the highest level of the Department of Education.

A view that says:

Handicapped people "selfishly drained resources" from public schools and were backed by "misguided" groups and individuals.

"If people are disabled, "It was not a cruel act of fate—It's from God."

"[Handicapped people] falsely assume that the lottery of life has penalized them at random. This is not so. Nothing comes to an individual that he has not, at some point in his development, summoned . . .

Those of the handicapped constituency who seek to have others bear their burdens and eliminate their challenges are seeking to avoid the central issues of their lives."

Another newly appointed Education Department official called for the abolition of every Federal elementary and secondary education program, including the Education for the Handicapped Act.

I applaud you for the action you took last night. You should be proud of the delegate council resolution.

But the real issue here is not that these individuals quit. The real issue is that they were hired in the first place, with full awareness of their positions. I am glad that they are gone, but you must keep your eyes on the real issue.

Because these views are not new. In 1981, Stockman said that no one in this country is any longer entitled to any specific service or protection. And let me remind you that David Stockman did not resign.

The evidence is clear. They are not committed to handicapped children, they are not committed to their families, and they don't like those who have dedicated their lives to working with this constituency.

They exhibit a fundamental hostility toward handicapped children and their families, the likes of which we have not witnessed in this country for many years.

They have no memory of what it was like for these children, and these families before the Education for the Handicapped law was established.

But this philosophy which guides their view is not limited to the disabled. They've laid out this approach for many many other vulnerable children and families in this Nation.

They hold this view of pregnant women and infants at nutritional risk. They hold this view of children in foster care, who are there through no fault of their own. They hold this view of children who are educationally disadvantaged.

The Select Committee on Children, Youth and Families, which I am privileged to chair, has spent the last two years going around the country to hear from these children and families, and from those who work with them every day. We have looked at the public and private programs which serve them.

And we have learned that many of these programs, designed in response to serious problems such as unacceptably high infant mortality rates. Increasing child abuse, and school dropouts can mitigate these problems if communities, and the Government, have the will.

If there have been failures, it is because we have done too little, sometimes too late, often for too few. It is not because the programs have not worked.

In fact, we've seen how WIC—providing nutritional supports for high risk pregnant women and infants—can reduce low birthweight, the leading cause of disabilities and death at birth. And the WIC program saves $3 for every $1 we spend.

We've seen how preventive child welfare services can reduce the number of children entering foster care, can reunite families, and promote adopting instead of leaving children languishing in foster care.

We know that Head Start for preschoolers and Chapter One for elementary school children have increased academic achievement and helped children retain those educational gains. And again, we know these programs pay off in budgetary terms. Quality preschool saves $4 for every $1 spent.

Each of these programs is highly successful. Each is a severely underfunded program. Each serves only a fraction of the needy population. And in each case. The Administration has ordered us to cut back still further.

That kind of decision by government is irresponsible, because it is made with the full knowledge of its adverse impact on many thousands of children and families each year. It will not save dollars, it will not save children, and it will not make families more stable.

What is more, they know, and we know, that we do not need to scrap these programs in order to balance the budget.

AFDC, WIC, Education, Child Nutrition—if you cut it all out of the budget, you would cut less than $20 billion.

The cruel fact is that, while misleading the American public to believe that if they scrapped everything—got rid of the waste, the good programs, and the bad ones—they would reduce the deficit, they would, in fact, eliminate less than this year's increase in the Pentagon budget.

The fact is they have shown a fundamental misunderstanding of changes in the American family.

We found that children and families live today under circumstances dramatically different from those of past generations.

Fifty percent of all children now grow up in families where both parents, or the only parent present, works. This year, nearly half of all mothers with infants under one will be in the workforce.

While the number of mothers who are the sole source of income for their families is increasing, many receive inadequate child support payments, if they are lucky enough to get them at all.

Divorce and separation are also much more prevalent today than in the past. One out of three white children, and three out of four black children, can expect to spend some of their childhood in a single parent household.

Family budgets have also taken new shape. They have had little choice. During the last recession alone, American families lost $319 billion in income, more than $3,800 per family.

These economic changes have taken a serious toll on children. More than 2 million children fell into poverty between 1980 and 1982, reversing twenty five years of progress. Now, one out of every five children is poor, and one of every two black children is poor—totaling 13 million poor children in this Nation.

This portrait of the trends affecting American families emerged from the Select Committee's region-by-region snapshot taken during our first year. We found that these trends are confronting not only low-income families, but middle income families too. Not just urban families, but rural families, and suburban families.

Most families are waging an uphill battle, trying to cope with these profound and unprecedented social and cultural shifts.

As we will hear more fully at the Select Committee hearing immediately following this session, families with disabled children are just like other families, and more. They are facing all the economic, cultural and demographic changes which have affected families throughout the Nation. And they need the kinds of family supports that we all do. They need shelter, and health care, and supervision for their preschool children, and recreation for their school-age children.

What we do know, though, is that families with disabled children are three times more likely to be poor. And because so many support services are unavailable, we have seen that the divorce rate is twice as high in families with disabled children. The rate of child abuse may be several times as great.

Families with disabled children, as all our families, need the benefit of enlightened policies from both the public and private sectors.

They need a Congress that will face the facts, and an administration that will face reality.

They need public officials who recognize that investing up front in the services families need will reap enormous benefits to the stability of those families, and the opportunities for productive adulthood for their children.

In spite of the troubled landscape I've described, I am hopeful. In fact, efforts to cut children's programs have not been as drastic as the administration desired, thanks to a coalition of ideolgically diverse Members of Congress.

And we have a forum now for children and families that we never had before. We have a forum where issues affecting American families and their children take first priority, and only priority, every day of the year.

At last we have a congressional forum that can speak for children and families the way the Agriculture Committee speaks for farmers and the Banking Committee for bankers.

And we have conservatives and liberals talking with, not at, each other, about child abuse and alcohol abuse, about prenatal care and child care.

It is my hope and my goal to lead the Select Committee to new accomplishments for children and families in the 1980's. Despite all the cynicism about politicians. I generally have found that once the facts are established, the importance of ideologies diminishes.

The debate becomes not whether we do the job, but how to do it right. On that common ground, much good can be accomplished.

I believe we are at a moment of opportunity. Science, technology, medicine, nutrition—all have come together in the 1980's to provide us the capability to make good on our Fourth of July rhetoric about "caring for children".

We have the scientific data. We have the test results. We have the factual basis for proving to the Congress and to the Nation that these policies are effective.

We still have the capacity to create and sustain laws that protect, educate and rehabilitate children, and help families avert crises.

We know, whatever the initiatives of the 80's, it will take broad coalitions of the disabled community, professionals, parents, and politicians. We have a strong record. We have ten years we can be proud of.

We should no longer run from these programs. We should no longer apologize for these programs.

I believe it is time in the Congress to have an open and free debate. And it won't be the Pentagon that's the winner. This country will show that it is far more compassionate than the Congress of the United States. Members of Congress are already beginning to hear that.

I ask you to stand together so that we can defend against the unnecessary and irresponsible cuts.

I ask you to stand with me this year, and next, and however long it takes until we, together, can extend to all our children the basic rights that all Americans enjoy.●

OPPOSING THE PRESIDENT'S TRIP TO THE CEMETERY AT BITBURG

HON. ROBERT A. ROE

OF NEW JERSEY

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, April 30, 1985

● Mr. ROE. Madam Speaker, it is morally imperative that we participate in this special order opposing the President's plans to visit the military cemetery at Bitburg. As Members of the House of Representatives we must raise our voices in protest to this insult to the memory of the American soldiers, sailors, and airmen who perished in the war against nazism, to the 6 million Jews who were murdered in the gas chambers, and to all the other Europeans, including the Russian people, whom the Nazis so cruelly and barbarically put to death.

Mr. President, do not go to Bitburg Cemetery. Laying a wreath at Nazi graves is an issue that transcends party politics and goes way beyond the need for reconciliation with the past. By going to that cemetery, you are bringing pain to millions of Americans, to the survivors of the camps, and to the relatives of those who died at the hands of the Nazis. It has been said, Mr. President, that if you do not go to Bitburg you will appear as if you are weak. To the contrary, by not going there you will demonstrate that you are morally strong and committed to remembering and not ever forgetting what absolute evil the SS and nazism represented.

The President has equated the Nazi soldiers of World War II with the concentration camp victims, saying that "they (the soldiers) were victims just as surely as the victims in the concentration camps." Nothing could be further from the truth. The noted writer William Shirer, author of "The Rise and Fall of the Third Reich," interviewed hundreds of German soldiers during the earliest and last days of the Second World War. He could not find one who "considered himself a victim of nazism," not one who "did not express his utter loyalty to Hitler and the Third Reich," not one who did not "believe fanatically in Hitler's cause." Mr. President, you have spoken callously and with insensitivity, and do not compound those words by the action of going to that cemetery.

I do not believe in collective guilt, and I dare not impugn the good will of the German people. Out of the ashes of a defeated Germany, a thriving democracy has emerged. But the success of that democracy does not obscure and obliterate the past. By going to Bitburg, Mr. President, you are playing into the hands of those who would like to forget that terrible period in the history of man, when civilized people devised and carried out mass murder using methods no one would have believed that man was capable of creating. By going to Bitburg, Mr. President, you cheapen the meaning of the Holocaust.

Millions of people are quite familiar with the cry "Never Again," that never again must a group of people be singled out for extinction as were the Jewish people of Nazi-occupied Europe. By going to Bitburg, the President inadvertently plays into the hands of those who would like to silence the cry of "Never Again." Mr. President, for the sake of humanity and morality, do not go there. You do not belong there.●

WORLD CONFERENCE ON WOMEN

HON. CHARLES B. RANGEL

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, April 30, 1985

● Mr. RANGEL. Mr. Speaker, the purpose of the World Conference on Women being held in Nirobi, Kenya this July is to provide a forum that will enable all women from the four corners of the world to discuss their concerns.

Historically women have been concerned with the issues that affect the world: Freedom and oppression, war and peace, love and hate, equality and discrimination. Therefore, every issue is a women's issue.

What concerns me, Mr. Speaker, is the under-representation of minority women at this international conference. The United States selected 37 women to represent this country, of these 37 women only 4 are minorities. This under-representation makes a statement to the world that is intolerable.

It communicates a vivid message to the world that the minority women are not important valuable members of our country. Perhaps I should not be stunned, because this administration has historically discriminated against minority women in its legislation, current and proposed budget cuts, and in its total disregard for civil rights legislation. It has placed minority women on the "back burner" of this Nation's agenda.

This is not what we want to say to the world. The U.S. delegation should have equal minority representation, that will allow the diverse interests and concerns of minority women to be discussed—representation that reflects the important contributions that minority women have made to the United States of America.

I submit a recent Washington Post column by Dorothy Gilliam that addresses this important deficiency in our preparation for the World Conference on Women.

The article follows:

[From the Washington Post, Apr. 1, 1985]

SIGNS OF DISSENSION

(By Dorothy Gilliam)

In 1975, at the height of the women's movement in the United States, the United Nations declared that the next decade would be devoted to upgrading the status of women around the world. Since then, conferees have gathered in Mexico City and Copenhagen in pursuit of those objectives.

The end of that decade will be marked this summer at a World Conference on Women in Nairobi, Kenya, for which the United States has selected an official delegation headed by Maureen Reagan, the president's daughter.

While this meeting should be an excellent occasion to evaluate women's progress and to plan ways to hasten their achievement of equality with men, disturbing signs of dissension are appearing that threaten the goal.

One problem was a deadlock over procedure that emerged when delegates from 32 nations gathered in Vienna for a final conference preparatory session.

A delegate from the United States blamed the deadlock on the Soviets, who she said "politicized" the session "by wanting to talk about peace, disarmament and 'Star Wars' [while the U.S. delegation] wanted to talk about women's issues." The White House and State Department are now discussing U.S. strategy in response to those events.

The problem with Soviet politicization is real, but it would be a mistake for the Kenya conference to turn into simply an East-West struggle. Yet it is naive to expect the conferees to talk only about "women's issues" as if women did not care about issues related to development and peace.

Another problem has been raised by some activist minority women who feel that there are too few minorities in the official delegation. "It is my understanding that there are only four minorities among the 37-member delegation," Dolly Adams, president of The Links Inc., said at a recent workshop that organization sponsored for dozens of national black women's organizations. "That sends a clear message that the American administration does not value black women, does not think we have the talents, skills or experience to represent our country. We have no question about the competence of those selected. We simply feel there should be a higher proportion of black and other minority women going to a black African country."

Lynette Taylor, president of the Black Women's Agenda, agreed, saying: "There should be a strong and definite minority presence on the delegation. They [the women of other nations] need to know ours is a diverse and pluralistic culture . . . [and] that it is possible to address problems within a democratic framework."

Responding to these charges, Betty Dillon, coordinator of the U.S. Secretariat, charged with making U.S. preparations for the Nairobi conference, said, "I am sure we all wish we could have stronger representation of various groups, but in a delegation of this size, all one could do is establish some proportion among various groups. . . ."

It is significant that this conference is on the African continent, where in the words of Tanzania's President Julius Nyerere, "The women of Africa not only suffer from the poverty of Africa, they are also the greatest victims of exploitation . . .

"These women are sensitive to the status of women elsewhere, and the United States has to recognize that. The inclusion of blacks and other minorities not only can make a delegation more representative, it can make America's involvement more credible and effective."

Dynamic women from around the world will be in Nairobi in July, and women's organizations are working to make this conference a historic event. The conference plans to adopt strategies to achieve equality of women and men by 2000.

In some ways, American women are farther along on the path to equality than women in other countries. Our progress gives us the obligation to be leaders in Kenya. A strong pluralistic U.S. delegation would be in a better position to deal with the conflicting political currents as well as with more traditional concerns.●

AFSCME SPEAKS OUT AGAINST THE SUBMINIMUM WAGE

HON. AUGUSTUS F. HAWKINS
OF CALIFORNIA
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, April 30, 1985

● Mr. HAWKINS. Mr. Speaker, as we begin to focus our attention on the summer youth employment situation, many of my colleagues will be tempted to support the administration's subminimum wage proposal. The proposal would permit employers to hire youth and young adults under the age of 20, at a subminimum wage.

In fact, as my colleagues begin to examine the issues involved in the subminimum wage debate, I suspect that some of them will use the National Conference of Black Mayors' current support of the administration's proposal as a barometer of its merit; and will probably lean toward supporting such a measure.

Before my colleagues fall into that trap, I want to strongly caution them against buying the administration's line that a subminimum wage would act as an incentive to employers to hire youth; and that it must not be that bad since the National Conference of Black Mayors gave its support to the measure last year.

Knowing the administration's position on labor issues as I do, and having followed this issue for many years, I am still perplexed why such a brilliant group of city officials as the Conference of Black Mayors would provide support for such a faulty approach to solve the youth unemployment problem—the administration's subminimum wage.

Recently, William Lucy, international secretary-treasurer of the American Federation of State, County and Municipal Employees [AFSCME] had the opportunity to speak at the National Conference of Black Mayors 11th Annual Convention, in Hartford, CT. Mr. Lucy in his comments before the group outlined some rather sterling examples of why the Mayors and other individuals, who presently support the administration's subminimum wage proposal, should seriously reconsider and retract its support.

With regard to the administration's youth labor record, Mr. Lucy reminded the mayors that "this administration is:

"The same people who ended all public service employment and youth employment and training programs under the Comprehensive Employment and Training Act. In public service employment alone 48 percent of the jobs were held by minorities and 41 percent by people under 22 years of age;

"The same people who reduced, then refused to spend all of the moneys available for summer youth employment;

"The same people who worked hard to limit welfare, food stamps and nutrition assistance to the working poor; and

"The same people who have done their best to reduce all forms of Federal aid to education."

And, we know that these actions and others have put tremendous pressure on black families and their teenage children, limiting educational options, forcing teenagers into the secondary, even the underground economy. If the budget proposed by this administration and its allies passes this year these pressures will increase.

High rates of youth unemployment are a serious issue in many of our cities, especially among black youth. In my own congressional district, which includes the Watts area of Los Angeles, CA, the youth unemployment rate is far too high. Believe me, there's far too many unemployed youth. With my many years in Congress, I am still working hard to adequately address this issue. And the issue is certainly urgent.

But a subminimum wage is not the appropriate answer.

I offer Mr. Lucy's comments on the administration's proposal to my colleagues. His comments firmly question why anyone with a sense of fairness; an appreciation for the real issues; and a sincere interest in resolving the youth unemployment problem would support the administration's proposal.

And for those in this Congress who will want to defend the administration's proposal by claiming that there is no better alternative, I want to direct their attention to H.R. 671, the Youth Incentive Employment Act.

H.R. 671 embodies the components of a far more comprehensive approach to solving the problem. Moreover, H.R. 671 contains an extensively tested youth employment program.

REMARKS BY WILLIAM LUCY, INTERNATINAL SECRETARY-TREASURER, AMERICAN FEDERATION OF STATE, COUNTY AND MUNICIPAL EMPLOYEES

I'm here to ask you to reverse your support for the Reagan Administration's proposal to create a subminimum wage for youth.

During the late 1930's, near the end of the Great Depression, the federal government took a number of steps to protect average citizens from extreme variations in the economy:

It significantly increased its regulation of industry.

It created jobs—hundreds of thousands of them.

It made it possible for the young and the elderly not to work. Congress passed child labor laws and social security; and

The federal government protected the rights and needs of those who did work. It legalized unions. It set wage and hour floors so that unfettered competition wouldn't drive wages or hours to subhuman levels. This last is the Fair Labor Standards Act, our minimum wage laws.

In passing these laws as a nation we articulated a new social policy. We decided that one of the duties of a democratically elected government in a capitalist society was to regulate the apparent and, then, admitted excesses of such an economy. While doing so we decided to rely on an adult labor force to support and protect families. Children needed time for their youth and education. The elderly had earned the time to reflect. In a democracy capital formation would not come at the expense of an inexperienced, infirm, low wage, and insecure labor pool.

Those of us in the Black Community know that this system, established during the 1930's was not perfect. It was horribly skewed by discrimination. However, this system continued to improve until the late 1970's—often to our benefit. It is a system that worked.

Before the Great Depression we called economic downturns panics—they came frequently and there were no protections. Since 1940 we've had the luxury of referring to economic downturns as "troughs" or "recessions" instead of "panics" or "famines."

During the last ten years, as the memories of the 1930s and before fade, support for this successful social policy has faded too.

The current administration would dismantle this system of protections entirely.

It is in this context that we must view the current debate over a youth subminimum.

Those in this administration who advocate a subminimum wage for youth as a solution to black teenage unemployment are:

The same people who ended all public service employment and youth employment and training programs under the Comprehensive Employment and Training Act. In public service employment alone 48% of the jobs were held by minorities and 41% by people under 22 years of age;

The same people who reduced, then refused to spend all of the monies available for summer youth employment;

The same people who worked hard to limit welfare, food stamps, health and nutrition assistance to the working poor;

The same people who have done their best to reduce all forms of federal aid to education.

We know that these actions and others have put tremendous pressure on black families and their teenage children, limiting educational options, forcing teenagers into the secondary, even the underground economy. If the budget proposed by this administration and its allies passes this year these pressures will increase.

Those in this administration who justify these cuts by pointing to rising deficits and who say that we can no longer afford new programs because of rising deficits are the very same people who gave us those deficits.

If their tax cut had not passed in 1981 we and our children would be facing roughly half of the deficit we face today.

These tax cuts did not help black teenagers or their families. They maintained the tax burden on the poor and lower middle class while reducing it for the upper middle class and the wealthy. They certainly didn't stimulate enough economic activity to create employment opportunities for black teenagers.

These same people have aggravated their deficits with almost hysterical defense spending. While saying that you can't solve social problems by throwing money at them they are throwing buckets full of money at defense contractors—with the inevitable scandals that hurried and inadequate management bring.

They won't cut defense spending. They won't raise taxes. They're trying to cut social security, even though that trust fund is solvent.

In this context deficit reduction can only mean the total elimination of federal transfer payment to people and to state and local governments. In this context there can be no targeted programs to reduce black teenage unemployment. In this context we can only hope that unproven regulatory schemes like a subminimum wage might reduce black teenage unemployment.

We do not have to accept this context. We can reduce defense spending. We can raise taxes on those who do not pay their fair share and we can, relying on our experience with previous employment and training programs, have targeted programs to reduce black teenage unemployment.

I must also point out that those in this administration who would have us adopt a subminimum wage for youth as a solution to black teenage unemployment do not feel backed into a corner by the context of the deficit debate. They have always supported a subminimum wage. The current context simply gives them another excuse to push something they've wanted for years. Indeed many of them oppose the minimum wage itself.

To those who say that labor's opposition to a youth subminimum is unthinking and irrational, I say look to the supporters of a youth subminimum for true rigidity and insensitivity.

Before I finish with a look at some of the administration's arguments for a youth subminimum I'd like to ask you a few questions about the arguments that you advanced as an organization when you chose to support this idea last year.

Why, if you were concerned that less and less money was being spent for summer employment did you not call for restoration of funds for summer employment?

Why, if you were concerned about increasing structural unemployment did you not call for the restitution of previously existing programs to deal with structural unemployment? Why did you not decry current national economic and educational policies that ignore the agonies of structural unemployment?

Why, if you were concerned with the immediacy of the crisis, did you not call for the reinstitution of the Comprehensive Employment and Training Act and Public Service Employment? Even those who disliked CETA and public service employment agree that it provided almost twice as many jobs per dollar as any other federal jobs program and that it provided those jobs at a faster rate than any other federal jobs creation program.

Why do you think that we need to experiment with new schemes when we know that part of the current problem is the recent elimination of programs that we know helped?

This nation already offers employers significant opportunities for a youth subminimum.

All businesses grossing less than a third of a million dollars a year are exempt from the minimum wage. They can hire teenagers for less today. This is no small exception. Almost a third of the jobs theoretically covered by the minimum wage are provided by these "small" businesses.

The Targeted Jobs Tax Credit gives a tax credit of 50% up to the first $6,000 in wages the first year and 25% for the first $6,000 the second year to enterprises willing to hire certain students and economically disadvantaged youth. If you're willing to hire a sixteen or seventeen year old poor kid in the summer the credit is 85% for the first $3,000 in wages. This credit makes it possible to hire teenagers at a cost that is significantly less than the minimum wage, significantly less than the administration's subminimum; perhaps less than a dollar an hour!

The Fair Labor Standards Act itself has always provided for a subminimum for students. Its currently 85% of minimum or $2.75 an hour. Employers need to get permission from the Department of Labor to do this and there are restrictions as to what proportion of their workforce can be paid below minimum.

Except for the first of these existing subminimums which exempts a while class of establishments, the administration doesn't like these exceptions. They all provide for some regulation of business to discourage exploitation or encourage teenagers to stay in school. The administration's youth subminimum does neither. In our rapidly changing economy do we really think that work experience in low wage, often dead end jobs, in the absence of education, will reduce structural unemployment? Do we want to return our youth to the exploited, low wage labor pool that existed prior to the 1930's?

When this administration can't get Congress to approriate money for the "Contras" in Nicaragua it goes to its business friends and raises millions. I have not heard it urging its business friends to take advantage of the tax breaks in the Targeted Jobs Tax Credit by hiring disadvantaged youth during the summer. Nor has the Department of Labor advertised or offered to encourage use by center city employers, of the existing student subminimum in the Fair Labor Standards Act. These would be legitimate experiments.

We're all concerned about black teenage unemployment. We all know that it is concentrated in our older cities; that it is concentrated among the children of already poor families. Why, if you're concerned about this specific problem, did you choose to endorse a "solution" at your last meeting that is not targeted towards blacks, let alone disadvantaged youth?

Most black children are now in the cities. Most jobs, certainly most service and new job opportunities, are now in the suburbs and beyond. Most tennagers in this country are white not black. Most of the teenagers employed by the private economy are not from disadvantaged backgrounds.

During the last twenty-five years we have witnessed the virtual collapse of the black teenage labor market. During this period the white teenage labor market has remained stable relative to the general economy. Between 1955 and 1980 white teenage unemployment increased from 10.3 to 15.5 percent while black teenage unemployment jumped 23 points from 15.8 to 38.6 percent. The difference cannot be ascribed to the minimum wage laws, nor, as we have seen, to the unavailability of any youth subminimum. Something else is going on.

I've already mentioned the suburbanization of jobs. Discriminatory housing and transportation patterns put these jobs out of reach. Another factor is a recent influx of competing groups for low wage jobs, principally women and illegal aliens. And finally, something I don't have to prove to you, persistent racial discrimination in employment in this nation.

The administration's youth subminimum addresses none of these problems. If it works in the economy the way they say it will it will be another administration program that is out of the reach of our children.

The administration supports a youth subminimum because it involves no regulation and no spending. For them it is a free lunch.

Let us now look more closely at the administration's position. The administration argues that the amount of the minimum wage presents a ban to employment. Just how much money are we talking about?

The mimimum wage was last raised in 1981 to its present $3.35 an hour. Since then, to stay even with the cost of living it would need to be $4.02 an hour. To keep abreast of increases in the avarage wage of all production workers it should be $4.05 an hour. One can argue that the minimum wage itself is now a subminimum. In 1968 the minimum wage peaked at 59% of the average wage of non-supervisory production workers. It is now a full 20 points below that at 39%.

A family of four depending upon one full-time minimum wage employee is living below the poverty level. A teenager or single adult living alone may be able to climb above the poverty line with the current minimum, but not with the administrations proposed subminimum.

The administration promises that its proposed legislation will protect against displacement, the substitution of an adult workforce with lower wage teenagers over time. Two factors determine the extent of displacement, the existence and size of a displaceable labor pool and the willingness and ability of the Department of Labor to monitor employers and pursue violations.

We may disagree on the extent of displacement under a particular subminimum plan. We can agree, however, that logically the temptation to substitute will be the greatest among employers now paying minimum wages and below for unskilled work. This displaceable labor pool is large and vulnerable. 12.4% of those now working in the United States earn the minimum wage or less. Five million earn less.

Thirty-eight percent of the working elderly earn the minimum wage or less. The administrations plan will pit the young against the old. Two-thirds of all minimum wage employees are women, over one million of whom head households. Conceivably a youth subminimum will pit black teenagers against female heads of households in our center cities. Finally fully one quarter of all minimum wage workers are minorities.

How does the administration propose to protect these workers? The record is not good. The administration says criminal sanctions apply. There has been no criminal prosecution under the FLSA in twenty-five years. Since the usual penalty, if caught, for violating the FLSA is payment of back wages due, employers have every incentive to ignore the Act. There is good evidence that they do—especially with regard to teenagers. In 1981 Department of Labor's wage and hour division investigated the employment of students. Thirty-seven percent of the students encountered were improperly paid. Urban areas included the worst offenders. In New York 85% were underpaid, in San Francisco 67%. Food stores and variety or department stores stood out, underpaying respectively for 51% and 45% of the hours worked.

The Bureau of Labor Statistics reports that almost 20% of teenagers earning the minimum wage or less are paid below the minimum. This is three times the number legally certified by DOL to do so.

Despite the obvious and continuing violations of current minimum wage and student subminimum statutes the Department of Labor continues to reduce its enforcement staff, reduce its number of work site inspections and reduce, therefore, back pay adjustments. It is not planning to reverse this trend even though recent supreme court decisions have put all public employers back under the minimum wage and hour laws. Can you reasonably expect DOL to have the capacity to enforce or even monitor a new nationwide youth subminimum?

We at AFSCME know something about displacement and substitution; something about DOL's willingness and ability to monitor and prevent them. During the 60's and 70's CETA relied heavily on public service employment to accomplish its purposes. We were naturally concerned that Mayors would be tempted to replace our members, supported by local taxes, for other employees, supported by federal taxes. As it turned out they were and they did. We worked with Congress and the Department of Labor to write strong legislation and regulatory language prohibiting substitution. We discovered that even with stringent reporting requirements substitution continued in the face of prohibitory legislative and regulatory language. We found that substitution was particularly difficult to encounter when it took place over time. As CETA public service employment expanded and continued more and more regular city work in more and more jurisdictions was being performed by essentially federal—rather than city employees. DOL simply didn't have and couldn't afford the manpower to monitor this situation. We had to do it ourselves. Across the country AFSCME locals and councils confronted their Mayors with evidence of substitution and worked out ways to alleviate it, then, avoid it. It was a painful experience. We believe it will repeat itself under the administration's youth subminimum. The current fragmented minimum wage labor force cannot count on the same kind of institutional support that AFSCME gave its members during CETA's public service employment days.

Despite this experience, despite this threat to our members' jobs, wages and advancement, AFSCME never waivered in its support for CETA and public service employment. We felt that the program's benefit to the nation, its unemployed and its cities, far outweighed the pain it caused us.

We do not feel the same way about the administration's proposal to establish a subminium wage for youth. At best it's likely to pit poor gainst poor, at worst bypass black teenagers entirely. Its a poor substitute for the damage that this administration's tax and budget policies have already done to black teenagers. We oppose it. We urge you to reevaluate your position and do the same.●

AMERICAN PRINCIPLES IN FOREIGN POLICY

HON. THOMAS J. BLILEY, JR.

OF VIRGINIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, April 30, 1985

● Mr. BLILEY. Mr. Speaker, the Sandinistas in Nicaragua have jailed their democratic opponents or banned them from returning to their homeland. The Soviet Army in Afghanistan has destroyed thousands of villages and forced 4 million Afghans to flee their homeland. The Soviet Union persecutes its citizens who try to practice their religion and prevents them from leaving their homeland to find freedom and dignity. Soviet citizens who have tried to monitor Soviet compliance with the Helsinki Final Act or who criticize the Soviet arms buildup are imprisoned or committed to psychiatric hospitals.

The Government of South Africa requires blacks to live only in certain reserved homelands; forces them from land they have owned since Queen Victoria's time; does not allow them to vote or to be represented in the legislature; and, requires travel permits to ride a bus from one city to another. None of those restrictions apply to the white citizens of South Africa. The system of racial discrimination is known as apartheid and it is the law of the nation of South Africa.

These acts of different governments against their own people are wrong. All of them are wrong and they are all equally wrong.

There has been a great deal of controversy about my sponoring two bills that would impose economic sanctions on South Africa in 1987, if significant improvements in human rights are not made by that nation's Government. The principles of freedom and justice are universal and must apply to every nation. I am working to help create a belief and a respect for these principles in every nation.

The one commodity that is not lacking in any discussion on foreign affairs is hypocrisy. Some people say that we should have no relations with the Soviet Union and other Communist nations because of their human rights violations and their activities against peace and freedom, but these same people often say that the United States should "not interfere in the internal policies" of other countries that violate the human rights of their citizens because those countries are anti-Communist. Other people want to cut off aid to our friends and allies who violate some of the rights of their citizens, but then say that the only way we can change the Soviet Union is through trade, cultural exchanges and other friendly acts.

This kind of a double standard from both sides is what keeps our policies in controversy. America is a nation of principle. We believe in freedom, justice, and human dignity throughout the world and that is the principle on which I base my actions.

I have supported, and I continue to support, U.S. aid to the Freedom Fighters in Nicaragua. The abuses and tyranny of the Sandinistas are as bad as any that take place in Eastern Europe. I am a supporter of the freedom fighters in Afghanistan who are desperately battling the Soviet Army and its tanks, helicopters, and warplanes. These poor people have never wanted anything more than to be left alone. The brutal invasion by the Soviet Union in 1979 has driven millions of Afghans out of their homes and has resulted in the murder of many thousands of people.

The few native people of Kampuchea (Cambodia) who have not been exterminated by various factions of Communist troops need every bit of support and help that we can give them. I will continue to try to stop the slaughter that continues there at the hands of the Vietnamese with Soviet weapons and poison gas. We all agree that these atrocities cannot be allowed to go unnoticed, any more than we can ignore the Soviet Union's murder of 269 people on Korean Airlines flight 007 or the recent deliberate murder of Maj. Arthur Nicholson in Eastern Germany by the Soviets.

Two years ago, I voted against the funding bill for the International Monetary Fund [IMF] that provided more money to lend to Communist countries. I have constantly condemned the Soviet Union for its violations of the human rights of its citizens for the 4 years that I have been in Congress. I have written a letter, cosigned by over 100 other Congressmen, to the new Soviet leader Gorbachev condemning the Soviet Union's violations of the Helsinki agreements allowing free emigration and communication. I recently adopted a Jewish family that has been refused permission to emigrate from the Soviet Union since 1976 to help publicize these Soviet violations.

Abuses of human rights in anti-Communist countries are not less serious because these governments support the United States on many issues. Lack of freedom is to be condemned and worked against in South Korea as well as in North Korea, in the Philippines as well as in Kampuchea, in South Africa as well as Iran. I do not advocate cutting off relations with

South Africa any more than I think that it would be wise to cut off relations with the Soviet Union—no matter how much the Soviets might deserve such an action. We have trade sanctions against the Soviet Union and against other Communist nations. I supported the sanctions that were imposed on Poland when that puppet government declared martial law and locked up 1,300 people from the Solidarity Labor Union.

Future sanctions that will only be imposed on the Nation of South Africa if they refuse to make further progress in observing the human rights of all of their citizens are in accord with the position of the United States and with my personal convictions and principles. I fail to see any justification for pretending not to see shortcomings in our friends and then beat our breasts about our enemies. I will not be a hypocrite on behalf of anyone. I do not believe that the United States can claim to be the champion of the oppressed in Eastern Europe if it is not the champion for the oppressed in Africa. Championing the rights of the oppressed in Africa must inlcude actions against black governments who oppress their citizens as well as white governments.

I am working with a number of other Congressmen—both Conservatives and Liberals, Democrats and Republicans—to find a means of addressing these issues in every country. Currently, our laws and our legislative process are geared to dealing with one nation or one situation at a time. I am looking for a way to address the issues of justice and liberty as universal principles that America stands for and will encourage. The Helsinki Final Act is a good example of where to start on their course, but we have not been able to proceed in this area because the Soviet Union and its puppets have refused to implement the accords that they themselves negotiated and agreed to. We cannot continue to compromise and negotiate arms, trade, and cultural issues with the Soviet Union until they live up to their word.

Fortunately, there are good verification provisions in the Helsinki Final Act. You or I can check Soviet compliance anytime we want to because of the provision which requires open communications between all people. If you pick up the telephone and try to call the Lerner family in Moscow or Andrei Sakharov in Gorky, you will be verifying a violation of Helsinki because you will not get through. But, the principles of Helsinki are as applicable to South Africa and the Philippines as they are to Malawi or Afghanistan and I will not be the hypocrite who denies the one and condemns the other or who says we ought to invade Nicaragua, but that we have no business telling South Africa that they are violating their citizens inalienable rights.

Freedom, dignity, and justice are the principles on which this Nation was founded. Freedom, dignity, and justice have made this the greatest Nation ever to exist in human history. Freedom, dignity, and justice are the principles that America must stand for throughout the world no matter how long it takes or how hard the fight.

We in America are not blessed with the privilege of freedom because we are lucky—we are blessed because of the will and the wisdom of our Founding Fathers. Those great men have handed down to us the obligation of fighting for our principles and for working for the day when all people everywhere are blessed as we are. Americans have fought and died for these principles around the world and we will continue to do so.

America is not an isolated Shangri-la protected from the real world. We have an obligation to ourselves and to our history to make truly universal those inalienable rights which we hold so dear and which we believe all men have been endowed with by God. We have a moral duty that we cannot shirk and which we cannot pervert without losing the very basis of the morality on which this Nation is built.

Some people will condemn any actions against Communist and Socialist countries. Other will condemn my actions against friendly countries. These actions are based on the fundamental principles which I believe in. It is much easier and safer politically to do nothing than to try to find a solution to these problems.

However, I cannot, in good conscience, stand idle. We live in the real world and simply wanting something to happen is not enough. We must take action and we must advance the cause of freedom and justice step by step. Partial solutions to these problems are better than no solutions because we are dealing not only with great principles, but with the lives of the human beings that these principles touch.

Allowing freedom of movement means reuniting divided families. The right to equal wages and the freedom to change jobs means the ability to feed and clothe a family and provide decent shelter. Freedom of speech and a representative government means being able to live without the fear of the secret police taking you away in the middle of the night.

My position may not be fashionable or trendy. I may be criticized by some of the left and on the right. But, I am at peace with my own conscience.

We cannot erase evil from the Earth overnight—not with economic sanctions, military aid, or the weight of public opinion. But we can, each in his own way, bit by bit, work to change the world.●

THE RULE OF LAW AND CENTRAL AMERICA

HON. HENRY J. HYDE

OF ILLINOIS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, April 30, 1985

● Mr. HYDE. Mr. Speaker, last week, I inserted in the RECORD (April 22, page E1631) a definitive legal brief by noted constitutional lawyer, John Norton Moore, that supports the legality of U.S. assistance to the anti-Communist resistance forces in Nicaragua. Today, as a sequel, I invite Members attention to a succinct editorial by Professor Moore on the same subject that appeared in a recent edition of the Los Angeles Times.

[From the Los Angeles Times, Monday, Apr. 22, 1985]

CUBA, NICARAGUA ARE THE REAL DANGERS

(By John Norton Moore)

A principal argument of those opposed to U.S. funding of the counterrevolutionaries in Nicaragua is that it would be illegal under accepted norms of international law. The rule of law is at stake in Central America. But the real threat is the serious and sustained armed attack directed by Cuba and Nicaragua against El Salvador and neighboring states, in violation of the United Nations and Organization of American States charters.

To focus on the issue of funding, rather than on the Cuban-Nicaragua attack, is to accept the childhood plea, "It all started when he hit me back." More dangerously, it is to confuse the defense with aggression, and thus to undermine the single most important normative restraint against the use of force. Moreover, the goals of deterrence and stability are at risk if we ignore the commitment made repeatedly by our country, that we will take effective action against aggressive use of force intended to deprive nations in this hemisphere of their right to self-determination. This commitment is found in the Monroe Doctrine and the hemispheric Rio Defense Treaty, and in the congressional Cuban resolution of 1962 and the 1965 House resolution on communist subversion in the hemisphere.

Since seizing power in 1959, Fidel Castro has directed insurgencies against 17 Latin American nations. Until the attack against El Salvador, the most serious of these was a sustained insurgency against Venezuela, condemned in 1964 by the OAS. The success of the Sandinistas—with substantial Cuban support—two decades after Castro's takeover in Cuba provided new ideological fervor and opportunity for what is now a joint Cuban-Nicaraguan policy of "revolution without frontiers."

Both the bipartisan Kissinger Commission and the House Select Committee on Intelligence have concluded that Cuba and Nicaragua are engaged in efforts to overthrow the governments of neighboring states, particularly El Salvador. These efforts include meetings held in Cuba in December, 1979, and May, 1980, to forge a united Salvadoran insurgency under Cuban and Nicaraguan influence and assistance, including arms supply, training, financing, command and control, and political and technical support.

The resulting insurgency now fields well-trained armed forces one-fifth the size of the Salvadoran army, and operates 67 offices in 35 countries in political support of the continuing attack. As defectors' reports and weapon serial numbers demonstrate, the preponderance of the insurgents' weapons continues to be supplied externally. In fact, they had American M-16 rifles and M-60 machine guns (from stocks in Vietnam and Ethiopia) even before the Salvadoran army had those weapons.

Congress itself found, in the Intelligence Authorization Act of 1983, that the "actions of the governments of Cuba and Nicaragua threaten the independence of El Salvador and threaten to destabilize the entire Central America region, and the governments of Cuba and Nicaragua refuse to cease those activities."

These Cuban-Nicaraguan activities violate the United Nations Charter, the Charter of the Organization of American States, the Rio Defense Treaty, the United Nations definition of aggression, the 1965 U.N. General Assembly declaration on intervention, the 1970 General Assembly "friendly relations" declaration, the 1972 basic principles agreement, the 1975 Helsinki principles and even the Soviet draft definition of aggression.

This pattern of ongoing aggression constitutes an armed attack justifying the use of force in collective defense under Article 51 of the U.N. Charter and Article 3 of the Rio Treaty. Indeed, Article 27 of the OAS Charter declares that such an attack is "an act of aggression against . . . (all) the American states," and Article 3 of the Rio Treaty creates a legal obligation on the United States to assist in meeting the armed attack. This obligation is parallel to that owed by the United States to the North Atlantic Treaty Organization (under Article 5 of the NATO Treaty) in the event of an attack on a NATO member.

A response in defense may lawfully be overt, covert or both, as has been the case in virtually every conflict in which America has fought in this century. In World War II no one suggested that Allied support for partisan forces or covert operations in Germany were illegal in responding to Axis aggression.

Certainly responses in defense must be proportional. But how is it disproportionate for the United States to respond against a covert Cuban-Nicaraguan armed attack aimed at overthrowing the democratically elected government of El Salvador by not ruling out that same objective against a totalitarian Sandinista military junta?

One of the most serious contemporary threats to world order is the aggressive covert political-military attack by an externally instigated and supported guerrilla insurgency. Such an attack from Cuba and Nicaragua is the world threat in Central America. Congress must decide whether it meant what it said in the 1962 Cuban resolution, when it pledged "that the United States is determined to prevent by whatever means may be necessary, including the use of arms, the Marxist-Leninist regime in Cuba from extending, by force or the threat of force, its aggressive or subversive activities to any part of this hemisphere."●

THE ARMENIAN GENOCIDE

HON. JOSEPH D. EARLY

OF MASSACHUSETTS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, April 24, 1985

● Mr. EARLY. Mr. Speaker, I rise with my colleagues today to join Representatives PASHAYAN and COELHO and all Armenian-Americans to commemorate the Armenian genocide. Because 1985 marks the 70th year since the Ottoman Turks began their brutal massacre and evacuation of approximately 2,500,000 innocent Armenians from their ancestral homeland, commemorating and reflecting upon this important and tragic historical event is particularly significant this year.

The Armenian genocide, which has been repeatedly documented, continued relentlessly from 1915 through 1923 and represents the first genocide of the 20th century. We must never excuse or forget the fact that this annihilation of almost an entire race of people occurred such a short time ago. We do not assemble here today, however, to lay blame or seek retribution from the present-day Turkish Government. But instead, we assemble here to remember and mourn those whose lives were taken and to acknowledge and engrain forever in our minds the painful details of this modern-day genocide to prevent similar events from ever recurring.

Following the edict of deportation, which was formally promulgated by the Turkish Government on May 27, 1915, it is estimated that 1,500,000 Armenians were slain while attempting to escape from their ancestral homeland of 3,000 years. Some estimate that only about 500,000 Armenians managed to flee, scattering north across the Turkish border to Russia, south into the Arab countries, and to Europe and the United States. Today, we also gather to honor all peoples of Armenian descent the world over who have carried on their rich cultural and religious heritage, despite the hardships they have endured.

I am proud to know many Armenian-Americans personally as friends, colleagues, and copatriots and hold nothing but admiration for their strong faith, character, and cultural values. I am proud to join my colleagues in commemorating Armenian Martyr's Day and look forward to the day when all who come to Washington may visit the Holocaust Memorial to reflect upon the tragic occurrence of the Armenian genocide and all genocides, in the hopes that such a senseless waste of human life will never again be repeated.●

A CHANGING KOREA?

HON. EDWARD F. FEIGHAN

OF OHIO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, April 30, 1985

● Mr. FEIGHAN. Mr. Speaker, last weekend President Chun Doo Hwan of South Korea paid a visit to the United States. Two months ago, during the stormy return of opposition leader Kim Dae Jung to Korea, his scheduled trip was much in the news. This weekend, surrounded as we have been in the debate over Nicaragua and the furor over President Reagan's trip to Bitburg, General Chun's presence was barely felt. But I would like to take a moment today to discuss recent events in South Korea and raise some points which I hope President Chun took with him when he returned home yesterday.

There is no denying that Kim Dae Jung's return to Korea and the very critical attention focused on the policies of South Korea because of that trip, catalyzed some significant changes in the political landscape in that country. The New Korea Democratic Party amassed enough votes in the National Assembly elections to take the leading opposition place in that body. A political ban was lifted from 13 significant opposition leaders, allowing Kim Young Sam, cochair of the NKDP with Kim Dae Jung, to return to active life. Kim Dae Jung, under house arrest since his return, had his civil liberties restored. Most encouraging has been the defection of National Assembly members from the old, Government-sponsored opposition party into the ranks of the NKDP, boding well for a legitimate political opposition in the country.

But we must bear in mind that these steps do not in themselves constitute progress toward democracy. Democracy cannot function in an atmosphere of Government repression: A free press is the heartbeat of democracy, a representational assembly essential to the checks and balances necessary to control zealous power. What has happened in the last 2 months in South Korea is that road blocks to democracy have been gradually removed. But the progress has yet to commence.

President Chun's tolerance of dissent is showing some early signs of wear. He has commented publicly that he should be recognized for not having used force against his more strident opponents in the assembly campaign, indicating that such restraint might not be exercised at a future date. But President Chun should recognize that his commitment to democracy may stand its first real tests in the coming months, and be prepared to deal with it.

The New Korea Democratic Party has insisted that Kim Dae Jung be given back his political rights, and they are willing to hold up the assembly schedule to reinforce their resolve. Student protests and a more vocal opposition have begun asking for President Chun to resign early so that genuine popular presidential elections may take place in 1988. Workers have begun to flex their muscles despite stringent laws containing unions and prohibiting strikes.

That President Chun has not taken dramatic action on any of these issues yet may have been due in part to his trip to the United States. But with that trip out of the way, and with President Reagan's praise for the "considerable progress" toward an "open society" conferred, some causes for his laudable restraint have been removed. The United States should make it clear that the recent progress and growing tolerance are seen as necessary foundations for future progress, and not as temporary or special concessions to a watchful ally.

It is heartening, Mr. Speaker, to see some emerging signs in South Korea about which we can be truly hopeful. But with some road blocks now removed, South Korea should strive to move forward on the road toward democracy and build on the hopeful spirit that has been created. I am sure my colleagues join me in that wish, and we will be watching with great interest the actions of President Chun and the Democratic Justice Party as they approach their most crucial test: the peaceful transfer of power in 1988.●

OKLAHOMA FIRST DISTRICT QUESTIONNAIRE RESULTS

HON. JAMES R. JONES

OF OKLAHOMA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, April 30, 1985

● Mr. JONES of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, as I do every year, I wish to take this opportunity to share with my colleagues the thinking of my constituents in the First District of Oklahoma. Naturally I'm prejudiced, but I believe that the commonsense thinking of Oklahomans could solve so many of the problems we have today.

So, Mr. Speaker, I urge my colleagues to review this questionnaire and the results, and to consider seriously the advice of the people of the First District of Oklahoma. The questions and the survey results from approximately 25,000 of my constituents follow:

QUESTIONNAIRE RESULTS FROM THE PEOPLE OF THE FIRST DISTRICT OF OKLAHOMA

1. Current budget projections indicate that federal budget deficits will remain over $200 billion for the rest of the 1980s if no action is taken. Do you feel that the economic recovery will be killed if mayor policy changes are not made to reduce those deficits?

Yes—80 percent.

No—20 percent.

2. Pentagon critics have reported substantial waste in military spending, such as $400 hammers and $7,000 coffeepots. Pentagon supporters maintain that despite such examples of waste President Reagan's average request to increase military spending by 10 percent over inflation is necessary for national security. As part of an overall spending freeze program, do you believe the annual increase in Pentagon spending can be slowed without jeopardizing national defense?

Yes—84 percent.

No—16 percent.

3. Assuming that we must bring the federal budget into balance, which of the following actions should Congress and the President follow:

a. Make deep cuts in domestic spending only—23 percent.

b. make deep cuts in military spending only—23 percent.

c. Freeze all federal spending, including defense and Social Security, for one year, and close remaining deficit gap with revenue increases: 52 percent.

d. Do nothing about the deficit—2 percent.

4. Last year, Congress spent a good deal of time debating the question of prayer in public schools. This debate will continue in the coming Congress. Which of the following best represents your feeling about prayer in public schools:

a. Vocal prayer in school should be mandatory—9 percent.

b. A moment of silence at the beginning of the school day should be mandatory—15 percent.

c. A moment of silence at the beginning of the school day should be voluntary—54 percent.

d. There should be no prayer or moment of silence in public schools—21 percent.

e. No opinion—1 percent.

5. Finally, as you know, Congress considers thousands of bills every year, ranging from major legislation dealing with tax reform and military strength to less significant though still important issues such as tariff bills and national parks. Listed below are seven issues which Congress may address over the next two years. While each issue is very important, please select the one you feel is most important to our Nation's future:

a. Overhaul of the tax law—23 percent.

b. Immigration control and reform—8 percent.

c. Defense buildup—6 percent.

d. Balancing the federal budget—49 percent.

e. Cleaning up the environment—5 percent.

f. Eliminating the trade deficit—5 percent.

g. Further controls on health care costs—4 percent.●

A CONGRESSIONAL TRIBUTE TO WILLIAM E. ACQUARD

HON. SOLOMON P. ORTIZ

OF TEXAS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, April 30, 1985

● Mr. ORTIZ. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to pay tribute to William E. Acquard of Corpus Christi, TX, who is retiring from Du Pont on April 30, 1985, after over 30 years of service. Mr. Acquard has had a long and distinguished record of service with the Du Pont Corp., and he is to be commended.

William Acquard was born and raised in Buffalo, NY. After receiving a chemical engineering degree from Rensselaer Polytechnic Institute in Troy, NY, he began working for Du Pont. He has served them with distinction since 1952.

In 1973, William Acquard moved to Corpus Christi to work at the Du Pont plant in Ingleside, TX. From the very beginning, he assisted in the design, construction and operation of the plant, which is one of Corpus Christi's most important employers. His contribution in bringing this important industry to the Corpus Christi area must be applauded.

Although Mr. Acquard could be described as a man of few words, he has won the respect and admiration of his coworkers through his dedicated service and hard work. As he leaves the service of Du Pont, I am sure that he will be greatly missed.

Mr. Speaker, I have mentioned William Acquard's business accomplishments over the past 33 years, but there are other areas in which he should be commended. Mr. Acquard is a family man. He and his wife, Barbara, have been married for 34 years. They have raised 2 children, and, if I may say so myself, have done a good job. This is no small achievement.

The quality of life in Corpus Christi, TX, has been enhanced by William E. Acquard. I can think of no better reason for Congress to recognize an individual. I ask all of my colleagues to join me in sending our best wishes to William E. Acquard for his outstanding dedication and service to the people of Corpus Christi and the Du Pont Co. I wish him the very best during his retirement years.●

DISPELLING THE MYTH THAT REDUCING SOCIAL SECURITY COLA'S LOWERS THE FEDERAL DEFICIT

HON. C. W. BILL YOUNG

OF FLORIDA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, April 30, 1985

● Mr. YOUNG of Florida. Mr. Speaker, I want to commend my colleague from Massachusetts for reserving time for this special order to address the important issue of preserving social security cost-of-living adjustments.

There are some of our colleagues who support reducing or freezing Social Security benefits as a means to lower the Federal deficit. As I have so often stated, this is phoney reasoning because the Social Security trust funds operate independently of the General Treasury funds. Money in the Social Security trust funds cannot be used for national defense, education, or farm programs, and it cannot even be used to finance the interest on the national debt.

The American people know that reducing Social Security benefits only produce false budgetary savings. Last week, following President Reagan's nationally televised speech regarding the budget, more than 200 Pinellas County, FL, residents called my offices specifically to express their opposition to the budget proposal to reduce Social Securty cost-of-living adjustments. Many of the callers said they were upset with this proposal because they know the savings to the Social Security trust funds cannot be applied to reduce the Federal deficit.

During a hearing of my Appropriations Subcommittee which funds the Social Security Administration, I asked Acting Commissioner Martha McSteen if we can afford to pay full cost-of-living increases January 1 as scheduled without jeopardizing the Social Security trust funds. She said that the trust funds will have a $37 billion surplus at the end of this fiscal year. If full cost-of-living increases are paid as scheduled, at a cost of $5.8 billion, the surplus at the end of fiscal year 1986 will still increase to $45 billion.

The only reason we should ever consider legislation affecting the Social Security system is to strengthen the program's long-term stability. Instead, reductions in cost-of-living increases are being proposed to meet short-term budgetary goals.

I have introduced legislation, H.R. 1385, to accelerate the removal of the Social Security trust funds from the unified budget to reduce the temptation for those who attempt to apply the Social Security surpluses to reduce the Federal deficit. Congress approved in 1983 the separation of the trust funds from the unified budget, but not until 1993. My legislation would make this much needed change effective next year. Prompt enactment of this legislation is necessary to ensure that Social Security benefits will not be tampered with this year or in future years.

To further protect our Nation's 36 million Social Security recipients, my colleague from Massachusetts JOE EARLY and I have formed the bipartisan Social Security caucus to bring together Members of Congress like ourselves who have a genuine desire and commitment to oppose any attempts to hold Social Security beneficiaries hostage to the budget and legislative process. We hope, through this effort, to restore the faith of the American people in the Social Security System.

Mr. Speaker, it's time to end this talk of reducing Social Security cost-of-living increases. Let's take this issue off the table now so that we can quit scaring older Americans who believe their benefits will be reduced. Instead, let's move forward with the difficult task of limiting Federal spending in areas of the budget which will provide for real savings and a lowering of the Federal deficit.●

THE UNIVERSAL HEALTH INSURANCE ACT OF 1985

HON. DONALD J. PEASE

OF OHIO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, April 30, 1985

● Mr. PEASE. Mr. Speaker, today I am introducing the Universal Health Insurance Act of 1985. This bill is an updated and, I think, improved version of a similar bill I introduced in the last Congress. The purpose of today's bill is to make the benefits of group health insurance available to everyone.

While I recognize that budget imperatives make it unlikely that Congress can take favorable action on a proposal such as this one, the need for expanded access to health care is great and growing larger. The existing health care delivery system now provides for the health needs of a majority of Americans, either through the commercial insurance industry or through governmental programs such as Medicare and Medicaid. People who are uninsured or underinsured reflect a major shortcoming of that system.

One explanation for this shortcoming is unemployment, which remains high. While many of those who lost jobs during the recent recession are back at work, many are working in so-called "soft" jobs. Too often those soft jobs offer minimal or no employee benefits. In the year since I introduced this measure for the first time, I have become more convinced than ever that expanded access to basic health insurance coverage is a very real need.

I think it is vitally important that we focus attention on this need. It is my hope that my bill will continue to remind us of this nagging problem.

The time will come when Congress can respond to this problem. When that happens, I believe that we should build on our existing private health insurance industry. We do not need another Federal health bureaucracy.

Let me briefly explain how the bill would work:

Every citizen and legal resident of the United States would be eligible to enroll in a health insurance program offered by a commercial insurance carrier. The Federal Government would set uniform national benefit standards and would award competitively bid contracts to private carriers to offer plans in service areas which would be established in each State.

Any insurance plan under the program would be required to include coverage for inpatient and outpatient hospital services, maternal and postnatal care, diagnostic services, and protection against catastrophic medical expenses.

The program would be financed from three sources. First, central to the concept would be the requirement that every participant would pay for the insurance offered under the program according to financial ability. The rate established under my bill would be 7 percent of income. For family coverage, the income of all family members covered would be included to compute the cost for participants. In addition, the value of an individual's net assets, minus a reasonable exclusion for the primary residence and personal automobiles, would be treated as income for the purpose of determining that amount.

The second part of the financing plan would be to continue the 8-cent per pack cigarette excise tax currently scheduled to expire later this year, and dedicate the resulting revenue to the program. The remaining portion of the cost would be provided from the general fund of the Treasury.

I am offering this plan because I believe that it provides a way to deal with a serious and pressing national problem. My plan is fair in its approach, uncomplicated in its execution, and comprehensive in achieving its purpose. Obviously, deficit reduction measures must take precedence. I am presenting my plan at this time because I want the discussion of a national group health insurance plan to continue. I ask you consideration of my proposal for the time when Congress will inevitably have to face this issue.●

JOINT RESOLUTION TO PREVENT FOREIGN POWERS FROM COLONIZING OR CONTROLLING COUNTRIES AND PEOPLES IN THE WESTERN HEMISPHERE

HON. CHARLES E. BENNETT

OF FLORIDA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, April 30, 1985

● Mr. BENNETT. Mr. Speaker, I have today introduced a resolution, which, if passed, would be helpful to the cause of freedom in the Western Hemisphere. I sincerely hope we can pass it. Its provisions are as follows:

H.J. RES. 268

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That considering:

(1) That for more than four hundred years people have sought freedom and liberty in the New World, the Western Hemisphere, and that the United States in fulfillment of this heritage announced in the early 19th Century the Monroe Doctrine to prevent, in the Western Hemisphere, foreign powers from supporting colonialism and subservience to such powers, a doctrine which is still a fundamental part of the foreign policy of this country; and further considering

(2) That such doctrine is in support of the independence, liberty and national security of all persons in the Western Hemisphere, including the United States; and further considering

(3) That in recent years foreign powers have increased efforts to diminish the freedoms of peoples in the Western Hemisphere and to make governments here subservient to such foreign powers.

Be it therefore resolved:

(1) That the creation and continuation of undemocratic governments in the Western Hemisphere with the instigation or assistance of foreign powers outside the Western Hemisphere is a threat to the liberties and security of the peoples of the Western Hemisphere, including the people of the United States; and

(2) That it is considered to be an act of war against the United States for any undemocratic government or purported government in the Western Hemisphere to seek, obtain or utilize any military assistance from such foreign power, either directly or through any surrogate, whether in the Western Hemisphere or elsewhere; and

(3) That it is the policy of the United States to assist the peoples of the Western Hemisphere in their efforts to prevent foreign powers from controlling their destinies or limiting their freedoms or diminishing their security and that this assistance may be diplomatic, financial, military or otherwise; provided that no U.S. troops may by authority of this legislation be assigned for combat or for presence outside the United States in such assistance without the enactment hereafter of specific law to that effect and provided further that the United States does not seek colonization for itself or to make subservient to itself any other people or government.●

SOCIAL SECURITY

HON. EDWARD R. ROYBAL

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, April 30, 1985

● Mr. ROYBAL. Mr. Speaker, in January I introduced House Resolution 31, which now has 73 cosponsors who strongly oppose any reductions in the COLA. I think we should pass House Resolution 31 because there is no justification for the President and Senate leadership's attempt to renege on their promises to pay full Social Security COLA's.

First of all, the administration already projects that Social Security will have more than $51 billion in surpluses over the next 3 years even if the full COLA's are paid.

Second, CBO reports that 370,000 elderly and 200,000 nonelderly would be thrown into poverty by their proposal to cut the COLA.

Third, the elderly were already forced to pay a heavy price for restoring Social Security's financial health by the 1983 amendments which cut their future inflation protection in half by delaying their COLA adjustment by 6 months every year.

The President and Senate leadership's plan to use Social Security to balance the budget is not fair to older Americans who depend on Social Security as their primary source of income and who have already sacrificed the most to keep the Social Security system solvent. And is not fair to younger workers whose Social Security tax rates are kept higher than they need to be.

What they really want to do is to cut benefits for old people and keep taxes high on young people so that they can build huge Social Security surpluses to finance the deficits they created by big spending on weapons and tax breaks for the wealthy.

One of the biggest hypocracies of this administration is that it pretends to be the champion of the average American taxpayer. The truth is that a typical family with $25,000 in earnings will actually pay $36 more in Federal taxes this year because the increases in their Social Security taxes are more than the reduction in their income taxes due to indexing.

The facts are that if people with six figure incomes paid the same effective tax rate as the people who work for them, we could pay the full cost-of-living adjustment, reduce tax rates, and still reduce deficits by more than the Senate plan.

Although I do not believe that changes in Social Security should be used to solve the deficit problem the administration has created in the rest of Government, I challenge those who want to use Social Security to balance the budget to join me as a cosponsor of a bill I will introduce next week to create a fair and complete tax for Social Security [FACTSS].

My plan will preserve and protect the COLA, reduce taxes for 94 percent of all working Americans, and still reduce fiscal year 1986-88 deficits by $11.3 billion more than the Senate and President's plan. This plan is better for both Social Security, taxpayers, and Social Security beneficiaries and will do a better job of reducing deficits than their proposal to slash the COLA.

If they still want to cut benefits, then it will be obvious that their real goal is to destroy the Social Security system at the expense of both taxpayers and the beneficiaries.●

ARMS CONTROL AND THE ATOMIC BOMB, 40 YEARS LATER

HON. DANTE B. FASCELL

OF FLORIDA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, April 30, 1985

● Mr. FASCELL. Mr. Speaker, I want to share with my colleagues some information about a hearing I have scheduled on arms control and the atomic bomb. Three distinguished nuclear physicists, all veterans of the famous Manhattan Project which created the first atomic bomb—Dr. Hans Bethe, Dr. Philip Morrison, and Dr. Bernard Feld—will appear as witnesses for this hearing on Monday, May 13 at 2 p.m. in room 2172 Rayburn House Office Building. This hearing promises to have a special significance and I want to make sure that all my colleagues understand that they are most welcome to attend and participate.

It is now almost 40 years since the first test of an atomic bomb in the New Mexico desert on July 16, 1945, and then, the first use of an atomic bomb dropped on Hiroshima, Japan, on August 6, 1945. Drs. Bethe, Morrison, and Feld were all involved in the original development of those first atomic bombs and since that time they have been active as leaders in the scientific community in recommending and in seeking ways to control nuclear arms.

There will undoubtedly be many events and efforts made to mark the significance of the 40 years that have elapsed since the first test and use of the atomic bomb. As chairman of the Foreign Affairs Committee's Subcommittee on Arms Control, International Security, and Science I wanted to take advantage of an unusual opportunity to have these three highly experienced nuclear physicists and hold a hearing with them. This hearing will be a special occasion during which I will ask them to focus their attention on sharing with Members of Congress and the public their insights into the meaning of nuclear arms developments since the very beginning and their evaluations of the progress of nuclear arms control. I hope that this hearing will also benefit from their remarkable experience and unquestionable expertise by challenging them to look ahead and recommend new directions we might take to achieve arms control and begin reducing nuclear weapons.

As the 40-year mark of the first use of the atomic bomb approaches it seems to me that it is important for Members of Congress, the scientific community, and the public to explore together the historical significance and future implications of nuclear arms developments and arms control efforts. It is my hope that many other

Members of Congress will join me at this hearing since I think that these three distinguished nuclear scientists can make a valuable contribution to a comprehensive and drastically needed reexamination of our country's nuclear arms and arms control policy.●

THE OMNIBUS TARIFF ACT

HON. HERBERT H. BATEMAN

OF VIRGINIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, April 30, 1985

● Mr. BATEMAN. Mr. Speaker, in the 98th Congress I introduced, together with the gentleman from Hawaii [Mr. AKAKA], H.R. 5975, the Tax Status of Space Act. This bill, which eventually acquired 85 cosponsors, was intended to remove artificial and unintended barriers to the commercialization of outer space by establishing the principle that for the purposes of tax and tariff laws activities of U.S. firms in space shall be treated the same as such activities on the ground in the United States.

Although no action was taken on H.R. 5975 directly, I was pleased that in the adoption of the Omnibus Tariff Act, a provision was included stating that products made in space by U.S. firms shall not be considered to be imports when returned to the customs territory of the United States. Without the adoption of this provision products manufactured in space would have been subject to import duties, even though they had never been in a foreign country.

Today, I am introducing the Tax Status of Space Act of 1985. I am joined in this introduction by my fellow cochairman of the congressional space caucus, the gentleman from Washington [Mr. LOWRY], and by his predecessor as the Democratic cochairman, the gentleman from Hawaii [Mr. AKAKA]. This new version of the Tax Status of Space Act amends the Internal Revenue Code to provide that a spacecraft which the United States is responsible for under international law is to be considered as being in the United States for the purpose of our tax law.

Present tax law, because it is silent on the tax status of outer space, treats space as if it were a foreign country. This means that income earned in space by U.S. firms would be taxed as foreign source income, rather than domestic source income. Also, present tax law discriminates against commercial activities in space by denying them the benefits of provisions of the tax law meant to increase domestic investment, such as the investment tax credit, the research and development tax credit, and accelerated depreciation.

The bill I am introducing today would remedy this unintended discrimination against commercial activities in space that have the potential of producing drugs to treat major illnesses such as diabetes and cancer and of making gallium arsenide crystals necessary to devise the chips that will be the basis of the next generation of computers. It would remedy this discrimination, not by adding new tax exemptions or amending current ones that may cease to exist when the Tax Code is revised, but by including U.S. spacecraft in space in the Tax Code's definition of the United States.

In conclusion, I would like to state clearly that although this bill will have very practical effects in removing artificial barriers to space commercialization, it does not establish any new tax exemptions, deductions or loopholes. It is perfectly consistent with any tax simplification proposal which may be adopted by this Congress. It is one of a series of bills to extend U.S. law to locations in space, which by international treaty are under the jurisdiction and control of this country, and for which this country is responsible.

I hope that my colleagues will join me in supporting the updating of our tax laws to include space.●

TAX FREEDOM DAY

HON. ELDON RUDD

OF ARIZONA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, April 30, 1985

● Mr. RUDD. Mr. Speaker, today is "Tax Freedom Day," the day the average U.S. taxpayer would finish fulfilling his or her obligation to the tax collectors if every dollar earned from January 1 was reserved for taxes.

The good news for taxpayers is that this is the second year since 1975 that "Tax Freedom Day" has fallen in April. It occurred as late as May 6 in 1981. Put another way, the average taxpayer works 2 hours and 38 minutes out of each 8-hour workday to pay the tax bill, compared to 2 hours and 45 minutes in 1981. Taxes take the biggest bite of that 8 hours' worth of work, more than food—59 minutes—or shelter—1 hour and 34 minutes.

While it's good news that "Tax Freedom Day" has moved earlier in the year, however, 2 hours and 38 minutes out of the average worker's day is still more than enough of a burden. Any further tax increases to reduce the deficit ought to be rejected. Let's face up to the real culprit behind the deficit—continued overspending on the part of Congress.●

NELLIE T. BUSH

HON. MORRIS K. UDALL

OF ARIZONA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, April 30, 1985

● Mr. UDALL. Mr. Speaker, Arizona has a long list of women who have made great contributions not only to the State, but to the country as well. One such woman was Nellie T. Bush, a true pioneer whose contributions to the State will long be remembered.

Nellie Bush's long list of accomplishments began when she and her husband moved to Parker, AZ, in 1915. It was here that she became justice of the peace in 1918 and was elected to the Arizona State House of Representatives in 1920. In 1932, she was the first woman elected to the State Senate. While serving in the legislature, Mrs. Bush initiated and helped pass many State laws beneficial to human welfare and State water rights. In fact, Nellie Bush played a chief role in Arizona's long fight with California over Colorado River rights, not only by passing legislation but also as a pilot of a riverboat on the Colorado.

When the Metropolitan Water District of California was preparing to erect a diversion dam on the Colorado River, Arizona Governor B.B. Moeur proclaimed martial law on the proposed site of the Parker Dam and called out Arizona's Navy to patrol the area. Arizona's Navy at that time consisted of two riverboats operated by Nellie Bush. It was the first time in history that a fleet had been commanded by a woman. This incident earned Mrs. Bush an honorary commission as "Admiral of Arizona's Navy."

As a staunch promoter of women's rights Mrs. Bush helped organize the Glendale Women's Club and the Parker Women's Club. She was president of the Arizona's Federation of Women's Clubs in 1955 and was one of the founders of the Arizona Children's Colony, a home for mentally retarded children.

It is indeed a pleasure to commemorate such a woman: able, tireless, gifted, kindly, blessed with a sense of humor and an understanding heart. Certainly of all the women in the country, she stands at the top, Nellie T. Bush.●

SALUTE TO RETIRED SENIOR VOLUNTEER PROGRAM OF MIDDLESEX COUNTY

HON. BERNARD J. DWYER

OF NEW JERSEY

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, April 30, 1985

● Mr. DWYER of New Jersey. Mr. Speaker, I would like to bring to the attention of my colleagues an example of one of our Nation's most exemplary service programs in action—the Retired Senior Volunteer Program of Middlesex County, NJ.

On Saturday, May 4, these volunteers and their many friends throughout the area will be participating in a "Walk to Help Others," so that RSVP can continue to grow and serve area residents through more than 65 agencies in Middlesex County.

More than 300 volunteers are currently helping countless others throughout our county, and they all deserve our warmest gratitude for their enthusiasm, generosity and dedication to service.

Mr. Speaker, my colleagues know well the worth of RSVP nationwide, with volunteers contributing more than 68 million hours per year in such areas as youth services, literacy enhancement, in-home care, serving the disabled and many others.

We owed a profound debt of gratitude to the many older Americans who have given of their time and wisdom through our Nation's Older American Volunteer Programs since they were established in 1971.

For our Retired Senior Volunteer Program volunteers in Middlesex County, their "Walk to Help Others" is an especially appropriate time to offer our commendations and appreciation, as they move to continue and expand a program which has reaped benefits manifold for the betterment of our communities.●

THE UNITED STATES AND THE ENGLISH LANGUAGE AMENDMENT

HON. BILL RICHARDSON

OF NEW MEXICO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, April 30, 1985

● Mr. RICHARDSON. Mr. Speaker, at a recent press conference proponents of the English language amendment attacked the Hispanic leadership of this Nation. I was appalled at their remarks.

Mr. Speaker this great Democratic Nation does not need a constitutional amendment pointing out the obvious, that English is the uncontested language of the United States.

The United States of America is a land of immigrants. The only Americans who are not immigrants are the native Americans. And with these immigrants came a variety of languages, religions, and cultures.

In the American way there is no requirement or necessity to abandon one's ethnic, cultural, linquistic heritage. It is precisely this great mix of people that has made America the great Nation that it is.

Five States have passed their own English Language Amendments. The mere fact that joint resolutions for an English Language Amendment have been offered in the House and Senate gives credibility to an issue that we see as a dangerous trend in the United States. A trend that goes against one of the most basic beliefs of this country—freedom of speech as provided in the first amendment to the Constitution.

Mr. Speaker, this is the freest and fairest country in the world. There is no hierarchy in America. Immigrants from English-speaking countries do not enjoy higher status or rights than those of German, Irish, Italian, Greek, Mexican, Chinese, Hungarian, Russian or Vietnamese ancestry.

No one, for one moment, is arguing against the need for all Americans to attain proficiency in English in order to participate in all levels of our society. That's what bilingual education is all about—helping the young immigrants to learn English, helping them in the transition period from one language to another. Bilingual education is not a special favor or gift to new immigrants. It is sound pedagogy. Five- and six-year-olds should be taught their new language in a loving, accepting environment.

No one is purer American than anybody else by national origin. Similarly there is no hierarchy, no pecking order based on how long you or your forefathers have been Americans.

Those whose ancestors came over in the Mayflower have no greater rights than those who walked across the bridge at El Paso. A Spanish-speaking American can be as patriotic as an English-speaking American.

What makes America great is not that we speak one language or other, but that in the richness of our diversity we are united by the fundamental principles that bind our people together: freedom, justice, equal opportunity for all, fairness, and democracy. Viva America.●

A JOB WELL DONE

HON. GEORGE E. BROWN, JR.

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, April 30, 1985

● Mr. BROWN of California. Mr. Speaker, I would like to take a moment today to thank someone special who has performed a difficult task and has the gratitude of many in the 36th Congressional District. That man is Dr. Daniel G. Aldrich, Jr.

Dr. Aldrich has been acting chancellor at the University of California, Riverside, since the tragic and untimely death of Chancellor Tomas Rivera several months ago. Dr. Aldrich has managed to become both leader and healer for a campus in mourning: for that special dedication to UCR, we are all grateful.

Daniel Aldrich was well suited for the challenge of pulling a campus together and giving it focus. He came to our university from UC Irvine, and now ranks first in seniority among chancellors of the nine campuses in the UC system.

This was not the first experience with UC Riverside for our interim chancellor; he first joined UC Riverside in 1943 when he came to what was then the citrus experiment station as a junior chemist. After World War II, he moved to Davis and Berkeley with the rank of professor, and later chairman of the Department of Soils and Plant Nutrition. In 1958, he was named dean of the University of California's Division of Agricultural Sciences; and in 1962 the UC regents appointed him chancellor of the Irvine campus.

His list of degrees, honors, and memberships is long and stellar. I know the university joins me in thanking Dr. Aldrich for his leadership under difficult circumstances, and wishes him all the best in his future endeavors.●

OIL PIPELINE DEREGULATION

HON. GLENN M. ANDERSON

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, April 30, 1985

● Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Speaker, for each of the past two Congresses, Congressman JOHN BREAUX of Louisiana has introduced legislation revising the regulatory structure governing the oil pipeline industry, and I have cosponsored his bills. Each time I indicated that my cosponsorship was not indicative of my support for the legislation, but was intended rather to help focus attention on an issue that is worthy of discussion.

Having chaired a subcommittee hearing on this matter in the 98th Congress, I can assure our colleagues that the issues addressed by the Breaux legislation are quite complex and understood only after thorough consideration is given them.

It is my hope that by introducing this legislation today, we will be engendering the kind of discussion that is a necessary prerequisite to any committee consideration of the matter. Once again this year, by cosponsoring the measure I am in no way indicating my support of its content but rather my support of the notion that this is a suitable vehicle for generating discussion.●

FERNANDO RICCIONI, PIZZA MAN OF THE YEAR

HON. JAMES A. TRAFICANT, JR.

OF OHIO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, April 30, 1985

● Mr. TRAFICANT. Mr. Speaker, earlier this year, a constituent of mine, Fernando Riccioni of Austintown, OH, was named 1984 Man of the year by the National Association of Pizza Operators and by the magazine "Pizza Today." At this time, I would like to extend my congratulations to Mr. Riccioni for being accorded this honor and for the fine work he has done to provide delicious pizza to the Austintown community for over 16 years.

Mr. Riccioni opened his pizza shop 16 years ago and is known as the maker of the best pizza in Austintown—as well as the best in the tri-county area. Now Fernando's pizza is acclaimed as being the best in the Nation.

He and his wife, Rose, attended the Greatest Pizza Show on Earth—Expo 1984, in Orlando, FL, where he was officially presented with this honor. He received an engraved bronze plaque in a walnut frame from Thomas Monaghan, owner of the Domino's Pizza chain and the World Champion Detroit Tigers. That Fernando was chosen over the more than 3,000 pizza shop owners at the event is a testament to the hard work and dedication Fernando has given to his livelihood over the years. Fernando loves his work and he consistently strives to please his customers—and he always does.

Mr. Riccioni came to this country from Italy in 1951. In 1979, be became a U.S. citizen. As an Italian-American, I am extremely proud of Mr. Riccioni and the success he has enjoyed. He is indeed a living example of the American dream—through hard work, a vision, and a dedication to quality, Fernando Riccioni has become the best in his field, and he has added to the rich immigrant heritage of this great Nation.●

THE 120TH ANNIVERSARY OF ZION BAPTIST CHURCH

HON. GUS YATRON

OF PENNSYLVANIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, April 30, 1985

● Mr. YATRON. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to ask my colleagues to help me honor and recognize the Zion Baptist Church of Mahanoy City, PA, on the occasion of its 120th anniversary. The church will celebrate this most auspicious and glorious event on Sunday, May 19, 1985.

On the 120th anniversary of its founding, all the members of the Zion Baptist congregation will join its lay pastor, Mr. Warren Wilfert, in commemorating the church and the many years it has fulfilled their spiritual needs. Mr. Thomas Ward, chairman of the anniversary committee, has organized a special day of activity and celebration that will be highlighted by the dedication of the Thomas Evans Memorial Social Room. In memory of their beloved pastor of many years, the late Reverend Thomas Evans, the dedication will honor his deep faith and the commitment he made to the enhancement of their spiritual life and development.

That the Zion Baptist Church has been part of the religious life of Mahanoy City for so many years is a testament to the community's religious conviction and faith. All past and present members of the congregation can be very proud of the support they have given the church through these decades. I wish Zion Baptist Church continued life and growth and hope it will serve for 120 more years to provide a spiritual foundation for the future generations of Mahanoy City, PA.●

INTRODUCTION OF THE LONG-TERM CARE INSURANCE PROMOTION AND PROTECTION ACT

HON. RON WYDEN

OF OREGON

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, April 30, 1985

● Mr. WYDEN. Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased to be introducing the Long-Term Care Insurance Promotion and Protection Act today. This bill will help us address the key question of how we can cope with a great fear that millions of our seniors share: How can seniors pay for needed long-term health care services without wiping out a lifetime's savings? The legislation I am introducing today with the support of the National Council of Senior Citizens and the American Health Care Association takes a significant step toward meeting that need and easing that fear.

There are now more than 26 million Americans over the age of 65. In 1982, about one-quarter—$24 billion—of the money spent by seniors on medical services went toward long-term care. Of that total, private insurance paid less than 1 percent of this total and nearly half of the bill for nursing home services came directly from the pockets of the Nation's elderly. Even though the average nursing home costs about $1,500 a month, it is not uncommon for care to come to $3,000 a month. Medicare pays only a very small portion of these costs.

Clearly, Medicaid won't possibly be able to meet the long-term care needs of tomorrow's seniors. I think something is drastically wrong in a system that basically forces seniors who have worked hard all their lives to become destitute and rely on Federal and State governments for the basic services they need to live.

In order to change the system, we need to do three things: (1) we need to find creative solutions to this dramatic financing problem, (2) we need to encourage private insurers to bring long-term care policies to the market, and (3) we need to provide protections against the kind of problems we saw with "Medigap" policies a decade or more ago. I think my bill does all three.

First, I believe private long-term care insurance can become a significant part of the solution to long-term care financing. Seniors don't want to have to spend their life's savings in a few short months in a nursing home. Federal and State governments won't be able to afford to carry the burden of long-term care financing much longer. If seniors had access to quality, affordable insurance policies to cover their needs, many could avoid going on Medicaid altogether.

Second, some insurers are already starting to enter the long-term care market, albeit slowly at first. These insurers are testing the waters and what they're beginning to find is that long-term care insurance is feasible. But it's a long, slow process with plenty of unanswered questions.

This practical experience, together with the dialog that's called for in my bill between the Secretary of HHS, seniors, insurers, and long-term care providers can help insurers answer a number of the questions that they are still facing. Insurers need to know how to deal with what they call adverse selection, where the seniors who would like to buy long-term care insurance are very probably on the brink of using nursing home care. Long-term care also needs to be better defined so that policies can be both profitable and affordable. The costs of the policies in relation to the benefits paid under those policies need to be both fair and effective. And these policies need to be easily understood by seniors.

My legislation will help break this logjam and encourage private insurers to enter the long-term care insurance market by bringing together insurance experts and senior advocates to develop solutions to the key question: "How can affordable long-term care insurance, with strong consumer protections, be sold profitably in this country?"

Third, this bill will help prevent the kinds of scandals that we saw when Medigap policies were first offered. Our bill will create suggested guidelines for minimum coverage that States are encouraged to follow. It will also establish a voluntary Federal certification program to identify policies that meet these guidelines in States that haven't adopted the guidelines. Finally, it will enact strict criminal penalties for insurance agents who attempt to use fraud, forgery, or misrepresentations to sell long-term care insurance policies.

In this way, we provide safeguards for seniors so that they will not be spending their hard-earned dollars on what could be of little value and will help to head off potential scandals before they cast a chill over the market for long-term care insurance.

No new Federal boards, commissions, or bureaucracies are needed to administer this legislation. The bill simply builds on already existing procedures employed to prevent ripoffs in Medigap policies—those policies used to supplement Medicare.

When Medigap policies were first offered, there were a lot of promises and not many results. Ten years of investigations and studies by congressional committees, the Federal Trade Commission, and the news media revealed many problems with Medigap policies.

Some of these Medigap policies were difficult for seniors to understand and nearly impossible for them to compare; some of these policies paid out very few benefits compared to their costs, some offered no extended coverage beyond what was already provided by Medicare, and some elderly beneficiaries were subject to misrepresentations, fraud, forgery, and even intimidation.

While some of these policies were very sound and provided valuable coverage for spiraling health care costs, others just weren't worth the paper they were written on.

I worked hard at that time to bring about consumer protections for Medicare supplemental insurance. Suggested standards recommended by the Congress and adopted by most States, a voluntary Federal certification program, and strict criminal penalties for marketing abuses and fraud helped bring order to the marketplace for Medigap policies. The same approach can work for long-term care policies—before a problem develops.

Here's how my bill works: The Secretary of the Department of Health and Human Services, the National Association of Insurance Commissioners, long-term care providers, seniors, and others are to work together to establish suggested guidelines for long-term care insurance. These standards will be designed to limit marketing abuse, promote insurance policies that provide reasonable benefits beyond what is already available under Medicare and Medicaid, help consumers avoid duplicative coverage, and improve price competition.

These suggested standards would give States guidelines after which to pattern their own insurance standards. States would not have to adopt these standards in any way. If States adopted standards of their own for long-term care insurance that either met or exceeded the suggested standards, the Federal involvement would end there.

If a State chooses not to adopt any standards, or standards weaker than the guidelines, no sanctions or penalties would be applied against the State. Instead, a voluntary Federal certification program would be available to insurers in that State. Under this voluntary program, insurers would be able to submit their policies to the Health Care Financing Administration for certification that their policies met the suggested guidelines.

Private insurers would be able to use this voluntary certification as a marketing tool to tell potential customers that their policies were good enough to meet the suggested standards developed by senior groups and long-term care providers alike.

Without creating a heavy Federal presence, this bill will provide as effective a tool in safeguarding our seniors and helping the market for long-term care insurance develop as the "Medigap" provisions did in 1980. Although those standards and certifications are voluntary as well, 46 States have adopted the "Medigap" suggested standards as their own. And insurance companies are taking full use of the voluntary Federal certification program.

This legislation is just a first step toward untying the Gordian Knot of long-term care financing. But it must be taken. By the year 2040, the number of Americans over age 65 will grow from 26 million to more than 66 million. We have to start planning now how we can use creative approaches and the marketplace to finance the long-term health care that millions will need in the years ahead.

Mr. Speaker, this bill has gained the support of both seniors and long-term care providers. In my opinion, that indicates that there is a real need for this legislation. Seniors support this bill because they need long-term care insurance to help them weather the financial burdens that they face later in life and because they need protections from possible insurance abuses. Long-term care providers support this bill because they know that private efforts like this can help provide needed long-term care to a significant portion of our population in the future.

I hope my colleagues will join me in this forward-looking bill. It's time we took steps to help develop these new markets and the protections that must go with them.

H.R. 2293

A bill to amend title XVIII of the Social Security Act with respect to the establishment of standards for long-term health care insurance

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE.

This Act may be cited as the "Long Term Care Insurance Promotion and Protection Act of 1985".

SEC. 2. MEDICARE AMENDMENT.

Section 1882 of the Social Security Act (42 U.S.C. 1395ss) is amended—

(1) by inserting "or long-term health care policies (as defined in subsection (k)(4))" in subsection (j) after "medicare supplemental policies", and

(2) by adding at the end the following new subsection:

"(k) STANDARDS FOR REGULATIONS OF LONG-TERM HEALTH CARE POLICIES.—(1) The Secretary shall, in consultation with Federal and State regulatory agencies, the National Association of Insurance Commissioners, private insurers, organizations representing consumers and the aged, and providers of long-term health care services, establish model standards for the regulation of long-term health care policies not later than one year after the date of the enactment of this subsection. Such standards shall be designed (A) to limit marketing and agent abuse, (B) to assure the dissemination of such information to individuals entitled to benefits under this title (and to other consumers) as is necessary to permit informed choice, (C) to promote policies which provide reasonable economic benefits for such individuals, (D) to reduce the purchase of unnecessary duplicative coverage, and (E) to improve price competition.

"(2) Once the standards are established under paragraph (1), subsections (a) through (e) of this section shall apply to long-term health care policies (as defined in paragraph (4)) in the same manner as they apply to medicare supplemental policies, and for this purpose—

"(A) any reference to a medicare supplemental policy is deemed a reference to a long-term health care policy;

"(B) any reference to the NAIC Model Standards is deemed a reference to the standards established by the Secretary under paragraph (1) and any reference to a specified percent in subsection (c)(2) is deemed a reference to a percent specified in such standards; and

"(C) any reference to a date is deemed a reference to corresponding date specified by the Secretary by regulation.

"(3) The Secretary shall include in the biannual report submitted under subsection (f)(2)—

"(A) a periodic assessment of actions taken by States and by the Secretary to regulate the offering of long-term health care policies, and

"(B) appropriate recommendations for legislative or administrative changes needed to secure consumer protection in the area of long-term health care policies.

"(4) For purposes of this subsection, a long-term health care policy is a health insurance policy or other health benefit plan offered by a private entity to individuals who are entitled to have payment made under this title, which provides, or provides reimbursement for expenses incurred for, long-term health care services (as defined by the Secretary and including home health services, skilled nursing facility service, and intermediate care facility services) that are provided over a period of at least six months; but does not include any such policy or plan of one or more employers or labor organizations, or of the trustees of a fund established by one or more employers or labor organizations (or combination thereof), for employees or former employees (or combination thereof) or for members or former members (or combination thereof) of the labor organizations.".●

A SALUTE TO EDWARD A. KARNACKI

HON. DAN ROSTENKOWSKI

OF ILLINOIS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, April 30, 1985

● Mr. ROSTENKOWSKI. Mr. Speaker, it has come to my attention that Edward A. Karnacki will retire from his post as Director of the New Orleans Reception Center of the U.S. Information Agency [USIA] on April 30, 1985. Mr. Karnacki has been Director for 5 years bringing his Government service to a career total of 38 years.

Prior to his posting in New Orleans, Mr. Karnacki had served in many capacities. He started his career in 1950 as a member of the central intelligence agency. In 1955, he joined the U.S Department of State and was appointed to the Bureau of Intelligence and Research. From 1961 to 1963 he served as Chief of the Correspondence Division of the Bureau of Public Affairs.

This was followed by assignments as Assistant Director, USIA San Francisco Reception Center, 1963–75, and Assistant Director, USIA Honolulu Reception Center, 1975–80. Mr. Karnacki has also had assignments in Germany and Eastern Europe.

Mr. Karnacki has been a member of the San Francisco and Honolulu Press Clubs. He has been an associate member of the San Francisco World Trade Club and a member of the board of directors of the New Orleans International Trade Mart. A member of Rotary International for many years, he now serves as director of the Rotary Club of New Orleans.

Born in Chicago, IL, Mr. Karnacki holds a bachelor's degree from the University of Iowa. During World War II he served as a captain in the Air Corps and from 1946 to 1972 served with the U.S. Air Force Reserve, retiring as a lieutenant colonel.

Mr. Karnacki is married to the former Marjory Doris Herman.●

THE ST. PETERSBURG TIMES HONORED WITH ITS THIRD PULITZER PRIZE

HON. C.W. BILL YOUNG

OF FLORIDA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, April 30, 1985

● Mr. YOUNG of Florida. Mr. Speaker, the St. Petersburg Times received its third Pulitzer Prize Thursday for an investigative series by staff writers Lucy Morgan and Jack Reed.

The Times celebrated its 100th anniversary last year, and has begun its second century of service by receiving the highest honor accorded our Nation's journalists. While two reporters were singled out by the Pulitzer Committee for their work, the entire staff of the Times Publishing Co. can share in this honor, which has once again brought national recognition to the Times.

From its humble beginnings in 1884, when the newspaper's offices were located in the backroom of a small drugstore, the St. Petersburg Times has grown to be the second largest newspaper in the Southeastern United States. I take this time today to honor this newspaper's proud history and contribution to journalism and to call attention to its latest honor, the Pulitzer Prize.●

TRADE DEFICIT

HON. BILL RICHARDSON

OF NEW MEXICO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, April 30, 1985

● Mr. RICHARDSON. Mr. Speaker, in 1984 the U.S. merchandise trade deficit reached $123.3 billion dollars. It is important to recognize that the Federal budget deficit is closely connected with the trade deficit, and that we must address both problems with a comprehensive vision. If we do not bring down the inflated value of the dollar in relation to foreign currencies, the strong dollar will continue to subsidize imports and inhibit exports. And if we do not push for even more innovation in our industries, there will continue to be high tech penetration of communication and computer technology imports into our domestic marketplace.

We must remember, Mr. Speaker, that at the same time we are importing more and more items we are exporting more and more jobs. Unfair trading practices depress U.S. exports and increase imports. It also results in the loss of millions of jobs to cheaper labor markets in other countries and layoffs in factories where production has slowed or come to a halt.

Mr. Speaker, I fail to comprehend how the administration can justify proposing even more cuts in Customs Service personnel, which brings in millions of dollars in revenue through trade law enforcement and protects our markets from fraudulent goods. Certainly our Customs Service ought to remain a top priority. It is a money maker, not a money loser.

Let us also urge the President to make the trade deficit issue a top priority at the economic summit in Bonn, West Germany. It is time to convene a multilateral conference to establish a more orderly internal exchange rate system, work to reduce tariff, and nontariff barriers, and improve the effectiveness of the GATT.

Our dialog with Japan, unfortunately, has not resulted in satisfactory agreements on the trade issue. Japan will increase its car imports by 15.9 percent. That means 2.3 million cars compared to 1.85 million cars imported last year. I do not and will not engage in throwing dirt on Japanese culture and achievement. We must avoid anti-Japanese pronouncement. I do, however, think that if voluntary restraints do not work, we must legislate fair trade. Such a move would not be paranoid protectionism, but fairness.●

VOTING RECORD

HON. MORRIS K. UDALL

OF ARIZONA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, April 30, 1985

● Mr. UDALL. Mr. Speaker, it has become my practice from time to time to list my votes in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. I strongly believe that the people of the Second Congressional District of Arizona have a right to know where I stand on the issues decided by this body, and I have found that printing my record here is the best way to provide that information

This is not an all inclusive list. I have omitted noncontroversial votes such as quorum calls, motions to resolve into the Committee of the Whole House, and motions to approve the Journal of the previous day.

The descriptions are necessarily somewhat short, and I am sure that some of my constituents will have additional questions about the issues described here. So I invite them to write me for more specifics.

The votes are described as follows:

KEY

1. Rollcall Number;
2. Number of the bill or resolution;
3. Title of the bill or resolution;
4. A description of the vote;
5. The outcome of the vote;
6. The vote total;
7. My vote, in the form Y=yes, N=no, and NV=not voting;
8. The vote totals of the Arizona delegation (yes-no-not voting);
9. The date.

301. HR 6040. Supplemental Appropriations, Fiscal 1984. Passage of the bill to appropriate $5,384,624,400 in supplemental funds for fiscal 1984. Passed 304-116: Y(3-2-0), August 1, 1984.

302. HR 5151. Hunger Relief Act. Emerson, R-Mo., amendment to eliminate language that would allow states to choose whether to require food stamp recipients, as a condition of eligibility, to submit monthly financial reports. Existing law required the reports. Rejected 120-293: N(2-3-0), August 1, 1984.

303. HR 5151. Hunger Relief Act. Panetta, D-Calif., amendment, to the Coleman, R-Mo., amendment, to authorize increases in the maximum car value used in the food stamp assets test to determine program eligibility. The Panetta amendment retained the existing maximum value of $4,500 for a car, but permitted that maximum to rise over three years at the same rate as the Consumer Price Index, up to $5,500. The Coleman amendment would have maintained the $4,500 maximum in current law; the bill would have raised it to $5,500 upon enactment. Adopted 282-131: Y(2-3-0), August 1, 1984.

304. HR 5151. Hunger Relief Act. Coleman, R-Mo., amendment, as amended by Panetta, D-Calif., to authorize increases in the maximum car value used to determine food stamp eligibility. The amendment retained the existing maximum value of $4,500 for a car, but permitted that maximum to rise over three years at the same rate as the Consumer Price Index, up to $5,500. Adopted 384-25: Y(5-0-0), August 1, 1984.

305. HR 5151. Hunger Relief Act. Passage of the bill to liberalize certain eligibility and benefit levels in the food stamp program, to increase federal penalties against states for program errors and to make other changes. Passed 364-39: Y(3-2-0), August 1, 1984.

306. HR 5399. Intelligence Agencies Authorizations. Passage of the bill to make authorizations in fiscal 1985 for the CIA and other intelligence agencies and to prohibit and form of U.S. aid to military or paramilitary groups in Nicaragua. Passed 294-118: Y(3-2-0), August 2, 1984.

307. HR 5973. Interior Appropriations, Fiscal 1985. Yates, D-Ill., motion to end debate on the Conte, R-Mass., amendment and all amendments thereto except the Ottinger, D-N.Y., amendment. Motion agreed to 285-116: Y(3-2-0), August 2, 1984.

308. HR 5973. Interior Appropriations, Fiscal 1985. Ratchford, D-Conn., amendment to the Conte, R-Mass., amendment, to rescind $5 billion from the U.S. Synthetic Fuels Corporation. The Conte amendment would rescind $10 billion. Adopted 236-177: N(3-2-0), August 2, 1984.

309. HR 5973. Interior Appropriations, Fiscal 1985. Conte, R-Mass., amendment, as amended by Ratchford, D-Conn., to rescind $5 billion from the U.S. Synthetic Fuels Corporation. Adopted 410-2: Y(5-0-0), August 2, 1984.

310. HR 5973. Interior Appropriations, Fiscal 1985. McDade, R-Pa., amendment to reduce by 3 percent across-the-board the budget authority provided in the bill. Adopted 212-181: N(4-1-0), August 2, 1984.

311. HR 5973. Interior Appropriations, Fiscal 1985. Passage of the bill to appropriate $3,033,865,000 in fiscal 1985 for the Interior Department and related agencies (includes deduction for $5 billion rescission from U.S. Synthetic Fuels Corporation). Passed 336-57: Y(4-1-0), August 2, 1984.

312. HR 5712. Commerce, Justice, State and the Judiciary Appropriations, Fiscal 1985. Adoption of the conference report on the bill to provide $11,520,976,200 for the Commerce, Justice and the State departments, the federal judiciary and related agencies. Adopted 277-135: Y(3-2-0), August 8, 1984.

313. HR 5712. Commerce, Justice, State and the Judiciary Appropriations, Fiscal 1985. Smith, D-Iowa, motion that the House recede from its disagreement to the Senate amendment and concur therein with an amendment to provide $64.31 million for the Federal Trade Commission. Motion agreed to 226-193: Y(2-3-0), August 8, 1984.

314. H.R. 5712. Commerce, Justice, State and the Judiciary Appropriations, Fiscal 1985. Smith, D-Iowa, motion that the House recede from its disagreement to the Senate amendment and concur therein with an amendment to provide $305 million for the Legal Services Corp. (LSC) and requiring the LSC board of directors to inform the House and Senate Appropriations committees before promulgating or implementing any new regulations. Motion agreed to 278-138: Y(2-3-0), August 8, 1984.

315. H.R. 5712. Commerce, Justice, State and the Judiciary Appropriations, Fiscal 1985. Smith, D-Iowa, motion that the House recede from its disagreement to the Senate amendment and concur therein with an amendment to provide $18.5 million for the National Endowment for Democracy. Motion agreed to 237-181: Y(3-2-0), August 8, 1984.

316. H.R. 5886. American Folklife Center. Hawkins, D-Calif., motion to suspend the rules and pass the bill to authorize $839,549 for fiscal 1985 and $867,898 in 1986 for the American Folklife Center of the Library of Congress. Motion agreed to 416-2: Y(4-1-0), August 8, 1984.

317. H.R. 4785. Older Americans. Andrews, D-N.C., motion to suspend the rules and pass the bill to authorize funding for programs of the Older Americans Act of $1.34 billion in fiscal 1985 with increases in 1986-87. Motion agreed to 406-12: Y(5-0-0), August 8, 1984.

318. H.R. 6027. Municipal Antitrust Amendments. Seiberling, D-Ohio, motion to suspend the rules and pass the bill to protect municipalities from monetary damage awards in antitrust lawsuits. Motion agreed to 414-5: Y(5-0-0), August 8, 1984.

319. H.R. 4325. Child Support Enforcement. Adoption of the conference report on the bill to require states to establish certain procedures, including mandatory withholding of wages, to strengthen enforcement of child support payments. Adopted 413-0: Y(5-0-0), August 8, 1984.

320. S. 2436. Corporation for Public Broadcasting Authorization. Adoption of the rule (H. Res. 563) providing for House floor consideration of the bill to authorize funding for the Corporation for Public Broadcasting for fiscal 1987-89 and for the Public Telecommunications Facilities Program for fiscal 1985-87. Adopted 324-89: Y(3-2-0), August 8, 1984.

321. H.R. 3605. Drug Price Competition/Generic Drug Act. Judgment of the House whether to consider the rule (H. Res. 569) providing for House floor consideration of the bill to extend patent protection for brand name drugs and authorizing the Food and Drug Administration to use streamlined procedures to approve cheaper generic copies of drugs. Agreed to consider the rule 313-80: Y(3-2-0), August 8, 1984.

322. H.R. 3605. Drug Price Competition/Generic Drug Act. Adoption of the rule (H. Res. 569) providing for House floor consideration of the bill to extend patent protection for brand name drugs and authorizing the Food and Drug Administration to use streamlined procedures to approve cheaper generic copies of drugs. Adopted 304-74: Y(2-3-0), August 8, 1984.

323. H.R. 5640. Superfund Extension. Adoption of the rule (H. Res. 570) providing for House floor consideration of the bill to renew and expand the "superfund" hazardous waste cleanup program. Adopted 218-199: N(0-5-0), August 9, 1984.

324. H.R. 5640. Superfund Expansion. Sawyer, R-Mich., amendment to delete from the bill a section giving citizens the right to sue in federal court for damages caused by hazardous waste dumping. Adopted 208-200: N(4-1-0), August 9, 1984.

325. H.R. 5640. Superfund Expansion. Sawyer, R-Mich., amendment to delete from the bill provisions giving citizens the right to sue in federal court to compel a federal, state or local agency to perform a duty required under the superfund law. Rejected 141-248: N(3-2-0), August 10, 1984.

326. H.R. 5640. Superfund Expansion. Florio, D-N.J., amendment to limit to persons with interests adversely affected the right to sue for performance of a duty under the superfund law. Adopted 391-0: Y(5-0-0), August 10, 1984.

327. HR 6040. Supplemental Appropriations, Fiscal 1984. Adoption of the conference report on the bill appropriating supplemental funds for fiscal 1984. Adopted 312-85: Y(4-1-0), August 10, 1984.

328. HR 6040. Supplemental Appropriations, Fiscal 1984. Long, D-Md., motion that the House recede from its disagreement to the Senate amendment appropriating supplemental foreign aid funds with a Long amendment that the House substitute reduced funds for Central America. The Senate included $116.9 million in military funds to El Salvador while the Long amendment would have reduced that to $40 million. Motion rejected 57-340: Y(1-3-1), August 10, 1984.

329. HR 6040. Supplemental Appropriations, Fiscal 1984. Kemp, R-N.Y., motion that the House recede from its disagreement to the Senate amendment appropriating supplemental foreign aid funds with a Kemp amendment that the House adopt revised funds for Central America. The Kemp amendment contained $70 million in military funds to El Salvador. Motion agreed to 234-161: Y(3-1-1), August 10, 1984.

330. HR 6040. Supplemental Appropriations, Fiscal 1984. Whitten, D-Miss., motion that the House insist on its disagreement with the Senate over a provision concerning the U.S. Postal Service. The House position would prohibit the Postal Service from hiring new employees at lower wages than those received by current employees. Motion agreed to 378-1: Y(4-0-1), August 10, 1984.

331. HR 5640. Superfund Expansion. Levitas, D-Ga., amendment to create an administrative mechanism for compensating individuals harmed by exposure to hazardous wastes and to set aside 12 percent of the "superfund" for that purpose. Rejected 159-200: NV(1-2-2), August 10, 1984.

332. HR 5640. Superfund Expansion. Conable, R-N.Y., amendment to terminate on Sept. 30, 1986 (instead of Sept. 30, 1990), the taxes imposed under the bill. Rejected 142-205: NV(1-1-3), August 10, 1984.

333. HR 5640. Superfund Expansion. Passage of the bill to renew for fiscal 1986-90 and expand the "superfund" hazardous waste cleanup program. Passed 323-33: NV(1-1-3), August 10, 1984.

334. HR 3605. Drug Price Competition. Shaw, R-Fla., amendment to the Waxman, D-Calif., amendment, to reduce to 18 months, from 30 months, the period during which the Food and Drug Administration must delay approval of a generic drug that is the subject of patent litigation. Rejected 66-304: N(0-3-2), Sept. 6, 1984. (The Waxman amendment, to revise federal approval processes for generic drugs, subsequently was adopted by voice vote.)

335. HR 3605. Drug Price Competition. Quillen, R-Tenn., amendment to the Waxman, D-Calif., amendment, to exempt over-the-counter pharmaceuticals from revisions made by the bill in the federal approval process for generic drugs. Rejected 24-347: N(0-3-2), Sept. 6, 1984. (The Waxman amendment, to revise federal approval processes for generic drugs, subsequently was adopted by voice vote.)

336. HR 3605. Drug Price Competition. Frenzel, R-Minn., amendment to the Derrick, D-S.C., amendment, to extend to 180 days, from 90 days, the period of time for compliance with new requirements that catalogs identify textile merchandise as imported or domestic. Rejected 36-323: N(0-3-2), Sept. 6, 1984. (The Derrick amendment, to strengthen labeling requirements for textiles and clothing, subsequently was adopted by voice vote.)

337. HR 3605. Drug Price Competition. Passage of the bill to revise federal procedural for approving generic drugs, to authorize extended patents for new drugs, medical devices and food additives, and to revise labeling requirements for textiles and clothing. Passed 362-0: Y(3-0-2), Sept. 6, 1984.

338. HR 5602. Health Professions and Services. Dannemeyer, R-Calif., substitute to authorize about $678 million annually for federal health professions and services programs for fiscal years 1985 through 1988. (The bill provided about $761 million for those programs in fiscal 1985 with increases in following years.) Rejected 78-236: N(0-2-3), Sept. 6, 1981.

339. HR 5798. Treasury, Postal Service and General Government Appropriations, Fiscal 1985. Adoption of the conference report on the bill to appropriate $12,766,276,000 in fiscal 1985 for the Treasury Department, the Postal Service, the Executive Office of the President and other agencies. Adopted 276-110: Y(4-0-1), Sept. 12, 1984.

340. HR 5798. Treasury, Postal Service and General Government Appropriations, Fiscal 1985. Whitten, D-Miss., motion that the House insist on its disagreement with the Senate amendment to forbid the use of Postal Service funds to implement regulations charging state and local child support enforcement officials a fee for address information. Motion rejected 1-389: N(0-4-1), Sept. 12, 1984.

341. HR 1437. California Wilderness Act. Adoption of the rule (H Res 573) providing for consideration of the bill to designate as federal wilderness some 1.8 million acres of national forest land in California. Adopted 295-112: Y(3-1-1), Sept. 12, 1984.

342. HR 1437. California Wilderness Act. Udall, D-Ariz., motion to take from the Speaker's table the bill, with a Senate amendment, designating as federal wilderness some 1.8 million acres of national forest land in California, and to agree to the Senate amendment. Motion agreed to (thus clearing the bill for the president) 368-41: Y(3-1-1), Sept. 12, 1984.

343. HR 3347. Extradition Act. Hughes, D-N.J., motion to suspend the rules and pass the bill to revise procedures for extraditing persons to foreign countries seeking them for alleged criminal offenses. Motion rejected 103-307: N(0-4-1), Sept. 12, 1984.

344. HR 6071. Trademark Counterfeiting Act. Hughes, D-N.J., motion to suspend the rules and pass the bill to impose criminal penalties and increase civil remedies against those who produce or sell goods bearing counterfeit trademarks. Motion agreed to 403-0: Y(4-0-1), Sept. 12, 1984.

346. S 2463. Ocean and Coastal Resources. Snyder, D-Ky., motion to recommit to the committee on conference the conference report on the bill to share revenues from drilling leases on federal territory offshore with states and to authorize fisheries programs. Motion rejected 122-282: N(2-2-1), Sept. 13, 1984.

347. S 2463. Ocean and Coastal Resources. Adoption of the conference report on the bill to share revenues from drilling leases on federal territory offshore with states and to authorize fisheries programs. Adopted 312-94: Y(2-2-1), Sept. 13, 1984.

348. HR 5609. American Defense Education Act. Adoption of the rule (H Res 578) providing for House floor consideration of the bill to authorize an estimated $8.6 billion over fiscal years 1985-87 for school improvement projects. The rule barred amendments that had not been filed and printed in the Congressional Record by Sept. 12, the day before floor consideration of the bill. Adopted 311-89: Y(2-2-1), Sept. 13, 1984.

350. HR 1511. Port-Cargo Diversion. Biaggi, D-N.Y., motion to suspend the rules and pass the bill to require shippers moving U.S. cargo through ports in Canada and Mexico to file their rates with the Federal Maritime Commission. Motion rejected 188-209: N(0-5-0), Sept. 18, 1984.●

BITBURG RESOLUTION

HON. WILLIAM L. DICKINSON

OF ALABAMA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, April 30, 1985

● Mr. DICKINSON. Mr. Speaker, I voted present on the resolution pertaining to President Reagan's upcoming trip to Bitburg, Germany, because I do not feel the President should make the trip but, at the same time, I know the President is committed and I did not want to be a part of any action taken by this body that would be an embarrassment to our President.

I understand the President's reasons for wanting to place the wreath at the cemetery site where some SS troopers from Hitler's regime are buried but I respectfully disagree.

I wish President Reagan well as he embarks on this important mission of peace and hope that these acts of friendship extended toward the people of Germany are not misinterpreted by others.●

RESOLUTION ACKNOWLEDGING MIKE QUEVEDO, SR.

HON. MATTHEW G. MARTINEZ

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, April 30, 1985

● Mr. MARTINEZ. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to pay tribute and remember a great American.

The person I wish to honor is Mike Quevedo, Sr. In his service to the Laborers' International Union of North America, Local 300, as secretary-treasurer and business manager, Mike served with distinction, foresight, and dedication.

Just a few short years ago the local was heavily in debt and deteriorating. But through the diligent work of members like Mike, and following his example, local 300 has made a tremendous resurgence. With the dedication of the Laborers' Local 300 building on May 3, 1985, Mike's memory and contribution to the union will be recognized. This occasion will be used to mark the progress of local 300, which has made great strides and improvements in recent years.

I would like to express my best wishes to Mike's family and friends. They should be truly proud of his accomplishments and work, as his son, Mike, Jr., is, in continuing his father's admirable work.

I think the best way to show how far the union has come and their great respect for Mike Quevedo, Sr., is to have their resolution entered into the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

RESOLUTION ACKNOWLEDGING MIKE QUEVEDO, SR.

Whereas Laborers' Local 300 has made tremendous progress in the past five years during this local's present Administration; and

Whereas this progress has been for the betterment and benefit of all of its members, active and retirees; and

Whereas this improvement has resulted in better communication and service to all of its members; and

Whereas Laborers' Local 300's members and Executive Board wish to acknowledge and pay tribute to one of its past officers, our late Brother Mike Quevedo, Sr., who served this Local Union with honor; and

Whereas Brother Mike Quevedo, Sr., should be given credit for his foresight in initiating the full integration of the membership in Local 300 while he served as an Officer of this Local Union; and

Whereas Brother Quevedo, Sr., demonstrated his foresightedness and progressive thinking by integrating this Local. His aims and goals were to give the members better representation and better service. His accomplishments and dedication to all of its members and the Labor Movement should not be forgotten and must be acknowledged; therefore be it

Resolved, that Laborers' Local 300 rightfully and permanently dedicate our newly acquired Administrative Office Building at 616 Shatto Place, in Los Angeles, California, to his memory and in his honor for his devoted service to Local 300 and all of its members; and be it further

Resolved, that a plaque bearing his name for his accomplishments shall be permanently placed at the entrance of said Laborer's Local 300 Administrative Office Building.●

REMEMBER A HOLOCAUST HERO: RAOUL WALLENBERG AVENUE

HON. BILL LOWERY

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, April 30, 1985

● Mr. LOWERY of California. Mr. Speaker, the month of April was the 40th anniversary of the liberation of the Nazi death camps. As a way of remembering this tragic period in human history and as a way of honoring one of the greatest heroes of the Holocaust, 39 of my colleagues joined me in introducing a bill (H.R. 2119) which would rename a block of 15th Street between Maine Street and Independence Avenue as "Raoul Wallenberg Avenue." This block is the site of the future U.S. Holocaust Memorial Museum.

Mr. Speaker, it has been 40 years since the disappearance of Raoul Wallenberg, the Swedish diplomat responsible for saving some 100,000 Hungarian Jews from certain death at the hands of the Nazis and their collaborators during the Second World War. On January 17, 1945, Wallenberg was taken by Soviet officers to the Red Army headquarters in Debrecen. He never returned.

Raoul Wallenberg, the "Lost Hero of the Holocaust," has become a legend to people all over the world. Many of you joined my good friend, Congressman TOM LANTOS, in supporting legislation in the 97th Congress which made him an honorary U.S. citizen, thereby allowing the United States to petition the Soviet Union for his release or a full accounting of his fate. Wallenberg is only the second person to be awarded this great honor. Raoul Wallenberg has also been nominated for a Nobel Peace Prize.

Congressman LANTOS, the only survivor of the Holocaust to be elected to Congress, was born in Budapest, Hungary. He was twice sent to Nazi "work camps" during 1944, but escaped and survived in Wallenberg's safe houses. He worked with Wallenberg and was active in the anti-Nazi underground.

Raoul Wallenberg was born in 1912 to a distinguished aristocratic Swedish family. In July 1944, in response to the request of the World Jewish Congress following deportation of nearly half a million Hungarian Jews to the death camps of Auschwitz and Birkenau, he was secretly sent by the American Government's War Refugee Board to Budapest as a Swedish diplomat. At that time, there were still 250,000 Jews living in the Budapest Ghetto, and Wallenberg undertook the impossible task of slowing down the Nazi Holocaust.

Working from the Swedish Embassy, he organized a rescue staff of several hundred Jewish volunteers and declared 32 apartment buildings housing 20,000 Jews to be shelters under the protection of the Swedish flag. He issued "protective" Swedish passports to approximately 30,000 Jews, providing them a degree of immunity from persecution. He organized the most daring and audacious methods for saving the lives of Jews—turning up at railway stations that served as assembly points for transporting the victims to death camps and, using his diplomatic privileges, snatching dozens of victims from the trains on the grounds that they were under Swedish protection.

Through his fearless actions, imagination, and self-sacrifice, Wallenberg and his helpers were able to save the lives of 25,000 Jews during the period from July 1944 until the middle of January 1945. And by inspiring and cajoling others to play their part in this humanitarian work, he was able to save about 100,000 Jews from the death camps.

On January 17, 1945, the Soviet Army reached the outskirts of Budapest, and Raoul Wallenberg was taken into Soviet "protective custody." He was never released. In fact, in 1957, the Soviets announced that Wallenberg had died while in a Soviet prison in Moscow. Dozens of witnesses, however, have testified that they have seen Wallenberg alive many years after he had been declared dead by the Soviet Union. The U.S. State Department has raised this issue with the Soviets many times, but no satisfactory answer has been given.

The location of the Holocaust Memorial Museum and the portion of 15th Street SW. that would be renamed under the bill are separated from the rest of 15th Street by The Mall. There are no residences on this site, thus minimizing inconvenience.

"In history," Congressman LANTOS has said, "one can find many men who have killed 100,000 people. But how many have saved 100,000? Renaming a portion of 15th Street in honor of Wallenberg is a small—but appropriate—gesture to one of the genuine heroes of our age."

Mr. Speaker, Raoul Wallenberg gave a whole new universe of meaning to the word "hero" by saving the lives of 100,000 Hungarian Jews. The street in front of the Holocaust Memorial Museum should bear his name. I urge my colleagues to support H.R. 2119.●

COMMEMORATING THE 40TH ANNIVERSARY OF THE PITTSFIELD POLISH COMMUNITY CLUB

HON. SILVIO O. CONTE

OF MASSACHUSETTS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, April 30, 1985

● Mr. CONTE. Mr. Speaker, on May 4 the Polish Community Club in Pittsfield will celebrate its 40th anniversary. I want to take this opportunity to mark that event, and commend club members past and present for their 40 years of dedication and service to their church and community.

It was a difficult time for the first Polish immigrants settling in western Massachusetts. The language barrier made finding jobs in the mills difficult. Those who found them were often overworked and exploited. Farmers put in long hours tilling the land, and the return was small. In essence, the first Polish emigrees were a solitary people—they spoke a different language, dressed a little differently, ate different foods, and did not always understand the ways of those who lived around them.

But throughout those difficult times, Polish immigrants were united and sustained by a strength and confidence in themselves, family life, and their church. Over time, they became less afraid of being different and more secure as a united and vibrant community.

Their Catholic faith was the common thread among them. That set the background for the founding of the Polish Community Club in 1945. In February of that year, a small group of polish men of the city met with Father Valentine Teclaw, then-pastor of Holy Family Church, to discuss their idea. Two months later they purchased from the Springfield Diocese the former St. Joe's grammar school, and opened it as the club's facility in May. The property was remodeled through the volunteer work of its members, and nonprofit shares of $100 were sold to help finance improvements. I will never forget the mortgage burning ceremony in 1955, in which I participated. Bishop Weldon attended, and the day was a proud conclusion to a spirited and dedicated effort.

From those humble beginnings was spawned a proud tradition in the Pittsfield Polish community, a tradition that has been marked by that same spirit of commitment and dedication. The club, which has over 400 active and life members, has worked to keep alive the Polish heritage, been a strong supporter of the church, and has sponsored numerous civic and educational forums, scholarships, and community activities—including for many years one of the finest semipro baseball teams in the State. Who can forget, for example, the dazzling shortstop play of the club's first president, John Kulis? This club can take pride in its 40 years of service to its members and the Pittsfield community.

This year's anniversary also marks the first presentation of what will be a very special award by the club—the Annual Reverend Father Valentine S. Teclaw Award, to be presented to a deserving Polish American of the Pittsfield community based on service to the community and the church. No one better exemplifies the ideals of the award than its first recipient, Steven Wick. Steve was one of the founders and first directors of the club. He has been an officer of the club since its inception, and has always been there when a coordinator was needed for a scholarship drive, club breakfast, or golf tournament. He is a past president of the Holy Name Society at Holy Family Church, and is now a deacon at that church. Steve's selection sets a proud precedent, and I join with the members of the club in extending my congratulations to Steve for an honor well deserved.

Yet, as May 4 marks 40 years of service and dedication to the community and the Catholic faith in Pittsfield, one can't help remembering that Catholics in Poland continue to suffer harassment and persecution under a government that has little tolerance for differences in opinion and a belief in God. The controversy surrounding the Government's attempts last year to remove crucifixes from schools is indicative of this constant harassment. I think it's no small coincidence that the church now looks to a Pole—Pope John Paul II—to protect the faith and help secure religious freedom in Eastern Europe and throughout the world.

The Pope has already had a profound impact in protecting the fundamental right to religious freedom in Communist-bloc countries. But it's not difficult to understand why he has been such a forceful and effective presence for the church. I had the distinct privilege and honor of meeting the Pope during his visit to this country in 1979. He is an impressive man—warm, articulate, and well-educated. He exudes an inner strength that comes from a confidence in one's convictions. His visit to this country stirred the hearts of all Americans, and caused us to reflect on the plight of our Catholic brethren in Eastern Europe. I have known Kings and Presidents, Senators and Congressmen, but this is a special man. I know that on this 40th anniversary of the Polish Community Club, club members join with me in offering a special prayer on behalf of the Pope and all the Polish people as they continue their struggle. It is a struggle that remains a part of each of us who fight to see fundamental liberties and human rights recognized throughout the world.

The Polish community has a proud heritage—both in Europe and in this country. The club's 40th anniversary and its many accomplishments over the last 40 years are testament to this fact. I congratulate the club, its members and founders, for an exemplary 40 years, and I know that another 40—just as successful—await you.●

VOTE ON NICARAGUAN CONTRAS

HON. ROMANO L. MAZZOLI

OF KENTUCKY

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, April 30, 1985

● Mr. MAZZOLI. Mr. Speaker, last week I voted against providing military as well as nonlethal assistance to the Nicaraguan Contras—those seeking to liberate their nation from the clutches of the Marxist-Leninist Sandinista regime.

I did not do so lightly nor without pause because I want to do nothing to encourage the Sandinista government. Their Marxist-Leninist and godless brand of communism is a particularly dangerous element in the troubled landscape of Central America. The Sandinistas must be rooted out and replaced by a democratic government—even as the factors which gave the Sandinistas rise—poverty, hunger, illiteracy, lack of opportunity, and lack of basic human rights—must be rooted out and replaced.

I part company with the President not on the goal in Nicaragua but on the means to achieve the goal. He stresses military action. I feel all available diplomatic, economic, and moral efforts must be explored and tested fully before military force is used.

That is why I urge the President today to tighten the economic and trade noose around Nicaragua. It may hurt some innocent Nicaraguan noncombatants who only want to be left alone to till their farms, ply their trades, and raise their families. But, their long-term objectives are better served if the United States puts stern pressure on their Sandinista oppressors now.

The United States should immediately embargo all import-export trade with Nicaragua. Today, the United States unbelievably, is Nicaragua's No. 1 trading partner. We purchase—depending upon whose figures are used—from $57 to $65 million in bananas, meats, and coffee from Nicaragua annually, and we export to Nicaragua from $112 to $120 million yearly in pesticide, fertilizer, and spare automotive and mechanical parts.

And, the United States should urge all its allies and friends in and outside this hemisphere to forgo trading with Nicaragua as well.

Further, the United States should withdraw diplomatic recognition of the Sandinista regime, and shutter our Embassy. We should terminate domestic air service to and from Nicaragua and clamp down as far as we can on social, educational, and scientific contact between our countries.

The pressure should be applied until the Sandinistas deliver on their promises to give the Nicaraguan people what was withheld by the despised Somoza regime: freedom to practice religion, to own property, to publish and to assemble freely, and the right to disagree politically without fear of reprisal. The Nicaraguan people still lack these freedoms.

Until now calls for economic and diplomatic pressure have been rejected because they might lead to trade or commercial retaliation from other nations or might force the Sandinistas closer to the Soviet Union.

Here it should be noted that the leader of the Sandinistas—Daniel Ortega—went to Moscow right after last week's votes in Congress. He went to secure financial and military assistance from the Soviets. How much more would trade and diplomatic sanctions force him and his Communist partners into the Soviet orbit? It is a moot question. They are in that orbit now. And, that's the real problem.

If Nicaragua is the outlaw nation, the danger, the villainous threat the administration says it is—and I tend to feel it is—we must demonstrate our beliefs clearly and unequivocally. We have been sending out garbled, unclear, and muddy messages by condemning the Sandinistas while, at the same time, trading with them.

Mr. Speaker, if these unilateral and multilateral efforts fail—and if the parallel efforts of the Contadora group are unavailing—and, given the public statements and private actions of certain members of the group, I am not sanguine that they will be—then the administration may have to recommend other actions to Congress. Congress, I would venture, would be more disposed toward adopting such other actions once all the nonmilitary, noninterventionist steps I have outlined are taken and found wanting.

We have a problem, Mr. Speaker. No more equivocations. No more handwringing. No more agonizing. Let's do something about that problem, now.●

ORPHAN DRUG AMENDMENTS OF 1985

HON. HENRY A. WAXMAN

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, April 30, 1985

● Mr. WAXMAN. Mr. Speaker, it is my pleasure to join with Mr. MADIGAN in introducing today H.R. 2290, the first reauthorization of the Orphan Drug Act. The provisions in this bill were approved by the Subcommittee on Health and the Environment this morning.

The Subcommittee on Health and the Environment has conducted two oversight hearings on the Orphan Drug Act and we are convinced that it has been quite successful so far. The changes made in this bill will assure its continued success during the next 3 years.

During our hearings, numerous witnesses recommended that medical devices for orphan diseases be included in the Orphan Drug Act. I share this view and intend to work with Mr. MADIGAN to develop an orphan medical devices bill as soon as possible. Because there are significant differences in the development and testing of drugs and devices, we believe some additional time is required to develop the legislation.

I know that the supporters of the Orphan Drug Act and those interested in orphan medical devices hoped to see the inclusion of devices in this bill. Our inability to do so at this time does not diminish my commitment to greater attention and support for the development of orphan medical devices.

I insert the bill in the RECORD at this point:

H.R. 2290

A bill to amend the orphan drug provisions of the Federal Food, Drug, and Cosmetic Act and related laws

Be it enacted by the Senate and the House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE.

This Act may be cited as the "Orphan Drug Amendments of 1985".

SEC. 2. MARKET PROTECTION.

Section 527 of the Federal Food, Drug, and Cosmetic Act (21 U.S.C. 360cc) is amended—

(1) by striking our "and for which a United States Letter of Patent may not be issued" in subsection (a);

(2) by striking out "and if a United States Letter of Patent may not be issued for the drug" in subsection (b); and

(3) by striking out "UNPATENTED" in the title of the section.

SEC. 3. NATIONAL COMMISSION ON ORPHAN DISEASES.

(a) ESTABLISHMENT.—There is established the National Commission on Orphan Diseases.

(b) DUTY.—The Commission shall assess the activities of the National Institutes of Health, the Alcohol, Drug Abuse, and Mental Health Administration, and other public agencies and of private entities in connection with—

(1) basic research conducted on rare diseases;

(2) the use in research on rare diseases of knowledge developed in other research;

(3) applied and clinical research on the prevention, diagnosis, and treatment of rare diseases; and

(4) the dissemination of knowledge developed in research on rare diseases and other diseases to the public, health care professionals, researchers, and drug and medical device manufacturers which can be used in the prevention, diagnosis, and treatment of rare diseases.

(c) REVIEW REQUIREMENTS.—In assessing the activities of the National Institutes of Health and the Alcohol, Drug Abuse, and Mental Health Administration in connection with research on rare diseases, the Commission shall review—

(1) the appropriateness of the priorities currently placed on research on rare diseases;

(2) the relative effectiveness of grants and contracts when used to fund research on rare diseases;

(3) the appropriateness of specific requirements applicable to applications for funds for research on rare diseases taking into consideration the reasonable capacity of applicants to meet such requirements;

(4) the adequacy of the scientific basis for such research, including the adequacy of the research facilities and research resources used in such research and the appropriateness of the scientific training of the personnel engaged in such research;

(5) the effectiveness of activities undertaken to encourage such research;

(6) the organization of the peer review process applicable to applications for funds for such research to determine if the organization of the peer review process could be revised to improve the effectiveness of the review provided to proposals for research on rare diseases;

(7) the effectiveness of the coordination between the national research institutes of the National Institutes of Health, the Institutes of the Alcohol, Drug Abuse, and Mental Health Administration, and private entities in supporting such research; and

(8) the effectiveness of activities undertaken to assure that knowledge developed in research on nonrare diseases is, when appropriate, used in research on rate diseases.

(d) COMPOSITION.—The Commission shall be composed of twenty members appointed by the Secretary of Health and Human Services as follows:

(1) Ten members shall be appointed from individuals who are not officers or employees of the Government and who by virtue of their training or experience in research on rare diseases or in the treatment of rare diseases are qualified to serve on the Commission.

(2) Five members shall be appointed from individuals who are not officers or employees of the Government and who have a rare disease or are employed to represent or are members of an organization concerned about rare disease.

(3) Five nonvoting members shall be appointed from—

(A) the directors of the national research institutes of the National Institutes of Health; or

(B) the directors of the institutes of the Alcohol, Drug Abuse, and Mental Health Administration, which the Secretary determines are involved with rare diseases.

A vacancy in the Commission shall be filled in the manner in which the original appointment was made. If any member of the Commission who was appointed to the Commission as a director of a national research institute or an institute of the Alcohol, Drug Abuse, and Mental Health Administration leaves that office, or if any member of the Commission who was appointed from persons who are not officers or employees of the Government becomes an officer or employee of the Government, such member may continue as a member of the Commission for not longer than the ninety-day period beginning on the date such member leaves that office or becomes such an officer or employee, as the case may be.

(e) TERM.—Members shall be appointed for the life of the Commission.

(f) COMPENSATION.—(1) Except as provided in paragraph (2), members of the Commission shall each be entitled to receive the daily equivalent of the annual rate of basic pay in effect for grade GS-18 of the General Schedule for each day (including traveltime) during which they are engaged in the actual performance of duties as members of the Commission.

(2) Members of the Commission who are full-time officers or employees of the Government shall receive no additional pay by reason of their service on the Commission.

(g) CHAIRMAN.—The Chairman of the Commission shall be designated by the members of the Commission.

(h) STAFF.—Subject to such rules as may be prescribed by the Commission, the Commission may appoint and fix the pay of such personnel as it determines are necessary to enable the Commission to carry out its functions. Personnel shall be appointed subject to the provisions of title 5, United States Code, governing appointment in the competitive service, and shall be paid in accordance with the provisions of chapter 51 and subchapter III of chapter 53 of such title relating to classification and General Schedule pay rates.

(i) EXPERTS AND CONSULTANTS.—Subject to such rules as may be prescribed by the Commission, the Commission may procure temporary and intermittent services under section 3109(b) of title 5 of the United States Code, but at rates for individuals not to exceed the daily equivalent of the basic pay payable for grade GS-15 of the General Schedule.

(j) DETAIL OF PERSONNEL.—Upon request of the Commission, the head of any Federal agency is authorized to detail, on a reimbursable basis, any of the personnel of such agency to the Commission to assist the Commission in carrying out its duties under this section.

(k) ADMINISTRATIVE SUPPORT SERVICES.—The Administrator of General Services shall provide to the Commission on a reimbursable basis such administrative support services as the Commission may request.

(l) GENERAL AUTHORITY.—The Commission may, for the purpose of carrying out this section, hold such hearings, sit and act at such times and places, take such testimony, and receive such evidence, as the Commission considers appropriate.

(m) INFORMATION.—The Commission may secure directly from any department or agency of the United States information necessary to enable it to carry out this section. Upon request of the Chairman, the head of such department or agency shall furnish such information to the Commission.

(n) REPORT.—The Commission shall transmit to the Secretary and to each House of the Congress a report not later than September 30, 1987, on the activities of the Commission. The report shall contain a detailed statement of the findings and conclusions of the Commission, together with its recommendations for—

(1) a long range plan for the use of public and private resources to improve research into rare diseases and to assist in the prevention, diagnosis, and treatment of rare diseases; and

(2) such legislation or administrative actions as it considers appropriate.

(o) TERMINATION.—The Commission shall terminate 90 days after the date of the submittal of its report under subsection (n).

(p) FUNDS.—The Director of the National Institutes of Health shall make available $1,000,000 to the Commission from appropriations for fiscal year 1986 for the National Institutes of Health.

SEC. 4. FINANCIAL ASSISTANCE.

(a) QUALIFIED TESTING.—Section 5 of the Orphan Drug Act (21 U.S.C. 360ee) is amended—

(1) in subsection (a) by striking out "clinical"; and

(2) by amending subsection (b)(1) to read as follows:

"(1) The term 'qualified testing' means—

"(A) human clinical testing—

"(i) which is carried out under an exemption for a drug for a rare disease or condition under section 505(i) of the Federal Food, Drug, or Cosmetic Act (or regulations issued under such section); and

"(ii) which occurs after the date such drug is designated under section 526 of such Act and before the date on which an application with respect to such drug is submitted under section 505(b) of such Act or under section 351 of the Public Health Service Act; and

"(B) animal testing involving a drug for a rare disease or condition which occurs after the date such drug is designated under section 526 of such Act and before the date on which an application with respect to such drug is submitted under section 505(b) of such Act or under section 351 of the Public Health Service Act.".

(b) AUTHORIZATION.—Subsection (c) of such section 5 is amended to read as follows:

"(c) For grants and contracts under subsection (a) there are authorized to be appropriated $4,000,000 for fiscal year 1986, $4,000,000 for fiscal year 1987, and $4,000,000 for fiscal year 1988.".

SEC. 5. EFFECTIVE DATE.

The amendments made by this Act shall take effect October 1, 1985.●

A TRIBUTE TO HEAD START

HON. BOB CARR

OF MICHIGAN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, April 30, 1985

● Mr. CARR. Mr. Speaker, the month of April marks the 20th anniversary of the establishment of the Head Start Program.

This project was originally conceived by President Lyndon Johnson as part of the Great Society Program to fight poverty and ignorance in the United States.

I am particularly familiar with the excellence of the Head Start Program because a city I represent, Pontiac, MI, was one of the original cities selected for the pilot program in 1965.

In the early years of the program Pontiac churches provided facilities for the students because public schools lacked the space. Since that time the Pontiac school system has taken over operation of the program while the Oakland Livingston Human Services Agency has become the funding agent.

Presently the Pontiac Head Start Program is serving 356 children and their families at two educational centers, Franklin Elementary School and Whitfield Elementary.

Head Start gives assistance to disadvantaged youth in five interrelated areas of educational development. First it provides an early classroom motivational experience and combines it with a supplemental nutritional program. It also works to increase parental involvement in the student's educational experience. The program identifies potential learning disadvantages of children before they begin school and involves community agencies in an attempt to alleviate them. Finally the program encourages students to develop a strong self-image as well as an identification with their own ethnic heritage.

During its 20 years of existence the Pontiac Head Start Program has benefited almost 5,000 local children.

Research has shown that the children involved in this program have made immediate gains in basic cognitive competency and school achievement once they began their elementary education. These gains continue throughout their first 3 years of school.

Mr. Speaker, I am honored to pay tribute to this outstanding program which has helped to build an educational and emotional foundation for so many deserving young people, especially in the city of Pontiac.●

CARL MAU TO BE HONORED BY NEUMANN COLLEGE

HON. BOB EDGAR

OF PENNSYLVANIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, April 30, 1985

● Mr. EDGAR. Mr. Speaker, it is always a pleasure to bring to the attention of my colleagues in the U.S. House of Representatives an individual who is constantly poised on the edge of the future, a man brimming with new ideas, and the perseverance to implement them.

His name is Carl Mau and he will be honored by Neumann College in Aston, PA, today April 30.

There is no limit to the width and breadth of his interests. Good government, health, recreation, hunger, the economy, veterans, students, children—Carl cared for them all and took positive action. He started an educational fund for children following an area tragedy. He helped raise funds for earthquake victims in Italy. During the Vietnam war, he had monthly sendoff ceremonies for draftees departing for military service. He tried numerous ways for bringing industry to his county. Carl placed "Hunger Huts" constructed by prisoners at the county prison in front of local supermarkets to collect food for the needy. He created puzzles of Pennsylvania for use in classrooms. And the list goes on and on.

Carl has come to be known as Delaware County's "Idea Man."

Neumann College will honor Carl by inaugurating its new Heritage Center in his honor. The center will provide space for memorabilia from Delaware County and historical displays of county artifacts in order that future generations will always be reminded of the great citizens and their accomplishments that have made Delaware County a better place to live.

Carl Mau is one of those great citizens who can inspire all of us to transform our ideas into solid accomplishments. We salute Carl, and also Neumann College for honoring him and others who have made a difference.●

ROLLCALL VOTES TAKEN ON MONDAY, APRIL 29, 1985

HON. WILLIAM E. DANNEMEYER

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, April 30, 1985

● Mr. DANNEMEYER. Mr. Speaker, I was necessarily absent from the session of Monday, April 29, 1985, for business in my congressional district. Four recorded votes were taken and had I been present I would have voted as follows:

Rollcall 76, approval of the Journal; "nay."

Rollcall 77, motion to adjourn; "yea."

Rollcall 78, order a second on Senate Concurrent Resolution 37, relative to a statue for Jeanette Rankin; "yea."

Rollcall 79, order a second on House Concurrent Resolution 130, relative to the President's trip to West Germany; "yea."●

THE 75th ANNIVERSARY OF TYLERTOWN FIRST BAPTIST CHURCH

HON. WAYNE DOWDY

OF MISSISSIPPI

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, April 30, 1985

● Mr. DOWDY of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, today I would like to honor my friends at the Tylertown First Baptist Church on a very special occasion—the 75th anniversary of their founding.

In 1910, the Gutter family arrived in Tylertown, where they discovered there was no Baptist Church. The late Brother George Gutter searched for a place where the community might worship. He found a cattleshed and began working to renovate it. One table, one chair, and some lamps were donated by friends. Sawdust was used for flooring; kerosene lamps were mounted on posts as a source of light. The walls of the building were removed, and this gave enough material so that several seats could be built.

In 1913, the church moved to a new site. A small wooden structure was built. Two charter members are sisters Georgia Gutter Smith and Mamie Gutter Moss.

Rev. Jesse Dillon was the first pastor. Brother George Gutter was the first deacon. Other pastors were Rev. G.W. Holden, Rev. L.R. McEwen, Rev. James Pittman, Rev. Hivey Carson, and Rev. Walter Smith, who is currently serving. Financial secretaries included Brothers Jesse Allen, Willard Ratliff, Sisters Cleo Allen, and Elsie Qualls.

Newly ordained deacons are Earnest Qualls, Sr., A.T. Smith, and Lawyer Ratliff.

The first women to serve on the Mothers' Board were Mrs. Frankey Gutter and Mrs. Letha Buckles. Presently the church mothers include Mrs. Cleo Allen, Mrs. Beatrice Holmes, and Mrs. Georgia Smith. Mrs. Rennetta Taylor presently serves as corresponding secretary. Brother A.T. Smith is the current treasurer.

I know my colleagues here in Congress join me in offering our prayers and heartfelt congratulations to Reverend Smith and all of the members of the Tylertown First Baptist Church on their 75th anniversary.●